AMERICAN PREFACE.

In the present edition of the Works of Shakespeare, the text of the plays has been taken from that published in London by J. Payne Collier, a few months since, embodying the manuscript emendations recently discovered by him in a copy of the second folio edition published in 1632. The text of the Poems, the Life of Shakespeare, the account of the early English Drama, and the separate prefaces to the plays are from the octavo edition in 1844, by the same editor. As the latest edition contained no notes and those in his previous one were, to some extent, superseded by the alterations in the text, and were unsuited from their length to the requirements of a copy in a compact form, it was deemed advisable that new notes should be prepared.

This has been undertaken for the present work. It has been the aim by close condensation to convey a greater amount of information directly illustrative of the text than has ever been presented in a similar form. For information on an important portion of the task, that of indicating the variations between the quarto (where such are in existence) and folio copies of the plays, reliance has been placed almost entirely on Mr. Collier's first edition. That gentleman had free access to all the early copies in the libraries of the Duke of Devonshire and Lord Francis Egerton, better known to American readers as Earl of Ellesmere; collections formed at great labor and expense, and far more complete than any previously brought together in public or private repositories. The notes illustrative of obsolete words, expressions and customs, have been derived from the edition of Mr. Collier already referred to, Mr. Knight's Pictorial Shakspere, the works of Dyce, Douce, Halliwell, Hunter, Richardson, and the American editions of Messrs. Verplanck and Hudson, with such aid as a long acquaintance with the Dramatic and general Literature of the age of Elizabeth and James could furnish.

Notes, pointing out or commenting upon the sentiments expressed in the text, have been purposely avoided, it being presumed that the reader having been furnished with every material for the employment of a correct taste and judgment, will prefer to exercise these faculties for himself.

Comment of this description, which has often been carried to an impertinent or tedious extreme, has also been avoided in noting the variations between the text of the present and that of previous editions. The reader has been placed in possession of the old by the side of the new readings, and left to an unbiased choice between them. The frequent recurrence of notes of this description rendered necessary the simple abbreviation of f. e. for former edition, the edition referred to being that of Collier, published in 1844, and almost universally received as the established text, until the discovery by the same editor of the celebrated copy of the folio of 1632. No other abbreviations occur in the notes, unless the mention of the first, or folio of 1623, as "the folio," be so regarded.

It may be proper to state that the notes, unless where otherwise expressed, refer to the word preceding the corresponding numbers in the text.

As an interesting illustration, a characteristic fac-simile of a portion of a page of the corrected folio, 1632, is appended. The head of the Poet, which forms the frontispiece, is a faithful copy of the engraving by Martin Droeshout, which is printed on the title-page of the folios, of 1623, and 1632, and upon which Ben Jonson wrote the celebrated lines testifying so decidedly to the faithfulness of the likeness—a stronger guarantee than any other portrait of the Dramatist can claim.

DEDICATION.

To the most Noble and Incomparable Pair of Brethren. William Earl of Pembroke, &c. Lord Chamberlain to the King's most Excellent Majesty. And Philip Earl of Montgomery, &c. Gentleman of his Majesty's Bedchamber. Both Knights of the most Noble Order of the Garter, and our singular good Lord Right Honourable,

Whilst we study to be thankful in our particular for the many favours we have received from your Lordships, we are fallen upon the ill fortune, to mingle two the most diverse things that can be, fear, and rashness; rashness in the enterprise, and fear of the success. For, when we value the places your Highnesses sustain, we cannot but know their dignity greater, than to descend to the reading of these trifles: and, while we name them trifles, we have deprived ourselves of the defence of our Dedication. But since your Lordships have been pleased to think these trifles something, heretofore; and have prosecuted both them, and their Author living, with so much favour, we hope, (that they outliving him, and he not having the fate, common with some, to be executor to his own writings) you will use the like indulgence toward them, you have done unto their parent. There is a great difference, whether any book choose his patrons, or find them; this hath done both. For, so much were your Lordships' likings of the several parts, when they were acted, as before they were published, the volume asked to be yours. We have but collected them, and done an office to the dead, to procure his orphans, guardians; without ambition either of self-profit, or fame: only to keep the memory of so worthy a friend, and fellow alive, as was our SHAKESPEARE, by humble offer of his plays, to your most noble patronage. Wherein, as we have justly observed, no man to come near your Lordships but with a kind of religious address, it hath been the height of our care, who are the presenters, to make the present worthy of your Highnesses by the perfection. But, there we must also crave our abilities to be considered, my Lords. We cannot go beyond our own powers. Country hands reach forth milk, cream, fruits, or what they have; and many nations, (we have heard) that had not guns and incense, obtained their requests with a leavened cake. It was no fault to approach their gods, by what means they could; and the most, though meanest, of things are made more precious, when they are dedicated to temples. In that name therefore, we most humbly consecrate to your Highnesses these remains of your servant SHAKESPEARE; that what delight is in them, may be ever your Lordships', the reputation his, and the faults ours, if any be committed, by a pair so careful to show their gratitude both to the living, and the dead, as is

Your Lordships' most bounden,

JOHN HEMINGE,
HENRY CONDELL.

TO THE GREAT VARIETY OF READERS.

From the most able, to him that can but spell; there you are numbered. We had rather you were weighed, Especially, when the fate of all books depends upon your capacities; and not of your heads alone, but of your purses. Well, it is now public, and you will stand for your privileges, we know: to read, and censure. Do so, but buy it first. That doth best commend a book, the stationer says. Then, how odd soever your brains be, or your wisdoms, make your licence the same, and spare not. Judge your sixpence worth, your shilling's worth, your five shillings' worth at a time, or higher, so you rise to the just rates, and welcome. But, whatever you do, buy. Censure will not drive a trade, or make the jack go. And though you be a magistrate of wit, and sit on the stage at Blackfriars, or the Cock-pit, arraign plays daily, know, these plays have had their trial already, and stood out all appeals; and do now come forth quitted rather by a decree of court, than any purchased letters of commendation.

It had been a thing, we confess, worthy to have been wished, that the Author himself had lived to have set forth, and oversee his own writings; but since it hath been ordained otherwise, and he by death departed from that right, we pray you do not envy his friends the office of their care, and pain, to have collected and published them; and so to have published them, as where (before) you were abused with divers stolen, and surreptitious copies, maimed, and deformed by the frauds and stealths of injurious impostors, that exposed them; even these, are now offered to your view cured, and perfect of their limbs, and all the rest, absolute in their numbers, as he conceived them. Who, as he was a happy imitator of Nature, was a most gentle expresser of it. His mind and hand went together; and what he thought, he uttered with that easiness, that we have scarce received from him a blot in his papers. But it is not our province, who only gather his works, and give them you, to praise him. It is yours that read him. And there we hope, to your divers capacities, you will find enough, both to draw, and hold you; for his wit can no more lie hid, than it could be lost. Read him, therefore; and again, and again: and if then you do not like him, surely you are in some manifest danger, not to understand him. And so we leave you to his friends, who, if you need, can be your guides: if you need them not, you can lead yourselves, and others. And such readers we wish him.

JOHN HEMINGE,
HENRY CONDELL.
COMMENTSARY VERSES.

Upon the Efficacies of my worthy Friend, the Author, Master William Shakespeare, and his Works.

Spectator, this life's shadow is—to see
The true image, and a livelier he,
Turn reader. But observe his comic vein,
Laugh; and proceed next to a tragic strain,
Then weep; so,—when thou findest two contraries,
Two different passions from thy wrath soul rise,—
Say, (who alone effect such wonders could)
Rare Shake-speare to the life thou dost behold.

An Epitaph on the admirable Dramatic Poet, W. Shake-speare.¹

What need my Shakespeare for his honour'd bones,
The labour of an age in piled stones;
Or that his hallow'd reliques should be hid
Under a star-pointing pyramid?¹
Dear son of Memory, child of fame,
What need'st thou such dull witness of thy name?
Thou, in our wonder and astonishment,
Hast built thyself a lasting monument:
For whilst, to the shame of slow-endeavouring art,
Thy easy numbers flow; and that each part
Half, from the leaves of thy unvalued book,
Those Delphic lines with deep impression took;
Then thou, our fancy of herself bereaving,
Dost make us marble with too much conceiving;
And, so sepulchred, in such pomp dost lie,
That kings for such a tomb would wish to die.

To the Memory of the deceased Author, Master W. Shake-speare.

Shake-speare, at length thy pious followers give
The world thy works; thy works, by which outlive
Thy children, and the name must; when that stone is rent,
And time dissolves thy Stratford monument,
Here we alive shall view thee still: this book,
When brass and marble fade, shall make thee look
Fresh to all ages; when posterity
Shall louth what's new, think all is prodigy
That is not Shakespeare's, every line, each verse,
Here shall revive, redeem thee from thy hearse,
Nor fire, nor cannery age, as Naso said
Of his, thy wit-brought book shall once invade.

¹ An Epitaph on the admirable Dramatic Poet, W. Shake-speare.] These lines, like the preceding, have no name appeas'd to them in the folio, 1632, but the authorship is ascertained by the publication of them as Milton's, in the edition of his Poems in 1615, Svo. We give them as they stand there, because it is evident that they were then printed from a copy corrected by the author: the variations are interesting, and Malone pointed out only one, and that certainly the least important. Instead of "weak witnesses" in line 6, the folio 1632 has "dull witnesses" instead of "live-long monument," in line 8, the folio has "lasting monument," instead of "heart," in line 10, the folio has "part," an evident misprint; and instead of "itself believing," in line 13, the folio has "herself believing," The last is the difference mentioned by Malone, who also places "John Milton" at the end, as if the name were found in the folio of 1632.

² Than when thy half-word parleying Romains spake.] Leonard Digges prepared a long copy of verses to the edition of Shakespeare's Poems in 1615, Svo, in which he makes this passage, referring to "Julius Cezar," more distinct; he also there speaks of the audiences Shakespeare's play at that time drew, in comparison with Ben. Jonson's. This is the only part of his production worth adding in a note.

³ So have I seen, when Cesar would appear,
And on the stage at half-wood parley were Brutes and Caesars, O, how the audience
Were ravish'd! with what wonder they went thence!

Nor shall I ever believe or think thee dead,
(Though miss'd) before our bankrupt stage be sped
(Impossible) with some new strain t' out-do Passions of Juliust, and her Romeo;
Or till I hear a scene more nobly take,
Than when thy half-word parleying Romains spake:—
Till these; till any of thy volume's rest,
Shall with more fire, more feeling, be express'd,
Be sure, (our Shake-speare,) thou canst never die,
But, crowned with laurel, live eternally.

L. Diggles

To the Memory of M. W. Shake-speare.

We wonder'd (Shake-speare) that thou wentst so soon
From the world's stage to the grave's tiring-room:
We thought thou'dst die; but this thy printed word
Tell's thy spectators, that thou wentst but forth
To enter with applause. An actor's art
Can die, and live to art a more part:
That's but an exit of mortality,
This a re-entrance to a plandifice.

I. M."

To the Memory of my beloved, the Author, Mr. William Shakespeare, and what he hath left us.

To draw no envy (Shake-speare) on thy name,
Am I thus ample to thy book, and fame;
While I confess thy writings to be such
An neither muse nor muse can praise too much;
'Tis true, and all men's suffrage; but these ways
Were not the paths I meant unto thy praise:
For sealent ignorance on these may light,
Which, when it sounds at best, but echoes right;
Or blind affecition, which doth ne'er advance
The truth, but groopes, and argeth all by chance;
Or crafty malice might pretend this praise,
And think to ruin, where it seemed to raise;
These are, as some infamous bufud, or whore,
Should praise a matron; what could hurt her more?
But thou art proof against them; and, indeed,
Above th' ill fortune of them, or the need.
I, therefore, will begin:—Soul of the age,
The applause, delight, the wonder of our stage,
My Shakespeare, rise! I will not lodge thee by Chaucer, or Spenser; or bid Beaumont lie
A little further, to make thee a room:

When, some new day, they would not brook a line
Of tedious, though well-labour'd, Catiline;
Sejanus too, was irksome: they priz'd more ' Honest' Iago, or the jealous Moor.
And though the Fox and subtile Alchemyst,
Long intermitted, could not quite be mist;
Though these have shand'd all th' ancients, and might raise
Their author's merit with a crown of bays,
Yet these sometimes, even at a friend's desire,
Acted, have scarce delay'd the sea-coal fire,
And door-keepers: when, let but Falstaff come,
Hat, Pains, the rest—you scarce shall have a room,
All is so past-pot'd: let but Beatrice
And Benedick be seen, no I in a trice
The cock-pit, galleries, boxes, all are full,
To hear Malvolio, that cross-gaited this pull
Brief, there is nothing in his wit-brought book,
Whose sound we would not hear, on whose worth look," &c.

² Perhaps the initials of John Marston.

³ Referring to lines by William Base, then circulating in MS., and not printed (as far as is now known) until 1633, when they were freely imputed to Dr. Donne, in the edition of his poems in that year. All the MSS. of the lines, now extant, differ in minute particulars.
Thou art a monument without a tomb;
And art alive still, while thy book doth live,
And we have wits to read, and praise to give.
That I not mix thee so, my brain exceeds;
I mean, with great but disproportion'd muse:
For, if I thought my judgment were of years,
I should commit thee surely with thy peers;
And tell the world thou didst our ignorance correcting Kyd, or Marlowe's mighty line;
And though thou hadst small Latin, and less Greek,
From thence to honour thee, I would not seek
For names; but call forth thundering Aschylus,
Euripides, and Sophocles, to us,
Paucius, Aeicus, him of Corlyon dead,
To him again, to hear thy prose so fit,
And shake a stage: or, when thy socks were on,
Leave thee alone, for the comparison
Of all that insolent Greece, or haughty Rome
Sent forth, or since did from their ashes come.
Triumph, my Briton! thou hast one to show,
To whom all scenes of Europe homage owe.
His name was not of age, but for all time
And all the muses still were in their prime,
When like Apollo he came forth to warm
Our ears, or like a Mercury to charm.
Nature herself was proud of his designs,
And joy'd to wear the dressing of his lines;
Who were so richly strown a right gymnasium,
As since she will vouchsafe no other wit.
The merry Greek, tart Aristophanes,
Neat Terence, witty Plautus, now not please;
But antiquated and desert'd lie,
As they were not of Nature's family.
Yet I must not give Nature all; thy art,
My gentle Shakespeare, must enjoy a part:
For though the poet's matter nature be,
His art doth give the fashion; and that he,
Who casts to write a living line, must swear,
(Such as thine are) and strike the second heat
Upon the muses' anvils; turn the same,
(And himself with it) that he thinks to frame;
Or for the laurel he may gain a crown,
For a good poet's made, as well as born.
And such wort thou. Look, how the father's face Lives in his issue; even so the race.
Of Shakespeare's mind, and manners, brightly shines
In his well-turned and true-flled lines;
In each of which he seems to shew his grace,
As brandish'd at the eyes of ignorance,
Sweet Swan of Avon, what a sight it were,
To see thee in our water yet appear;
And make those flights upon the banks of Thames,
That so did take Eliza, and our James.
But stay; I see thee in the hemisphere
Advance'd, and made a constellation there:
Shine forth, thou star of poets; and with rage,
Or influence, childe, or cheere, the drooping stage;
Which, since thy flight from hence, hath mournd like night,
And desairs day, but for thy volume's light.
Ben Jonson.

On worthy Master Shakespeare, and his poems.¹

A mind reflecting ages past, whose clear
And equal surface can make things appear,
Distant a thousand years, and represent
Them in their lively colours, just extent;
To outstrip haste, to retrieve the fates,
Roll back the heavens, blow ope the iron gates
Of death and Lethie, where (exhausted lie
Great heaps of ruinous mortality:

In that deep dusky dungeon to discern
A royal short life on earth, but learn
The physiognomy of shades, and give Them sudden birth, wondering how oft they live;
What story coldly tells, what poets feign
At second hand, and picture without brain,
Senseless and soul-less shows; to give a stage
(Ample, and true with life) voice, action, age,
As Plato's was a second year, and new scope a world,
To him and us, or to us and hurled:
To raise our ancient sovereigns from their hens,
Make kings his subjects; by exchanging verse
Enlive their pale trunks, that the present age
Joys in their joy, and trembles at their rage:
Yet so did he again, to hear thy prose so fit,
Take pleasure in their pain, and eyes in tears
Both weep and smile; fearful at plots so sad,
Then laughing at our fear; abus'd, and glad
To be abus'd; affected with that truth
Which we perceive is false, please'd in that ruth
At which we start, and, by elaborate play,
Tortur'd and tickled; by a crab-like way
Time past made pastime, and in ugly sort
Disgorgeing up his ravin for our sport: —
While the plebean imp, from lofty throne,
Creates and rules a world, and works upon Mankind by secret engines; now to move
A chilling pity, then a rapturous joy.
To strike up and stroke down, both joy and ire;
To steer the afections; and by heavenly fire
Mould us anew, stoln from ourselves: —
This, and much more, which cannot be express'd
But by himself, his tongue, and his own breast,
As Shakespeare's freethold; which his cunning brain
Improv'd by favour of the nine-fold train
The buskin muse, the comic queen, the grand
And louder tone of Olio, nimble hand
And nimbler foot of the melodious pair,
The silver-voiced lady, the most fair
Calliope, whose speaking silence daunts,
And she whose praise the heavenly body chants;
These jointly woud him, envying one mother,
(Obey'd by all as spouse, but lov'd as brother)
And wrong'd a curious robe, of sable grave,
Fresh green, and pleasant yellow, red most brave,
And constant blue, rich purple, guiltless white,
The lovely crimson, and the scarlet bright.
Brandish'd and embroild'red like the painted spring;
Each leaf match'd with a flower, and each string
Of golden wire, each line of silk; there run
Italian works, whose thread the sisters spun;
And there did sing, or seem to sing, the choice
Birds of a foreign note and various voice;
Here hang a woosy rock; there plays a fair
But chiding fountain, pured: not the air,
Nor clouds, nor thunder, but were living drawn;
Not out of common tiffany or lawn,
But fine materials, which the muses know,
And only know the countries where they grow.
Now when they could no longer he enjoy,
In mortal garments pent—death may destroy,
They say, his body; but his verse shall live,
And more than nature takes our hands shall give:
In a less volume, but more strongly bound,
Shakespeare shall breathe and speak; with laurel crow'd,
Which never fades; fed with ambrosian meat,
In a well-lined ventur, rich, and neat.
So with this robe they clothe him, bid him wear it;
For time shall never stall, nor envy tear it.
The friendly admirer of his endowments.
I. M. S.

¹ On worthy Master Shakespeare, and his Poems. These lines are subscribed I. M. S. in the folio 1623, "probably John Marve," says Malone. Most probably not, because Norney has left nothing behind him to lead us to suppose that he could have produced this surpassing tribute. I. M. S. may possibly be John Milton, Student, and no name Upon the Lines, and Life, of the famous Scenic Poet, Master W. Shakespeare.

Those hands which you so clapp’d, go now and wring,
You Britons brave; for done are Shake-speare's days:
His days are done that made the dainty plays,
Which made the Globe of heaven and earth to ring.
Dried is that vein, dried is the Thespian spring,
That corpse, that coffin, now bestick those bays,
That corpse, that coffin, now bestick those bays,
Wlien crown’d him poet first, then poet’s king.

If tragedies might any prologue have,
All those he made would scarce make one to this;
Where fame, now that he gone is to the grave,
(Death’s public tiring-house) the Nuntius is:
For, though his line of life went soon about,
The life yet of his lines shall never out.

Hugh Holland.

The following are Ben Jonson’s lines on the Portrait of Shakespeare, precisely as they stand on a separate leaf opposite to the title-page of the edition of 1623, and which are reprinted in the same place, with some trifling variation of typography, in the folio of 1632.

TO THE READER.

This Figure, that thou here seest put,
It was for gentle Shakespeare cut;
Wherein the Graver had a strife
With Nature, to out-do the life:
O, could he but have drawn his wit
As well in brass, as he hath hit
His face; the Print would then surpass
All, that was ever writ in brass.
But since he cannot, Reader, look
Not at his picture, but his book.

HISTORY
THE ENGLISH DRAMA AND STAGE
TO
THE TIME OF SHAKESPEARE.

In order to make the reader acquainted with the origin of the English stage, such as Shakespeare found it when he became connected with it, it is necessary to mention that a miracle-play or mystery, (as it has been termed in modern times), is the oldest form of dramatic composition in our language. The stories of productions of this kind were derived from the Sacred Writings, from the pseudo-evangelium, or from the lives and legends of saints and martyrs.

Miracle-plays were common in London in the year 1170; and as early as 1119 the miracle-play of St. Catherine had been represented at Dunstable. It has been conjectured, and indeed in part established, that some of these performances were in French, as well as in Latin; and it was not until the reign of Edward III. that they were generally acted in English. We have three existing series of miracle-plays, all of which have been recently printed; the Townley collection by the Surtess Club, and those known as the Coventry and Chester pageants by the Shakespeare Society.

The Abbotsford Club has likewise printed, from a manuscript at Oxford, three detached miracle-plays which once, probably, formed a portion of a connected succession of productions of that class and description.

During about 300 years this species of theatrical entertainment seems to have flourished, often under the auspices of the clergy, who used it as the means of religious instruction; but prior to the reign of Henry VI., a new kind of drama had become popular, which by writers of the time was denominated a moral, or moral play, and more recently a morality. It acquired this name from the nature and purpose of the representation, which usually conveyed a lesson for the better conduct of human life, the characters employed not being scriptural, as in miracle-plays, but allegorical, or symbolical. Miracle-plays continued to be represented long after moral plays were introduced, but from a remote date abstract impersonations had by degrees, not now easily traced, found their way into miracle-plays; thus, perhaps, moral plays, consisting only of such characters, grew out of them.

A very remarkable and interesting miracle-play, not founded upon the Sacred Writings, but upon a popular legend, and all the characters of which, with one exception, purport to be real personages, has recently been discovered in the library of Trinity College, Dublin, in a manuscript certainly as old as the later part of the reign of Edward IV. It is perhaps the only specimen of the kind in our language; and as it was unknown to all who have hitherto written on the history of our ancient drama, it will not here be out of place to give some account of the incidents to which it relates, and of the persons concerned in them. The title of the piece, and the year in which the events are supposed to have occurred, are given at the close, where we are told that it is "The Play of the Blessed Sacrament," and that the miracle to which it refers was wrought "in the forest of Aragon, in the famous city of Arles, in the year of our Lord God 1461." There can be no doubt that the scene of action was imaginary, being fixed merely for the greater satisfaction of the spectators as to the reality of the occurrences, and as little that a legend of the kind was of a much older date than that assigned in the manuscript, which was probably near the time when the drama had been represented.

In its form it closely resembles the miracle-plays which had their origin in Scripture-history, and one of the characters, that of the Saviour, common in productions of that class, is introduced into it: the rest of the personages engaged are five Jews, named Jonas, Jason, Jacob, Mephan, and Maltinus; a Christian merchant called Aristorus, a bishop, Sir Isidore a priest, a physician from Brabant called "Mr. Brundyche," and Colle his servant.

The plot relates to the purchase of the Eucharist by the Jews from Aristorus for 100L., under an assurance also that if they find its miraculous powers verified, they will become converts to Christianity. Aristorus, having possession of the key of the church, enters it secretly, takes away the Host, and sells it to the Jews. They put it to various tests and torments: they stab the "cake" with their daggers, and it bleeds, while one of the Jews goes mad at the sight. They next attempt to mail it to a post, but the Jew who uses the hammer has his hand torn off and here the doctor and his servant, Mr. Brundyche and Colle, make their appearance in order to attend the wounded Jew; but after a long comic scene between the quack and his man, highly illustrative of the manners of the time, they are driven out as impostors. The Jews then proceed to boil the Host, but the water turns blood-red, and taking it out of the cauldron with pincers, they throw it into a blazing oven; the oven, after Diod has run out "at the counts," bursts asunder, and an image of the Saviour rising, he addresses the Jews, who are as good as their word, for they are converted on the spot. They kneel to the Christian bishop, and Aristorus having confessed his crime and declared his repentance, is forgiven after a suitable admonition, and a strict charge never again to buy or sell.

This very singular and striking performance is opened, as was usual with miracle-plays, by two Vexillators, who

3 In another part of the manuscript it is called "The Play of the Conversion of Sir Jonathas, the Jew, by the Miracle of the Blessed Sacrament;" but inferior Jews are converted, besides Sir Jonathas, who is the head of the tribe in the "famous city of Arles."

* This name may possibly throw some light on an obscure passage, in a letter dated about 1325, and quoted in "The History of Engl. Dram. Poetry, and the Stage," I. 181, where a person of the name of Thomas Wylde informs Cronwell, Earl of Essex, that he had written a play in which a character called "Colle, senator of Constantinople," was introduced, to the great offence of the Roman Catholic clergy.
explain the nature of the story about to be represented, in alternate stanzas; and the whole performance is wound up by an epilogue from the bishop, enforcing the moral, which of course was intended to illustrate, and impress upon the audience, the divine origin of the doctrine of transubstitution.

Were it necessary to our design, and did space allow of it, we should be strongly tempted to introduce some characteristic extracts from this hitherto unseen production; but we must content ourselves with saying, that the language, in several places appears to be older than the reign of Edward IV, or even of Henry VI, and that we might be disposed to attribute it to a somewhat previous generation of the drama to the period of Wickliffe, and the Lollards.

It was not until the reign of Elizabeth that miracle-plays were generally abandoned, but in some distant parts of the kingdom they were persevered with even till the time of James I. Miracle-plays, in fact, gradually gave way to moral plays, which presented more variety of situation and character; and moral plays in turn were superseded by a species of mixed drama, which was strictly neither moral play nor historical play, but a combination of both in the same representation.

Of this singular union of discordant materials, no person who can follow the history of English drama can be surprised, for the literature of the Middle Ages has taken due notice; and it is very necessary not to pass it over, inasmuch as it may be said to have led ultimately to the introduction of tragedy, comedy, and history, as we now understand the terms, upon the boards of our public theatres. No blame for the omission can fairly be imputed to our predecessors, because the earliest specimens of this species of drama that we have written down have been brought to light within a comparatively few years.

The most important of these is the "Kynge Johan" of Bishop Bale. We are not able to settle with precision the date when it was originally written, but it was evidently performed, with additions and alterations, after Elizabeth came to the throne.1 The purpose of the author was to promote the Reformation, by applying to the circumstances of his own times the events of the reign of King John, when the kingdom was placed by the Pope under an interdict, and when, according to popular belief, the sovereign was poisoned by a draught administered to him by a monk. This drama resembles a moral play in the introduction of abstract imitations, and a historical play in the adaptation of a portion of our national annals, with real characters, to the purposes of the stage. Though performed in the reign of Elizabeth, we may carry back the first composition and representation of "Kynge Johan" to the time of Edward VI; but, as it has been printed by the Camden Society, it is not necessary to follow the writer in the attempt which might be urged to place it as early as 1543. That the object of Bale's play was, as we have stated, to advance the Reformation under Edward VI; but in the reign of his successor a drama of a similar description, and of a directly opposite tendency, was written and acted. It has never been mentioned, and as it exists only in manuscript of the seventh, it will not be out of place to quote its title, and to explain briefly in what manner the anonymous author carries out his design. He calls his drama "Repeace," and he adds that it was "made in the year of our Lord 1553, and the first year of the most prosperous reign of our most gracious Sovereign, Queen Mary the First." He wrote it in the character of a "Poet;" and although every person he introduces is in fact called by some abstract name, he avowedly brings forward the Queen herself as "Nemesis, the Goddess of redress and correction," while her kingdom of England is intended by "Respublica," and its inhabitants represented by "People." The Reformation in the Church is distinguished as "Oppression;" and Policy, Authority, and Honesty, are designated "Avaries, Insolence, and Adultery." All this is distinctly stated in the author on his title-page, while he also employs the impersonations of Misséricordia, Veritas, Justitia, and Pax, (agents not unfrequently resorted to in the older miracle-plays) as the friends of "Nemesis," the Queen, and as the supporters of the Roman Catholic religion in her dominions.

The following may be gained by a detail of the import of the tedious interlocutions between the characters, represented, it would seem, by boys, who were perhaps the children of the Chapel Royal; for there are traces in the performance that it was originally acted at court. Respublica is a widow greatly injured and abused by Avaries, Insolence, Oppression, and Adultery; while People, using throughout a rustic dialect, also complain bitterly of their sufferings, especially since the introduction of what had been termed "Reformation" in matters of faith: in the end Justitia brings in Nemesis, to effect a total change by restoring the former condition of religious affairs; and the piece closes with the standard protest of the dramatic character, that the present state is an "Insolence." The production was evidently written by a man of education; but, although there are many attempts at humour, and some at variety, both in character and situation, the whole must have been a very wearisome performance adapted to please the court by its general tendency, but little calculated to accomplish any other purpose entertained by the author. It is of course the "Kynge John" of Bale, which it followed in point of date, and to which, perhaps, it was meant to be a counterpart.

In the midst of the performance of dramatic productions of a religious or political character, each party supporting the views which most accorded with the author's individual opinions, John Heywood, who was a zealous Roman Catholic, and who subsequently suffered for his creed under Edward VI, and Elizabeth, discovered a new species of entertainment, of a highly humorous, and not altogether of an un instructive kind; which seems to have been very acceptable to the sovereign and nobility, and to have obtained for the author a distinguished character as a court dramatist, and ample rewards as a court dependent.2 These were properly called "interludes," being short comic pieces, represented ordinarily in the interval between the feast and the banquet; and we may easily believe that they had considerable influence in the settlement of the form which our stage-performances ultimately assumed. But, as it is supposed to have been performed for the first time after Henry VIII had been some years on the throne; while, Skelton was composing such tedious elaborations as his "Magnificence," which, without any improvement, merely carried to a still greater length of absurdity the old style of moral plays, Heywood was writing his "John Tib and Sir John," his "Four Ps," his "Puritour and Friar," and pieces of that description, which presented both variety of matter and novelty of construction, as well as considerable wit and drollery in the language. He was a very original writer, and certainly merits more admiration than any of his dramatic contemporaries.

Besides "King John," Bale was the author of four extant dramatic productions, which may be looked upon as miracle-plays, both in their form and character; viz.: 1. The Three Laws of Nature, Moses and Christ; 2. A Vengeance Given by the God Thomas to Magnus, 3. A Vengeance of Christ. He also wrote fourteen other dramas of various kinds, none of which have come down to us. 3 In the latter part of the sixteenth century, the author was associated with Thomas Heywood, by whom he was supported, and who became a dramatist more than half a century afterwards, and who continued a writer for the stage until near the date of the closing of the theatres by the Parliament.

John Heywood, in all probability, died before Thomas Heywood was born.
Tier and his Wife" is a comedy in its incidents; but the allegorical personages, Desire, Destiny, Stiff, and Patience, connect it immediately with the earlier species of stage-entertainment. "The Conflict of Conscience," on the other hand, is a tragedy on the fate of an historical personage; but Conscience, Hypocrisy, Avarice, Horror, etc., are called in aid of the purpose of the grand and weighty personages who finally usurped the whole stage; while they in turn yielded to real and historical characters, at first only intended to give variety to abstract impersonations. Hence the origin of comedy, tragedy, and history, such as we find them in the works of Shakespeare, and of some of his immediate predecessors.

What is justly to be considered the oldest known comedy in our language is a date not much posterior to the reign of Henry VIII, if, indeed, it were not composed while he was on the throne. It has the title of "Ralph Roister Doister," and it was written by Nicholas Udall, who was master of Eton school in 1540, and who died in 1566. It is considered as the first entertainment of its kind in the English stage, and as the scene is laid in London, it affords a curious picture of metropolitan manners. The regularity of its construction, even at that early date, may be gathered from the fact, that in the single copy which has descended to us* it is divided into acts and scenes. The story is one of common, everyday life; and none of the characters are such as people had been accustomed to find in ordinary dramatic entertainments. The piece takes its name from its hero, a young town-gallant, who is mightily enamoured of himself, and who is encouraged in the good opinion he entertains of his own person and accomplishments by Matthew Merrygreek, a pedlar, who jests and jests. His wife, all undirty and unengaged, is his companion and servant. Ralph Roister Doister is in love with a lady of property, called Custance, betrothed to Gavin Goodluck, a merchant, who is at sea when the comedy begins, but who returns before it concludes. The main incidents relate to the mode in which the hero, with the treacherous help of his associate, endeavours to gain the affections of Custance. He writes her a letter, which Merrygreek reads without a due observance of the punctuation, so that it entirely perverts the meaning of the writer: he visits her while she is surrounded by her female domestics, but he is unceremoniously rejected; he resolves to carry her by force of arms, and makes an assault upon her bower, which is defended by the ladies with mops and brooms, she drives him from the attack. Then, her betrothed lover returns, who has been misconstrued on the subject of her fidelity, but he is seen reconciled on an explanation of the facts; and Ralph Roister Doister, finding that he has no chance of success, and that he has only been jested and laughed at, makes up his mind to be merry at the wedding of Goodluck and Custance. In all this we have no trace of anything like a moral play, with the exception, perhaps, of the character of Matthew Merrygreek, which, in some of its features, its love of mischief and its drollery, bears a resemblance to the comic-Wit of Wotton, who was the chief of essayists of the day. If, as seems probable, the comedy were written before 1556, when the Roister Doister play was first acted at Cambridge until 1556, nine years subsequent to the death of Udall; and it is in every point of view an inferior production. The plot is a mere piece of absurdity, the language is provincial (well fitted, indeed, to the country where the scene is laid), and to the clownish persons engaged in it, and the manner depicted are chiefly those of illiterate rustics. The story, such as it is, relates to the loss of a needle with which Gammer Gurton had mended Hodge's breeches, and which is afterwards found by the hero, when he is about to sit down. The humour, generally speaking, is as coarse as the dialogue; and though it is impossible to deny that in many places the method is crude, it is certainly such as could have produced "Ralph Roister Doister."

The drama which we have been accustomed to regard as our oldest tragedy, and which probably has a just claim to the distinction, was acted on 18th January, 1562, and printed in 1563. It was originally called "Gorboduc;' but it was reprinted in 1571 under the title of "Forrexx and Forrex;" and a third time in 1580, in the form of "The Gobbe," it was published by Ralph Roister Doister. It was performed by the men of the Inner Temple. Although the form of the Greek drama is observed in "Gorboduc," and each not concluded by a chorus, yet Sir Francis Dugdale, from the circumstances of the publication, thinks it was "full of stately speeches and well-sounding phrases," could not avoid complaining that the unities of time and place had been disregarded. Thus, in the very outset and origin of our stage, as regards what may be termed the regular drama, the liberty, which allowed full exercise to the imagination of the audience, and which was afterwards happily carried to a greater excess, was distinctly asserted and maintained. It is also to be remarked, that "Gorboduc" is the earliest known play in our language in which blank-verse was employed; but of the introduction of blank-verse upon our public stage, we shall have occasion to speak hereafter. It was an important change, which required a time, and which was not immediately adopted by the draughtsman of verse. Still, we have now entered upon the reign of Elizabeth; and although, as already observed, moral plays and even miracle-plays were still acted, we shall soon see what a variety of subjects, taken from ancient history, from mythology, fable, and romance, were employed for the purposes of the drama.

1 One of the latest pieces without mixture of history or fable, and consisting wholly of abstract personages, is, "The Tide tarryeth not Man," by George Wapul, printed in 1796: only a single copy of it has been preserved. (Literary London."
2 The principal persons introduced into it have the following names:—Painted-profit, No-good-neighbourhood, Wastefulness, Christianity, Corruptions, Cheats, Pecked-duckers, Greediness, Wantonness, and Authority-in-despair.
3 A very interesting epistle from Udall is to be found in Sir Henry Ellis's volume (edited for the Camden Society). "Original Letters of Eminent Literary Men."
4 That of Udall is first in the series.
5 The single copy is without pagination, so that we are not certain when it was printed: it cannot be ascribed to the press of 1559, for the publication of the "Play is last Ralph Roister Doister," it is ascribed to the "play is not Ralph Roister Doister."
6 We can, therefore, presume that it was published in that year, or in the next.
7 By "the other drama," we mean moral plays, into which the Vice was introduced, or for the amusement of the spectators; no character so called, or with similar propensities, is to be traced in miracle-plays. He was, in fact, the buffoon of our drama, in what may be termed, its second stage. The progress he made was founded upon Scripture-history, and when even moral plays, in order to be relished, required the insertion of a character of broad humour, and vociferous imitations, who was sometimes to be the companion, and at others, the castigation, of the devil, who represented the principle of evil among mankind. The Vice of moral plays subsequently became the fool and jester of comedy, tragedy, and history, and forms another, and another important branch of the dramatic drama of Elizabeth and James I."
8 In the Hist. Engl. Drama, Poetry and the Stage, ii. 429, it is said that the earliest edition of "Gorboduc" has no date. This is a mistake, as is shown by the copy in the 1580 edition of Lord Francis Egerton, which has "anno 1590, Septemb. 23rd" at the bottom of the title-page, Mr. Hallam, in his admirable "Introduction to the Literature of Ruman," (2nd Ed. 1837, p. 172), expresses his dissent from the position, that the first three acts were by Norton, and the next two by Sackville. The old title-page states, that "these acts were written by Ralph Roister Doister, and the new last by Thomas Sackville." Without the printer, William Griffith, were misinformed, this seems decisive. Notice, which we did not have in our possession."
9 Richard Edwards, was an obscure distinguished dramatic poet, who died in 1566, and who wrote the lost play of "Palamon and Arcite," which seems to have been what we have noticed, was written. We know nothing of the authorship, except the example of Sackville and Norton: his "Damon and Pithias," (the only piece by him that has survived) is in rhyme. See Dodgson's Old Plays, last edition, vol. i. p. 177. Thomas Twine, an actor in "Palamon and Arcite," wrote an epitaph upon its author. "Gammer Gurton's Needle," and "Gorboduc," (the last printed from the second edition) are also inserted in vol. i. and ii. of Dodgson's Old Plays.
Stephen Gosson, one of the earliest enemies of theatrical performances, writing his "Plays confuted in Five Actions" a little after the period of which we are now speaking, but adverting to the drama as it had existed some years before, tells us, that "the Prince of Pleasure, the Golden Ass, the Ethiopian History, Amadis of France, and the Round Table;—comedies in Latin, French, Italian, and Spanish, have been thoroughly ransacked to furnish the play-houses in London." Hence, unquestionably, many of the materials of what is termed our romantic drama were obtained. The accounts of the Master of the Revels between 1570 and 1580 contain the names of various plays represented at court; and it is to be noticed, that it was customary to practice the play at a later date, and it was probably the practice at the time to which we are now advertising, to select for performance before the Queen such pieces as were most in favour with public audiences; consequently the mention of a few of the titles of productions represented before Elizabeth at Greenwich, Whitehall, Richmond, or Nonsuch, will show the character of the popular performances of the day. We derive the following names from Mr. P. Cunningham's "Extracts from the Revels' Accounts," printed for the Shakespeare Society:—

These are only a few out of many dramas, establishing the multiplicity of sources to which the poets of the time resorted. 1 Nevertheless, we find on the same indisputable authority, that moral plays were not yet altogether discarded in the court entertainments; for we read, in the original records, of productions the titles of which prove that they were pieces of that allegorical description; among these are "Truth, Faithfulness, and Mercy," and "The Marriage of Mind and Measure," which is expressly called "a moral."

Our main object in referring to these pieces has been to show the great diversity of subjects which had been dramatised before 1580. In 1581 Barnabe Rich published his "Every Man in his Professton," consisting of eight novels; and at the close of the work he inserts this strange address "to the reader."— 2 Now thou last perused these histories to the end, I doubt not but thou wilt deem of them as they worthwhilely deserve, and think such vanities more fitting to be presented on a stage (as some of them have been) than to be published in print. The fact is, that three dramas are extant which more or less closely resemble three of Rich's novels: one of them "Twelfth Night;" another, "The Weakest goeth to the Wall;" and the third the old play of "Philotas." 3

Upon the manner in which the materials thus procured were then handled, we have several contemporaneous authorities. George Whetstone, (an author who has principally acquired celebrity by writing an earlier drama upon the incidents employed by Shakespeare in his "Measure for Measure") in the dedication of his "Promos and Cassandra," gives a compendious description of the nature of popular theatrical representations in 1578. "The Englishman (he remarks) in this quality is most vain, indiscreet, and out of order. He first grounds his work on impossibilities; then, in three hours, runs he through the world, marries, gets children, makes children, men to conquer kingdoms, murder monsters, and bringeth gods from heaven, and doeth with devils from hell; and, till the ground is levelled for working indiscreet; not weighing, so the people laugh, though they laugh them for their follies to scorn. Many times, to make mirth, they make a clown companion with a king: in their grave counsels they allow the advice of fools; yea, they use one order of speech for all persons, a gross indiscreet." 4 This, it will be seen, is a distinct and peculiar feature, which is taken in our romantic drama, and of the reliance of poets, long before the time of Shakespeare, upon the imaginations of their auditors.

To the same effect we may quote a work by Stephen Gosson, to which we have before been indebted,—"Plays confuted in Five Actions,"— which must have been printed about 1580:— "If a true history (says Gosson) be taken in hand, it is made, like our shadows, longest at the rising and falling of the sun, shortest of all at high noon; for the poets drive it commonly unto such points, as may best show the majesty of their pen in tropical speeches, or set the hearers agog with eccentricities of love; and, in the next place, their own humours with scoffs and taunts; or bring in a show, to furnish the stage when it is bare." Again, speaking of plays professedly founded upon romance, and not upon "true history," he remarks: "Sometimes you shall see nothing but the adventures of an amorous knight, passing from country to country for the love of some lady, encountering many a terrible monster, made of brown mud, which, at his return is so wonderfully changed, that he cannot be known but by some posy in his tablet, or by a broken ring, or a handkerchief, or a piece of cockle-shell." We can hardly doubt that when Gosson wrote this passage he had particular productions in his mind, and several of the characters he describes are still extant.

Sir Philip Sidney is believed to have written his "Apology of Poetry" in 1588, and we have already referred to it in connexion with "Gorboduc." His observations, upon the general character of dramatic representations in his time, throw much light on the state of the stage a very few years before Shakespeare is supposed to have quitted Stratford-upon-Avon, and attached himself to a theatrical company. "Our tragedies and comedies (says Sidney) are not without cause cried out against, observing neither rules of honest civility, nor skilful poetry. But if it be so in Gorboduc, how much more in all the rest, where you see that not one in five is the truest Asia of the one side, having so many defects, and so many errors and absurdities, that the player, when he comes in, must ever begin with telling where he is, or else the tale will not be conceived. Now you shall have three ladies walk to gather flowers, and then we must believe the stage to be a garden: by and by we hear news of a shipwreck in the same place; then, we are to blame if we do not see a monster; Upon the luck of that comes out a hideous monster with fire and smoke, and then the miserable beholders are bound to take it for a cove; while, in the meantime, two armies fly in, represented with four swords and bucklers, and then what hard heart will not receive it for a pitched field! Now, of time they are much more liberal; for ordinary it is that two young princes fall in love: after many travevlers she is got with child, delivered of a fair boy; he is lost, grows a man, falleth in love, and is ready to get another child, and all this in two hours' space: which how absurd it is in sense, even sense may imagine, and art hath taught, and all ancient examples justi-

1 "The Play of Fortune," in the above list, is doubtless the piece which has reached us in a printed shape, as "The Rare Triumphs of Love and Honour," which was acted at Court in 1580, and again in 1582, but it did not come from the press until 1593, and copies of which are in the library of Lord Francis Egerton. The purpose of the anonymous writer was to compose an entertainment which should possess the great requisite of variety, with as much show as could at that early date be accomplished; and we are to recollect that the court theatres were not yet at their zenith. Hence, "The Induction" is in blank-verse, but the body of the drama is in rhymes. "The History of the Collier," also mentioned, was perhaps the comedy subsequently known and printed as "Grim, the Collier of Croyden," and it has been reasonably supposed that "Grim" is the same as Shakespeare's "Comedy of Errors." 2 Until recently no edition of an earlier date than that of 1606 was known, but a quarto, "Measure of Sots," at Oxford, which is about to be reprinted by the Shakespeare Society. Malone had heard of a copy in 1593, but it is certainly a mistake. 3 It was organized for the Banbury Club in 1555, by J. W. Mackenzie, Esq.
fied." He afterwards comes to a point previously urged by Whetstone; for Sidney complains that plays were "neitherright tragedies nor right comedies, mingling kings and clowns, not because the manner was设施 but through the want of skill, the doorkeepers, to play a part in majestical matters with neither decency nor discretion; so as neither the admiration and commiseration, nor right sportfulness is by their mongrel tragi-comedy obtained."

It will be remarked that, with the exception of the instance of "Gorboduck," no writer we have had occasion to cite mentions the English Chronicles, as having yet furnished dramatists with stories for the stage; and we may perhaps infer that resort was not had to them, for the purposes of the public theatres, until after the date of which we are now speaking.

Having thus briefly adverted to the nature and character of dramatic representations from the earliest times to the year 1525, and having established that our romantic drama was of ancient origin, it is necessary shortly to describe the circumstances under which plays were at different early periods performed.

There were no regular theatres, or buildings permanently constructed for the purposes of the drama, until after 1575. Morality plays were exhibited in the halls of corporations, but more frequently upon moveable stages, or scaffolds, erected in the open air. Moral plays were subsequently performed under nearly similar circumstances, excepting that a practice had grown up, among the nobility and wealthier gentry, of having dramatic entertainments at particular seasons in their own residences.

The domestics of a great personage were the company of actors retained in the family, and sometimes by itinerant players, who belonged to large towns, or who called themselves the servants of members of the aristocracy. In 1412 the act was passed allowing strolling actors to perform, if licensed by some baron or nobleman of higher degree, but subjecting all who went to the penalties inflicted upon vagrants. Therefore, although many companies of players went round the country, and acted as the servants of some of the nobility, they had no legislative protection until 1572. It is a singular fact, that the earliest known company of players, traveling under the name and patronage of one of the nobility, was that of the Duke of Gloucester, afterwards Richard III. Henry VII. had two distinct bodies of "actors of interludes" in his pay, and from henceforward the profession of a player became well understood and recognized. In the later part of the reign of Henry VII., the players of the Duke of Norfolk and Buckingham, and of the Earls of Arundel, Oxford, and Northumberland, performed at court. About this period, and somewhat earlier, we hear of

* As early as 1465 a company of players had performed at the wedding of the Duke of York and Margaret, and in 1509 Sir John Howard, afterwards Duke of Norfolk, see "Manners and Household Expenses of England," printed by Mr. Butlif, M. P., for the Regions Club in 1791, p. 304.

The anonymous MS. play of "Sir Thomas More," written towards the close of the reign of Elizabeth, gives a very correct notion of the mode in which offices to perform were made by a company of players, and accepted by the owner of the mansion. Four players and a boy (for the female characters) tender their services to the Lord Chancellor, just as he is on the point of giving a grand supper to the Lord Mayor and Corporation of London: Sir Thomas More inquires what pieces they can perform, and the answer of the leader of the company supplied him with the "Crucifixion," the "Craving of a Bench," "Hit Nail on the Head," "Impatient Poverty," "The French Knaves," "Lusty Juventas," and "The Marriage of Wit and Wisdom." Sir Thomas More fixes upon the last, and it is accordingly represented, as a play within a play, before the banquet. Sir Thomas More was regularly licensed for public performance.

* Either from preference or policy, Richard III. appears to have been one of the first, and joined in the laude of dramatic performances. He patronized two distinct bodies of "minstrels," and performers on instruments called "shalmis." These facts are derived from a manuscript in the apartments of King Edward IV., formerly belonging to the Duke of Norfolk, preserved in the library of the Society of Antiquaries, and recently printed for the use of the members of the Roxburghe Club.

  At a considerably subsequent date some of these infant companies performed before general audiences; and to them we are added the Cheshire players, who were not only never attached to any established establishment, but were chiefly encouraged as a nursery for actors. The Queen of James I. had also a company of theatrical children under her patronage.

Companies attached to particular places; and in oveal records we read of the players of York, Coventry, Lavenham, Wycombe, Chester, Manningtree, Evesham, Mile-end, Kingston, &c.

In the reign of Henry VIII. and perhaps in that of his predecessor, the gentlemen and singing-boys of the Chapel Royal were employed to act plays and interludes before the court; and afterwards the children of Westminster, St. Paul's, and Windsor, under their several masters, are not infrequently mentioned in the household books of the palace, and in the accounts of the department of the pageant.

In 1541 the king added a new company to the dramatic retinue of the court, besides the two companies which had been paid by his father, and the associations of theatrical children. In fact, at this period dramatic entertainments, masques, disguising, and revels of every description, were carried on to a costly excess. Henry VIII. devoted the sum, until then paid for a play, from 6d. 13s. 4d. to 10l. William Cartus, the master of the children of the chapel, on one occasion was paid no less a sum than 200l., in the money of that time, by way of reward; and John Heywood, the author of interludes before mentioned, who was also a player upon the virginals, had a salary of 20l. per annum, in addition to what he received as a poet. John Heywood was appointed by Henry VIII. to the office of Misrule, was regularly appointed to superintend the sports, and he also was separately and liberally remunerated. The example of the court was followed by the counties, and the companies of theatrical retainers, in the pay, or acting in various parts of the kingdom under the patronage of particular noblemen, became extremely numerous. Religious ideas were also introduced into the stage, and were in the getting up and representation of the performances, especially shortly before the dissolution of the monasteries: in the account-book of the Prior of Dunmow, between March 1532 and July 1536, we find entries of payments to Lords of Misrule there appointed, as well as to the players at the points of the Petition of the Earls of Dorset, Exeter, and Sussex. In 1543 was passed a statute, rendered necessary by the polenical character of some of the dramas publicly represented, although, not many years before, the king had himself encouraged such performances at court, by being present at a play in which Luther and his wife were ridiculed. The act prohibits "ballads, plays, rhymes, songs, and other fantasias" of a religious or doctrinal tendency, but at the same time carefully provides, that the clauses shall not extend to "songs, plays, and interludes" which had for object "the rebuking and reproaching of vices, and the setting forth of virtue; so always the said songs, plays, or interludes meddle not with the interpretations of Scripture."

The permanent office of Master of the Revels, for the superintendence of all dramatic performances, was created in 1555 and Sir Thomas Catesby was appointed to it with an annual salary of £10. A person of the name of John Bernard was made Clerk of the Revels, with an allowance of 8d. per day and livery.

It is a remarkable point, established by Mr. Tytler, that Henry VIII. was not yet buried, and Bishop Gardiner and his parishioners, being in the possession of a grant, which was one of the results of the Earl of Oxford posted bills for the performance of a play in Southwark. This was long before the construction of any regular theatre on the Bankside; and it shows how early a date that part of the town was selected for such exhibitions. When Mr. Tytler adds that the players of the Earl of Oxford were "the first that were kept up with a regular house," he falls into a great error. Richard III., and others of the nobility, as already remarked, had companies of players attached to their households.

We have the evidence of Puttenham, in his "Art of English Poesie," 1589, for stating that the Earl of Oxford, under whose name the players in 1547 were about to perform, was himself a dramatic performer. Very soon after Edward VI. came to the throne, severe measures were taken to restrain not only dramatic performances, but the publication of dramas. Playing and printing plays were first entirely suspended; then, the companies of noblemen were allowed to perform, but not without strict conditions; and finally, the Provincial, and to the number of six of the Privy Council were required to their licenses. The objection stated was, that the plays had a political, not a polemical, purpose. One of the first acts of Mary's government, was to issue a proclamation to put a stop to the performance of interludes calculated to advance the principles of the Reformation; and we may be sure that the same thing was done in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. The claim was of a century description. It appears on other authorities, that for two years there was an entire cessation of public dramatic performances; but in this reign the representation of the old Roman Catholic miracle-plays was partially and authoritatively revived.

It is not intended to detail the proceedings in connexion with theatrical representations at the opening of the reign of Elizabeth. At first plays were disconstrained, but by degrees they were permitted; and the queen seems at all times to have derived much pleasure from the services of her own players, those of her nobility, and of the different companies of children belonging to Westminster, St. Paul's, Wren's, and other schools. The Earl of Pembroke's court also performed "Gorboduc" on 18th January, 1562; and on February 1st, an historical play, under the name of "Julius Caesar," was represented, but by what company is no where mentioned.

In 1572 the act was passed (which was renewed with additional force in 1577) to restrain the number of itinerant performers. Two years afterwards, the Earl of Leicester obtained from Edward VI. a patent under the great seal, to enable his players James Burbage, Richard Jones, John Alleyn, William Johnson, and Robert Wilson, to perform "comedies, tragedies, interludes, and stage-plays," in any part of the kingdom, with the exception of the metropolis.

The Lord Mayor and Aldermen succeeded in excluding the plays from the strict boundaries of the city, but they were not able to prevent them from being performed out of the liberties; nor to be forgotten that James Burbage and his associates were supported by court favour generally, and by the powerful patronage of the Earl of Leicester in particular. Accordingly, in the year after they had obtained their patent, James Burbage and his fellows took a large house in the parish of St. Mary Eglise, and converted it into a theatre. This was accomplished in 1576, and it is the first time we hear of any building set apart for theatrical representations. Until then the various companies of actors had been obliged to content themselves with churches, halls, with temporary erections in the streets, or with inn-yards, in which they raised a stage, the spectators standing below, or occupying the galleries that surrounded the open space. Just about the same period two other edifices were built for the exhibition of plays in Shoreditch, one of which was called "The Curtain," and the other "The Theatre." Both these are mentioned as in existence and in use until 1600; and from this circumstance it appears that the theatre was standing there not many years afterwards.

John Stockwood, a puritanical preacher, published a sermon in 1578, in which he asserted that there were "eight ordinary places" in and near London for dramatic exhibitions, and that the united profits were not less than £2000 a year. In at least £12,000 of our present weekly expenditure is charged upon the name of White, equally opposed to such performances, preaching in 1576, called the play-houses at that time erected, "sumptuous theatres." No doubt, the puritanical zeal of these divines had been excited by the opening of the Blackfriars, the Curtain, and the Theatre, in 1576 and 1577, for the exclusive purpose of the drama; and the five additional places which had been licensed before the Parliament met in 1575 were not erected before 1578, were mostly likely a play-house at Newington-buts, or inn-yards, converted occasionally into theatres.

An important fact, in connexion with the manner in which dramatic performances were patronized by Queen Elizabeth, has been recently brought to light. It has been hitherto

1 The original appointment of John Bernard is preserved in the library of Sir Thomas Phillipps, Bart., to whom we owe the additional information, that this Clerk of the Revels had a house assigned to him, strangely called, in the instrument, "Egypt, and Flesh-Hall," with a garden which had belonged to the dissolved monastery of the Charter-house: the words of the original are, extanta illa domus et edification nuper vocata Egyptiana et Fleshitall, et ille domum etiam adjectum nuper vocitum in Garumt. The theatrical wardrobe of the Earl of Oxford was in the house of John's Gate, Clerkenwell.

3 See Kemp's "Loyel Manuscripts," 1523, p. 61. The warrant for the purpose was under the seal manual, and it was directed to Sir T. Cawarden, as Master of the Revels:—We will and command you, upon the sight hereof, forthwith to make and deliver out of our Treasury the sum of £100 to the bailiffs of the city of London, for the use of our Chapel, for a play to be played before us at the feast of our Coronation, as in times past hath accustomed to be done by the bailiffs of our city, the time of our marriage, at the expense of the revenues of our kingdom. The date is 1539, was for some unexplained reason deferred until Christmas.
4 There is a material difference between the warrant under the privy seal and the one issued on the occasion; the former gives the players a right to perform as "well within the city of London and liberties of the same as elsewhere; but the latter is limited to the city. Mr. Tyrwhitt, in his note to this paragraph, and we need entertain little doubt that it was excluded at the instance of the Corporation of London, always opposed to theatrical performances.

1 In 1557 the Boar's Head, Algate, had been used for the performance of a drama called "The Sack full of News," and Stephen Gosson in his "School of Abuse," 1579, (reprinted by the Shakespeare Society) mentions the Belfrey, the Bull and the Inn as at which particular plays had been represented. R. Flickner, in his "Short Discourse of the English Stage," appended to his "Lover's Kingdom," 1604, says that "at this day is to be seen" that "the inn yards of the Cross Keys, and Bull, in Grace and Bishopsgate Streets" had been used as theatrical purposes. In 1575, the Earl of Leicester's theatre was in the inn-yard of the Bear's Head, Algate, had belonged to the father of Edward Alleyn.

2 It has been supposed by some, that the Curtain theatre owed its name to the curtain employed to separate the acting and spectator's space. We have before us documents (which on account of the length we cannot insert) showing that such was probably not the fact, but that the name of the theatre was derived from the curtain of our Chapel, for a play to be played before us at the feast of our Coronation, as in times past hath accustomed to be done by the bailiffs of our city, the time of our marriage, the rent of which was used for the entertainment we have to offer our thanks to Mr. T. E. Tomlins of Islington.

4 See the "Memoirs of Edward Alleyn," (published by the Shakespeare Society) p. 199. It seems that the Rose had been the sign of a house of public entertainment before it was converted into a theatre. It was at the east-end of the Southwark Wall, in the same neighbourhood.

5 By Mr. Peter Cunningham, in his "Extracts from the Accounts of the Revels," printed for the Shakespeare Society, pp. 32 and supposed that in 1583 she selected one company of twelve performers, to be called "the Queen’s players"; but it seems that she had two separate associations in her pay, each distinguished as "the Queen’s players." Tylden, the master of the revels at the time, records, in one of his accounts, that in March, 1583, she paid "to Richard Tarlton and Robert Wilson were placed at the head of that association, which was probably soon afterwards divided into two distinct bodies of performers. In 1590, John Lanham was the leader of one body, and Lawrence Dutton of the other.

We have thus brought our sketch of dramatic performances to the close of the period, the year 1583. We propose to continue it to 1590, and to assume that as the period not, of course, when Shakespeare first joined a theatrical company, but when he began writing original pieces for the stage. This is a matter which is more distinctly considered in the biography of the poet; but it is necessary here to fix some date to which we are to extend our introductory account of the progress and condition of theatrical affairs. What we have still to offer will apply to the seven years from 1583 to 1590.

The accounts of the revels at court afford us little information, and indeed for several years, when such entertainments were certainly required by the Queen, we are without any detailed particulars of what was performed, or of the cost of preparation. We have such particulars for the years 1581, 1582, 1584, and 1587, but for the intermediate years they are wanting.

From 1581, 1582, and 1584, we have the following names of distinct performances of various kinds exhibited before the Queen:

A comedy called Delight.

The Story of Pompey.

A Game of the Cards.

A comedy of Beauty and Housewifry.

Love and Fortune.

History of Ferrar.

History of Telena.

Ariodatus and Genorena.

Pastorini or Philius and Cloris.

History of Felix and Phillomena.

Five Plays in One.

Three Plays in One.

Agamemnon and Ulysses.

This list of dramas (the accounts mention that others were acted without supplying their titles) establishes that moral plays had not yet been excluded. The "Game of the Cards" is expressly called "a comedy or moral," in the accounts of 1582; and we may not unreasonably suppose that "Delight," and "Beauty and Housewifry," were of the same class. "The Story of Pompey," and "Agamemnon and Ulysses," were evidently performances founded upon ancient history, and such may have been the case with "The Life of an Adventurer," and Felix and Phillomena," which has been called "the play of Fortune" in the account of 1573; and we may feel assured that "Ariodante and Genorena" was the story told by Ariosto, which also forms part of the plot of "Much Ado about Nothing." "The History of Ferrar" was doubtless "The History of Error" of the account of 1577, the clerk having written the title by ear; and we may reasonably suspect that "Felix and Phillomena" was the tale of Felix and Feliciana, narrated in the "Diana" of Montemayor. It is thus evident, that the Master of the

186. The editor's "Introduction" is full of new and valuable information.

1 Tarlton died on 3 Sept., 1588, and we apprehend that it was not until after this date that Lanham became leader of one company of the Queen's. The account books of the Queen's Revels are, unfortunately, not very clear, and we had to call upon the Preparatory Office, bearing date on the day of his decease; he there calls himself "one of the gentlemen of the Queen's chamber," and leaves a "bequest to the Queen's chamber" of 50s. This is a "bequest of 50s. for his obitsory, specialties, and debts," to his son Philip Tarlton, a minor. He appoints his mother, Katherine Tarlton, his friend Robert Adams, and "his fellow William Johnson, one also of the group of her Majesty's chamber," trustees for his son, and executors of his will, which was proved by Adams three days after the death of the testator. A MS. in the British Museum, written for Sir Richard Devereux, which we are not able to quote, states that he was a widower; and of his son, Philip Tarlton, we never hear after the date of the will.

2 From 1587 to 1604, the most important period as regards Shakespeare, it does not appear that any official statements by the masters of the revels have been preserved. In the same way there is an unfortunate interval between 1604 and 1601.

3 One of the last pieces represented before Queen Elizabeth was a Revels and the actors exerted themselves to furnish variety for the entertainment of the Queen and her nobility; but we still see no trace ("Gorboduc") excepted of any play at court, the materials for which were obtained from the English Chronicles. It is very certain, however, that anterior to 1588 such undertaking had been written, and acted before public audiences; but those who entered the court in these matters might not consider it expedient to exhibit, in the presence of the Queen, any play which involved the actions or conduct of her predecessors. The companies of players engaged in these representations were the Earl of Oxford, the Earl of Leicester, Derby, Sussex, Essex, the Lords Holland and Strange, and the children of the Chapel Royal and of St. Paul's.

About this date the number of companies of actors performing publicly in and near London seems to have been very considerable. A person, who calls himself "a soldier," writing to Secretary Walsingham, in January, 1586, tells him, that "every day in the week the players' bills are set up in sundry places of the city," and after mentioning the actors of the Queen, the Earl of Leicester, the Earl of Oxford, and the Lord Admiral, he goes so far as to state that no fewer than two hundred persons, thus retained and employed, straitened in their silks about the streets. It may be doubted whether this statement is quite exaggerated, and whether the players resorted under their names at this date, and that each company consisted probably of eight or ten performers. On the authority we learn that theatrical representations upon the Sabbath had been forbidden; but this restriction does not seem to have been imposed without a considerable struggle. Before 1581 the Privy Council had issued an order upon the subject, but it was disregarded in some of the suburbs of London; and it was not until after a fatal exhibition of bear-baiting at Paris Garden, upon Sunday, 13 June, 1583, when many persons were killed and wounded by the falling of a scaffold, that the practice of playing, as well as bear-baiting, on the Sabbath was at all generally checked. In 1586, as we can judge from the information that has come down to our day, the order which had been issued in this respect was pretty strictly enforced. At this period, and afterwards, plays were not unfrequently played at court on Sunday, and the chief difficulty therefore seems to have been to induce the Privy Council to act with energy against similar performances in public theatres.

The annual official statement of the Master of the Revels merely tells us, in general terms, that between Christmas 1586, and Shrovetide 1587, "seven plays, besides feats of activity, and other shows by the children of Paul's, her Majesty's school, were disposed of, and performed and represented before the Queen at Greenwich. No names of plays are furnished, but in 1587 was printed a tragedy, under the title of "The Misfortunes of Arthur," which purports to have been acted by some of the members of Gray's Inn before the Queen, on 28 Feb., 1587; this, in fact, must be the very production stated in the revels' account to have been performed and up by performed by these parties; and it requires notice, not merely for its own intrinsic excellence as a drama, but, because, in point of date, it is
The second play founded upon English history represented at court, as well as the second original theatrical production in blank-verse that has been preserved. The example, in this particular, had been set, as we have already shown, in "Gorboduc," fifteen years before; and it is probable, that in that interval not a few of the serious compositions exhibited at court were in blank-verse, but it had not yet been used on public occasions.

The main body of "The Misfortunes of Arthur" was the authorship of Thomas Hughes, a member of Gray's Inn, but some speeches and two choruses (which are not in rhyme) were added by William Fulbecke and Francis Flower, while no less mean than Lord Bacon assisted Christopher Yeardley in the employment of blank-verse. Hughes evidently took "Gorboduc" as his model, both in subject and style, and, like Sackville and Norton, he adopted the form of the Greek and Roman drama, and adhered more strictly than his predecessors to theunities of time and place. The plot relates to the rebellion of Mordred against his father, King Arthur, and part of the plot is very revolting, on account of the incest between Mordred and his stepmother Guenevere. Mordred himself was the son of Arthur's sister; there is also a vast deal of blood and slaughter throughout, and the catastrophe is the killing of the son by the father, and of the father by the son. This plot, a partially disgraceful story could hardly have been selected. The authorship is more generally supposed to be a very bold and vigorous genius; his characters are strongly drawn, and the language they employ is consistent with their situations and habits: his blank-verse, both in force and variety, is superior to that of either Sackville or Norlow.

It is very clear, that up to the year 1580, about which date Gosson published his "Plays confuted in Five Actes," dramatic performances on the public stages of London were sometimes in prose, but more constantly in rhyme. In his "School of Abuse," 1579, Gosson speaks of "two or three" plays that were "in rhyme." He says in his "Plays confuted" he tells us, that "poets send their versyes to the stage upon such feet as continually are rolled up in s. o. With one or two exceptions, all the plays publicly acted, of a date anterior to 1590, that have come down to us, are either in prose or rhyme. The case seems to have been different, as already remarked, with some of the court-shows and private entertainments; but we are now advert- ing to the pieces represented at such places as the Theatre, the Curtain, Blackfriars, and in innyards adapted temporarily to dramatic amusements, to which the public was indiscriminately admitted. The earliest work in which the employment of blank-verse for the purpose of the common stage is noticed, is an epitaph by Thomas Nash introducing to the world his friend Robert Greene's "Metamorph," in 1587; there, in reference to "vain-glorious tragedians," he says, that they are "mounted on the stage of arrogation," and that they "think to out-brave better pens with the swelling bombast of bragging blank-verse." He afterwards talks of the "drumming decasyllibon" they employed, and difficulties they had in repeating it to the last syllable of a player." This question is further illustrated by a production by Greene, published in the next year, "Perimedes, the Blacksmith," from which it is evident that Nash had an individual allusion in what he had said in 1587. Greene fixes on the author of the tragedy "Tamburlaine," whom he seems to regard as the first who used blank-verse in an English blank-verse, and who, it should seem, had somewhere accused Greene of not being able to write it.

We learn from various authorities, that Christopher Marlowe was the author of "Tamburlaine the Great," a dramatic work of the highest celebrity and popularity, printed as early as 1590, and affording the first known instance of the use of blank-verse in a public theatre; the title-page of the edition 1590 states, that it had been "sundry times shown upon stages in the city of London." In the prologue the author claims to have introduced a new form of composition:

"From juggling veins of rhyming mother-actes,
And such conceits as clumsy wits keep in play,
We'll lead you to the stately tent of war," &c.

Accordingly, nearly the whole drama, consisting of the value and second part, is in blank-verse. As Dryden's "Troyes ascention," in the dedication to Lord Or- cery of his "Rival Ladiis," in 1664, that "Shakespeare was the first who, to show the pains of continual rhyming, in- bented that kind of writing which we call blank-verse." The distinction belongs to Marlowe, whose tragedies have been a formidable rival of his genius. We live too much reverence for the exhaustless originality of our great dramatist, to think that he cannot afford this, or any other tribute to a poet, who, as far as the public stage is concerned, deserves to be regarded as the inventor of a new style of composition.

That the attempt was viewed with jealousy, there can be no doubt, after what we have quoted from Nash and Greene. It is most likely that Greene, who was elder than Nash, had previously written various dramas in rhyme; and the bold experiment of Marlowe having been instantly successful, Greene was tempted to abandon his old course, and his extant plays are all in blank-verse. Nash, who had at-tackled Marlowe in 1587, before 1593 (when Marlowe was killed) had joined him in the production of a blank-verse tragedy on the story of Dido, which was published in 1594.

It has been objected against Tambouraine that it is written in a blank verse of a popular style, such indeed as Nash and Greene ridicule; but we are to recollect that Marlowe was at this time endeavouring to wear audiences from the "jiggling veins of rhyming mother-wits," and that, in order to satisfy the ear for the loss of the jingle, he was obliged to give blank verse a blank-verse form. The blank verse of Tambouraine will of itself account for breaches of a more correct taste to be found in "Tambouraine." In the Prologue, besides what we have already quoted, Marlowe tells the audience to expect "high asounding terms," and he did not disappoint expectation. Perhaps the better to reconcile the ordinary frequenters of public theatres to the change of blank verse scenes of low comedy, which the printer of the edition in 1599 thought fit to exclude, as "digressing, and far unmeet for the matter," Marlowe likewise sprinkled couplets here and there, although it is to be remembered, that having accomplished his object of substituting blank verse by the first part of "Tambouraine," he did not, even in the second part, think it necessary to make the frequent inroads on the rhymes. In those plays there which is ground for believing to be the first works of Shakespeare, couplets, and even stanzas, are more frequent than in any of the surviving productions of Marlowe. This circumstance is, perhaps, in part to be accounted for by the fact (as far as we may so call it) that our great poet remained in some sort the possession of the blank verse scenes of old rhyming dramas, which he altered and adapted to the stage; but in early plays, which are to be looked upon as entirely his own, Shakespeare appears to have deemed rhyme more necessary to satisfy the ear of his auditory than Marlowe held it when he wrote his "Tambouraine the Great." As the first employment of blank verse upon the public stage must have mattered of much importance, in relation to the history of our more ancient drama, and to the subsequent adoption of that form of composition by Shakespeare, we ought not to dismiss it without affording a single specimen from "Tambouraine the Great." The following is a portion of a speech by the hero to Zenocrate, when first he meets and sue to her:

"Diesels Zenocrate to live with me in order to be your follower? Think you I weigh this treasure more than you! Not all the gold in India's wealthly arms Shall buy the meanest soldier in my train. Zenocrate, in the lovely Dove, Brighter than is the silver Rhodope, Fairer than whitest snow on Cythonian hills, Thy person is more worth to Tambouraine, In some pun the possession of the Erodon crowns Which gracious stars have promis'd at my birth. A hundred Tarraus shall attend on thee, Mounted on steeds sweeter than Pegasus: Thy garments shall be made of Modian silk, Enfaced to precious jewels of mine own, More rich and valorous than Zenocrate's; With milk-white harts upon an ivry sled Thou shall be drawn about the frosty poles.

Our quotation is from a copy of the edition of 1600, 4to, in the library of Lord Francis Egerton, which we believe to be the earliest on the title-page it is stated that it is "now first and newly publi

The Nash having alluded to "Tambouraine" in 1587, it is evident that it could hardly have been written later than 1585 which is about the period when it has been generally acknowledged, and with an appearance of probability, supposed that Shakespeare arrived in London. In considering the state of the stage just before our great dramatist became a writer for it, it is clearly, therefore, necessary to advert briefly to the other works of Marlowe, observing in addition, with reference to "Tambouraine," that it is a historical drama in which the national dignity is regarded; that grace and action, are equally set at defiance, and the scene shifts at once to or from Persia, Scythia, Georgia, and Morocco, as best suited the purpose of the poet.

Marlowe was also, most likely, the author of a play in which the Priest of the Sun was prominent, as Greene mentions it in "Tambouraine" in 1588, but no such piece is now known: he, however, wrote "The Tragical History of the Life and Death of Doctor Faustus," "The Massacre at Paris," "The rich Jew of Malta," and an English historical play, called "The Troublesome Reign and lamentable Death of Edward the Second," besides adding Nash in "Dido Queen of Carthage," as already mentioned. If they were not the works of Marlowe, as is generally supposed, on the account of a supposed original works, they were written by a man who had set the example of the employment of blank verse the public stage, and perhaps of the historical and romantic drama in all its leading features and characteristics. His "Edward the Second" affords sufficient proof of both these points: the verification displays, though not perhaps in the same degree, the grandeur of Shakespeare in point of construction, as well as in interest, bears a strong resemblance to the "Richard the Second" of our great dramatist. It is impossible to read the one without being reminded of the other, and we can have no difficulty in assigning "Edward the Second" to an anterior period.

The same remark as to date may be made upon the works which come from the pen of Robert Greene, with the feathers of others: he alluded, as we apprehend, to the manner in which Shakespeare had availed himself of the two parts of the "Contention between the Houses, York and Lancaster," in the authorship of which there is much reason to suppose Greene had been concerned. Such evidence, if really relied upon the one in our "Introduction" to "The Third Part of Henry VI.," and a perusal of the two parts of the "Contention," in their original state, will serve to show the condition of our dramatic literature at that great epoch of our stage-history, when Shakespeare began to acquire celebrity. "The True Tragedy of Richard III." is a drama of about the same period, which has come down to us in a much more imperfect state, the original manuscript, having been obviously... very corrupt. It was printed in 1594, and Shakespeare, finding it in the possession of the company to which he was engaged, was induced thereby to write and produce "Richard the Third" of some of its rude materials. It seems not unlikely that Robert Greene, and perhaps some other popular dramatists of his day, had been engaged upon "The True Tragedy of Richard III." 1

The dramatic works published under the name or initials of Robert Greene contain in one of them a necromancy aserted to have been written by "Orlando Furioso" (found upon the poems of Boiardo and Ariosto), first printed in 1594; "Friar Bacon and Friar Bungy," also first printed in 1594, and taken from a popular story-book of the time; "A phantom King of Arragon," 1594, for which we know no original; and "James the Fourth" of Scotland, 1598, partly borrowed from history, and partly mere invention. Greene also joined with Thomas Lodge in writing a species of moral-miracle-play, (partaking of the nature of both,) under the title of "A Looking-Glass for London and England," 1594, derived from sacred history; and to him has also been ascribed, "George a Greene, the Pinner of Wakefield," 1594. In the Library of G. B. Stevens, Greene's "Dulwich," the one printed in 1599, and the other in 1602. It may be seriously doubted whether he had any hand in the two last, but the productions above-named deserve attention, as works written at an early date for the gratification of popular audiences.

We are already referred to the "Greatworth of Wit," 1592, Greene also objects to Shakespeare on the ground that he thought himself "as well able to bombast out a blank-verse" as the best of his contemporaries. The fact is, that in this respect, as in all others, Greene was much inferior to Marlowe, and still less can his lines bear comparison with those of Shakespeare. He doubted as he began to write for the stage in rhyme, and his blank-verse preserves nearly all the defects of that early form: it reads heavily and monotonously, without variety of pause and inflection, and almost the only difference between it and rhyme is the absence of corresponding sounds at the ends of the lines.

The same defects, and in many respects a striking degree of originality, belong to another of the dramatists who is entitled to be considered a predecessor of Shakespeare, and whose name has been before introduced—Thomas Lodge. Only one play in which he was unassisted has descended to us, and it bears the title of "The Wounds of Civil War, lately set forth in the True Tragedies of Marcus and Sylvia." It was not printed until 1597, and it was written as late as 1580, and we may safely consider his tragedy anterior to the original works of Shakespeare: it was probably written about 1587 or 1588, as a not very successful experiment in blank-verse, in imitation of that style which Marlowe had at once rendered popular.

As regards the dates when his pieces came from the press, John Lyly is entitled to earlier notice than Greene, Lodge, or even Marlowe; and it is possible, as he was ten years older than Shakespeare, that he was a writer before any of them: it does not seem, however, that his dramas were acted in any of the public stages, but for court-shows or private entertainments. The best of his productions, was represented at Court, and it was twice printed in 1584, and again in 1591: it is, like most of his author's productions, in prose; but his "Woman in the Moon" (printed in 1597) is in blank-verse, and the "Maids Metamorphosis," 1600, (if indeed it be by him,) in rhyming clerk-verse. The latter was not composed in a refined, affected, and artificial style, can be said to have had any material influence upon stage-entertainments before miscellaneous audiences in London, it is unnecessary for our present purpose to say more regarding them.

George Peele was about the same age as Lyly; 2 but his theatrical productions (with the exception of "The Arraignment of Paris," printed in 1584, and written for the court) are of a different description, having been intended for exhibition at the ordinary theatres. His "Edward the First" he calls a "famous chronicle," and most of the incidents, as he remarks, were drawn from history, and the earliest plays founded upon English annals. It was printed in 1593 and in 1599, but with so many imperfections, that we cannot accept it as any fair representation of the state in which it came from the author's pen. The most remarkable feature belonging to it is the unworthy manner in which Peele personified the character of the Queen to her husband, and generally confused the popular imagination as to the opening of it is spirited, and affords evidence of the author's skill as a writer of blank-verse. His "Battle of Alcazar" may also be termed a historical drama, in which he allowed himself the most extravagant licence as to time, incidents, and characters. It perhaps preceded his "Edward the First" in point of date (though not printed until 1584,) and the principal event it refers to occurred in 1578. "Sir Clymon and Clymades" is merely a romance, in the old form of a rhyming play; and "David and Bethsab," a scriptural drama, and a great improvement upon older pieces of the same description; Peele here confined himself strictly to the incidents in Holy Writ and it certainly contains the best specimens of his blank-verse composition. His "Old Wives Tale," in the shape in which it has reached us, seems hardly deserving of criticism, and it would have received little notice but for some remote, and perhaps accidental, resemblance between its story and that of Milton's "Comus." 3

Jerome used to say that Thomas Kyd is to be looked upon as a species of transition play: the date of its composition, on the testimony of Ben Jonson, may be stated to be prior to 1588, just after Marlowe had produced his "Tamburlaine," and when Kyd hesitated to follow his bold step to the full extent of his progress. "Jeronymo" is therefore partly in blank-verse, and partly in rhyme; the same observation will apply, though not in the same degree, to Kyd's "Spanish Tragedy:" it is in truth a second part of alty of Sir W. Draper, in 1600-7, of which an account is given by Horace Walpole. "Lord Mayn's Journals," printed for the Percy Society; he erroneously supposed it to have been the work of George Peele, who could not then have been more than fourteen years old, even if he carry back the date of his birth to 1538. George Peele was dead in 1590. 4

It may be doubted whether Peele wrote any part of this production; it was printed anonymously in 1596, and the emergence of authorship is the existence of a copy with the name of Peele, in an old hand, upon the title-page, which, so far as one can judge from the very early composition, and it belongs precisely to the class of romantic plays ridiculed by Stephen Gosson about 1584.

The "Old Wives Tale," in the Second Folio, 1632, ed. 1641. Of this resemblance, Earst, who first pointed it out, remarks, "That Milton had an eye on this ancient drama, which might have been a means of awakening his imagination to so much credibility, as that he conceived the Paradise Lost from seeing a mystery at Florence, written by Adriani, a Fiorentine, in 1517, and possibly the image of a Byssus how retorted to the same original, now lost: "The Old Wives Tale" reads exactly as if it were founded upon some popular story-

1 In the introduction to his "Cynthia's Revels," acted in 1600, where he is speaking of the revival of plays, and among others of "the old canon historians, which he adds, had "departed a dozen years since"
TO THE TIME OF

SHAKESPEARE.

"Jerome," the story being continued from one play to the other, and managed with considerable dexterity. The interest in the matter given shows a generally well sustained, and none of the characters are drawn with little art and force. The success of "Jerome," doubtless, induced Kyd to write the second part of it immediately; and we need not hesitate in concluding that "The Spanish Tragedy" had been acted before 1590.

Besides Marlowe, Greene, Lodge, Lyly, Peele, and Kyd, there were other dramatists, who may be looked upon as the immediate predecessors of Shakespeare, but few of whose printed works are of an earlier date, as regards composition, than some of those which came from the pen of our great poet. Among these, Thomas Nash was the most distinguished, whose contribution to "Dido," in conjunction with Marlowe, has been before noticed; the portions which came from the pen of Marlowe are, we think, easily to be distinguished from those written by Nash, whose genius does not seem to have been of an imaginative or dramatic, but of a satirical and obdurate character. He produced alone a piece called "Summer's Last Will and Testament," which was written in the autumn of 1592, but not printed until 1600; it bears internal evidence that it was exhibited as a private show, and it could never have been meant for public performance.1 Henry Chettle, who was also senior to Shakespeare, has left behind him a tragedy called "Hoffman," which was not printed until 1630; and he was engaged with Anthony Munday in producing "The Death of Robert Earl of Huntingdon," printed in 1594, which is among the most costly dresses that were purchased, that characters might be consistently habited; and, as a single proof, we may mention, that sometimes more than 20l. were given for a cloak, an enormous price, when it is recollected that money was then five or six times as valuable as at present.

We have thus briefly stated all that seems absolutely requisite to give the reader a correct notion of the state of the English drama and stage at the period when, according to the best judgment we can form from such evidence as remains to us, Shakespeare advanced to a forward place among the dramatists of the day. As long ago as 1579, Dryden gave currency to the notion, which we have shown to be mistaken, that Shakespeare "created first the stage," and he repeated it in 1692.2 It is not necessary to the just admixture of our noble dramatist, that we should do injustice to his predecessors or earlier contemporaries; on the contrary, his miraculous powers are best to be estimated by a comparison with his ablest rivals; and if he appear not greatest when his works are placed beside those of Marlowe, and Shakespeare, and Kyd, and Greene, and Greene's predecessors, it is only on account of his rank as dramatists, and however deserved their popularity, we shall be content to think, that for more than two centuries the world has been under a delusion as to his claims. He rose to eminence, and he maintained it, amid struggles for equality by men of high genius and varied talents; and with his example ever since before us, no poet of our own, or in any other country, has even approached his excellence. Shakespeare is greatest by comparison with greatness, or he is nothing.

1 It can be shown to have been represented at Croydon, no doubt and because of the presence of the Carews, under whose patronage Nash acknowledges himself to have been living. See the dedication to his "Terrors of the Night," fo. 194. The date of the death of Nash, who probably took a part in the representation of his "Summer's Last Will and Testament," has been disputed—whether it was before or after 1601; but the production of a cantharum upon him, from Drayton's "Famifia", printed in 1601, must put an end to all doubt. See the Introduction to Nash's "Pierce Penniless," 1592, as reprinted for the Victoria Press; p. 17. A copy of this comic is without a title-page, but it was entered at Stationers' Hall for publication in 1594, and we may presume that it was printed about that date.

2 He had some share in writing the first part of the "Life of Sir John Oldcastle," which was printed as Shakespeare's work in 1600, although some copies of the play exist without his name on the title-page.

4 In his Prologue to the alteration of "Troilus and Cressida," 1693, he puts these lines into the mouth of the Ghost of Shakespeare:

"Untaught, unpractised, in a barbarous age,
I found not, but created first the stage.
In the dedication of the translation of Juvenal, thirteen years afterwards, Dryden repeats the same assertion in nearly the same words: "...I created the stage; among us, Shakespeare created the stage, and least of all did he create it such as it existed in the time of Dryden; it was, in truth, created by no one man, and in no one age; and whatever improvements Shakespeare introduced, when he began to write for the theatre our romantic drama was completely formed, and had none to contribute."—Pref. to "The Hist. of Engl. Dram. Poetry and the Stage," vol. i., p. xi.
CHAPTER I.

It has been supposed that some of the paternal ancestors of William Shakespeare were advanced, and rewarded with lands and tenements in Warwickshire, for services rendered to Henry VII.1 The rolls of that reign have been recently most carefully searched, and the name of Shakespeare, according to any mode of spelling it, does not occur in them.

Many Shakespeares were resident in different parts of Warwickshire, as well as in some of the adjoining counties, at an early date. The register of the Guild of St. Anne of Knole, or Knowle, beginning in 1407 and ending in 1532, when it was dissolved, contains various repetitions of the name, during the reigns of Henry VI. Edward IV., Richard III., Henry VII., and Henry VIII.: we there find a Thomas Shakespeare of Balishalle, or Balsal, Thomas Chaesper and John Shakespeare of Rowington, Richard Shakespeare of Woldiche, together with Jean, Jane, and William Shakespeares of places not mentioned: an Isabella Shakespeare is also there stated to have been priorissae de Wyardale in the 19th Henry VII.2 The Shakespeares of Wresal, of Rowington, and of Balsal, are mentioned by Malone, as well as other persons of the same name at Claverdon and Hampton. He carries back his information regarding the Shakespeares of Warwick no higher than 1602, but a William Shakespeare was drowned in the Avon near Warwick in 1574, a John Shakespeare was resident on the "High Pavement" in 1578, and a Thomas Shakespeare in the same place in 1582.3

The earliest date at which we hear of a Shakespeare in the borough of Stratford-upon-Avon is 17th June, 1555, when Thomas Sisie instituted a proceeding in the court of the bailiff, for the recovery of the sum of 8l. from John Shakespeare, who has always been taken to be the father of our great dramatist. Thomas Sisie was of Arscott, or Arscote, in Worcestershire, and in the Latin record of the suit John Shakespeare is called "glover," in English. Taking it for granted, as we have every reason to do, that this John Shakespeare was the father of the poet, the document satisfied Malone that he was a glover, and not a "baker," as Aubrey had affirmed.4 He was said in wool, as Rowe had stated.5 We think that Malone was right, though the testimony is unquestionably more positive and authentic than the traditions to which we have referred. As it is also the most ancient piece of direct evidence connected with the establishment of the Shakespeare family at Stratford, and as Malone did not copy it quite accurately from the register of the bailiff's court, we quote it as it there stands:

John Shakespeare's trade, "glover," is expressed by the common contraction for the termination of the word; and it is, as usual at the time, spelt with the letter w instead of v. It deserves remark also, that although John Shakespeare is often subsequently mentioned in the records of the corporation of Stratford, not a single entry of a new apprentice to his name. We may presume that in 1556, he was established in his business, because on the 30th April of that year he was one of twelve jurymen of a court-leet. His name in the list was at first struck through with a pen, but underneath it the word set was written, probably by the town-clerk. Thus we find him in 1560 acting as a regular trading inhabitant of the borough of Stratford-upon-Avon.

Little doubt can be entertained that he came from Snitterfield, three miles from Stratford; and upon this point we have several new documents before us. It appears from them, that a person of the name of Richard Shakespeare (no where before mentioned) was resident at Snitterfield in 1560.6 He was tenant of a house and land belonging to his information has not beenascertained: Malone conjectured that Andrew was in Stratford about 1580: he died about 1600, and, in all probability, obtained his knowledge from the same source as the writer of a letter dated April 19, 1600, to Mr. Edward Southwell, printed in 1648. It appears from hence that the parish clerk of Stratford, who was "above eighty years old" in 1634, had told Mr. Edward Southwell's correspondent that William Shakespeare had been "bound apprentice to a butcher;' but he did not say that his father was a butcher, nor did he add any thing as absurd as Aubrey sub joins, respecting the killing of a calf, "in a high style."7

Rowe is supposed to have derived his materials from Betterton, the actor, who died in 1710, and who, it is said, went to Stratford to collect such particulars as could be obtained: the date of his visit is not known.

In 1598, a person of the name of Anthony Shakespeare lived at Snitterfield, and, as we learn from the Master-book of the county of Warwick for that year in the State Paper office, he was appointed a "billman."
Robert Arden (or Ardem, as the name was anciently spelled, and as it stands in the papers in our hands) of Wilmetoc, in the parish of Aston Cantlowe. By a conveyance, dated 21st Dec, 11th Henry VIII, we find that Robert Arden then became possessed of houses and land in Sitterfield, from Richard Rushby and his wife: from Robert Arden the property descended to his son, who was purchased by Richard Shakespeare in 1550.

We have no distinct evidence upon the point; but if we suppose Richard Shakespeare of Sitterfield¹ to have been the father of John Shakespeare of Stratford,² who married Mary Arden, the youngest daughter of Robert Arden, it will easily and naturally explain the marriage of John Shakespeare of Sitterfield to one of the family of the Ardens, as Richard Shakespeare, the father of John, and the grandfather of William Shakespeare, was one of the tenants of the Robert Arden who died in 1556, and to whose seventh daughter, Mary, John Shakespeare was married.

No registration of that marriage has been discovered, but we need not hesitate in deciding that the ceremony took place in 1557. Mary Arden and her sister Alice were certainly unmarried when they were apprenticed as cotters under their father's will, dated 24th Nov, 1556, and the probability seems to be that they were on that account chosen for the office, in preference to their five married sisters. Jean, the first child of John Shakespeare and his wife Mary, was baptized in the church of Stratford-upon-Avon on the 15th Sept, 1558, so that we may reasonably infer that the close of 1557, about a year after the death of Robert Arden.

What were the circumstances of John Shakespeare at the time of his marriage, we can only conjecture. It has been shown that two years before that event, a claim of 8£ was made upon him in the borough court of Stratford, and we must conclude, either that the money was not due and the demand unjust, or that he was unable to pay the debt, and was therefore proceeded against. The issue of the suit is not known; but in the next year he seems to have been established in business as a grocer, a branch of trade much carried on in that part of the kingdom, and, as at least every year, his income† of £105 was sufficient for the payment of his court-leet in 1559. Therefore, we are, perhaps, justified in thinking that his affairs were sufficiently prosperous to warrant his union with the youngest of seven coheirs, who brought him some independent property.

Under her father's will she inherited 6£, 13s. 4d. in monies and 2£ in books and evidences; housing and meadow, 20 acres of arable land, six acres of meadow and pasture, and a right of common for all kinds of cattle.³ Malone knew nothing of Mary Arden's property in Sitterfield, to which we have already referred, and, without it, he estimated that her fortune was equal to 110£, 13s. 4d., which seems to us rather more than he should have assigned for a man of moderate fortune, from the information given by the bishop. We may, however, speculate, that at the time of their marriage John Shakespeare was twenty-seven years old, and Mary Arden eighteen; but the truth is that we have not a particle of direct evidence upon the point. Had she been so young, it seems very unlikely that her father would have appointed her one of his executors in the preceding year, and we are inclined to think that she must have been of age in Nov. 1556.

It was probably in contemplation of his marriage that, on 2d October, 1556, John Shakespeare became the owner of two copyhold houses in Stratford, the one in Greenhill-street, and the other in Henley-street, which were allotted to him by George Totum and Richard West, respectively; for, having been a gardener, it was natural he should be attached to it, and the house in Henley-street only a garden; and for each he was to pay to the lord of the manor an annual rent of sixpence.⁴ In 1557 he was again sworn as a jurymen upon the court-leet, and in the spring of the following year he was anerde in the sum of fourpence for not keeping clean the gutter in front of his dwelling: Friendly

RICARDUS ARDREM de Wilmetoc, filius et heres suus, et Maria huius, filia et heres suus.

³ The terms of Robert Arden's bequest in his daughter Mary are these:—"Also I gave and bequeathed to my youngest daughter Mary, all my land in Wilmetoc, called Asbyes, and the crop upon the ground, sowe and tythe of oats and rye, and all aires, irons, mow, and me." Boswell.

⁵ Copy the following description from the original borough-record, only avoiding the abbreviations, which render it less intelligible.

GEORGIUS TARCAR moriit, Johanni Shakspeare, etc. unnumturnamentum, etc. gaudia erit, etc. trabia et ad articibus, etc. gaude erit, etc. in tempore Hungariae Portu."—Adam Palmier, the other trustee, does not seem to have occupied any part of the property.
ciss Burbage, the then bailiff, Adrian Quiney, "Mr. Hall and Mr. Clopton" (so their names stand in the instrument) were each of them at the same time fined a similar sum for the same neglect. It is a point of little importance, but it is highly probable that John Shakespeare was first admitted a member of the corporation of Stratford in 1557, when he was about 16 years of age, and in Sept., 1558, he was appointed one of the four constables of the town, his name following those of Humphrey Plymger, Roger Sadler, and John Taylor. He continued constable in 1559, his associates then being John Taylor, William Tyler, and William Smith, and he was besides one of four persons, called "officers", who was to impose fines upon their fellow-townsmen (such as he had himself paid in 1557) for offences against the bye-laws of the borough.

CHAPTER II.

It was while John Shakespeare executed the duties of constable in 1558, that his eldest child, Joan, was born, having been baptized, as already stated, on the 15th September, of that year: she died in her infancy, and as her burial does not appear in the register of Stratford, she was, perhaps, interred at Sitterfield, where Richard and Thomas Shakespeare, John Allardens, and subsequently bailiff, Gilbert Shakespeare, were admitted, as tenant to Agnes Arden, widow of Robert Arden, and mother of Mary Shakespeare. In respect to the registers of marriages, baptisms, and deaths at Stratford, some confusion has been produced by the indisputable fact, that two persons of the name of John Shakespeare were living in the town at the same time, and it is not always easy to distinguish between the entries which relate to the one, or to the other: for instance, it was formerly thought that John Shakespeare, the father of the poet, had lost his first wife, Mary Arden, and had taken a second, in consequence of a memorandum in the register, showing that on the 25th Nov., 1554, John Shakespeare had married Margaret Roberts: Malone, however, took great pains to prove, and may be said to have succeeded in proving, that this entry and others, of the births of Philip, Ursula, and Humphrey Shakespeare, relate to John Shakespeare, a shoemaker, and not to John Shakespeare the glover.

John Shakespeare was again chosen one of the four affercers of Stratford in 1561, and the Shakespeare Society is in possession of the original certificate borne by these officers on the 4th May in that year, the name of the father of our great dramatist, coming last, after those of Henry Blyd, Lewis ap William, and William Mynsk. The most remarkable circumstance connected with it is the number of persons who were amerced in sums varying from five to fifty shillings. The bailiff that now is," was fined 3s. 4d. for "breaking the window-pane before communion day:" three other bakers were severally compelled to pay similar amounts on the same occasion, and for the same offence. In September following the date of this report John Shakespeare was elected one of the chamberlains of the borough, a very responsible post, in which he continued two years.

The second child, Margaret Shakespeare, (as the name stands in the register,) was baptized on the 21st Dec., 1562, while he continued chamberlain. She was buried on 30th April, 1568.

The greatest event, perhaps, in the literary history of the world occurred a year afterwards—William Shakespeare. The date of his birth cannot be fixed with absolute certainty, but it was baptised on the 26th April, 1564, and the memorandum in the register is precisely in the following form:

So that whoever has the book (in all probability the clerk) either committed a common error, or else was no great proficient in the rules of grammar. It seems indeed, that our great dramatist had been brought into the world only three months before the parents of that child took place in the custom to carry infants very early to the font. A house is still pointed out by tradition, in Henley-street, as that in which William Shakespeare first saw the light, and we have already shown that his father was the owner of two copy-hold dwellings in Henley-street and Greenhill-street, and we may perhaps assert that this house took place in the former. John and Mary Shakespeare having previously lost two girls, Joan and Margaret, William was at this time the only child of his parents.

A malignant fever, denominated the plague, broke out at Stratford while William Shakespeare was in extreme infancy; he was not two months old when it made its appearance, having been brought from London, where, according to Stow, (Annales, p. 1112, edit. 1615.) it raged with great violence throughout the year 1568, and did not so far abate that term could be kept, as usual at Westminster, until Easter, 1564. It was most fatal at Stratford between June and December, 1564, and Malone calculated that it carried off in that year more than a seventh part of the whole population, consisting of about 1400 inhabitants. It does not appear that it reached any member of the immediate family of John Shakespeare, and it is not at all unlikely that he avoided its ravages by quitting Stratford for Sitterfield, where he owned some property in right of his wife, and where perhaps his father was still living as tenant to Alexander Webe, who, as we have seen, in 1560, had obtained confusion to which we have referred does not extend itself to any of the records of that body. After John Shakespeare, the father of our hero, had been the owner of the house called Mr. William Shakespeare: while the shoemaker, who married Margery Roberts, and who in the register is styled Humphrey, Philip, Ursula, and Humphrey, is invariably styled only John Shakespeare. There is no trace of any relationship between the two.

The affercers seem to have displayed unusual vigilance, and considerable severity: William Trout, Christopher Smythe, Mard Harge, and John Janson were all fined 3s. 4d. "for selling ale, and other unwholesome victual" at their house. Robert Arden and eleven other inhabitants were amerced in smaller sums on the same ground. Robert Perrot was compelled to pay 6s. 8d. "for making confusion" in the month of December.

The registrations of her birth and death are both in Latin:

"1562. December 2, Margareta filia Johannis Shakespeare."

"1568, May 27, Margareta filia Johannis Shakespeare."

The inscription on his monument supports the opinion that he was born on the 23rd April: without the contractions it runs thus:—

"Plaeca so. die 24 Aprilis."

And this, in truth, in the Latin, and John and Joan stand upon the point. Malone referred to the statement of the Rev. J. Greene, as an authority; but he was master of the free-school at Stratford nearly two centuries after the death of Shakespeare, and, in all probability, spoke only from the tenor of the inscription in the church.
In order to show that John Shakespeare was at this date in moderate, and probably comfortable, though not in affluent circumstances, Malone adduced a piece of evidence derived from the records of Stratford: it consists of the names of persons in the borough who, on this calamitous visitation of the plague, contributed various sums to the relief of the poor. The meeting at which it was determined to collect subscriptions with this object was convened in the open air, “At a hall holden in our garden,” etc.: no doubt on account of the infection. The donations varied between 7s. 6d. (given by only one individual of the name of Richard Symens) and 6d.; and the sum against the name of John Shakespeare is 1s. It is to be recollected that at this date he was a young man, and that Richard Shakespeare and his brother Edmund, who had both been enumerated five others gave the same amount, while six gave less: the bailiff contributed 3s. 4d., and the head alderman 2s. 8d., while ten more put down either 2s. 6d. or 2s. each, and a person of the name of Botte 4s. These subscriptions were raised on the 30th August, but on the 6th September a further sum seems to have been required, and the bailiff and six aldermen gave 1s. each, Adrian Quyney 1s. 6d., and John Shakespeare and four others 6d. each: only one member of the corporation, Robert Bratt, whose name will afterwards occur, contributed 4d. We are, we think, warranted in concluding, that in 1554 John Shakespeare was an industrious and thriving tradesman. He continued to live in Knott End and to advance in rank and importance in the corporation, and was elected one of the fourteen aldermen of Stratford on the 4th July, 1555; but he did not take the usual oath until the 12th September following. The bailiff of the year was Richard Hill, a woolen-draper, and the father of our poet became the occupant of that situation rather more than three years afterwards, when his son William was about four years and a half old. John Shakespeare was bailiff of Stratford-upon-Avon from Michaelmas 1568, to Michaelmas 1569, the autumn being the customary period of election. In the meantime his wife had brought him another son, who was christened Gilbert, on 15th October, 1566. Joan seems to have been a favourite name with the Shakespeares: and Joan Shakespeare is mentioned in the records of the guild of Knowle, in the reign of Henry VIII.; and John and Mary Shakespeare christened their first child, which died an infant. Joan. A third daughter was born to them while John Shakespeare was bailiff, and her they also baptized Joan, on 15th April, 1569. The partiality for this name has been noticed, on which some biographers have remarked without being able to explain it, may be accounted for by the fact that a maternal aunt, married to Edward Lumbert, was called Joan; and it is very possible that she stood god-mother upon both occasions. Joan Lumbert was one of the daughters of Robert Arden, regarding whom, until recently, we have had no information.

We have now traced John Shakespeare through various offices in the borough of Stratford, until he reached the highest distinction which it was in the power of his fellow-townsmen to bestow: he was bailiff, and ex-officio a magistracy.

Two new documents have recently come to light, which belong to this period, and which show, beyond all dispute, that John Shakespeare had risen to a station so respectable as that of bailiff of Stratford, with his name in the commission of the peace, he was not able to write. Malone referred to the records of the borough to establish that in 1558, when John Wheeler was called upon by nineteen aldermen and burgesses to undertake the duties of bailiff, John Shakespeare was among twelve other marksmen, including George Whately, the then bailiff, and Roger Sadler, the “head alderman.” There was, therefore, nothing remarkable in this inability to write; and if there were any partiality at this point (it being a little ambiguous whether the signum referred to the former, or rather to Thomas Dyxum, or of John Shakespeare,) it can never be entertained hereafter, because the Shakespeare Society has been put in possession of two warrants, granted by John Shakespeare as bailiff of Stratford, the one dated the 3rd, and the other the 5th December, 11 Elizabeth, for the SRIP and BRYANT, tho’ they may be more due to himself, than to those of which his mark only is appended. The same fact is established by two other documents, to which we shall have occasion hereafter to advert, belonging to a period ten years subsequent to that of which we are now speaking.

CHAPTER III.

Although John Shakespeare could not write his name, it has generally been stated, and believed, that while he filled the office of bailiff he obtained a grant of arms from Clarenceux Cooke, who was in office from 1556 to 1592. We have considerable doubt of this fact, partly arising out of the circumstance, that although Cooke’s original book, in which he entered the arms he granted, has been preserved in the Heralds’ College, we find in it no note of any such concession to John Shakespeare. It is true that this book might not contain memoranda of all the arms Cooke had granted, but it is a circumstance deserving notice, that in 1556, while Shakespeare was of very small age, more than three years and a half, according to the date of his baptism, and though arms were made in 1556, we cannot help thinking, with Malone, that this instrument was obtained at the personal instance of the poet, who had then actually purchased, or was on the eve of purchasing, New Place (or “the great house,” as it was also called) in Stratford. The confirmation states, that the heralds had been “by credible report informed,” that “the parents and late antecessors” of John Shakespeare “were for their valiant and faithful services advanced and rewarded of the most prudent prince, Henry the Seventh;” but, as has been before stated, on examining the rolls of that reign, we can discover no trace of advancement or reward to any person of the name of Shakespeare. It is true, that the Ardens, or Alderns, were so “advanced and rewarded;” and these, though not strictly the “parents,” were certainly the “antecessors” of William Shakespeare, by Boswell, vol. ii. p. 81. The register of the parish-church contains the subsequent entry: “1556, October 13. Gilbertus f. Johannis Shakespere.”

2 Although John Shakespeare was at this time bailiff, no Mr. or "Magister" is prefixed to his name in the register, a distinction which appears only to have been made after he had served that office.

3 Malone gave both the confirmation and exemplification of arms, but with some variations, which are perhaps pardonable on account of the different periods of printing. Thus instead of "parent and late antecessors," in the confirmation; and of "whose parent and great grand-father, and late antecessors," instead of "whose parent, great grand-father, and late antecessors," in the exemplification. We are bound here to express our acknowledgments to Sir Charles Young, the present Garter King at Arms, for the trouble he took in minutely collating Malone’s copies with the documents themselves. Other errors he pointed out to us in his recent notice, as they apply to the instruments not necessary for our argument.

4 Robert Arden had two offices conferred upon him by Henry VII., in the 16th and 17th years of his reign; and he is spoken of in the grants by name parciunculam comine matre: the one office was that of keeper of the park at Aldercar, and the other that of bailiff of the lordship of Codnor, and keeper of the pastures. He obtained grants of lands in 2 Henry VII.; viz. the large manor of Yoxall, in the county of Stafford, on condition of a payment of a rent to the king of 46s. per annum.
Shakespeare. In 1599, an exemplification of arms was procured, and in this document it is asserted that the "great grandfather" of the surname of Shakespeare "was so advanced, and rewarded with lands and tenements" by Henry VII. Our poet's "great grandfather," by the mother's side, was so "advanced and rewarded;" and we know that he did "faithful and approved service" to that "most prudent prince.

Another point, though one of less importance, is, that it is stated, in a note at the foot of the confirmation of 1596, that John Shakespeare "showeth" a patent "under Clarence Cooke's hand;" the word seems originally to have been sent, over which "showeth" was written: if the original patent, under Cooke's hand, had been sent to the Hernals' College in 1560, as it actually had been, it is clear that the substituted word "showeth" is more indefinite, and may mean only, that the party applying for the confirmation alleged that Cooke had granted such a coat of arms. That William Shakespeare could not have procured a grant of arms for himself in 1560 is highly probable, from the fact that he was an actor, (a profession then much looked down upon) and not of a rank in life to entitle him to it; he, therefore, may have very fairly and properly put forward his father's name and claims as having been bailiff of Stratford, and a "justice of peace," and coupled that fact with the deserts and rewards of the Arden under Henry VII., one of whom was his maternal "great grandfather," and all of whom, by reason of the arms of his father with an Arden, were his "ancestors.

We only doubt whether John Shakespeare obtained any grant of arms, as has been supposed, in 1567-9; and it is to be observed that the documents relating to this question, still preserved in the Hernals' College, are full of corrections and interpolations, particularly as regards the ancestors of John Shakespeare: we are persuaded that when William Shakespeare applied to the office in 1569, Garter of that day, or his assistants, made a confusion between the "great grandfather" and the "ancestors" of John, and of William Shakespeare. What is stated, both in the confirmation and exemplification, as to parentage and descent, is true as regards William Shakespeare, but erroneous as regards John Shakespeare.

It appears that Sir William Dethick, garter-king-at-arms in 1596 and 1599, was subsequently called to account for having granted coats to persons whose station in society and circumstances gave them no right to the distinction. The case of William Shakespeare was free from these objections of this respect; and had Clarenceux Cooke really put his name in 1568-9 to any such patent, as it was asserted, had been exhibited to Sir William Dethick, a copy of it, or some record of it, would probably have remained in the office of arms in 1596; and the production of that alone, proving that he had the arms granted to him, would have justified Sir William Dethick. No copy, nor record, was however produced, but merely a memorandum at the foot of the confirmation of 1596, that an original grant had been sent or shown, which memorandum may have been added when Sir William Dethick's conduct was called in question; and certain other statements are made at the same time, which would be material to Garter's vindication, but which are not borne out by facts.

One of these statements is, that John Shakespeare, in 1596, was worth 500£, an error certainly as regarded him, but a truth probably as regarded his son.

It is really a matter of little moment whether John Shakespeare did or did not obtain a grant of arms while he was a "bailiff," or was merely inclined to think that he did not, and that the assertion that he was worth 500£, and that he was worth 500£, in 1596, originated with Sir W. Dethick, when he subsequently wanted to make out his own vindication from the charge of having conceded arms to various persons without due caution and inquiry.

In 1570, when William Shakespeare, was in his seventh year, his father, John, was elected to the office of copyholder or Ingent, in Stratford, within two miles of Stratford, which he held under William Clopen. We cannot tell in what year he first rented it, because the instrument proving his tenure is dated 11th June, 1581, and only states the fact, that on 11th Dec., 1570, it was in his occupation. The annual payment for it was 8£, a considerable sum, certainly, for that time; but if there had been "a good dwelling-house and orchard" upon the field, as Malone conjectured, that circumstance would, in all probability, have been mentioned. We may presume that John Shakespeare employed it for agricultural purposes, but upon this point we are without information.

If the corrections were made in the manuscript at the time we infer from the fact, that on the 28th September, 1571, a second daughter, named Anne, was baptized at the parish-church. He had thus four children living, two boys and two girls, William, Gilbert, John, and Anne, but the last died at an early age, having been buried on 4th April, 1575. It is said that on the baptism of his daughter Anne, he was, for the first time, called "Magister Shakespeare" in the Latin entry in the Register, a distinction he seems to have acquired by having served the office of bailiff two years before. The same observation will apply to the registration of his fifth child, Richard, who was baptized on 11th March, 1573-4, as the son of "Mr. John Shakespeare." Richard Shakespeare may have been named after his grandfather of Snitterfield, who perhaps was sponsor on the occasion.

The increase of John Shakespeare's family seems, for some time, to have been accompanied by an increase of his means, and in 1574 he gave Edmund and Emma Holf 40£. This was probably the purchase of a house in Henley-street. It will not be forgotten that he was already the owner of a copyhold tenement in the same street, which he had bought of Edward West, in 1556, before his marriage with Mary Arden. To one of the two last-purchased dwellings John Shakespeare is supposed to have removed his family; but, for aught we know, he had lived from the time of his marriage, and continued to live in 1574, in the house in Henley-street, which had been alienated to him eighteen years before. It does not appear that he had ever parted with West's house, so that in 1574 he was the owner of three houses in Henley-street. Forty use the same shield of arms, single, or impaled as aforesaid, during the whole of the Shakespearean age. The motto, as given at the head of the confirmation, is NON SANZ DEXTRÆ.

For 2 Arden of Wellingtoue the heralds should have said Arden of Wilmecote.

3 Malone places reliance on the words of the clause roll, (from which all information is derived) "with the appurtenances," but surely "a good dwelling-house and orchard" would have been specified, and not included in such general terms: they are not mere "appurtenances.

4 The following are copies of the registration of the baptism and burial of, in the Parish Register of Stratford:

- 1571 Sept. 20: Anne filia Magistri Shakespeare.
- 1573 April 4: Anne, daughter of Mr. John Shakespeare.
- 1573 March 31: Richard son of Mr. John Shakespeare.

5 Malone speculates (Shakespeare, by Bowell, vol. ii. p. 106.) that Richard lived in Stratford till he was an old man, and that he was the author of the sonnet addressed to this child, but he was not aware of the existence of any such person as Richard Shakespeare, of Snitterfield, who, there is good ground to believe, was father to John Shakespeare of a field called Ingent, or Ingent, meadow, within two miles of Stratford, which he held under William Clopen. We cannot tell in what year he first rented it, because the instrument proving his tenure is dated 11th June, 1581, and only states the fact, that on 11th Dec., 1570, it was in his occupation. The annual payment for it was 8£, a considerable sum, certainly, for that time; but if there had been "a good dwelling-house and orchard" upon the field, as Malone conjectured, that circumstance would, in all probability, have been mentioned. We may presume that John Shakespeare employed it for agricultural purposes, but upon this point we are without information.

pounds, even allowing for great difference in value of money, seems a small sum for the two freehold houses, with gardens and orchards, sold to him by Edmund and Edmond Lambt.

It is, we apprehend, indisputable that soon after this date the tide of John Shakespeare's affairs began to turn, and that he experienced disappointments and losses which seriously affected his pecuniary circumstances. Malone was in possession of several leases both of Stratford-upon-Avon and of portions of the estate of Snitterfield, and they have the advantage of confirmatory testimony that has been procured. We will first advert to that which was in the hands of Malone, applicable to the beginning of 1578. At a borough hall on the 29th Jan. in that year, it was ordered that every alderman in Stratford should pay 5s. 6d. and every burgess 3s. 4d. towards a great feast and one another. Now, although John Shakespeare was not only an alderman, but had been chosen "head alderman" in 1571, he was allowed to contribute only 3s. 4d., as if he had been merely a burgess: Humphrey Plymley, another alderman, paid 5s., while John Walker, Thomas Brodgen, and Anthony Turner contributed 2s. 6d. each, William Duce 2s., and Robert Bratt "nothing in this place." It is possible that Bratt had been called upon to furnish a contribution in some other place, or perhaps the words are to be taken to mean, that he was excused altogether; and it is to be remarked that in the contribution to the poor in Sept. 1564, Bratt was the only individual who gave no more than fourpence. In later years required of the alderman should pay weekly to the relief of the poor 4d., John Shakespeare and Robert Bratt were excepted: they were "not to be taxed to pay any thing," while two others (one of them Alderman Plymley) were rated at 3d. a week. In March 1578-9, when another call was made upon the town for the purpose of purchasing provisions, callvers, etc. for the name of John Shakespeare is found, at the end of the account, in a list of persons whose "sums were unpaid and unaccounted for." Another fact tells strongly to the conclusion that in 1578 John Shakespeare was distressed for money; he owed a baker of the name of Roger Sailer 52s., for which Edmund Lambert, and a person of the name of Cowicke, had become security: Sailer died, and in his will, dated 14th November, 1578, he included the following among the debts due to him:-- Item of Edmund Lambert and Cornish, for the debt of Mr. John Shakspere, 52s. Malone conjectured that Edmund Lambert was some relation to Mary Shakespeare, and there can be little doubt of it, as Edward Lumbert had married her sister Joan, and in 1574 mortgaged his wife's estate in Ashtun Cantlowe, called Asbyes, for 30d., an additional circumstance to prove that he was in want of money; and so severe the pressure of his necessities about this date seems to have been, that in 1579 he parted with his wife's interest in two tenements in Stratford to Robert Webbe for the small sum of 4l. This is a striking confirmation of John Shakespeare's embarrassments, with which Malone was not acquainted; but the original deed, with the bond for the fulfilment of covenants, (both bearing date 15th Oct. 1579) subscribed with the distinct marks of John and Mary Shakespeare, and sealed with their respective seals, is in the hands of the Shakespeare Society in Stratford, and has been carefully preserved, but they may have been mortgaged at this period, and it is indisputable that John Shakespeare divested himself, in 1578 and 1579, of the landed property his wife had brought him, being in the end driven to the extremity of mining the trifling sum of 4l. by the sale of her share of two messuages in Snitterfield.¹

It has been supposed that he might not at this time reside in Stratford-upon-Avon, and that for this reason, he only contributed 3s. 4d. for pikemen, etc., and nothing to the poor of the town, in 1578. This notion is refuted by the fact, that in the deed for the sale of his wife's property in Snitterfield to Webbe, in 1579, he is called "John Shakspere of Stratford-upon-Avon," and in the bond for the performance of covenants, "Johannem Shakspere de Stratford-upon-Avon, in comitatu Warwick." He had been resident at Ingem, or at Snitterfield, he would hardly have been described as of Stratford-upon-Avon. Another point requiring notice in connexion with these two newly-discovered documents is that of John Shakespeare, and his wife Joan, who have been termed "yeoman," and not "grower"; perhaps in 1579, although he continued to occupy a house in Stratford, he had relinquished his original trade, and having embarked in agricultural pursuits, to which he had not been educated, had been unsuccessful. This may appear not an unnatural mode of accounting for some of his difficulties. In the midst of them, in the spring of 1580, another son, named Edmund, (perhaps after Edmund Lambert, the mortgagee of Asbyes) was born, and christened at the parish church.²

CHAPTER IV.

Education of William Shakespeare: probably at the free-school of Stratford. At what time, and under what circumstances, he was taught at this school, and afterwards in an attorney's office. His handwriting. His marriage with Anne Hathaway. The preliminary bond given by Fulck Sandellis and John Richardson. The birth of Susanna, the first child of William Shakespeare and his wife Anne, in 1583. Shakespeare's opinion on the marriage of persons of disproportionate age. His domestic circumstances. Anne Hathaway's family.

At the period of the sale of their Snitterfield property by his father and mother, William Shakespeare was in his sixteenth year, and in what way he had been educated is mere matter of conjecture. It is highly probable that he was at the free-school of Stratford, founded by Thomas Jodyffe in the reign of Edward IV., and subsequently chartered by Edward VI.; but we are destitute of all evidence beyond Rowe's assertion. Of course, we know nothing of the time when he might have been first sent there; but if so sent between 1570 and 1578, Walter Roche, Thomas Hunt, and Thomas Jenkins, were successively masters, and from them he must have derived the rudiments of his Latin and Greek. That his father and mother could give him no instruction of the kind is quite certain from the proof we have adduced, that neither of them could write; but this very deficiency might render them more desirous that their eldest son, at least, if not their children in general, should receive the best education circumstances would allow. The free grammar-school of Stratford afforded an opportunity of which, it is not unlikely, the parents of William Shakespeare availed themselves.

As he was employed at the time when he went to school, we are also in the dark as to the period when he left it. Rowe, indeed, has told us that the poverty of John Shakespeare, and the necessity of employing his son profitably at home, induced him, at an early age, to withdraw him.

¹ The property is thus described in the indenture between John Shakespeare and his wife, and Robert Webbe. For and in consideration of the sum of M. in hand paid, they "giving, granting, bar-and it would be easy to multiply them. We may presume that, if so employed, he was paid something. Nay, if so, for, if he had been kept on, his father could have had no other motive for taking him from school. Supposing him to have ceased to receive instruction from Jenkins in 1579, when John Shakespeare's distresses were apparently most severe, we may easily imagine that he was, for the next year or two, in the office of one of the seven at his father's service. Moreover, he wrote a good hand we are perfectly sure, not only from the extant specimens of his signature, when we may suppose him to have been in health, but from the ridiculous which, in "Hamlet," (act v. sc. 2) he throws upon such as affected to write illegibly:

"I once did hold it, as our staid scholars do. A business to write fair."

In truth, many of his dramatic contemporaries wrote excellently: Ben Jonson's penmanship was beautiful; and Peele, Chapman, Dekker, and Marston, (to say nothing of some inferior authors) must have given printers and copyists little trouble.

The exception, in more strict detail, we hear not a syllable regarding William Shakespeare from the time of his birth until he had considerably passed his eighteenth year, and then we suddenly come to one of the most important events of his life, established upon irrefragable testimony: we conclude to his marriage with Anne Hathaway, which could not have been taken place before 1582. We know that on that day two persons, named Fulke Sandells and John Richardson entered into a preliminary bond (which we subjoin in a note) in the penalty of 40l. to be forfeited to the bishop of the diocese of Worcester, if it were thereafter found that there existed any lawful impediment to the solemnization of matrimony between William Shakespeare and Anne Hathaway, of Stratford. It is not known at what church the justify mine own counde, for I loved the man, and do honour his memory (on this side idolatry) as much as any. He was indeed honest, and of an open and free nature; had an excellent fancy, brave notions, and gentle expressions, wherein he flowed with that facility, that sometimes it was necessary he should be stopped. Such beauties of his, as 'Suffumissimae ornis, etc.' added by Augustus of Heliodore. His writing in his own power; would the use of it had been so too,

Hence he proceeds to instance a passage in "Julius Caesar." Ben Jonson then adds in conclusion: — But he redeemed his views with his virtues: there was ever more in him to be praised, than to be despised." He then says, that neither the players had "often mentioned," we find the following in the address of Heminge and Condell: "To the great variety of Readers, before it was much before the year of our Lord 1623, when the players had "often mentioned," the most of their productions, that there was a thought he uttered with that easiness, that we have source received from him a blot in his pages.

And the use of useless formal contractions, runs thus:

divinitis univeri per presentes, nos Falcenari, Sandelle de Stratford in comitatu Warwicke, agricultae, et Johanne Richardson bi- dem agricultae, tenevi et firmiter obligari Ricardum Cosin, generose, et Rocio Warrunomy, notorii publici, in quadraginta libris bonis, galis mones Anglesund evindares eidem Ricardo et Roberto, heredum, executoribus, vel assignatis suis, ad quam quidem solutionem bene et uterius faciens, obnubilam esse, et utrumque nostrum, per se pro toto et in solido, heredes, executoria, et administratores nostros firmiter per presentes, seculis nostris situllatis. ---

1. The narrowness of his father's circumstances, and the want of health of his father, were early causes of his being apprenticed to his father's trade, thence his early marriage, and unhappily prevented his father's proficiency. — Rowes Life.

2. Aubrey cites "Mr. Beeston" as his authority, and as persons of that name were connected with theatres before the death of Shakespeare, and long afterwards, we ought to treat the assertion with the most respect. Simon Forman, according to his Diary, was employed in this way in the free-school where he was educated, and was paid by the parents of the boys for his assistance. The same might be the case in Stratford.

3. A passage from the epistle of Thomas Nase before Greene's "Menaphon," has been held by some to apply to Shakespeare, to his company, as Mr. Rowe has conjectured. It appears to best answer to this supposition is an attention to dates: "Menaphon" was not printed for the first time, as is supposed in the printed editions of the Shakespeare playbooks; it was, however, the only Shakespeare play in which any play, much less "Hamlet." The "Hamlet" to which Nase alludes must have been known to the players in existence before Shakespeare took up the subject. The terms Nase employs are these, and it is to be observed, that by noerravit he means an attorney or attorney's clerk, employed to draw up bonds, &c., commencing "Noerravit universum," &c., "It is a common practice now-a-days, amongst a sort of shifting companions, that run through every art and thrive by none, to leave the trade of mercers, whereas they were born, and buste themselves with the indevors of art, that could scarcely Latinate their own name, if they should have needs: yet English Seneca, read by candidates, yields many good sentences, as Hades is a beggar, and so forth; and if you insinuate him faire in a frostie morning, he will affront you whole Reedales, I should say handfuls of tragical and heroic" scenes. The" Hamlet," preceding Shakespeare's tragedy, had been an attorney's clerk. In 1587, Shakespeare was only in his 17th year. The play ran through every art, and thrive by none. Seneca had been translated, and published collectively, six years before, and the play was spoken generally, and without more individual allusion than a modern poet, when, in the very same spirit, he wrote the couplet, ceremony was performed, but certainly not at Stratford-upon-Avon, to which both the parties belonged, where the bondsmen resided, and where it might be expected that it would have been registered. The object of the bond was to obtain such a dispensation from the Bishop of Worcester as would authorize a clergyman to unite the bride and groom in a public act of marriage under the pretense of the banns; and it is not to be concealed, or denied, that the whole proceeding seems to indicate haste and secrecy. However, it ought not to escape notice that the seal used when the bond was executed, although damaged, has upon it the initials H.H., as if it had belonged to H. Hathaway, the father of the bride, and had been used on the bond in accordance with his consent.

"Some clerk foredoom'd his father's soul to sorrows, or perhaps to gentler signs and wonders."

Considering all the circumstances, there might be good reasons why the father of Anne Hathaway should concur in the alliance, independently of any regard to the worldly prospects of the parties. The first child of William and Anne Shakespeare was christened Susanna on 26th May, 1583. Anne was between seven and eight years older than her young husband, and several passages in Shakespeare’s plays have been pointed out by Malone, and repeated by other biographers, which seem to point directly at the evils resulting from unions in which the parties were “mismatched in respect of years.” The most remarkable of these is certainly the well-known speech of the Duke to Viola, in “Twelfth Night,” (act ii. sc. 4) where he says,

“Let still the woman take
An elder than herself; so wears she to him;
Surely she level in her husband’s heart:
For, were the contrary, she do prefix ourselves,
Our fancies are more giddy and uniform,
More longings, wavering, sooner lost and worn,
Than woman’s are.”

Afterwards the Duke adds,

“Then let thy love be younger than thyself,
Or thy affection cannot hold the bent.”

Whether these lines did or did not originate in the author’s reflections upon his own marriage, they are so applicable to his own case, that it seems impossible he should have written them without recalling the circumstances at tending his hasty union, and the disparity of years between himself and his wife. Such, we know, was the confirmed opinion of Coleridge, expressed on two distinct occasions in his lectures, and such we think will be the conclusion to which most readers will arrive:—“I cannot hesitate in believing,” observed Coleridge in 1815, “that in this passage from ‘Twelfth Night,’ Shakespeare meant to give a caution arising out of his own experience; and, but for the fact of the disparity in point of years between himself and his wife, I doubt not that he would have thrown the parts of Viola and the Duke would have received this turn.” It is incident to our nature that, youths, just advancing to manhood, should feel with peculiar strength the attraction of women whose charms have reached the full-blown summer of beauty; but we cannot think that it was so necessary a consequence, as some have supposed, that Anne Hathaway should have possessed peculiar personal advantages. It may be remarked, that poets have often appeared comparatively indifferent to the features and persons of their mistresses, since, in proportion to the strength of their imaginative faculty, they have been able to supply all physical deficiencies. Coleridge was aware, if not from his own particular case, from recorded examples, that the beauty of the objects of the affection of poets was sometimes more fanciful than real; and his notion was, that Anne Hathaway was a woman with whom the boyish Shakespeare had fallen in love, per- haps more than any other woman, and that he was, of course, and that she had not any peculiar recommendations of a personal description. The truth, however, is, that we have no evidence either way; and when Oldys remarks upon the 93rd sonnet, that it “seems to have been addressed by Shakespeare to his beautiful wife, on some suspicion of her infidelity,” it is clear that he was under an entire mistake as to the individual: the lines,

“So shall I live supposing thon art true
Like a deceived husband; so love’s face
May still seem love to me,” &c.

were most certainly not applied to his wife; and Oldys could have had no other ground for asserting that Anne Hathaway was “beautiful,” than general supposition, and the erroneous belief that a sonnet like that from which we have made a brief quotation had Shakespeare’s wife for its object.

The present may not be an improper opportunity for remarking (if, indeed, the remark might not be entirely spared, and the reader left to draw his own inferences) that the balance of such imperfect information as remains to us, leads us to the opinion that Shakespeare was not a very happy married man. The disparity in age between himself and his wife from the first was such, that she could not “sway level in her husband’s heart,” and this difference, for a certain time at least, became more apparent as they advanced in years: may we say also, that the peculiar circumstances attending their marriage, and the birth of their first child, would not tend, even in the most grateful and considerate mind, to necessitate the chiefest elements of comfortable and content in domestic life. To this may be added the fact (by whatever circumstances it may have been occasioned, which we shall consider presently) that Shakespeare quitted his home at Stratford a very few years after he had become a husband and a father, and that although he revisited his native town frequently, and ultimately settled there with his family, there is no proof that his wife ever returned with him to London, or resided with him during any of his lengthened sojourns in the metropolis: that she may have done so is very possible: and in 1609 he certainly paid a weekly poor-rate to an amount that may indicate that he occupied a house in Southwark capable of receiving his family, but we are here, as upon many other points, without positive and direct testimony. We put out of view the doubtful and ambiguous indications to be gleaned from Shakespeare’s Sonnets, observing merely, that they contain little to show that he was of a domestic turn, or that he found any great enjoyment in the society of his wife. That such may have been the fact we do not pretend to deny, and we willingly believe that much favourable evidence upon the point has been lost: all we venture to advance on a question of so much difficulty and delicacy is, that what remains to us is not, as far as it goes, perfectly satisfactory.

1 Malone conjectured that the marriage took place at Weston, or Illegesley, but the old registers there having been lost or destroyed, it is impossible to ascertain the fact. A more recent search in the registers has, however, led to the neighborhood of Stratford, which has not been attended with any success. Possibly, the ceremony was performed in the vicinity of Worcester, but the mere fact that the bond was there prefixed, is, as we think, of much more importance than the examination of the registers at Worcester has been equally fruitless.

2 Rowe tells us (and we are without any other authority) that Hathaway was “said to have been a substantial yeoman,” and she was most likely in possession of a seal, such as John Shakespeare had used in 1566.

3 The fact is registered in this form:—

“1583, May 20, Susanna daughter to William Shakespere.”

4 This statement is confirmed from our own notes of what fell from Coleridge upon the occasion in question. The lectures, upon which he was then engaged, were delivered in a room belonging to the Globe tavern, in Fleet-street. He repeated the same sentiment in B publie in 1585, and we have more than once heard it from him in private society.

1 The Rev. Mr. Dyce, in his Life of Shakespeare, prefixed to the Aldine edition of his Poems, 1824. 1829, p. xii. It comprises all the main points of the biography of our poet then known.

2 When the Rev. Mr. Dyce observes that “it is unlikely that a woman of his wife’s spirit would be capable of the faintest affection of so imaginative a being as Shakespeare,” he forgets that the mere fact that Shakespeare was an “imaginative being” would render “personal charms” in his wife less necessary to his happiness.

3 In his MS. notes to Langbaine, in the British Museum, as quoted by Stowe. See also “Malone’s Shakespeare, by Bowell,” vol. xx. p. 300.

4 We have noticed this matter more at length hereafter, with references to authorities which have shown that Susanna Shakespeare, in 1609, was not rated to the poor of Southwark in respect of her theatrical property, and not for any dwelling-house which he occupied.
A question was formerly agitated, which the marriage bond, already quoted, tends to set at rest. Some of Shakespeare's biographers have contended that Anne Hathaway came from Shottery, within a mile of Stratford, while Malone avers that she was born at Luddington, about three miles from the borough. There is no doubt that a family of the name of Hathaway had been resident at Shottery from the year 1643, and continued to occupy a house there long after the death of Shakespeare; there is also a tradition in favour of a particular cottage in the village, occupied by Shakespeare's family, which is perhaps conclusive that Anne Hathaway was of that family. She is, however, described in the bond as "of Stratford," and we may take it for granted, until other and better proof is offered, that she was resident at the time in the borough, although she may have come from Shottery. Had the parties seeking the licence wished to misdescribe her, it might have answered their purpose better to have stated her to be of any other place rather than of Stratford.

CHAPTER V

Shakespeare's twins, Hamnet and Judith, born in 1585. His departure from Stratford. The question of deer-stealing from Sir Thomas Lucy considered. Authorities for the story of the young lady's marriage with a man named Fulman by Shakespeare against Sir Thomas Lucy. Proof, in opposition to Malone, that Sir Thomas Lucy had deer: his present of a buck to Lord Ellesmera. Other inducements to the boy's marriage, probably opium encouraged by the Corporation. Several of Shakespeare's fellow-actors from Stratford and Warwickshire. The Privy Pleasures of Kenilworth.

In the beginning of 1585 Shakespeare's wife produced him twin— a boy and a girl—and they were baptized at Stratford Church on the 2nd Feb. in that year. Malone supposed, and the supposition is very likely well founded, that Hamnet Sadler and his wife Judith stood sponsors for the infants, which were baptized by the Christian names of the godfather and godmother, Hamnet and Judith. It is a fact not altogether unimportant, with relation to the terms of affection between Shakespeare and his wife in the subsequent part of his career, that she brought him no more children, although in 1586 she was only thirty years old.

That Shakespeare quitted his home and his family not long afterwards has not been disputed, but no ground for this supposed departure has been derived from domestic disagreement. It has been alleged that he was obliged to leave Stratford on account of a scrape in which he had involved himself by stealing, or assisting in stealing, deer from the grounds of Charlecote, the property of Sir Thomas Lucy, about five miles from the borough. As Rowe is the oldest authority in print for this story, we give it in his own words:—"He had, by a misfortune common enough to young fellows, fallen into ill company; and among them some, that made a frequent practice of deer-stealing, engaged him more than once in robbing the park that belonged to Sir Thomas Lucy of Charlecote, near Stratford. For this he was prosecuted by that gentleman, as he thought, somewhat over-effectually; and, as he thought that ill-use, he made a ballad upon him. And though this, probably the first essay of his poetry, he lost, yet it is said to have been so very bitter, that it redoubled the prosecution against him to that degree, that he was obliged to leave his business and family in Warwickshire for some time, and return to the borough, where he lived until 1603.

We have said that Rowe is the oldest printed source of this anecdote, his "Life of Shakespeare" having been published in 1709; but Malone produced a manuscript of uncertain date, anterior, however, to the publication of Rowe's "Life," which gives the incident some confirmation. Had this manuscript authority been of the same, or even of a more recent date, and derived from an independent quarter, unconnected with Rowe or his informant, it would on this account have deserved attention; but it was older than the publication of Rowe's "Life," because the Rev. R. Davies, who added it to the papers of Fulman, (now in the library of Corpus Christi College) died in 1707. Rowe (as he distinctly admits) cannot have heard the story from Betterton, the actor, who died the year after Rowe's "Life" came out, and who, it has been repeatedly asserted, paid a visit to Stratford expressly to glean such particulars as could be obtained regarding Shakespeare. In what year he paid that visit is not known, but Malone was of opinion that it was before Betterton's visit. It is, however, to be thought, that it must have been comparatively early in Betterton's career, when he would naturally be more enthusiastic in a pursuit of the kind, and when he had not been afflicated by that disorder from which he suffered so severely in his later years, and to which, in fact, he owed his death. Betterton was born in 1655, and became an actor before 1660; and we should not be disposed to place this visit of Betterton later than 1670 or 1675, when he was thirty-five or forty years old. He was at that period in the height of his popularity, and being in the frequent habit of playing such parts as Hamlet, Lear, and Othello, we may readily believe that he would be anxious to collect any information regarding the author of those tragedies that then existed in his native town. We therefore apprehend, that Betterton must have gone to Stratford many years before the Rev. Richard Davies made his additions to Fulman's brief account of Shakespeare, for Fulman's papers did not devolve into his hands until 1688. The conclusion at which we arrive is, that Rowe's printed account is in truth truth, as far as it goes, but not as complete as Betterton's letter; that, as far as Betterton's letter, the manuscript authority produced by Malone; and certainly the latter does not come much more recommended to us on any other ground. Davies must have been ignorant both of persons and plays; but this very circumstance may possibly be looked upon as in favour of the originality and genuineness of what he furnishes. He does not tell us from whence, nor from whom, he procured his information, but it reads--"Of this relation of Mr. Jones: it runs thus:—

"A parliament member, a justice of peace, at home a poor scare-crow, at London an ass; a pedlar, a playhouse porter; in his youth, a bookbinder. Then Lucy is lowly, whatever befall it: He thinks himself great. We allow by his ears but with cases to mate. In the country, a gadfly; in London, a blurb, Sing lowly Lucy, whatever befall it."

What is called a "complete copy of the verses," contained in "Malone's Shakespeare, by Douce," i. p. 566, is evidently not genuine.
as if it had been obtained from some source independent of Bettoner, and perhaps even from inquiries on the spot. The whole was obviously exaggerated and distorted, but whether by Davies, or by the person from whom he derived the story, we must remain in doubt. The reverend gentleman died three years before Bettoner, and both may certainly have been indebted for the information to the same parties; but most likely Davies simply recorded what he had heard.

In reflecting upon the general probability or improbability of this important incident in Shakespeare's life, it is not to be forgotten, as Malone remarks, that deer-dealing, at the period referred to, was by no means an uncommon offence; that it is referred to by several authors, and punished as a statute offence in some places. It was considered to include any moral stain, but was often committed by young men, by way of frolic, for the purpose of furnishing a feast, and not with any view to sale or emolument. If Shakespeare ever ran into such an indiscretion, (and we own that we cannot entirely discredit the story) he did not more than many of his contemporaries; and one of the ablest, most learned, and bitterest enemies of theatrical performances, who wrote just before the close of the sixteenth century, expressly mentions deer-dealing as a venial crime of which unripe and misguided youth was sometimes guilty, and he couples it merely with carousing in taverns and robbing orchards.'

Similarly it may be presumed, therefore, that the main offence against Sir Thomas Lucy was not stealing his deer, but writing the ballad, and sticking it on his gate; and for this Shakespeare may have been so "severely prosecuted" by Sir Thomas Lucy, as to render it expedient for him to abandon Stratford "for some time." Sir Thomas Lucy died in 1600, and the mention of deer-dealing, and of the "dooze white luces" by Slender, and of "this doon white lories" by Hugh Evans, in the opening of "The Merry Wives of Windsor," seems too obvious to be mistaken, and leads us to the conviction that the comedy was written before the demise of Sir Thomas Lucy, whose indignation Shakespeare had incurred. True it is, that the coat of arms of Sir Thomas Lucy contained only "three luces (pike-fishes) har, argent," but it is easy to imagine that while Shakespeare would wish the ridicule to be understood and felt by the knight and his friends, he might not desire that it should be too generally intelligible, and therefore multiplied the luces to "a dozen," instead of stating the true number. We believe that "The Merry Wives of Windsor" was written before 1600, among other reasons, because we are convinced that Shakespeare would not have carried his resentment beyond the grave, and to have cast ridicule upon a dead adversary, whatever might have been his sufferings while he was living. Malone has attacked the story of deer-dealing on the ground that Sir Thomas Lucy never had any park at Charl-cote or elsewhere, but it admits of an easy and immediate answer; for, although Sir Thomas Lucy had no park, he may have had deer, and that his successor had deer, though no park, can be proved, we think, satisfactorily. Malone has remarked that Sir Thomas Lucy never seems to have sent the corporation of Stratford a buck, not an unusual custom, of sending the kind from persons of rank and wealth in the vicinity. The explanation of the fact may be accounted for on several grounds; but that the Sir Thomas Lucy, who succeeded his father in 1600, made such gifts, though not perhaps to the corporation of Stratford, is very certain. When Lord Keeper Egerton entertained Queen Elizabeth at Harefield, in August 1602, many of the nobility and gentry had presented buck to the King, and sent him an abundance of presents to be used or consumed in the entertainment, and on that occasion Sir Thomas Lucy contributed "a buck," for which a reward of 6s. 8d. was given to the bringer. This single circumstance shows that he had no park, he had deer, and it is most likely that he inherited them from his father. Thus we may pretty safely conclude that Sir Thomas Lucy who resided at Charl-cote when Shakespeare was in his youth, had venison to be stolen, although it does not at all necessarily follow that Shakespeare was ever concerned in stealing it.

The question whether he did or did not quit Stratford for the metropolis on this account, is one of much importance to Shakespearean students; and what position he might have occupied there, and all in probability, never arrive at certainty. Our opinion is that the traditions related by Rowe, and mentioned in Full-man's and in Oldys's MSS. (which do not seem to have originated in the same source) may be founded upon an actual occurrence; but, at the same time, it is very possible that that alone did not determine Shakespeare's line of conduct. His residence in Stratford may have been rendered so rep- resentent by the near neighbourhood of such a hostile and powerful magistrate, but perhaps he would nevertheless not have quitted the town, had not other circumstances com-bined to produce such a decision. What those circumstances might be it is our business now to inquire.

Aubrey, who was a very curious and minute investigator, although undoubtedly too credulous, says nothing about deer-dealing, but he tells us that Shakespeare was "inclined naturally to poetry and acting, and to this inclination he attributes his journey to London at an early age. That this youthful propensity existed there can be no dispute, and it is easy to trace how it may have been promoted and strengthened. The corporation of Stratford seem to have been great encouragers of the drama, and so it is there. We know from various authorities that when itinerant actors came to any considerable town, it was their custom to wait upon the mayor, bailiff, or other head of the corporation, in order to ask permission to perform, either

1 Dr. John Rainolds, in his "Overvail of Stage Players," 4to. 1699, p. 22. Some copies of the work (one of which is in the library of Lord Francis Egerton) bear date in 1600, and purport to have been printed at Middlethorpe; they are, in fact, the same edition, and there is no "Dr. John Rainolds," or "Mr. John Rainolds," except as found at the bottom of any of the title-pages. His words on the point to which we are now referring, are these: "Time of recreation, and unregulated manners: For no playhouse or public entertainment is now there, where there are scholars indeed, I mean good students, as it is for any: yet in my opinion it was not fit for them to play at stool-ball among wenches, nor at mum-chance or mum with idle base companions, nor at trusts in guild-halls, nor to dance about may-poles, nor to ride in ale-houses, nor to dirty their shirts, nor to steal deer, nor to rob orchards.

This work was published at the time when a new ed of a new theatre, called the Fortune, belonging to Henslowe and Alley, was evidently intended to be built, and was the immediate cause and occasion of the part of the Puritans. To precise the time at which the import as above quotation we might produce a passage from Forman's Diary, regarding the same subject. "The first Part of the Contention between the Houses, York and Lancaster," printed for the Shakespeare Society, p. 106. One of the most curious and entertaining points of Shakespeare's life is his visit to Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, in a copy of Roper's Life of Sir Thomas More, edit. 1642, sold among the books of Horace Walpole. Speculating that Shakespeare's visit to the castle of Pembroke at Barickan, near the Earl of Bridgewater's, he adds that he had "a fine fair daughter, mistress to the Palgrave first, and then afterwards to the noble Count of Pembret's Privy Councillor, and a Knight of the Garter and a deer-stealer," &c. It was to William Earl of Pembroke, and Philip Earl of Montgomery, that the player-edili-ders dedicated the folio Shakespeare of 1623, and one of Earl Philip's MS. notes, in the volume from which we have already quoted, contains the following mention of seven dramatic poets, in-cluding Shakespeare: "The true style of Master Chanyman; the labourd and understanding works of Mr. Johnson; Mr. Beaumont, Mr. Fletcher, (brother to Nat Fether, Mrs. White's first lover,) Mr. Killigrew, Mr. Munday, and Mr. Chapman (married and married to my Lady Baker)—Mr. Shakespeare, Mr. Deckay, Mr. Heywood." Horace Walpole registers on the title-page of the "Egerton Papers," printed by the Camden Society, 4to. 1699, John Aubrey, in his "Observations," of that volume observes: "Many of these [presents] deserve notice, but especially one of the items, where Shakespeare is recorded to have written a ballad, was sent of a "buck." Malone discredit the whole story of the deer-dealing, because Sir Thomas Lucy says that no buck was ever presented to the King, or presented by Sir Thomas Lucy himself. The year 1602. He gave "a buck," because he had bred it himself, and because it was perhaps well known that he kept deer; and he would have done this if he could have had a deer which he had not grown, under the ostentatious pretense that it was of his own rearing. Malone thought that he had triumphantly overthrown the deer-dealing story, but his refutation amounts to little or nothing. Whether it is nevertheless true is quite a different question.
Burbage, the father of the celebrated Richard Burbage, (the representative of many of the heroes in the works of the great dramatist) and one of the original builders of the Blackfriars theatre, was dispatched to London from that part of the kingdom, and the name of Thomas Greene, who was indisputably from Stratford, will be familiar to all who are acquainted with the detailed history of our stage at that period. Malone supposed that Thomas Greene might have introduced Shakespeare to the theatre, and at an early date he was certainly a member of the company called the Lord Chamberlain’s servants: how long he continued we are without information, although we know that he became, and perhaps not long after 1589, an actor in the rival association under Alleyn, and that he was one of Queen Anne’s Players when, on the accession of James I, she took a company of players, of whom the Earl of Devonshire was a member, and the Lord Chamberlain’s servants had been necessary for Shakespeare at an early date, he could easily have procured it from several other quarters.7

The frequent performances of various associations of actors in Stratford and elsewhere, and the taste for theatricals thereby produced, may have had the effect of drawing not only younger men, but also persons of public consideration, for nobody has pretended to bring forward a particle of proof upon the question, whether Shakespeare visited Kenilworth Castle, when Queen Elizabeth was entertained there by the Earl of Leicester in 1578, and whether the pomps and pageantry he then witnessed did not give a colour to his mind, and a direction to his pursuits. Considering that he was then only in his eleventh year, we own, that we cannot believe he found his way into that gorgeous and august assembly. Kenilworth was fourteen miles distant: John Shakespeare, although he had been bailiff, and was still head-abbot of Stratford, was not a man of sufficient rank and importance to be there in any official capacity; and he probably had not means to equip himself and his son for such an exhibition. It may be very well as a matter of fancy to indulge such a notion, but, as it seems to us, every reasonable probability is against it. That Shakespeare heard of the extensive preparations, and of the magnificent entertainment, there can be no doubt: it was an event calculated to create a strong sensation in the town-ball, if that could be granted to them, or elsewhere. It so happens that the earliest record of the representation of any plays in Stratford-upon-Avon is dated in the year 1560 when John Shakespeare was bailiff: the register of the season is not stated, but it was in 1569, when “the Queen’s Players” (meaning probably, at this date, one company of her “Interlude Players,” retained under that name by her father and grandfather) received 9s. out of the corporate fund, while the Earl of Worcester’s servants in the same year received 3s. at various times by the selling side-men, and burgesses, but we may notice, that in 1577 the players of the Earl of Leicester and Worcester again exhibited; and in 1579 we hear of a company in Stratford patronized by one of the female nobility, (a very unusual circumstance) the Countess of Essex.8 Lord Strange’s men ” (at this date not players, but tumblers) also exhibited in the same year, and in 1580 the Earl of Derby’s players were duly rewarded. The same encouragement was given to the companies of the Earl of Worcester and Berkeley in 1581; but in 1582 we only hear of the Earl of Worcester’s actors having been in the town. In 1583 the earl of Berkeley’s players, and those of Lord Chal doomed, performed in Stratford. In 1586 the same company had been so successful as to have visited the borough. In 1588 “the players” (without mentioning what company) exhibited; and in 1587 no fewer than five associations were rewarded; viz. the Queen’s Players8, and those of the Earls of Essex, Leicester, and Stafford, with “another company,” the noblemen continuing them not being named.

It is to be remarked that several of the players, with whom Shakespeare was afterwards connected, appear to have come originally from Stratford or its neighbourhood. A family of the name of Burbage was resident in Stratford, and one member of it attained to the highest dignity in the corporation9: in the muster-book of the county of Warwick, in 1589, preserved in the State-paper office, we meet in various places with the name of Burbage, Siby, and Heninge, although not with the same Christian names as those of the actors in Shakespeare’s plays: the usual combination of Nicholas Tooley is, however, found there; and he was a well-known member of the company to which Shakespeare was attached10. It is very distinctly ascertained that James Tooley was of Burmington, and he is said to be possessed of 20l. goods. We are indebted to Mr. Lenox for directing our attention to this document, which he only recently discovered in the public archives.

3 It was a conjectured, but, we believe, upon no evidence before the following entry in the register of deaths at Stratford, that Greene was in some way related to Shakespeare: —

1689. March 6. Thomas Green, alias Shaksper.

This was perhaps the father of Thomas Greene, the actor, who was a cornelian of great reputation and popularity, and became so famous in a character called Bubble, that the play of the “City Gallant,”(acted by the Queen’s Players) in which it occurs, with the constantly repeated couplet: “Died on the morning — The 8th of July in the year 1589,” in the account of the Revels of 1611-12, it is called first “the City Gallant, or, towards To quogue: it was printed in 1589, under the double title of both a new Play, “The Queen’s Players,” and in a copy from one T. Heywood, by which it appears that Greene was then dead. A piece of verse, called “A Poet’s Vision and a Prince’s Glory,” 1589, is signed by Thomas Greene by the title-page; it may appear that this were the comedian. The Greens were a very respectable family at Stratford, and one of them was a solicitor settled in Warwick.

4 Upon this point we differ from the Rev. Mr. Halpigh in his ingenious and agreeable “Essay upon Oberon’s Vision,” printed by Shakespeare Press, 1862, where we are assured that Shakespeare was the first to start the idea that Shakespeare had been present at the entertainment at Kenilworth, and the Rev. Mr. Halpigh calls it a pleasant conceit, on which John Benet, Archbishop of Canterbury, was afterwards driven by Dr. Drake: nevertheless, he afterwards seriously argues the matter in a vast number of his letters. But it is only to be hoped that all the right of his gentry on both sides of the family. This appears to us even more a pleasant conceit than that of Percy, Malone, and Shaksper, who suppose a direct connection to have gone to Kenilworth, under the wing of Thomas Greene.
CHAPTER VI.

John Shakespeare removed from his situation as alderman of Stratford, and its possible connexion with William Shake- speare's departure from London in the latter part of the year 1592. 1 William Shakespeare was actor in the Blackfriars Theatre in 1588. Complaints against actors: two companies silenced for bringing Martin Mar-prelate on the stage. Certificate of the sherrifs in the Blackfriars. Shakespeare, in all probability, a good actor: our older dramatists often play a part. Shakespeare's earliest compositions for the stage. His "Venus and Adonis" and "Lucrece" probably written before he came to London.

This period in the life of our great dramatist was an important incident in the life of his father. John Shakespeare was deprived of his position as alderman of Stratford in the autumn of 1596; we say position, for he was deprived of his own, not because any resolution precisely warranting those terms was come to by the rest of the corporation, but because it is quite evident that such was the fact, from the tenor of the entry in the records of the borough. On the 6th Sept. 1596, the following memorandum was made in the register by the town clerk: 2

"At this hall William Smythe and Richard Court are chosen to be aldermen, in the place of John Wheler, and John Shakespeare; for that Mr. Wheler doth deserve to be put out of the company, and Mr. Shakespeare doth not come to the halles, when they be warned, nor hath not done of a long tyme."

According to this note, it was Wheler's wish to be removed from his situation of alderman, and had such also been the desire of John Shakespeare, we should, no doubt, have been told so; therefore, we must presume that he was not a consenting, or at all events not a willing, party to this proceeding; but there is no doubt, as Malone ascertained from an inspection of the ancient books of the borough, that he had ceased to attend the halls, when they were "warned," or summoned, from the year 1579 downwards. This date of 1579 is the more important, although Malone was not aware of the fact, because it was the same year in which John Shakespeare was so distressed for money, that he disposed of his wife's small property in Stratford for 4l.

We have thus additional reasons for thinking, that the unprosperous state of John Shakespeare's pecuniary circumstances had induced him to abstain from attending the ordinary meetings of the corporation, and finally led to his removal from the office of alderman. What connexion this last event may have had with William Shakespeare's determination to quit Stratford cannot be known from any circumstances that have since come to light, but it will not fail to be remarked, that in point of date the events seem to have been coincident, and the connexion with Maltese "supposed" that our great poet left Stratford "about the year 1586 or 1587," 3 but it seems to us more likely that the event happened in the former, than in the latter year. His twins, Hamnet and Judith, were baptized, as we have shown, early in February, 1585, and his father did not cease to be an alderman until about a year and seven months afterwards. The fact, that his son had become a player, may have had something to do with the lower rank his brethren of the bench thought he ought to hold in the corporation; or the resolution of the son to abandon his home may have arisen out of the degradation of the father in his native town; but we cannot help thinking that the two circumstances were in some ways connected, and that the period of time that elapsed between the resignation of William Shakespeare, to seek his fortune in a company of players in the metropolis, may be fixed in the latter end of 1586.

Nevertheless, we do not hear of him in London until three years afterwards, when we find him a sharer in the Blackfriars theatre. It had been constructed (or, possibly, if not an entirely new building, some large edifice had been adapted to the purpose) on the site of the dissolved monastery, because it was beyond the jurisdiction of the lord mayor and corporation of London, who had always evinced decided hostility to dramatic representations. The undertaking seems to have been prosperous from the commencement; and in 1590 no fewer than sixteen performers were sharers in it, including, besides Shakespeare and Burbage, Thomas Greene of Stratford-upon-Avon, and Nicholas Tooley, also a Warwickshire man; the association was probably thus numerous on account of the flourishing state of the concern, many being desirous to obtain an interest in its receipts. In 1599 some general complaints seem to have been raised against "a Jig," or humorous theatrical ballet, called "The Horse-load of Fools," which, in the manuscript in which it has been handed down to us, is stated to have been written by Richard Tarlton, and acted at the court, and in the presence of the queen, and which is to be found in the printed version of the "D'Urfey Anthology," 4 under the title of "The Horse-load of Fools." The suppression may have been occasioned by some allusion to the king's wife or favorite; or it may have been a case of mistaken identity.

1 Gascoyne's "Princely Pleasures," sc. was printed in 1576, and Lanham's "Letter" from Kenilworth in the preceding year. Gascoyne was himself a performer in the shows, and, according to Lanham, represented a "Savage Man," who made a speech to the Queen as she came from hunting. Robert Lanham, the affected, but clever writer of the "Letter," was most likely (as is suggested in the Bridge-water Catalogue, 4th, 1597, p. 100) related to John Lanham, the player, who was one of the Earl of Leicester's players, and is named in the royal licence of 1574. "Robert Lanham," observes the compiler of that Catalogue, "seems to be the more correct as much a comedian upon paper, as John Lanham was upon the stage."

2 William Tyler was the bailiff of the year. See Malone's Shakespeare by Bowell, vol. ii. p. 157.

3 This use of the word "warned" occurs several times in Shakespeare: in "Antony and Cleopatra," (p. 4) Octavius tells Antony, "I have warned thee, 0 Antony," and in "King John" (p. 4) after King Philip has slain his son: "Some trumpet summoneth hither to the walls! These men of Angiers," a citizen exclaims from the battlements, "Who is it that hath sumed us to the walls?"

4 Malone "supposed" that our great poet left Stratford "about the year 1586 or 1587," but it seems to us more likely that the event happened in the former, than in the latter year. His twins, Hamnet and Judith, were baptized, as we have shown, early in February, 1585, and his father did not cease to be an alderman until about a year and seven months afterwards. 1 This feud comes from the citizens; We may not use the word freewe: I know him as well as you By his livery gowns: Or a rare horse-mad family.

2 He is a fool by prettiness And servility, he sayes, And hates all kinds of wisdoms, But most of all in plays Of a verie obstinate family.

3 You have him in his livery gowns, But presently he can Qualifie for a mule or mare, Or for an alderman's horse With a gold chaine in his familie.

4 Being borne and bred for a fool, Why should he be wise, It would make him not fit to sit With knaves and scum Of a verie long earde familie.

Possibly the lord mayor and aldermen, complained of this very composition, and it may have been one of the causes which, soon afterwards, led to the silencing of the company: at all events it was not likely to consolidate the members of the corporation.

been made, that improper matters were introduced into plays; and it is quite certain that "the children of Paul's," as the acting choir-boys of that cathedral were called, and the association of regular professional performers occupying the stage, and that, accordingly, Earl Mar-a-prelate upon their stages, in a manner that had given great offence to the Puritans. Tyndale, the master of the revels, had interposed, and having brought the matter to the knowledge of Lord Burghley, two bodies of players, those of the Lord Admiral and Lord Strange, (the latter by the way having just been twenty years since he had been summoned before the lord mayor, and ordered to desist from all performances. The silencing of other associations would probably have been beneficial to that exhibiting at Blackfriars, and if no proceeding of any kind had been instituted against James Burbage and his partners, we may properly conclude that they had quietly cast off their augmented revenue. We are led to infer, however, that they also apprehended, and experienced, some measure of restraint, and feeling consciences that they had given no just ground of offence, they transmitted to the privy council a sort of certificate of their good conduct, asserting that they had never introduced into their representations unruly or improper sentences. The particular paper which was a certificate that no such kind of performance had ever been preferred against them. This certificate passed into the hands of Lord Ellesmere, then attorney-general, and it has been preserved among his papers. We subjoin a copy of it in note 1.

It seems rather strange that this testimonial should have occurred, particularly considering that it is expected that they would have procured a certificate from some disinterested parties; and we are to take it merely as a statement on their own authority, and possibly as a sort of challenge for inquiry. When they say that no complaint of the kind had ever been preferred against them, we are of course to understand that the assertion applies to the period of the breach withStrange and their theatres, which had been made in 1589, and in which the sharers at Blackfriars thought themselves unjustly included. In this document we see the important fact, as regards the biography of Shakespeare, that in 1599 he was, not only an actor, but a sharer in the undertaking at Blackfriars; and whatever inference may be drawn from it, we find that his name, following eleven others, preceded those of Kempe, Johnson, Goodale, and Army. Kempe, we know, was the successor of Tarlton (who died in 1588) in comic parts, and must have been an actor of great value.

1 All the known details of these transactions may be seen in "The Hist. of Engl. Dram. Poetry and the Stage," vol. i. p. 271, &c.

2 It is on a long slip of paper, very neatly written, but without any official authority.

3 These are to certify your right Honorable Lords, that her Majesty's poor Players, James Burbage, Richard Burbage, John Heminges, John Shakespeare, John Goodale, John Wadson, Thomas Pope, George Peele, Augustine Phillips, Nicholas Toveley, William Shakespeare, William Kempe, William Johnson, Baptiste Goodale, and Robert Army, being all of them sharers in the black Fryers playhouse, have never given cause of displeasure, so that they have brought you no trouble of Religion, unfit to be handled by them, or to be presented before lewd spectators: neither hath any complaint been in that kind ever made against them, or any of them. Wherefore, they trust most humbly in your Lordships consideration of their former good behaviour, being at all times(read), and willing, to yeild obedience to command whatever your Lordships in your wisdom may think in such case meet, &c.

Nov. 1599.

Here we see that Shakespeare's name stands twelfth in the enumeration of them; but it is not certain that they were on the succession in which they are inserted, because among the four names which follow that of our great dramatist are certainly two performers of the highest reputation, and the other of long standing in the profession.

The name of the actor "Almond for a Parrot," printed without date, but not later than 1599, (the year of which we are now speaking) Thomas Nash calls Kempe "a Jestmonger and Vice-great gene-eral," while Dr. Wood says of Thomas Dekker, "he was an Author." 1612, (Shakespeare Society's reprint, p. 34) tells us that Kempe succeeded Tarlton, "as well in the favour of his Majesty, as in the opinion of the grooms of the chamber.

4 He was also one of the executors under Tarlton's will, and was also trustee for his son Philip. See p. xii. What became of Johnson after 1599, we have no information.

5 He was one of the actors, with Laneham, in the anonymous and eminence in the company: Johnson, as appears by the royal license, had been one of the theatrical servants of the Earl of Leicester in 1574; of Goodale we have no account, but he bore a Stratford name; and Army, though he had been instructed in the theater, was a man quite young, and of low rank in the association. The situation in the list which the name of Shakespeare occupies may seem to show that, even in 1599, he was a person of considerable importance in relation to the success of the sharers in Blackfriars theatre. In November, 1589, he was in the middle of his twenties and in the prime of his strength, if not in the highest maturity, of his mental and bodily powers. We can have no hesitation in believing that he originally came to London, in order to obtain his livelihood by the stage, and with no other view. Aubrey tells us that he was "inclined naturally to poetry and acting," and the rest of his life, the difficulty of obtaining profitable employment in the country for the maintenance of his family, without other motives, may have induced him readily to give way to that inclination. Aubrey, who had probably taken due means to inform himself, adds, that "he did not exceedingly well;" and we are convinced that the opinion, founded chiefly upon a statement by Rowe, that Shakespeare's place among the players was a very unimportant one. It seems likely that for two or three years he employed himself chiefly in the more active duties of the profession he had chosen; and Peele, who was a very practised and popular playwright, considerably older than Shakespeare, was a member of the company, without saying anything of Wadson, Johnson, and Kempe. The inordinate passage date he was one of Henslowe's dramatists; or of Army, then only just coming forward as a comic performer. There is reason to think that Peele did not continue one of the Lord Chamberlain's servants after 1590, and his extant dramas were acted by the Queen's players, or by those of the Lord Admiral; but the latter association Peele seems subsequently to have entered. Henslowe's account book, a subsequent date he was one of Henslowe's dramatists; or of Army, then only just coming forward as a comic performer. There is reason to think that Peele did not continue one of the Lord Chamberlain's servants after 1590, and his extant dramas were acted by the Queen's players, or by those of the Lord Admiral; but the latter association Peele seems subsequently to have entered. Henslowe's account book, and the frequent passages quoted, is the more important, as he is also mentioned among the players in the Fragment of 1598, printed in 1594, purports on the title-page to have been played by them. While Peele remained a member of the company of the Lord Chamberlain's players, Shakespeare's services as a dramatist may not materially have interfered with his exertions as an actor; but afterwards, when Peele had joined a rival establishment, he may have been much more frequently called upon to employ his pen, and then his value in that department becoming clearly understood, he was less frequently a performer.

Out of the sixteen sharers of which the company he be-written manuscript play of "Sir Thomas More." (Harl. Coll., No. 7385) which, we may conjecture, was licensed for the stage before 1592.

4 This fact is stated in a publication entitled "Tartar's Jest," of which a first edition is said to have been printed, but not doubted collected and published very soon after the death of Tarlton in 1588.

5 When the Rev. Mr. Dyce published his edition of Peele's Works, he was not aware that there was any impression of that author's "Tale of Troy," in 1604, as well as in 1599, containing such variations as show that it must have been corrected and augmented by Peele after its first appearance. The impression of 1601 is the most complete, and extensive volume not exceeding an inch and a half high by an inch wide, with the following title: - The "Tale of Troy," By G. Peele, M. of Arts in Oxford. Printed by A. H. 1613. We will add only two passages out of many, to prove the nature of the changes and additions made by Peele after the original publication. In the edition of 1604, the poem thus opens:

1 In that world's wounded part, where waves yet swell
With everlasting showers of tears that fell,
And lasted more than with griefs endured.
That long warded, Troy, Neptune's city, stood,
Gorgously built, like to the house of Fame,
Or court of Love, as some describe the same, &c.

The four lines which commence the second stage of Mr. Dyce's edition are thus extended in the copy of 1601:

"His court presenting to our human eyes
An earthly heaven, or shining Paradise,
Where fair men and women, with magnificence,
Glistening like stars of pure immortall fire.
Thus happy, Paim, didst thou live of yore,
That to thy fortune heavens could add no more."

Peele was dead in 1598, and it is likely that there were one or more interesting impressions of "The Tale of Troy," between 1589 and 1604.
longed to consisted in 1589, besides the usual proportion of "hired men," who only took inferior characters there would be more than a sufficient number for the representation of most plays, without the assistance of Shakespeare. He was, doubtless, soon busily and profitably engaged as a dramatist; and this remark on the rareness of his appearance on the stage in 1590 probably is strongly in his after-life, when he produced one or more dramas every year.

His instructions to the players in "Hamlet" have often been noticed as establishing that he was admirably acquainted with the theory of the art, and if, as Rowe ascerts, he only took the short part of the Ghost in this tragedy, we are to recollect that even if he had considered himself competent to it, the study of such a character as Hamlet, (the longest on the stage as it is now acted, and still longer as it was originally written) must have consumed more time than he could well afford to bestow upon it, especially when we call to mind that there was a member of the company who had previously represented most of the heroes, and whose excellence was as undoubted, most of whose parts he required, his popularity was extraordinary. 2 To Richard Burbage was therefore assigned the arduous character of the Prince, while the author took the brief, but important part of the Ghost, which required person, deportment, judgment, and voice, with a delivery distinct, solemn, and impressive. All the elements were there, which were needed for the due performance of "the buried majesty of Denmark." 2

It may be observed, in passing, that at the period of our drama, such as it existed in the hands of Shakespeare's immediate predecessors, authors were most commonly actors also. Such was the case with Greene, Marlowe, Lodge, Peele, probably Nash, Munday, Wilson, and others: the custom prevailing in those of their successors, Ben Jonson, Heywood, Webster, Field, &c.; but at a somewhat later date dramatists do not usually appear to have trodden the stage. We have no hint that Dekker, Chapman, or Marston, though contemporary with Ben Jonson, were actors; and Massinger, Beaumont, Fletcher, Middleton, Daborne, and Shirley, who may be said to have followed them, as far as we now know, never had anything to do with the performance of their own dramas, or of any other poet's. In the course of the plays, the voice of the author seems to have been generally distinct, while the contrary was certainly the case some years anterior to the demise of Elizabeth.

It is impossible to determine, almost impossible to guess, what Shakespeare had or had not written in 1589. That he had chiefly employed his pen in the revival, alternation and improvement of existing dramas we are strongly disposed to believe, but that he had not ventured upon original composition it would be much too bold to assert. "The Comedy of Errors" we take to be one of the pieces, which, having been first written by an inferior dramatist, was heightened and amended by Shakespeare, perhaps about the date of which we are now speaking; and "Love's Labour's Lost," or "The Two Gentlemen of Verona," may have been original compositions brought upon the stage prior to 1590. We also consider it more than probable that "Titus Andronicus" belongs even to an earlier period; but we feel satisfied, that although Shakespeare had by this time given the world one or two fully successful attempts at poetic composition, and in the severe rivalry, he could not have written any of his greater works until some years afterwards. With regard to productions unconnected with the stage, there are several pieces among his scattered poems, and some of his sonnets, that indisputably belong to an earlier part of his life. A young man, so gifted, would not, and could not, wait until he was five and forty, before going to work with his own pen. A man of great success at attempts at poetical composition; and we feel morally certain that "Venus and Adonis" was in being for a deadly mortal strife, that he was not content to stop the breach.

"Of one who was his rival's foe,
With his own dagger slain,
He groaned and word spoke never more,
Fleet's not through the eye and brine."

Which pretty exactly accord with the tradition of the mode in which he came to his end, in a scuffle with a person of the name of Archer: the register of his death at St. Nicholas, Deptford, notes the name:—"1 June, 1593. Christopher Marlowe slain by Francis Trollope, one of the players, in a scuffle at St. Nicholas's Pier." Shakespeare was then thirty-three years of age, and his "Venus and Adonis" had been published, and "The Rape of Lucrece" was in its fourth edition. So much is necessary for the date of his death. There would have been no difficulty as to his time of birth, had he written in the sonnet,"When first to drab"—and as having been "the Muse's darling for his verse." 3

"One upon this point we cannot agree with Mr. F. G. Tomlins, who has written a very sensible and clever work called "A Brief view of the History of the English Drama from its Earliest Times to the Present Day." He argues that Shakespeare probably began with original composition, and not with the adaptation and alteration of works, but he found in possession of the stage when he joined the Lord Chamberlain's players. We know that the earliest charge against him by a fellow dramatist was, that he had availed himself of the productions of others, and we have every reason to believe that some of the plays upon which he was first employed were not by any means entirely his own: we allude among others to the three parts of "Henry VI." 1 It seems to us much more likely that Shakespeare not only instance carried with himself to alterations and improvements of the plays of predecessors, that he at once found himself capable of inventing and constructing a great original drama. However, it is but fair to quote the words of Mr. Tomlins:—

"We are thus driven to the conclusion that his writing must have procured him this laureate position. What had he written? In the next question that presents itself. Probably "original" plays, for the adaptation of the plays of others could scarcely be entrusted to the inexperienced hands of a young genius who had not manifested his knowledge of stage matters by any productions of his own. This kind of work would be jealously watched by the managers, and must ever have required him the greatest skill and experience. Shakespeare, mighty as he was, was human, and it is scarcely possible that a genius, so ripe, so rich, so overflowing as his, should not have its enthusiastic kindred as his literary assistants. What was perhaps the mechanical, polishing of the inferior productions of others," p. 31.

Upon this passage we have only to remark that according to our view, it would be more requisite to require him the "skill and experience" to write a new play, than merely to make additions to the speeches or scenes of "an old." 2

"His 'sugar'd sonnets' were handed about among his private friends" many years before they were printed: Francis Meres mentions them in the words we have quoted, in 1598.
anterior to Shakespeare's quitting Stratford. It bears all the marks of youthful vigour, of strong passion, of luxuriant imagination, together with a force and originality of expression which betoken the first efforts of a great mind, not always well regulated in its taste: it seems to have been written in the open air of a fine country like Warwickshire, and in the stage while he was still a boy and an object; and we will go so far as to say, that we do not think even Shakespeare himself could have produced it, in the form it bears, after he had reached the age of forty. It was quite new in its class, being founded upon no model, either ancient or modern: nothing like it had been attempted before, and nothing comparable to it. F. W. In the same way, the Blackfriars was the first to give currency to this lide invention, and it was the Blackfriars theatre which had re-reiterated since; and we should hardly have thought it worth notice now, if it had not found a place in many modern accounts of our great dramatist. The company to which he attached himself had not unfrequently performed in Stratford, and at that date the Queen's Players and the Lord Chamberlain's company were not very known in the provinces, although the difference was well understood in London; some of the chief members of it had come from his own part of the country, and even from the very town in which he was born; and he was not in a station of life, nor so destitute of means and friends, as to have been reduced to such an extreme as to know how to make a living. The London company, which consisted of several persons, whom we have been described as tongue-tied and coarse, had scarcely been composed together for the purpose of being able to come to London for the purpose of pursuing its theatrical career. The earliest allusion to Shakespeare in Spenser's "Tears of the Muses," 1591. Proof of its applicability—What Shakespeare had probably by this date written—Edmund Spenser of London was doubtless associated with the theatre of the time merited the character given by Spenser. Greene, Kyd, Lodge, Peele, Marlowe, and Lyly, and their several claims: that of Lyly supported by Malone. Temporary cessation of Shakespeare's public performances in London. Provenance of the "Tears of the Muses," a poem printed in 1591. The application of the passage to Shakespeare has been much contested, but the fraudulant reprint, which also contains various pieces to which it is known, Beaumont had no pretensions. To afford the better means of comparison, and as we know of only one copy of the edition of 1603, we subjoin the title-page prefixed to it: "Salmasia and Hermaphroditus. Salmasidae spolia sine saprimento et audore. Imprinted at London for John Hodges, &c. 1602?" 40. It is almost to be wondered that the getten up of this piece of information did not support it by reference to Shakespeare's obvious knowledge of horses and horsemanship, displayed in so many parts of his works. The description of the horse is: "Venus and Adonis" will at once occur to every body; and how much it was admired at the time is evident from the fact, that it was plagiarised so soon after the publication of the poem. 42. Malone has written "Venus and Adonis," in manuscript; it is quite as probable, as that Shakespeare had seen "Hero and Leander" before it was printed. Malone has published for us the result of his researches, and it is a gross exaggeration of its style; and Barbauld's "Myrtha the Mother of Adonis" is a poor and coarse imitation: the same may be said of "Myrtha the Mother of Adonis," and Shirley's "Narcissus," which must have been written many years afterwards, is a production of the same class as Marston's "Pyramis and Thisbe." Besides having written "Venus and Adonis," Shakespeare gave to Blacklock the bookseller, we do not know: But there is another way of looking at this passage, which I have been called "Salmasia, and Hermaphroditus," first printed in 1602, and assigned to Francis Beaumont in 1640. It was, it seems, that Shakespeare was a novice in the art of riding, among other passages, see his account of Lamord's horsemanship in "Hamlet." The propagators and supporters of Shakespeare's authorship have attempted to show that Shakespeare probably derived his minutes and accurate acquaintance with the subject from his early observation of the skill of the English nobility and gentry, after they had resided at the play-houses of Stratford. But chide skill to ride seems a science. Proper to gentle blood."—Spenser's F. Q. b. ii. c. 4. 43. We have already stated that although in 1590 only one unique copy of a manuscript performed in Stratford, in the very next year (that in which we have supposed Shakespeare to have become a regular actor) five companies were entertained in the borough: one of these consisted of the members of the Blackfriars company, and the "Salmasia, and Hermaphroditus," was probably written by Shakespeare, and the performance of the Blackfriars theatre belonged: and it is very possible that Shakespeare may have adopted the profession of an actor, and that in 1597 such extraordinary encouragement was given to theatricals in Stratford. 44. Malone (Shakespeare by Boswell, vol. ii. p. 185) says that Spen...
difficulty in our mind is, how the lines are to be explained by reference to any other dramatist of the time, even supposing, as we have supposed and believe, that our great poet was at this period, and Truth to imitate, the works of others. We will first quote the lines, literal as they stand in the edition of 1591, and afterwards say something of the claims of others to the distinction they confer.

"And he the man, whom Nature selfe had made
In mock her selfe, and Truth to imitate,
With kindly counter under Minniek shade,
Our pleasant Willy, ah! is dead of late:
With whom all joy and jolly merriment
Is also deaded, and in doleour drunk.

In stead thereof setting Scourillitie,
And scornfull Fellow, which contempt is crest,
Rolling in ymes of shamelesse ribandie,
Without regard or due Decorum kept;
Each idle wit at will presumes to make,
And doth the Learned's task upon him take.

But that same gentle Spirit, from whose pen
Large streames of honnie and sweete Nectar flowe,
Scorning the boldnes of such base-born men,
Which dare their folleys forth so rashly throwe,
Doth rather choose to sit in idle Cell,
Than so himselfe to mockerie to sell."

The most striking of these lines, with reference to our present inquiry, is,

"Our pleasant Willy, ah! is dead of late;" and hence, if it stood alone, we might infer that Willy, whoever he might be, was actually dead; but the latter part of the third stanza we have quoted shows us in what sense the word "dead" is to be understood: Willy was "dead" as far as regarded the admirable dramatic talents he had already displayed, which had enabled him, even before 1591, to outstrip all living rivalry, and to afford the most certain indications of the still greater things Spenser saw he would accomplish: he was "dead," because he

"Doth rather choose to sit in idle Cell, Than so himselfe to mockerie to sell.""}

It is to be borne in mind that these stanzas, and six others, are put into the mouth of Thalia, whose lamentation on the degeneracy of the stage, especially in comedy, followed upon the death of Marston, and no doubt added to the impression that the whole passage referred to Shakespeare, introduced it into his "Life," in his first edition of 1709, but silently withdrew it in his second edition of 1714: his reason, perhaps, was that he did not see how, before 1591, Shakespeare could have shown that he merited the character given of him and his productions—

"And he the man, whom Nature selfe had made.
To mock her selfe, and Truth to imitate"

Spenser knew what the object of his elegy was capable of doing, as well, perhaps, as what he had done; and we have established that more than a year before the publication of these lines, Shakespeare had risen to be a distinguished member of the Lord Chamberlain's company, and a sharer in the undertaking at the Blackfriars. Although

"Tears of the Muses" was published in 1590, but the volume in which it first appeared bears date in 1591. It was printed with some other poems under the title of "Complaints. Containing sundrie small Poems of the Worlds Vanities. Whereof the next Page maketh mention. By Ed. Sp. London. Imprinted for William Ponsheche, ",c. 1591." It will be evident from what follows in our text, that a year is of considerable importance to the question.

Perhaps it was printed off before his "Bartholomew Fair" was acted: it certainly was one of his earliest poems, which was new. But Jonson did not think he had a right to publish it in the seventeenth year of the company (the servants of the Princess Elizabeth) by whom it had been performed. A still later poem, "The Widow," written about 1591, in which he was assisted by Fether and Middleton; "The Case As alter'd," printed in 1592, "The Women in Love," which was not published till 1600; and "Eastward Hoe," published in 1607, in which he was joined by Chapman and Marston: this last play exposed the authors to great danger of punishment.

We are not to be understood as according in the subscription to Shakespeare of various plays imputed to him in the folio of 1604, and we feel assured that he had not composed any of his greatest works before 1591, he may have done much, besides what has come down to us, ample to warrant Spenser in applauding him as the "Philostratus of Dramas." His earliest printed plays, "Romeo and Juliet," "Richard II," and "Richard III," bear date in 1597; but it is indisputable that he had at that time written considerably more, and part of what he had so written is contained in the folio of 1629; never having made its appearance in any earlier edition. When Ben Jonson published the large volume of his "Works" in 1616, he excluded several comedies in which he had been aided by other poets, and re-wrote part of "Sejanus," because, as is supposed, Shakespeare, (who performed in it, and whom Jonson terms a "happy genius," as having assisted him in the composition of the tragedy as it was originally acted. The player-editors of the folio of Shakespeare's "Comedies, Tragedies, and Histories," in 1623, may have thought it right to pursue the same course, excepting in the case of the three parts of "Henry VI.," the poet, or poets, who had contributed to these histories (perhaps Marlowe and Greene) had been then dead thirty years; but with respect to other pieces, persons still living, whether authors or booksellers, might have joint claims upon them, and hence their exclusion. We only put this as a possible circumstance; but we are persuaded that Shakespeare, early in his theatrical life, must have written much, in the way of revivals, alterations, or joint productions with other poets, which has been forever lost. We here, as before, conclude that none of his greatest dramatic productions had come from his pen; but if in 1591 he only be set down as "a poet," "a man," and "Love's Labour's Lost," they are so infinitely superior to the best works of his predecessors, that the justice of the tribute paid by Spenser to his genius would at once be admitted. At all events, if before 1591 he had not accomplished, by any means, all that he was capable of, he had given the clearest indications of high genius, abundantly sufficient to justify the anticipation of Spenser, that he was a man

"whom Nature's selfe had made

a passage which in itself admirably comprises, and compresses nearly all the excellences of which dramatic poetry is capable—the mockery of nature, and the imitation of truth.

Another point not hitherto noticed, because not hitherto known, is, that there is some little ground for thinking, that Spenser, if not a Warwickshire man, was at one time resident in Warwickshire, and later in life he may have become acquainted with Shakespeare. His birth had been conjectured to place him in the county of Derbyshire; and the many allusions in his "Preludions" it has been supposed that he was born in London: East Smithfield, near the Tower, has also been fixed upon as the part of the town where he first drew breath; but the parish registers in that neighbourhood have been searched in vain for a record of the event. An Edmund Spencer unquestionably dwelt at Kingsbury, in Warwickshire, in 1569, which was the year when the author of "The Faerie Queene" went to Cambridge, and elsewhere. We believe that he was concerned in "The Yorkshire Tragedy," and that he may have contributed some parts of "Ardon of Faversham," but in spite of the ingenious letter, published at Edinburgh in 1850, we do not think that he aided Fletcher in writing "The Two Noble Kinsmen," and there is not a single passage in "The Birth of Merlin," which is worthy of his most careless moments. Of "The first part of Sir John Oldcastle" we have elsewhere spoken; and several other supposititious dramas in the folio of 1623, mentioning "Spenser," have been supposed to have been written by him. But his "The Tragedy of the Worldlings," which is the earliest of his plays, was published in 1590, and has been supposed to be the work of other dramatists.

This date has always appeared to us too late, recollecting that Spenser wrote none of the black-verse sonnets, prefixed to Vandesellius's "Theatre for Worldlings," printed in 1590. If he was born in 1533, in 1590 he was only in his sixteenth year, and the sonnets to which we refer do not begin till 1580; and "The Faerie Queene," so differend inquirer into such matters, and he could discover no entry of the kind. See his "Supplemental Apology," p. 23. Subsequent investigations, instituted with reference to this question, have led to the same result. Oldys is responsible for the statement.
was admitted a sizar at Pembroke College. The fact that Edmund Spenser (a rather unusual combination of names) was an inhabitant of Kingsbury in 1569 is established by the muster-book of Warwickshire, preserved in the state-paper office, to which we have before had occasion to refer, but it does not give the ages of the partners. This Edmund Spenser, it is suggested, was possibly the father of the other (whose Christian name is no where recorded) and if it were the one or the other, it seems to afford a link of connexion, however slight, between Spenser and Shakespeare, of which we have had no previous knowledge. Spenser was at least eleven years older than Shakespeare, but their early residences in the same part of the kingdom may have given rise to an intimate afterwards: 1 Spenser must have appreciated and admired the genius of Shakespeare, and the author of "The Tears of the Muses," at the age of thirty-seven, may have paid a merited tribute to his young friend of twenty-six.

The Edmund Spenser of Kingsbury may have been entirely a different person, of a distinct family, and perhaps we are disposed to lay too much stress upon a mere coincidence of names; but we may be forgiven for clinging to the conjecture that he may have been the author of "The Faerie Queene," and that the greatest romantic poet of this country was upon terms of friendship and cordiality with the younger man. There is a work in Spenser's handwriting with which we were unacquainted when we wrote the Introduction to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," may appear to give new point, and a more certain application, to the well-remembered lines of that drama (Act v. sc. 1) in which Shakespeare has been supposed to refer to the death of Spenser, 2 and which may have been a subsequent insertion, for the sake of repaying by one poet a debt of gratitude to the other.

Without taking into consideration what may have been lost, if we are asked what we think it likely that Shakespeare had written in and before 1591, we should answer, that he had altered and added to three parts of "Henry VI" that he had written, or added in writing. "Thus Adrianus," that he had revised and amended "The Comedy of Errors," and that he had composed "The Two Gentlemen of Verona," and "Love's Labour's Lost." Thus, looking only at his extant works, we see that the eulogy of Spenser was well warranted by the plays Shakespeare, at that early date, had produced.

It will be seen that the point we were more especially, we should be convinced that by "our pleasant Willy," Spenser meant William Shakespeare, by the fact that such a character as he gives could belong to no other dramatist of the time. Greene can have no pretensions to it, or to Lodge, nor Kyd, nor Peele; Marlowe had never touched comedy; but if the point be pressed, and if it be remembered that Spenser had not the same nature and inartistic talent, the claim put in by Maloue for Lyly is little short of absurd. Lyly was, beyond dispute, the most artificial and affected writer of his day; his dramas have nothing like nature or truth in them; and if it could be established that Spenser and Lyly were on the most intimate footing, even the exaggerated admiration of the fondest friendship could hardly have carried Spenser to the extreme to which he has gone in his "Tears of the Muses." If Malone had wished to point out a dramatist of that day to whom the words of Spenser could by no possibility apply, he could not have made a better choice than when he fixed upon Lyly. However, he labours the contrary position with great pertinacity and considerable tenacity, and it is extraordinarily how a man of much reading, and of sound judgment upon many points of literary discussion, could impose upon himself and be led so far from the truth, by the desire to establish a novelty. At all events, he might have contented himself with an endeavour to prove the negative as regards Shakespeare, without going the strange length of attempting to make out the affirmative as regards Lyly.

We do not for an instant admit the right of any of Shakespeare's predecessors or contemporaries to the tribute of Spenser; but Malone might have made out a case for any of them with more plausibility than for Lyly. Greene was a writer of fertile fancy, but choked and smothered by the overlaying of scholastic learning: Kyd was a man of strong natural parts, and a composer of vigorous lines: Lodge was a poet of genius, though not in the department of the drama; Peele had an elegant mind, and was a smooth and agreeable versifier; while Marlowe was gifted with a soaring and a daring spirit, though uneschewed by a well-regulated taste: but all these men had definite claims, whereas Lyly, who generally chose classical or mythological subjects, and dealt with those subjects with a wearisome monotonity of style, with thoughts quaint, conceited, and violent, and with an utter absence of force, and distinctness in his characterization.

It is not necessary to enter farther into this part of the question, because, we think, it is now established that Spenser's lines might apply to Shakespeare as regards the date of their publication, and indisputably applied with most felicitous exactness to the works he has left behind him.

With regard to the lines which state, that Willy

"Doth rather choose to sit in idle Cell, Than so himself to mockery to sell,"

we have already shown that in 1589 there must have been some compulsory cessation of theatrical performances, which affected not only offending, but unoffending companies; hence the certificate, or more properly remonstrance, of the sixteen sharers in the Blackfriars. The choir-boys of Paul's Cathedral, and the "men of the country, being "matters of state and religion" on their stage, when they introduced Martin Mar-prelate into one of their dramas: and the players of the Lord Admiral and Lord Strange were prohibited from acting, as far as we can learn, on a similar ground. The interdiction of performances by the children of Paul's was prolonged in for about ten years, although the public companies (after the completion of some inquiries by commissioners specially appointed) were allowed again to follow their vocation, there can be no doubt that there was a temporary suspension of all theatrical exhibitions in London. This suspension commenced a short time before Spenser wrote his "Tears of the Muses," in which he notices the silence of Shakespeare.
We have no means of ascertaining how long the order, inhibiting theatrical performances generally, was persevered in; but the plague broke out in London in 1592, and in the autumn of the year, when the number of deaths was greatest, "the Queen's players," in their progress round the country, whether they wandered when thus prevented from acting in the metropolis, performed at Chesterton, near Cambridge, to the great annoyance of the heads of the university.

It was at this juncture, probably, if indeed he ever were in that country, that Shakespeare visited Italy. Mr. C. Armitage Brown, in his very clever, and in many respects original work, "Shakespeare's Autobiographical Poems," has maintained the affirmative with great confidence, and has brought as much internal evidence as the productions of our great dramatist. External evidence there is none, since not even a tradition of such a journey has descended to us. We own that the internal evidence, in our estimation, is by no means as strong as it appeared to Mr. Brown, who has evinced great ingenuity and ability in the conduct of his case, and has made as much as possible of his proofs. He dwells, among other things, upon the fact, that there were no contemporary translations of the tales on which "The Merchant of Venice" and "Othello" are founded; but Shakespeare may have understood as much Italian as answered his purpose without having gone to Venice. For the same reason we lay no stress upon the recent discovery of a fact (but that it was a fact he did not write) that Shakespeare reconstructed his "Twelfth Night", with the aid of one or two Italian comedies; they may have found their way into England, and he may have read them in the original language. That Shakespeare was capable of translating Italian sufficiently for his own purposes, we are morally certain; but we think that if he had travelled to Venice, Verona, or Florence, we should have had more distinct and positive testimony of the fact in his works than can be adduced from them.

Other authors of the time have left such evidence behind them as cannot be disputed. Lyly tells us so distinctly in more than one of his pieces, and Rich informs us that he became acquainted with the novels he translated on the other side of the Alps; Daudet goes the length of letting us know where certain of his sonnets were composed: Lodge wrote some of his tracts abroad; Nash gives us the places where he met particular persons; and his friend Greene admits his obligations to Italy and Spain, whither he had travelled early in life in pursuit of letters. In truth, at that time the productions of Italian authors were prevailing vogue for foreign travel, and it extended itself to mere actors, as well as to poets; for we know that William Kempe was in Rome in 1601, during the interval between the time when, for some unexplained reason, he quitied the company of the Lord Chamberlain's players, and joined that of the Lord Admiral. Although we do not believe that Shakespeare ever was in Italy, we admit that we are without evidence to prove a negative; and he may have 1 They consisted of the company under the leadership of Lawrence Dutton, one of the two associations acting at this period under the Queen's name. Both were unconnected with the Lord Chamberlain's company, and were directed by an Italian, Biuse Biusello. 2 See Mr. Halliwell's "Endus Coventrin" for the Shakespearean history of the company. In "Rooke's Search for Money," some of the evidence of Kempe, who, it seems, had waged a certain sum of money that he would go to Rome and back in a given number of days. In the introduction of the history of Kempe's "Nine Days Wonder," it is shown that Kempe also dined a moris in France. These circumstances were unknown to the Rev. A. Dyce, who, in his "Life of Shakespeare," p. 100, for the Camden Society. 3 It is a new fact that Kempe at any time quitied the company played in the recently published "Rooke's Search for Money," and that Kempe had acted in the company to which he had belonged. Mr. Dyce attributes the omission of Kempe's name in that instrument to his death, because, in the

CHAPTER VIII

Death of Robert Greene in 1592, and publication of his "Groatworth of Wit," by H. Chettle. Greene's address to Marlowe and Shakespeare, and his envious mention of Shakespeare. Shakespeare's own reasons for the apology of the latter in his "Kind-heart's Dream." The character of Shakespeare there given. Second allusion by Spenser to Shakespeare in "Colin Clout's come home again," 1594. The gentle Shakespeare. Changes in the character of his composition between 1591 and 1594: his "Richard II." and "Richard III." During the prevalence of the infectious malady of 1592, although not in consequence of it, died one of the most notable and distinguished of the literary men of the time,—Robert Greene. He expired on the 3d of September, 1592, and left behind him a work purporting to have been written during his last illness: it was published a few months afterwards by Henry Chettle, a fellow dramatist, under the title of "A Groatworth of Wit, bought with a Million of Repentance," bearing the date of 1592, and preceded by an address from Greene "To those Gentlemen, his quondam acquaintance, who spend their wits in making Plays." Here we meet with the second notice of Shakespeare, not indeed by name, but with such a near approach to it, that nobody can entertain a moment's doubt that he was intended. It is necessary to quote the whole passage, and to observe, before we do so, that Greene is addressing himself particularly to Marlowe, Lodge, and Peele, and urging them to break off all connexion with players:—"Base minded men all three of you, if by my misery ye be not warned; for unto none of you, like me, sought these burs to cleave; those puppets, I mean, that speak from our mouths, those anticks garnished in our colours. Is it not strange to them at whom they all have been beholding; is it not like that, to whom they have all been beholding, shall (were ye in that case that I am now) be both of them at once forsaken? Yes, trust them not; for there is an upright crew, beautified with our feathers, that with his Tiger's heart and the fire of his wits stirs wind, and he is as well able, to bountse blast our blank-verse, as the best of you: and, being an absolute Johannet Factotum, is, in his own conceit, the only Shaque-scene in a country. 0! that I might cure your rare wits to be employed in more profitable courses, and let these apes imitate your past excellence, and never more acquaint them with your admired inventions, but let them attend to honest laws. The chief and obvious purpose of this address is to register of St. Saviour's, Southwark. Chalmers found an entry, dated Nov. 2, 1603, of the burial of "William Kempe, a wright." There are, besides many of the common names of William Kempe; and the William Kempe who had acted with Shakespeare was certainly alive in 1605, and had by that date rejoined the Lord Chamberlain's company. No, in the following unannounced memoranda relating to him are extracted from Henslowe's Diary:

Lent unto W. Kempe, the 10 of March, 1592, is redy mony twenty shillings for his necessary use, the some of xxv. 2 Lent unto W. Kempe, the 22 of August, 1602, to buye bucke-rum to make a poyne of greatnes house, the some of ve. 3 'Dy unto the tyerman for mackynge of W. Kempe's sewt, and the boyse, the 4 September, 1602, some of wit, ce. 4 We have some doubts of the authenticity of the quotation of "Groatworth of Wit," as a work by Greene. Chettle was a neatly dramatic, and possibly wrote it in order to avail himself of the high popularity of the productions, that is just beginning to appear in London, of the publication of it, Chettle re-asserted that it was by Greene, but he admitted that the manuscript from which it was printed was in his own hand. He is explained, by stating that Greene's copy was so illegible that he was obliged to transcribe it. "It was ill-written," says Chettle, "as Greene's hand was none of the best;" and therefore he re-wrote it.
duke Marlowe, Lodge, and Peele to cease to write for the stage, and in the course of his exhortation, Greene bitterly inveighs against "an upstart crow," who had availed himself of the dramatic labours of others, who imagined himself able to write as good blank-verse as any of his contemporaries, who was a Johannes Pico-totum, and who, in his own opinion, was "the only SHAKE-SCENE in a country." All this is clearly layed down at Shakespeare, until the post-printing stage of the "name of Shake-scene," and the "Tiger's heart wrapp'd in a player's hide," are a parody upon a line in a historical play, (most likely by Greene) "O, tiger's heart wrapp'd in a woman's hide," from which Shakespeare had taken his "Henry VI." part iii.

From hence it is evident that Shakespeare, near the end of 1592, if not before, was so important a rival of the dramatists, who, until he came forward, had kept undisputed possession of the stage, as to excite the envy and enmity of Greene, even during his last and fatal illness. It also we, think, establishes another point not hitherto adverted to, viz. that our great poet possessed such variety of talent, that, for the purposes of the company of which he was a member, he could do anything that he might be called upon to perform: he was the Johannes Pico-totum of the association; he was an actor, and he was a writer of original plays, an adapter and improver of those already in existence, (some of them by Greene, Marlowe, Lodge, or Peele) and no doubt he contributed prologues or epilogues, as occasion required, to scenes or passages on any temporary emergency. Having his ready assistance, the Lord Chamberlain's servants required few other contributions from rival dramatists: 3 the Shakespeare was the Johannes Pico-totum who could turn his hand to any thing connected with his profession, and who, in all probability, had thrown men like Greene, Lodge, and Peele, and even Marlowe himself, into the shade. In our view, therefore, the quotation we have made from the "Groatsworth of Wit," proves more than has been usually collected from it.

It was natural and proper that Shakespeare should take offence at this gross and public attack: that he did there is no doubt, for we are told so by Chettle himself, the avowed editor of the "Groatsworth of Wit," he does not indeed mention Shakespeare, but he designates him so intelligently that there is no room for dispute. Marlowe, also, and not without reason, complained of the manner in which Greene had spoken of him in the same work, but to him Chettle made no apology, while to Shakespeare he offered all the amends in his power.

His apology to Shakespeare is contained in a tract called "Kind-heart's Dream," which was published without date, but as Greene expired on 3d September, 1592, and Chettle tells us in "Kind-heart's Dream," that Greene died "about three months" before, it is certain that "Kind-heart's Dream" came out prior to the end of 1592, and so the whole passage relating to Marlowe and Shakespeare is mostly interesting, and we therefore extract it entire.

1 About three months since died M. Robert Greene, leaving many papers in sundry booksellers' hands: among others his "Groatworth of Wit," in which a letter, written to divers booksellers, is offer'd to that actor, and blank-verse is together with the apology, written by the dramatist, to Shakespeare, who had been offended at a work, which he supposes that time I did not so much Spanish, the first time I wish I had, for that as I have moderated the heat of living writers, and might have used my own discretion (especially when I, a certain actor having such as I am so sorry th as the original fault had been my fault; because myself I have seen his demeanour no less civil, than he excellent in the quality he professes: besides, divers of worship have read his uprightness of dealing, and approved his honesty, and his acquaintance in writing, that approves me. For the first, [Marlowe] whose learning I reverence, and at the persuading of Greene's book struck out what then in conscience I thought I should do in some dissertation writ, and I am but true, yet to publish it was intolerable, him I would wish to use me no worse than I deserve."

The accusation of Greene against Marlowe had reference to the freedom of his religious opinions, of which it is not necessary here to say more; the attack upon Shakespeare, we have already inserted and observed upon. In Chettle's apology to the latter, one of the most noticeable points is the tribute he pays to our great dramatist's abilities as an actor, "his demeanour no less civil, than he excellent in the quality he professes;" the word "quality" was applied, not at that date, to any thing {

Large streams of honey and sweete nectar flows.} If we were to trust printed dates, it would seem that in the same year the author of the "Faerie Queene" gave another proof of his admiration of our great dramatist; we allude to a passage in "Colin Clout's come home again," which was published with a dedication dated 27th December 1591: "To the most welcome and industrious reader, and admirer of the high opinion entertained of him, towards the close of 1592, as an actor, an author, and a man."

We have already inserted Spenser's warm, but not less judicious and well-merited, eulogium of Shakespeare in 1591, when in his "Tears of the Muses" he addresses him as Willy, and designates him "that same gentle spirit, from whose pen...""
CHAPTER IX.

Having arrived at the year 1594, we may take this opportunity of stating which of Shakespeare's extant works, in our opinion, had by that date been produced. We have already mentioned the three parts of "Henry VI.," "Titus Andronicus," "The Comedy of Errors," "The Two Gentlemen of Verona," and "Love's Labour's Lost," as in being in 1591; and in the interval between 1591 and 1594, we apprehend, he had added to them "Richard II." and "Richard III." Of these, the four last were entirely the work of our great dramatist: in the others he more or less availed himself of previous dramas, or possibly, of the assistance of contemporaries.

We must now return to Stratford-upon-Avon, in order to advert to a very different subject.

A document has been recently discovered in the State Paper Office, which is highly interesting with respect to the religious tenets, or worldly circumstances, of Shakespeare's father in 1592. Sir Thomas Lucy, Sir Fulk Greville, Sir Henry Goodere, Sir John Harrington, and four others, having been appointed commissioners to make inquiries "touching all such persons" as were "jusitis, seminary priests, fugitives, or recusants," in the county of Warwick, sent to the Privy Council what they call their "second certificate," on the 25th Sept. 1592. It is divided into different heads, according to the respective hundreds, parishes, &c, and each page is signed by them. One of these diaries applies to Stratford-upon-Avon, and the return of names there is thus introduced:

"The names of all such Recusants as have bene heart fore presented for not coming monethly to the church, according to her Majesties laws, and yet are thought to forbear the church for debt, and for fear of process, or for some other worse faultes, or for age, sicknes, or impotency of bodie."

The names which are appended to this introduction are the following:

"Mr. John Wheeler, John Wheeler, his son, William Bainton,
Mr. John Shakesper, Richard Harrington, William Finlen,
Mr. Nicholas Barneshurste, George Bardolph, Thomas James, alias Giles," and opposite them, separated by a bracket, we read these words:

"It is sayd, that these last nine come not to church for fear of process of debt."

Here we find the name of "Mr. John Shakespeare" either as a recusant, or as "forbearing the Church," on account of the fear of process for debt, or on account of "age, sickness, or impotency of body," mentioned in the introduction to the document. The question is, to which cause we are to attribute his absence; and with regard to process for debt,

1. In a passage we have already extracted from Ben Jonson's "Discoveries," he mentions Shakespeare's "gentle expressions," but he is there perhaps referring to his "Comedy of Errors." We have to express our best thanks to Mr. Lemon for directing our attention to this manuscript, and for supplying us with an analysis of its contents.

we are to recollect that it could not be served on Sunday, so that apprehension of that kind need not have kept him away from church on the Sabbath. Neither was it likely that his son, who was at this date profitably employed in London as an actor and author, and who three years before was a sharer in the Blackfriars theatre, would have allowed his father to claim this distinction, so as to enable him to attend the usual place of divine worship. Therefore, although John Shakespeare was certainly in great pecuniary difficulties at the time his son William quitted Stratford, we altogether reject the notion that the son had permitted his father to live in comparative want, while he himself was possessed of more considerable means.

"Age, sickness, and impotency of body," may indeed have kept John Shakespeare from church, but upon this point we have no information beyond the fact, that if he were born, as Malone supposes, in 1530, he was at this date only sixty-two.

With regard to his religious opinions, it is certain that after the breach alderman of Stratford, on 4th July 1565, he must have taken the usual oath required from all protestants; but, according to the records of the borough, he was not administered to him until the 12th September following his election. This trifling circumstance perhaps hardly deserves notice, as it may have been usual to choose the alderman officers at one court, and to swear them in at the next. So far John Shakespeare may have conformed to the requirements of the law, but it is still possible that, he may not have adopted all the new protestant tenets, or that having adopted them, like various other conscientious men, he saw reason afterwards to return to the faith he had abandoned. We have no evidence on this point as regards him; but we have evidence, as regards a person of the name of Thomas Greene, (who, although it seems very unlikely, may have been the same man who was an actor in the company to which Shakespeare belonged, and who was a co-sharer in the Blackfriars Theatre, in 1595) who is described in the certificate of the commissioners as then of a dissenting persuasion. If it is possible that John Shakespeare had been "reconciled to the Romish religion." The memorandum is in these terms:

"It is hereby to be remembered that one Thomas Greene, of this parish, heretofore presented and indicted for a recusant, hath confessed to Mr. Robs. Burgoyn, one of the commissioners, that he then was reconciled to the Romish religion, while he was prisoner in Worcester gaol. This Greene is not everie day to be found."

On the same authority we learn that the wife of Thomas Greene was "a most wilful recusant," and although we are by no means warranted in forming even an opinion on the question, whether Mary Shakespeare conformed to the ancient faith, we have no doubt that she was a zealous adherent of the recusant party. The religious opinions of the commissioners, that some of her family continued Roman Catholics. In the document under consideration it is stated, that Mrs. Mary Arden and her servant John Browne had been presented to the commissioners as 1

1 By an account of rents received by Thomas Rogers, Chamberlain of Stratford, in 1566, it appears that "John Shakespeare" occupied a house in Bridge-street, at an annual rent of twelve shillings, nine shillings of which had been paid. Perhaps (as Malone thought) this house was that whence the father of the poet, having been bulifin and head-alderman, was usually styled Mr. John Shakespeare, as we have before remarked. However, it is a coincidence that the name of John Shakespeare immediately follows that of Henry Field, whose goods, Mr. John Shakespeare was subsequently employed to value: they were therefore in all probability neighbours.

2 "Shakespeare and his Times," vol. i. p. 8. Dr. Drake seems to be of the opinion that John Shakespeare may have refrained from attending the consistory court, which consisted of laymen, at the time that the ordinance, which by an act of Elizabeth, 1559, was confirmed, forbade attendance by any person of the name of Shakespeare. In the face of this ordinance, it is quite possible that John Shakespeare was duly examined, and, if in the case of others, it may not have been so in his. It is also possible that he was not on this occasion present, as the charge of having resided in London for a considerable time. It is the purpose of this paper to call attention to the evidence of the existence of Protestant sentiments on the part of the poet, as the very existence of such a question is a point of grave importance, and one which has been a matter of controversy for many years. It is the purpose of this paper to call attention to the evidence of the existence of Protestant sentiments on the part of the poet, as the very existence of such a question is a point of grave importance, and one which has been a matter of controversy for many years.

3 Of course, unless, as does not appear in this copy, John Shakespeare was the author of the document must have been subscribed by some person on his behalf.

4 Nearly all the "passages in his works, as an original or doctrinal character, are followed by the name of the author. Sometimes the name is given in full, son, K. C. H., in a very elegant volume, printed in 1831, for the benefit of the theatrical funds of our two great theatres. The object of this work was to verify, for the sake of the church, the name of the son, as the author of the works of Shakespeare. The whole is examined, and the name of the son is in no case found to be in the records, or any other publication. of a printer, named Richard Field, who, it has been said, was of Stratford, and might be the son of the Henry Field, or Field, whose goods Shakespeare purchased in 1599. It was to be recollected that at the time
"Venus and Adonis" was sent to the press, while it was printing, and when it was published, the plague prevailed in London to such an excess, that it was deemed expedient by the privy council to put a stop to all theatrical performances. Shakespeare seems to have Availed himself of the interval for the production of a different character to those which had been ordinarily seen from his pen. Until "Venus and Adonis" came out, the public at large could only have known him by the dramas he had written, or by those which, at an earlier date, he had altered, amended, and revived. The poem came from Field's press in 1593, and, as there is no evidence of the dedication, it seems probable that this was the first instance in which the author introduced his name, and was, therefore, his "signature," and himself. "Lucrece," however, was on every account, acceptable, and Shakespeare followed it up by inscribing to the same peer, but in a more mature and confident strain, his "Lurenee" in the succeeding year. He then "dedicated his love" to his juvenile patron, having "a warrant of his honourable disposition" for him, but it is certainly no just claim upon record of such generous bounty, on an occasion of the kind, as that of which we are now to speak: nevertheless, we have every reliance upon the authenticity of the anecdote, taking into account the unexampled merit of the poet, the known liberality of the nobleman, and the evidence upon which the story has been handed down. Rowe was the original narrator of it in print, and he doughtless laid it, with other information, from Betterton, who probably received it directly from Sir William Davenant, and communicated it to Rowe. If it cannot be asserted that Davenant was strictly contemporary with Shakespeare, he was contemporary with Shakespeare's contemporaries, and from them he must have obtained all the necessary information. Rowe gives the statement in these words:

"There is one instance so singular in the insignificance of

CHAPTER X.

The opening of the Globe theatre, on the Bankside, in 1595. Union of Shakespeare’s associates with the Lord Admiral’s players. The theatre at Newington Butts. Projected repair and enlargement of the Blackfriars theatre; opposition by the Privy Council; its results. Repair of the Blackfriars theatre. Shakespeare a resident in Southwark in 1596; proof that he was off from the papers at Dulwich College.

We have concluded, as we think that we may do very fairly, that the construction of the new theatre on the Bankside, subsequently known as the Globe, having been commenced soon after the signature of the bond of Burbage to Street, on 13th March, 1594, could not have been completed early in 1595, as we apprehend that it would be finished and ready for the reception of audiences early in the spring of 1595. It was a round wooden building, open to the sky, while the stage was protected from the weather by an overhanging roof of thatch. The number of persons it would contain we have no means of ascertaining, but it was certainly of larger dimensions than the Little Theatre, and the Swan, three other edifices of the same kind and used for the same purpose, in the immediate vicinity. The Blackfriars was a private theatre, as it was called, entirely covered in, and of smaller size; and from thence the company, after the Globe had been completed, was in the habit of removing in the spring, perhaps as some of there is any indication of the setting in of fine cheerful weather.

Before the building of the Globe, for the exclusive use of the theatrical servants of the Lord Chamberlain, there can be little doubt that they did not act all the year round at the Blackfriars; they appear to have performed sometimes at the Curtain in Shoreditch, and Richard Burbage, at the time of his death, still had shares in that playhouse. Whether they occupied it in common with any other association is not so clear; but we learn from Henslowe’s Diary, that in 1594, and perhaps at an earlier date, the company of which Shakespeare was a member had played at a theatre in Newington Butts, where the Lord Admiral’s servants also exhibited. At this period of our stage-history the performances usually began at three o’clock in the afternoon, for the citizens transacted their business and dined early, and many of them afterwards walked out into the fields for recreation, often visiting such theatres as were open purposely for their reception. Henslowe’s Diary shows that the Lord Chamberlain’s and the Lord Admiral’s servants had shared the profits from the first productions in what was called the Globe, in 1594, to the 15th November, 1596; and during that period various pieces were performed, which in their titles resemble plays which unquestionably came from Shakespeare’s pen. That none of these productions were by our great dramatist, it is, of course, impossible to affirm; but the strong probability seems to be, that they were older dramas, of which he, subsequently, more or less, availed himself. Among these was a “Hamlet,” acted on 11th of June, 1594: a “Taming of a Shrew,” acted on 11th June, 1594; an “Androcles,” acted on 12th June, 1594; a “Venetian Comedy,” acted on 12th Aug., 1594; a “Cesar and Pompey,” acted 5th Nov., 1594; a “Second Part of Cesar,” acted 26th June, 1595; a “Henry V.,” acted on 28th Nov., 1595; and a “Troy,” acted on 222 June, 1596. To these we might add a “Palamon and Arete,” acted on 17th Sept., 1594 if we suppose Shakespeare to have had any hand in writing

The Two Noble Kinsmen, and an “Antony and Valera,” (acted on 20th June, 1595) as it is called in the barbarous record, which may possibly have had some connexion with the action of the Globe, we think that Shakespeare did not aid in these representations, and if he was perhaps, too much engaged with the duties of authorship, at this date, to take a very busy or prominent part as an actor.

The fact that the Lord Chamberlain’s players acted at Newington until November, 1596, may appear to militate against our suggestion, that the Globe was finished and ready for performances in the spring of 1595; and it is very possible that the construction occupied more time than we have imagined. Malone was of opinion that the Globe might have been opened even in 1594; but we postpose that event until the following year, because we think the time too short, and, because, unless it were entirely completed early in 1594, it would not be required, insomuch as the company for which it was built seem to have acted at the Blackfriars in the winter. Our notion is, that, even after the Globe was finished, the Lord Chamberlain’s servants now and then performed at Newington in the summer, because audiences, having been accustomed to expect them there, assembled there in the pursuit of their amusement, and think it prudent to relinquish the emolument thus to be obtained. The performances at Newington, we presume, did not however interfere with the representations at the Globe. If any members of the company had continued to play at Newington after November 1596, we should, no doubt, have found some trace of it in Henslowe’s Diary.

Another reason for thinking that the Globe was opened in the spring of 1595 is, that very soon afterwards the sharers in that enterprise commenced the repair and enlargement of their theatre in the Blackfriars, which had been in constant use for twenty years. Of this proceeding we shall have occasion to say more presently.

We may feel assured that the important incident of the opening of a new theatre on the Bankside, larger than any that then stood in that or in other parts of the town, was celebrated by the production of a new play. Considering his station and duties in the company, and his popularity as a dramatist, we may be confident also that the new play was written by Shakespeare. In the imperfect state of our information, it would be vain to speculate which of his dramas was brought out on the occasion; but if the reader will refer to our several Introductions, he will see which of the plays according to such evidence as we are acquainted with, may appear in his view to have the best claim to the distinction. Many years ago we were strongly inclined to think it probable that the old and the new play of” Henry VI., the “Third Part of,” and the “wooden O” is most pointedly mentioned in that drama; so that at all events we are satisfied that it was acted in that theatre; there is also a nationality about the subject, and a popularity in the treatment of it, which would render it particularly appropriate; but on further reflection and information, we are unwillingly convinced that “Henry VI. Part 3” was not written until some years afterwards. We frankly own, therefore, that we are not in a condition to offer an opinion upon the question, and we are disposed, where we can, to refrain even from conjecture, when we have no ground on which to rest a speculation.

Allowing about fifteen months for the erection and completion of the Globe, we may believe that it was in full operation in the spring, summer, and autumn of 1595. On the approach of cold weather, the company would of course return to their winter quarters in the Blackfriars, which was erected, lighted from within, and comparatively warm. This theatre, as we have stated, this day had been in process of building for seven years, and early in 1596 the sharers directed their attention to the extensive repair, enlargement, and, possibly, entire re-construction of the building. The evidence that they entertained such a design is very decisive; and we may perhaps infer, that the prosperity of their new experiment at the Globe encouraged this outlay.

Thus, even to the death of calculating the year) Lord Hunsdon, who was Lord Chamberlain at the time, but who died about six months afterwards, wrote to Sir William More, expressing a wish to take a house of him in the Blackfriars, and adding that he had heard that Sir William More had parted with a portion of his own residence "to some that mean to make a play house in it."

The truth, no doubt, was, that in consequence of their increased popularity, owing, we may readily imagine, in a great degree to the success of the plays Shakespeare had produced, the company which had occupied the Blackfriars theatre found that their house was too small for their audiences, and wished to enlarge it; but it appears rather singular that Lord Hunsdon, the Lord Chamberlain, should not be at all aware of the intention of the players acting under the sanction of his name and office, and should only have heard that some persons "meant to make a play house of part of Sir William More's residence. We have not a copy of the whole of Lord Hunsdon's letter—only an abstract is extant—though we know that it was read in the council, and even know that there was any theatre at all in the Blackfriars.

Two documents in the State Paper Office, and a third preserved at Dulwich College, enable us to state distinctly what was the object of the actors at the Blackfriars in 1596. The first of these is a representation from certain inhabitants of the precinct in which the playhouse was situated, not only against the permission of the work of repair and enlargement, thus commenced, but against all further performances in the theatre.

"Of this paper it is not necessary for our purpose to say more; but the answer to it, on the part of the association of actors, is a very valuable rule, inasmuch as it gives the names of eight players who were the proprietors of the theatre or its appurtenances, that of Shakespeare being fifth in the list. It will not have been forgotten, that in 1595 no fewer than sixteen sharers were enumerated, and that then Shakespeare's name was the twelfth; but it did not by any means follow, that because there were sixteen sharers in the receipts, they were also proprietors of the building. The question, however, was brought to light, and in 1601 to the clarion of Thomas Pope, (from whose will we have already given an extract) Richard Burbage, John Hemings, (properly spelt Heninge) Augustine Phillips, William Shakespeare, William Kempe, (who withdrew from the company in 1601) William Slye, and Nicholas Tooley, were "owners" of the theatre as well as sharers in the profits arising out of the performances. The fact, however, seems to have been either not known to the sharers in which plays were represented, the proprietor of the freedom, was Richard Burbage, who in 1595 advertised it from his father, and transmitted it to his son. But as a body, the parties addressing the privy council (for the "petition" appears to have been sent thither) might in a certain sense call themselves owners of, as well as sharers in, the Blackfriars theatre. We insert the document in a note, observing merely, that like many others of a similar kind, it is without significance."

The date of the year when this petition of the actors was presented to the privy council is ascertained from that of the remonstrance of the inhabitants which had rendered it necessary, viz. 1596; but by another paper, among the theatrical relics of Alley and Henslowe at Dulwich College, we are enabled to show that both the remonstrance and the petition were drawn up very shortly after the formation of the (step-father to Alley's wife, and Alley's partner) seems always, very prudently, to have kept up a good understanding with the officers of the department of the revels; and on 3rd May, 1596, a person of the name of Vele, servant to Edmond Tyney, master of the revels, wrote to Henslowe, informing him (as of course he must take an interest in the result) that it had been decided by the privy council, that the Lord Chamberlain's servants should be allowed to complete their repairs, but not to enlarge their house in the Blackfriars; the note of Vele to Henslowe is on a small slip of paper, very clearly written; and as it is short, we here insert it:

"Mr. Henslowe. This is to enform you that my late Mr. Kempe, of the Blackfriars, had a rec. from the L. in the council order that the L. Chamberlaine, justly, but yet seems to be concern'd at the Blackfryars, according to their petition in that behalf, but leave shall be given unto them to make good the decaye of the saide house, but not to make the same larger than the present building, that belonging to the Revelers, this 3 of male, 1596."

"Mr. Vele."

Thus the whole transaction is made clear; the company, soon after the opening of the Globe, contemplated the repair and enlargement of the Blackfriars theatre: the inhabitants of the precinct objected not only to the repair and enlargement, but to any dramatic representations in that part of the town; the company petitioned to be allowed to carry out their design, as regards the restoration of the edifice and the increase of its size; but the privy council consented only that the building should be repaired. We are to conclude, therefore, that after the repairs were finished, the theatre would hold no more spectators than formerly; but that the dilapidations of time were substantially remended, we are sure from the fact, that the house continued long afterwards to be employed for that purpose for which it had been originally constructed."

What is of most importance in this proceeding, with reference to Shakespeare, is the circumstance upon which we have already remarked; that whereas his name, in 1595, stood twelfth in a list of sixteen sharers, in 1596 it was advanced to the fifth place in an enumeration of eight persons, who termed themselves owners and players of the private house, or theatre, in the precinct and liberty of the Black-friars." It is not difficult to suppose that the speculation at the Globe had been remarkably successful in its first season, and that the Lord Chamberlain's servants had thereby been induced to expend money upon the Blackfriars, in order to render it more commodious, as well as more capacious, and that, from calculation, that the receipts at the one house during the winter would be greater in consequence of their popularity at the other during the summer.

Where Shakespeare had resided from the time when he first came to London, until the period of which we are now speaking, we have no information; but in July, 1596, he was living in Southwark, perhaps to be close to the scene of action, and to render him familiar with the performances at the Globe, which were continued through at least seven months of the year. We know not whether he removed there shortly before the opening of the Globe, or whether from the first it had been his usual place of abode; but Malone tells us, "From a paper now before me, which formerly belonged to Edward Alleyn, the player, our poet appears to have lived in Southwark, near the Bear-garden, in 1596." He gives us no farther insight into the contents of the paper; but he probably referred to a small slip, borrowed, with other relics of a like kind, from Dulwich College, many of which were returned after his death. Among those returned seems to have been the paper in question, which is valuable only because it proves distinctly, that our great dramatist was an inhabitant of Southwark very soon after the Globe was in operation, although it by no means establishes that he had not been resident there long before.

We subjoin it exactly as it stands in the original: the handwriting is intelligent, the spelling peculiar, and it was evidently merely a hasty and imperfect memorandum.

"Inhabitants of Sowtherk have complained, this—of July, 1596.
Mr. Markis
Mr. Tuppin
Mr. Loughorth
Wilson the pyper
Mr. Barrett
Mr. Shakesper
Phillipes
Tunson
Mother Golden the bande
Nagges
Fillpott and no more, and soe well ended."

This is the whole of the fragment, for such it appears to be, and without further explanation, which we have not been able to find in any other document, in the depository where the above is preserved or elsewhere, it is impossible to understand more, than that Shakespeare and other inhabitants of Southwark had made some complaint in July, 1596, which, we may guess, was hostile to the wishes of the writer, who congratulated himself that the matter was so well at an end. Some of the parties named, including our great dramatist, continued resident in Southwark long afterwards, as we shall have occasion in its proper place to show. The writer seems to have been desirous of speaking derogatorily of all the persons he enumerates, but still he designates some as "Mr. Markis, Mr. Tuppin, Mr. Loughorth, Mr. Barrett, and Mr. Shakesper;" but "Phillipes, Tunson, Nagges, and Fillpott," he only mentions by their surnames, while he adds the words "the pyper" and "the bande after Wilsones and Mother Golden," probably to indicate that any complaint from the above-named was but little weight. All that we can certainly collect from the memorandum is what Malone gathered from it, that in July 1596, (Malone only gives the year, and adds "near the Bear-garden," which we do not find confirmed by the contents of the paper) in the middle of what we have considered the second season at the new theatre called the Globe, Shakespeare was an inhabitant of Southwark. That he had removed thither for the sake of convenience, and of being nearer to the spot, is not unlikely, but we have no evidence upon the point: as there is reason to believe, that the old Blackfriars, the principal notice of the Globe, lived in Holywell Street, Southwark, near the Curtain play-house, such an arrangement, as regards Shakespeare and the Globe, seems the more probable.

CHAPTER XI.

Chancer-y suit in 1597 by John Shakespeare and his wife to recover Asbyes: their bill; the answer of John Lambert; and the replication of John and Mary Shakespeare. Probable result of the suit. William Shakespeare's annual visit to Stratford. Death of his son Hamnet in 1596. General scarcity in England, and its effects at Stratford. The quantity of corn in the hands of William Shakespeare and his neighbors in February, 1598. Bon Jonson's "Every Man in his Humour," and probable instrumentality of Shakespeare in the original production of it on the stage. Henslowe's letter respecting the death of Gabriel Spencer.

We have already mentioned that in 1578 John Shakespeare and his wife, in order to relieve themselves from pecuniary embarrassment, mortgaged the small estate of the latter, called Asbys, at Wilmeceote in the parish of Aston Cantlow, to Edmund Lambert, for the sum of 40L. As it consisted of nearly sixty acres of land, with a dwelling-house, it must have been worth, perhaps, three times the sum advanced, and by the admission of all parties, the mortgagees were again to be put in possession, if they repaid the money borrowed on or before Michaelmas-day, 1680. According to the assertion of John and Mary Shakespeare, they tendered the 40L. on the day appointed, but it was refused, unless other moneys, which they owed to the mortgagees, were repaid at the same time. Edmund Lambert (perhaps the father of Edward Lambert, whom the eldest sister of Mary Shakespeare had married) died in 1596, in possession of Asbys, and from him it descended to his eldest son, John Lambert, who continued to withhold it in 1597 from those who claimed to be its rightful owners.

In order to recover the property, John and Mary Shakespeare filed a bill in chancery, on 24th Nov., 1597, against John Lambert of Barton-on-the-Heath, in which they alleged the fact of the tender and refusal of the 40L. by Edmund Lambert, who, wishing to keep the estate, no doubt coupled with the tender a condition not included in the deed, that the mortgage be paid in one year, a condition required by Edmund Lambert, was not denied by John and Mary Shakespeare, but they contended that they had done all the law required, to entitle them to the restoration of their estate of Asbies; in their bill they also set forth, that John Lambert was "of great wealth and ability, and well friends and allied amongst gentlemen and freeholders of the country, in the county of Warwick," while, on the other hand, they were "of small wealth, and very few friends and alliance in the said county." The answer of John Lambert merely denied that the 40L. had been tendered, in consequence of which he alleged that his father became "lawfully and absolutely seized of the premises, in his demesne as of fee." To this answer John and Mary Shakespeare put in a replication, reiterating the assertion of the tender and refusal of the 40L. on Michaelmas-day, 1680, and praying Lord Keeper Egerton (afterwards Baron Ellesmere) to decree in their favour accordingly.

1 "Inquiry into the Authenticity," &c., p. 215. He seems to have reserved particulars for his "Life of Shakespeare," which he did not live to complete, and which was imperfectly finished by Boswell.
2 "The Life of Gabriel Phillips, who belonged to the company of the Lord Chamberlain's servants, and whose name stands fourth in the royal license of May 1663. He died as nearly as possible two years afterwards, his will being dated on the 4th May, and proved on the 13th May, 1665. Among other bequests to his friends and "fellows," he gave "a thirty-shilling piece of gold" to William Shakespeare. He was a distinguished comic performer, and the earliest notice we have of him is prior to the death of Tachtson in 1585."
3 "It is just possible that by "Wilseone the pyper" the writer meant to point out "Jack Wilson," the singer of "Sigh no more, ladies," in "Much ado about Nothing," who, might be, and probably was, a player upon some wind instrument. See also the "Memoirs of Ed-ward Capell" (Sir John, Bart., on the subject of the learned society) p. 152, for a mea-
If any decree were pronounced, it is singular that no trace of it should have been preserved either in the records of the Court of Chancery, or among the papers of Lord Ellesmere; but such is the fact, and the inference is, that the suit was settled by the parties without proceeding to this extremity. We can have little doubt that the bill had been filed with the concurrence, and at the instance-employed in order to commence and prosecute the suit in Chancery: and unless we suppose them to have stated and re-stated a deliberate falsehood, respecting the tender of the 40s., it is very clear that they had equity on their side. We think, therefore, we may conclude that John Lambert, finding he had no chance of success, relinquished his claim to Asbyes, perhaps on the payment of the 40s. and of the sums which his father had required from John and Mary Shakespeare in 1580, and which in 1597 they did not dispute to have been due.

Among other matters set forth by John Lambert in his answer, is that the Shakespeare were anxious to regain some of their Asbyes, because the current lease was near its expiration, and they hoped to be able to obtain an improved rent. Supposing it to have been restored to their hands, the fact may be that they did not let it again, but cultivated it themselves; and we have at this period some new documentary evidence to produce, leading to the belief that our poet was a land-owner, or at all events a land-occupier, to some extent in the neighbourhood of Stratford-upon-Avon. Aubrey informs us, (and there is not only no reason for disbelieving his statement, but every ground for giving it credit) that William Shakespeare was "wont to go to his native county once a year." Without seeking for any evidence upon the question, nothing is more natural or probable, and when, therefore, he had acquired sufficient property, he might be anxious to settle his family comfortably and independently in Stratford. We must suppose that his father and mother were mainly dependent upon him, notwithstanding the recovery of the small estate of the latter at Willmote, and he may have employed his brother Cott, who was two or three years younger than himself, and perhaps accustomed to agricultural pursuits, to look after his farming concerns in the country, while he himself was absent superintending his highly profitable theatrical undertakings in London. In 1595, 1596, and 1597, our poet must have been in the receipt of a considerable and an increasing income; he was part proprietor of the Blackfriars and the Globe theatres, both excellent speculations; he was an actor, doubtless earning a good salary, independently of the proceeds of his shares; and he was the most popular and applauded dramatic poet of the day. In the summer he might find, or make, leisure to visit his native town, and we may be tolerably sure that he was there in August 1596, when he had the misfortune to lose his only child. Hamnet, born 2 linstar of June 1585: the boy completed his eleventh year in February, 1596, so that his death in August following must have been a very severe trial for his parents.1

Stow informs us, that in 1596 the price of provisions in England was so high, that the bushel of wheat was sold for six, seven, and eight shillings; the dearth continued, and increased through 1597, and in August of that year the price of the bushel of wheat had risen to thirteen shillings, fell to ten shillings, and rose again, in the words of the old faithful chronicler, to "the late greatest price." Malone found, and printed, a letter from Abraham Sturley, of Stratford-upon-Avon, dated 24th Jan., 1597-8, stating that his "neighbours groaned with the wants they felt through the dearness of corn," and that malcontents in great numbers had gone to Sir Thomas Lucy and Sir Palko Greville to complain of the maltsters for engrossing it. Connected with this dearth, the Shakespeare Society has been put in possession of a document of much value as regards the biography of our poet, although, at first sight, it may not appear to deserve notice, it is sure in the end to attract. It is thus headed:—

"The route of corn and malt, taken the 4th of February, 1597, in the 40th year of the reign of our most gracious Sovereign Lady, Queen Elizabeth, &c."

and in the margin opposite the title are the words "Stratford Burroughie, Warwickie." It was evidently prepared in order to ascertain how much corn and malt there really was in the town; and it is divided into two columns, one showing the "Townsmen's corn," and the other the "Strangers' malt."

The names of the Townsmen and Strangers (when known) are all given, with the wards in which they resided, so that we are enabled by this document, among other things, to prove in what part of Stratford the family of our great poet then dwelt: it was in Chapel-street Ward, and it appears that at the date of the account William Shakespeare had ten quarters of corn in his possession. As soon as he was on the spot, he would have this immediate neighbourhood, and in what order the names are given, we copy the account, as far as it relates to Chapel-street Ward, exactly as it stands—

Chapel Street Ward.

We shall have occasion hereafter again to refer to this document upon another point, but in the mean time we may remark that the name of John Shakespeare is not found in any part of it. This fact gives additional probability to the belief that the two old people, possibly with some of their children, were living in the house of their son William, for such may be the reason why we do not find John Shakespeare mentioned in the account as the owner of any corn. It may likewise in part explain how it happened that William Shakespeare was in possession of so large a quantity: in proportion to the number of his family, in time of scarcity, he would be naturally desirous to be well provided with this article of diet. It is very possible that, as a grower of grain, he might keep some in store for sale to those who were in want of it. Ten quarters does not seem much more than would be needed for his own consumption; but it affords some proof of his means and substance at this date, that only two persons in Chapel-street Ward had a larger quantity in their hands. We are led to infer from this fact that our great dramatist may have been a cultivator of land, and it is not unlikely that the wheat in his granary had been grown on his mother's estate of Asbyes, at Willmote, of which we know

We must now return to London and to theatrical affairs there, and in the first place advert to a passage in Rowe's Life of Shakespeare, relating to the real or supposed intercourse between our great dramatist and Ben Jonson. Rowe tells us that Shakespeare's acquaintance with Ben Jonson began with a remarkable piece of humanity and good nature. Mr. Jonson, who was at that time altogether unknown to the world, had offered one of his plays to the players, in order to have it acted; and the former, into whose hands it put, after having turned it carelessly and superfluously over, was just upon returning it to him with an ill-natured answer, that it would be of no service to their company, when Shakespeare, luckily, cast his eye upon it, and found something so well in it, as to engage him first to read it through, and afterwards to recommend Mr. Jonson and his writings to the public. This anecdote is entirely disbelieved by Mr. Gifford, and he retells his incredulity upon the supposition, that Ben Jonson's earliest known production, "Every Man in his Humour," was originally acted in 1597 at a different theatre, and he produces as evidence Henslowe's Diary, which, he states, proves that the comedy came out at the Rose.

Then, if it be admitted, that the play supposed, on the authority of Henslowe, to be Ben Jonson's comedy, is only called by Henslowe "Humours" or "Umers," as he ignorantly spells it. It is a mere speculation that this was Ben Jonson's play, for it may have been any other performance, by any other poet, in the title of which the word "Humours" occurred; and we have the indisputable and unequivocal testimony of Ben Jonson himself, in his own authorized edition of his works in 1616, that "Every Man in his Humour" was not acted until 1598; he was not satisfied with stating on the title-page, that it was "acted in the year 1598 by the then Lord Chamberlain's his servants," which might have been understood as relating to this play, or it (as relates in others in the same volume) he informs us at the end that 1598 was the year in which it was first acted:

"This comedy was first acted in the year 1598." Are we prepared to disbelieve Ben Jonson's positive assertion (a man of the highest and purest notions, as regarded truth and integrity) for the sake of a theory founded upon the bare assumption, that Henslowe by "Umers" not only meant Ben Jonson's "Every Man in his Humour," but could mean nothing else?

Had it been brought out originally by the Lord Admiral's players at the Rose, and acted with so much success that it was repeated eleven times, as Henslowe's Diary shows was the case, as Ben Jonson certainly represents it, why should we not have supposed that Ben Jonson should not have said so; and if he had afterwards withdrawn it on some pique, and carried it to the Lord Chamberlain's players, we can hardly conceive it possible that a man of Ben Jonson's temper and spirit would not have told us why in some other part of his works.

Mr. Gifford, passing over without notice the positive statement we have quoted, respecting the first acting of "Every Man in his Humour" by the Lord Chamberlain's servants in 1598, proceeds to argue that Ben Jonson could stand in need of no such assistance, as Shakespeare is said to have afforded him, because he was "as well known, and perhaps better," than Shakespeare himself. Surely, with all deference for Mr. Gifford's undisputed acuteness and general accuracy, we may doubt how Ben Jonson could be better, or even as well known as Shakespeare, when the latter had made the progress in his profession of actor, writer, and actor, and had written, at the lowest calculation, twelve dramas, while the former was only twenty-four years old, and had produced no known play but "Every Man in his Humour." It is also to be observed, that Henslowe had no pecuniary transactions with Ben Jonson prior to the month of July, 1598. In both points, therefore, we could scarcely have failed to find some memorandum of payments, anterior to the production of the comedy on the stage in May, 1597.

To this, that nothing could be more consistent with the amiable and generous character of Shakespeare, than that he should thus have interested himself in favour of a writer who was ten years his junior, and who gave such undoubted proofs of genius as are displayed in "Every Man in his Humour." Our great dramatist, established in public favour by such comedies as "The Merchant of Venice," and "A Midsummer Night's Dream," by such a tragedy as "Romeo and Juliet," and by such histories as "King John," "Richard III.," and "Richard II.," had become popular; and above all rivalry, and could well afford this act of "humanity and good-nature," as Rowe terms it, (though Mr. Gifford, quoting Rowe's words, accidentally omits the two last,) on behalf of a young, needy, and meritorious author. It is to be recollected also that Rowe, the original narrator of the incident, does not, as in several other cases, give us, if he at all doubted its correctness, but unhesitatingly and distinctly, as if it were a matter well known, and entirely believed, at the time he wrote.

Another circumstance may be noticed as an incidental confirmation of Rowe's statement, with which Mr. Gifford could not be reconciled. If the fact has only been re- discovered, in 1598 Ben Jonson, being then only twenty-four years old, had a quarrel with Gabriel Spencer, one of Henslowe's principal actors, in consequence of which they met, fought, and Spencer was killed. Henslowe, writing to Alleyne on the subject on the 26th September, uses these words:—"Since you were with me, I have lost one of my company, which hurth me greatly; that is Gabriel, for he is slain in Hoxton Fields by the hands of Benjamin Jonson, bricklayer." New, had Ben Jonson been at that date the author of the comedy called "Umers," and had it been his "Every Man in his Humour," which was acted by the Lord Admiral's players twelve times, it is not very likely that he "wished" him "out of" his "Umers," and then Ben Jonson was, and have spoken of him, not as one of the dramatists in his pay, and the author of a very successful comedy, but merely as "bricklayer;" he was writing also to his step-daughter's husband, the leading member of his company, to whom he would have been ready to give the fullest information regarding the disastrous affair. We only add this additional matter to show the improbability of the assumption, that Ben Jonson had anything to do with the comedy of "Umers," acted by Henslowe's company in May, 1597; and the probability of the position that, as Ben Jonson himself states, it was originally brought out in 1598.

2 Misses of the materials of the following note, which sets right so important error relating to Ben Jonson's mother, we are indebted to Mr. W. W. Cunningham.
3 Malone and Gifford (Ben Jonson's Works, vol. i. p. 5) both came to the conclusion that the Mrs. Margaret Jonson, mentioned in the register of the burial in the Fields as having been married, 17th November, 1573, to Mr. Thomas Fowler, was the mother of Ben Jonson, who then took a second husband. "There cannot be a reasonable doubt of this," they say; and it is, therefore, inexplicable otherwise. It appears that Ben Jonson's mother was living after the comedy of "Eastward Ho!" which gave offence to King James, (and which he defended in "Laius," p. 194.) Ben Jonson's Conversations, p. 20.) It is impossible that the Mrs. Margaret Fowler, who was married in 1573, was dead before 1598; and he was buried "in the Fields." It is said that he survived his three wives, Elizabeth, Margaret, and Elizabeth, who were buried in the same grave. The inscription which we have been in Bury's ed. of Steele's Survey, 1706, v. i. p. 69) informs us also, that Mr. Thomas Fowler was "born at Wiccan, in the county of Lancaster," and that he had been "married and buried" the 2d of July, 1573, "in the church of Mary, and for the first ten years of Queen Elizabeth. The date of his death is not stated in the inscription, but by the register of the church it appears that he died before 1598." If Mr. Thomas Fowler, who died before 1595, could not have been the mother of Ben Jonson, who was living about 1604; and if Ben Jonson's mother lived a second time, we have yet to ascertain who was his second husband.
4 The precise form in which the entry stands in Henslowe's so-called book of accounts is:—"Maye 1597. 11. It. at the comdy of Vmers.
5 Ben Jonson's Works, 8vo, 1616, vol. i. p. 10.
6 The Memoirs of Edward Alleyn. P. 267.) The author of that work has since seen reason to correct himself on this and several other points.

Restriction of dramatic performances in and near London in 1597. — Thomas Nash, and his play, "The Isle of Dogs;" imprisonment of Nash, and of some of the players of the Lord Admiral. — Favour shown to the companies of the Lord Chamberlain and of the Lord Admiral. — Printing of St. Bartholomew's Day. — Nash's works. — Life of Francis Meres, published by F. Meres in 1598. — Shakespeare authorized the printing of none of his plays, and never corrected the press. — Carelessness of dramatic authors in this respect.

In the summer of 1597 an event occurred which seems to have produced for a time a serious restriction upon dramatic performances in the capital. It has been supposed that circumstances of the year, had written a comedy which he called "The Isle of Dogs;" that he had partners in the undertaking there is no doubt; and he tells us, in his tract called "Leuten Stuff," printed in 1599, that the players, when it was acted by the Lord Admiral's servants, in the beginning of August, 1597, had taken most unwarrantable liberties with his piece, by making large additions to it, for which he was not only to have been responsible. The exact nature of the performance is not known, but it was certainly satirical, no doubt personal, and it must have had reference also to some of the political and public questions of the day. The representation of it was forbidden by authority, and Nash, with others, was arrested from "privy occasion," and sent to the Fleet prison. One of the offending actors had escaped for a time, and the privy council, not satisfied with what had already been done in the way of punishment, wrote from Greenwich on 15th August, 1597, to certain magistrates, requiring them strictly to examine all the parties in custody, with a view to the discovery of others not yet apprehended. This important official letter, which has hitherto been unmentioned, we have inserted in a note from the registers of the privy council of that date; and by it we learn, not only that Nash was the author of the "seditious and scandalous" comedy, but possibly himself an actor in it, and "the maker of part of the said play," especially pointed out, who was in custody, to receive some punishment; there were and mutinous behavior both deserve; these shall be, therefore, to require you to examine those of the places that are omitted, whose names are known to you, Mr. Topcliffe, what is because of the rest of theirs fellows that either had their parts in the deatings of that seditious matter, or that were actors of plays in the same, what copies they have given forth of the said plays, and to whatsoever such other parties as you shall think meete to be demanned of or impeached of, you shall, as occasion shall make, receive some answer hereafter. We pray you also to prepare such papers as were found in Nash his lodgings, which Perry, a messenger of the Chamber, shall deliver unto you, and to certify us the examinations you take. So be it. Greenwich, 15. Aug. 1597.

BIBLIOGRAPHY.
before mentioned, he maintains that he was the most innocent party of all those who were concerned in the transaction. It seems evident, that in 1598 there was a strong position on the part of some members of the Queen’s government to restrict dramatic performances, in and near London, to the servants of the Lord Chamberlain and of the Lord Admiral.

As far as we can judge, there was good reason for showing favour to the association with which Shakespeare was connected, because nothing has reached us to lead to the belief that the Lord Chamberlain’s servants had incurred any displeasure: if the Lord Admiral’s servants were to be permitted to continue their performances at the Rose, it would seem that the Lord Chamberlain’s had not been prevented the Lord Chamberlain’s servants from acting at the Globe. Accordingly, we hear of no interruption, at this date, of the performances at either of the theatres in the receipts of which Shakespeare participated.

To the year 1599 inclusive, only five of his plays had been printed, although he had then been connected with the stage for about twelve years, viz. “Romeo and Juliet,” “Richard II.” and “Richard III.” in 1597, and “Love’s La-bour’s Lost” and “Henry IV,” part i. in 1598; but, as we learn from indisputable contemporaneous authority, he had written seven others, besides what he had done in the way of alternating adaptations and adaptations of the earlist en-morbidities of Shakespeare’s dramas made its first appearance, in a work by Francis Meres entitled “Palladis Tamia, Wits Treasury.” In a division of this small but thick volume (consisting of 666 v0 pages, besides “The Table”), headed “A comparative discourse of our English Poets, with the Grecian, Latine and Italian Poets,” the author inserts a list which, though not in any respect as accurate as it stands in the original, because it has no where, that we recollect, been quoted quite correctly.

As Plautus and Seneca are accounted the best for Comedy and Tragedy; so Shakespeare: “Plautus is most excellent English is the most excellent in both kinds for the stage: for Comedy, witness his Gullion of Verona, his Errors, his Love labor lost, his Love labours wonne, his Midsummer nights dreams, & his Merchant of Venice; for Tragedy his Richard the 2, Richard the 3, Henry the 4, King John, Titus Andrionicus and his Romeo and Juliet.”

Thus we see that twelve comedies, histories, and tragedies (for we have specimens in each department) were known as Shakespeare’s in the Autumn of 1598, when the work of Mervs came from the press; it is a remarkable circumstance, evincing strikingly the manner in which the various companies of actors of that period were able to keep popular pieces from the press, that until Shakespeare had been a writer for the Lord Chamberlain’s servants ten or eleven years not a single play by him was published; and then four of his first printed plays were without his name written on them. If the time was hard because of the they considered that the omission would not affect the sale: one of them, “Romeo and Juliet,” was never printed in any early quarto as the work of Shakespeare, as will be seen from our exact reprint of the title-pages of the editions of 1597, 1599, and 1609, (see Introduc’t) The reprints of “Richard the 2,” “Richard the 3,” “Henry the 4,” and “Henry the 5,” as before observed, have Shakespeare’s name on the title pages, and they were issued, perhaps, after Mervs had distinctly assigned those “histories” to him.

It is our conviction, after the most minute and patient examination of, we believe, every old impression, that Shakespeare in no instance authorized the publication of his plays: we do not consider even “Hamlet” an exception, even though the edition of 1604 was probably intended, by some parties connected with the theatre, to supersede the garbled and fraudulent edition of 1603: Shakespeare, in our opinion, had nothing to do with the one or with the other. He allowed some mangled and deformed copies of some of his most celebrated plays to remain in the public years, and did not think it worth his while to expose the fraud, which remained, in several cases, undetected, as far as the great body of the public was concerned, until the appearance of the folio of 1623. Our great dramatist’s indifference upon this point seems to have been shared by many, and by most, of his own companions. If the trend and its repetition in 1609, will be aware that it is full of the Plautus, Terence, Newus. Sext. Turpilius, Lucius Iunius, and
M. Domitianus, and that the volume containing them in the library of Lord Francis Egerton, is known: it is necessary to bear in mind, that the impression of “Romeo and Juliet” in 1597 was made from a different quarto, which is in the state in which the tragedy came from the hand of its author.

The following passages, in the same division of the work of Mervs, contain mention of the name or works of Shakespeare.

1. As the soule of Euphorbus was thought to live in Pythagoras, as the sweate of salt in soil of golden in melting by day, and being by Shakespear: witness his Venus and Adonis, his Lucrece, his sugred sonnets among his private friends &c., fol. 251.

2. As Epinio Stoel said, the Muses would speak with Plautus tongue, if they would speak Latin; so I say the Muses would speak with Shakespeare’s fine-fled phrase, if they would speak English.” for English.

3. As And R.O. saith, of his Exegi monumentum are perennis, Restat; put pyramidum altius; Quod non imber edax; Non Aquila integritate, sed honeste et integre temponum; so I say of Sir Philip Sidney, Spencer, Danie, Dryonds, Shakespear, and Warrers works.” fol. 262.

4. As Calliius among the beestes, and Horace and Catullus among the Latines, are the best lyrick poets; so in this faculty the best among our poets is Spenser (who excellent in all) and Drayton, Shakespeare, Benet.” fol. 292.

5. As these tragick poets flourished in Greece, Aschylus, Euripide, Aristophanes, Sophocles, Seneca, Tragedies of Plautus, Atheniensis, Apollodorus Tarsenses, Neonhscus Pythagor, Thucydes, Aetas, and Timon Apollonii; and these among the Latines, Ander, Terence, Tullus, Senecas, and those among our best for tragédie; the Lord Bucckhun, Doctor Leg of Cambridge,
Dr. Edes of Oxford, Master Edward Ferris, the Author of the Mirreres, John Dryton, Mr. Chapman, Mr. Dccker, and Benjamin Johnson.” fol. 3-33.

6. As the best poet for comedy among the Greeks are these: Menander, Aristophanes, Esopiis Atheniensis Alexis, Terius, Niceratus, Ammisias Atheniensis, Anasaxrides Rhodos, Aristonymus, Archip-hus Atheniensis, and Callias Atheniensis; and among the Latines, Plantus, Terence, Newus, Sext. Turpilius, Lucius Iunius, and
M. Domitianus, and that the volume containing them in the library of Lord Francis Egerton, is known: it is necessary to bear in mind, that the impression of “Romeo and Juliet”
in 1597 was made from a different quarto, which is in the state in which the tragedy came from the hand of its author.

It was entered for publication on the Stationers’ Registers in September, 1598. Mervs must have written something in verse which repeatedly referred to Shakespeare, and to his friend Fitzgeoffry in his Apologie, as a poet and theologian: he was certainly well acquainted with the writings of all his poets, and his character is so deeply versed in his life and works, that it is in company with Spenser, Daniel, Drayton, Ben Jonson, Sylvester, Chapman, &c.” fol. 233.
very grossest blunders, which the commonest corrector of the press, much less the author, if he had seen the sheets, could not have allowed to pass. Nearly all plays of that time were in that state, and hastily printed, but Heywood's "Rape of Lucrece," as it originally came from the press with the author's "imprimatur," is, we think, the worst specimen of typography that ever met our observation 1.

Returning to the important list of twelve plays furnished by Meres, we may add, that although he does not mention them, there can be no doubt that the three parts of "Henry VI." had been repeatedly acted before 1598: we may possibly infer, that they were not inserted because they were then well known not to be the sole work of Shakespeare. By "Henry IV." it is most probable that Meres intended both parts of that "history." "Love's Labour's Won" has been supposed, since the time of Dr. Farmer, to be "All's Well That Ends Well," which we think is mistaken. Our notion is (see Introduction) that the original name given to the play was "Love's Labour's Won"; and that, when it was revived with additions and alterations, in 1605 or 1608, it received also a new appellation.

In connection with the question regarding the interest taken by Shakespeare in the publication of his works, we may mention the impudent fraud practised in the year 1597 upon the appearance of the list furnished by Meres. In 1599 came out a collection of short miscellaneous poems, under the title of "The Passionate Pilgrim." They were all of them imputed, by W. Jaggard, the printer, or by W. Leake the bookseller, to Shakespeare, although some of them were afterwards assigned to the Davenant, in the Introduction to our reprint of this little work we have stated all the known particulars regarding it; but Shakespeare, as far as appears from any evidence that has descended to us, took no notice of the trick played upon him: possibly he never heard of it, or if he heard of it, left it to its own detection, not thinking it worth while to interfere 2. It seems to us very probable that Shakespeare could have no doubt but the public would have been as ready to believe in this new oration of the author's to the applause of 1599, and the manner in which a scheming printer and stationer endeavored to take advantage of that popularity.

Yet it is singular, if we rely upon several coeval authorities, how little our great dramatist was about this period known and admired for his plays. Richard Burbage published his "Eecution of Lady Jane," in 1598, (the year in which the list of twelve of Shakespeare's plays was printed by Meres) and from a copy of verses entitled "Remembrance of some English Poets," we quote the following notice of Shakespeare:

"And Shakespeare thou, whose honey-flowing vein,
Pleasing the world, thy praises doth contain,
Whose Venus, and whose Lucrece, sweet and chaste,
Thy name in fame's immortal book hath place;
We live ever out, at least in fame's livetide;
Well may the body die, but fame die never."

Here Shakespeare's popularity, as "pleasing the world," is noticed; but the proofs of it are not derived from the stage, where his dramas were in daily performance before crowded audiences, but from the success of his "Venus and Adonis" and "Lucrece," which had gone through various editions. Precisely to the same effect, but a still stronger instance, we may refer to a play in which both Burbage and Kempe are introduced as characters, the one of whom had obtained such celebrity in the tragic, and the other in the comic parts in Shakespeare's dramas: we allude to "The Return from Parnassus," which was indisputably acted before the death of Queen Elizabeth. In a scene where two young students are discussing the merits of particular poets, one of them speaks thus of Shakespeare:

"Who loves Adonis love or Lucrece rape,
His sweeter verse contains heart-robbing life;"
"Could but a graver subject him content, Without love's foolish, lazy languishment."

Not the most distant allusion is made to any of his dramatic productions, although the poet criticised by the young students immediately before Shakespeare was JonJon, who was also the first of the far-far away, or of a bricklayer, in England," but "a slow inventor." Hence we might be led to imagine that, even down to as late a period as the commencement of the seventeenth century, the reputation of Shakespeare depended rather upon his poems than upon his plays; almost as if productions for the stage were not looked upon, at that date, as part of the recognized literature of the country.

CHAPTER XIII.

New Place, or, "the great house," in Stratford, bought by Shakespeare in 1597. Removal of the Lord Admiral's players from the Bankside to the Fortune theatre, followed by the lease of the Theatre, by Richard Burbage and the Lord Admiral's company. Order in 1600 confining the acting of plays to the Globe and Fortune; the influence of the two associations occupying those theatres. Disobedience of various companies to the order of 1600. Plays by Shakespeare published in 1600. The "First Part of the Life of Sir John Oldcastle," printed in 1600, falsely imputed to Shakespeare, and cancelling of the title-page.

It will have been observed, that in the document we have produced, relating to the quantity of corn and malt in Stratford, it is stated that William Shakespeare's residence was in that division of the borough called Chapel-street ward. This is an important circumstance, because we think it may be said to settle decisively the disputed question, whether our great dramatist purchased what was known as "the great house," or "New Place," before, in, or after 1597. It was situated in Chapel-street ward, close to the chapel of the Holy Trinity. We are now certain that he had a house in the ward in February, 1597–8, and that he had ten quarters of corn there; and we need not doubt that it was the house which he built in 1599. He lived in the reign of Henry VII.: the Clunyutos subsequently sold it to a person of the name of Botte3, and he to Hercules Underhill, who disposed of it to Shakespeare. We therefore find him, in the beginning of 1598, occupying one of the best houses, in one of the best parts of Stratford. He who had quitted his native town about twelve years before, poor and comparatively friendless, was able by the profits of his own exertions, and the exercise of his own talents, to return to it, and to establish his family in more comfort and opulence than, as far as is known, they had ever before enjoyed.

3 Botte probably lived in it in 1594, when he contributed 4s. to the poor who were afflicted with the plague: this was the highest amount subscribed, the bailiff only giving 3s. 4d., and the head alderman 2s. 6d.

4 That Shakespeare was considered a man who was in a condition to lose considerable sums of money, is proved by the evidence of Richard Quainey, (father to Thomas Quainey, who subsequently married Shakespeare's youngest daughter Judith,) who then lived and placed him in a house on the west side of the lych-gate of our present church. But in November 1598, they had failed to return the house. We wish to call the attention of our present money, and in terms which do not indicate any doubt that our post would be able to make the advance. This application is contained in a letter which must have been sent by hand, as it unluckily contains no direction: it is the only letter yet discovered addressed to Shake- speare, and it was first printed by Roswell from Malone's papers, vol. iv, p. 225.

5 "Loving Corinian, I am bold of you,\ as of a friend, craving your help with xxxv, upon Mr. Bushell & my securities, or Mr. Myttons with me.\ Mr. Roswell not come to London as yeate, & I have
We consider the point that Shakespeare had become owner of New Place in or before 1597 as completely made out, as, at such a distance of time, and with such imperfect information upon nearly all matters of his history could be at all expected.1

We apprehend likewise, as we have already remarked (p. xlvi), that all things of it that we know of his arms in 1596, obtained as we believe by William Shakespeare, had reference to the permanent and substantial settlement of his family in Stratford, and to the purchase of a residence there consistent with the altered circumstances of that family—altered by its increased wealth and consequence, owing to the success of this great drama, and to the marriage of his eldest child. The removal of the Lord Admiral's players, under Henslowe and Alleyne, from the Rose theatre on the Bankside, to the new house called the Fortune, in Golding-lane, Cripplegate, soon after the date to which we are now referring, may lead to the opinion that that company did not find itself equal to sustain the rivalry with the Lord Chamberlain's servants, under Shakespeare, in the permanent and substantial settled theatre at the Globe. That theatre was opened, as we have adduced reasons to believe, in the spring of 1597: the Rose was a considerably older building, and the necessity for repairing it might enter into the calculation, when Henslowe and Alleyne thought of trying the experiment in a different part of the metropolis, and on the Middlesex High-road. We may imagine the trees being at this date merely wooden structures, and much frequented, they would soon fall into decaying, especially in a marshy situation like that of the Bankside: so damp was the soil in the neighbourhood, that the Globe was surrounded by a moat to keep it dry; and, although we do not find the first any where stated, it is most likely that the Rose was similarly drained. The Rose was, in its first instance, and as far back as the reign of Edward VI., a house of entertainment with that sign, and it was converted into a theatre by Henslowe and a grocer of the name of Cholmley about the year 1584; but it seems to have early required considerable reparations, and they might be again necessary prior to the especial case. You shall send me much in helping me out of all the debts I owe in London; I thank you, and make much to my ransom which would not be indebted. I am now towards the Cowrie, in hope 2 unknown for the dispatch of my Business. You shall receive the credit my money by me, that the business of a noble but provident selfe soe as I hope & you shall not need in fear; but with all hasty thankfulness I will holde my tymne & content you, and hope it shall be as quickly and as well as it can be in your selves. My tyne bids me hasten to a ende, & soe I committ thys [to] yours care & hope of yowr helpe. I feare I shall not be backe this night from this part of the world, but I endeavour, the Lord will have us all, and soe. From the Bell in Carter Lane, the 25 October, 1596.

You and all kindesses. REG. QUEEN.

"To my Loving friend & contrynman Mr Ws.
Shakespeare."

The deficiency as regards the direction of the letter, lamented by Malone, is not of so much importance, because we have proved that Shakespeare was resident in Southwark in 1598 and he probably was so in 1596, because the reasons which we have supposed, induced him to take up his abode there would still be in operation, in as much force as ever.

1 In the garden of this house it is believed that Shakespeare planted a mulberry tree, about the year 1598: such is the tradition, and we are disposed to think that it is founded in truth. In 1598, King James was anxious to introduce the mulberry (which had been imported about half a century earlier) into general cultivation, and the remainder of this letter is written upon the subject to most of the justices of peace and deputy lieutenants in the kingdom: the plants were sold by the State at the price of 4s. each. The mulberry was particularly valued as a public use for the planting of mulberry trees "near the palace of Westminster." The mulberry tree, said to have been planted by Shakespeare, was moved in 1768 from the grounds of the Palace of Westminster to the pleasure ground of the Abbey of Westminster, where it still remains. Place remained in possession of Shakespeare's successors until the Restoration; it was then repossessed by the Clapton family: about 1705, was sold by the Countess of Clapton, and the name of the tree, which was known as "the mulberry tree of Sir John Clapton," was changed to the mulberry tree of the name of Ostrull, who, on some offence taken at the authorities of Westminster, was ordered there to be punished, and paid it down, and cut down the mulberry tree. According to a letter in the Annual Register of 1700, the wood was bought by a silversmith, who offered a reward for the destruction of it for the curious. In our time we have seen as many relics, said to have been formed from this one mulberry tree, as could hardly have been furnished by all the mulberry trees in the county of Warwick.

2 We may be disposed to assign the following lines to about this period: a little earlier; they relate to some theatrical wager in which Alleyne, of the Lord Admiral's players, was, for a part not named, to be matched against Kempe, of the Lord Chamberlain's servants. By the terms of the wager one play, there can be little doubt that some work by Shakespeare was intended; and we know from Heywood's "Hierarchie of the Blessed Anges," 1583, that Shakespeare is named as the Roman writer, the Irae deum, the Irae deum, the Irae deum... 3 The document is preserved at Dulwich, and was first printed in the "Memoirs of Edward Alleyn," p. 12.

"If noes was nowe wyne an other wager For thine frende, and fellow stager, Tarlton himselfe thou dost excel, And so doth the better, if thou wilt. And now shall Kempe orecome as well. The moneys downe, the place the Hope, Thuys shal hyde his selfe, and the Pope. Fear not, the victorie is thine; Thou still as maeshee ned shal shyne, If Roscius Richard foames and fumes, The Globe shall have but emptie roomes, If thou dost act; and Willies newe playe Shall passe for some curiouse playe. Consent them, Nedde; doe us this grace; Thou cannot fail in ane case; For in thee, comminge thy playes, All sides shall brave Ned Allin sayes."
to certain magnates of Middlesex requiring them to put a stop to the performance of a play at the Curtain, in which were introduced "soberly, melancholy, and grave, but not alive," but saying nothing about the closing of the house, although it was open in defiance of the imperative command of the preceding year. We know also upon other testimony, that not only the Curtain, but theatres on the Banksides, besides the Globe, (where performances were allowed) were then in occasional use. It is barely possible, therefore, that the order of the 22d June, 1600, was never strictly enforced, and one of the most remarkable circumstances of the times is, the little attention, as regards theatres, that appears to have been paid to the absolute authority of the court. It seems exactly as if restrictive measures had been adopted in order to satisfy the importunity of particular individuals; but there was no disposition on the part of the court to carry them into execution. Such was probably the fact; for a year and a half after the order of the 22d June had been issued it was renewed, but, as far as we can learn, with just as little effect as before.

Besides the second edition of "Romeo and Juliet" in 1599 (which was most likely printed from a playhouse manuscript, being very different from the mutilated and manufactured copy of 1597) five plays by our great dramatist found their way to the press in 1600, viz. "Titus Andronicus," (which as we have before remarked had probably been published in 1594) the Merchant of Venice, A Midsummer Night's Dream, Henry IV., part ii, and All's Well that Ends Well. Only the latter was mentioned by Meres in 1598; and as to the periods when we may suppose the others to have been written, we must refer the reader to our several Introductions, where we have given the existing information upon the subject. "The Chronicle History of Henry V." also came out in the same year, but as a revised edition of Shakespeare upon the title-page, and it is, if possible, a more imperfect and garbled representation of the play, as it proceeded from the author's pen, than the "Romeo and Juliet" of 1597. Whether any of the managers of theatres at this date might not, sometimes be concerned in selling impressions of dramas, we have no sufficient means of deciding; but we do not believe it, and we are satisfied that dramatic authors in general were content with disposing of their plays to the several companies, and looked for no emolument to be derived from publication. We are not without something like proof that actors now and then sold their parts in plays to book-sellers, and thus, by the combination of them, and other assistance, editions of popular plays were surreptitiously printed.

We ought not to pass over without notice a circumstance which happened in 1600, and is connected with the question of the authorized or unauthorized publication of Shakespeare's plays. In that year a quarto impression of a play, called "The first part of the true and honourable History of the Life of Sir John Oldcastle, the good Lord Cobham," came out on the title-page of which the name of William Shakespeare appeared at length. We find by Henley's Diary that this disclaimer of the authorship of four poets, Anthony Munday, Michael Drayton, Robert Wilson and Richard Hathway; and to attribute it to Shakespeare was evidently a mere trick by the bookseller, [Thomas] [Havier], in the hope that it would be bought as his work. Malone remarked upon this fraud, but he was not aware, when he wrote, that it had been detected and corrected at the time, for since his day more than one copy of the "First Part, etc." of Sir John Oldcastle has come to light, upon the title-page of which no name is to be found, the bookseller apparently having been compelled to cancel the leaf containing it. From the indifference Shakespeare seems uniformly to have been displayed on matters of the kind, we may, possibly, conclude that the impression was made at the instance of one of the four poets who were the real authors of the play; but we have no means of speaking decisively upon the point, and the step may have been in some way connected with the objection taken by living members of the Oldcastle family to the name, which had been assigned by Shakespeare in the first instance to Falstaff.

CHAPTER XIV.

For though he beare inclined bee in plaiaster, When he was free, he was this townes school-master. And that well you see, is not that Arbernes, The Nymph of Sicile: Noe, men maye courau A Health of the plump Lyman, nobest grapes, The second spring I keep, as did that dragon Hesperian apples. And nowe, sir, a plague on This your people town, if you not welcome me! But whohe can doubt of this, when, loe! A well come is newe into the gate? I would say more, But words now falling, dare not, least I mazz.

The eight lines in Nichol's "Progresses of James I." are from Drummond's Poems, and there can be little doubt that the whole passage was from his pen.

1 It was a charge against Robert Greene, that, driven by the pressure of necessity, he had on one occasion raised money by making "a double sale" of his play called "Edward Parens," to the players and afterwards to the press. Such may have been the fact, but it was unquestionably an exception to the ordinary rule.

2 The name of the "True" "Henry VI" was the "Four Parts of Henry the Sixth," the "First Part," to "Fourth Part." It is curious how in the whole of the life of Shakespeare, without exception, how in the whole of his plays, without exception.
1607, and Chalmers, weighing the evidence in favour of one date and of the other, thought neither correct, and fixed upon 1613, an opinion in which Dr. Drake fully concurred.

The truth is, that we have irrefragable evidence, from an eye-witness, of its existence on 2nd February, 1607, when it was played at the Reader's Feast in the Middle Temple.
This eye-witness, the husband of the name of Manning-ham, left a Diary behind him, which has been preserved in the British Museum; but as we have inserted his account of the plot in our introduction to the comedy, (Vol.
iii. p. 317) no more is required here, than a mere mention of the circumstance. However, in another part of the same manuscript, he gives an anecdote of Shakespeare and Burgage, which has been supposed to depend upon the authority of Nicholas Tooley, but on looking at the original record again, we doubt whether it came from any such source. A "Mr. Towse is repeatedly introduced as a person from whom Manningham derived information, and that name, though blotted, seems to be placed at the end of the paragraph, certainly without the addition of any Christian name. This circumstance may make some difference as regards the authenticity of the story, because we know not who Mr. Towse might be, while we are sure that Nicholas Tooley was a fellow-actor in the same company as both the individuals to whom the story relieves. At the same time it may be supposed that the "English players," originating, as was often the case, in some older joke, and applied to Shakespeare and Burbage, because their Christian names happened to be William and Richard.

Elizabeth, from the commencement of her reign, seems to have extended her personal patronage, as well as her public countenance, to the drama; and scarcely a Christmas even has passed since she ascended the throne, that she did not invite some one of the select minstrels to entertain her before the festivity, often of long duration. In the forty-five years she occupied the throne, when there were not dramatic entertainments, either at Whitehall, Greenwich, North-such, Richmond, or Windsor. The latest visit she paid to any of her nobility in the country was to the Lord Keeper, Sir Thomas Egerton, at Harefield, only nine or ten months before her death, on a visit of inspection, in the very beginning of August, 1602, that "Othello" (having been got up for her amusement, and the Lord Chamberlain's players brought down to the Lord Keeper's seat in Hart-fordshire for the purpose) was represented before her.
In this case, as in the preceding one respecting "Twelfth Night," all that we positively learn is that such drama was performed, and we are left to infer that it was a new play from other circumstances, as well as from the fact that it was customary on such festivities to exhibit some drama that was a novelty, and therefore attracting public attention.
Hence we are led to believe, that "Twelfth Night" (not printed until it formed part of the folio of 1623) was written at the end of 1600, or in the beginning of 1601; and that "Othello" (first published in 4to, 1622,) came from the author's pen about a year afterwards.

In the meantime, without detracting the performance of "Othello" at Harefield, the company by which it was represented is called "Burbages Players," that designation arising out of the fact, that he was looked upon as the leader of the association; he was certainly its most celebrated actor, and we find from other sources that he was the representative of "the Moor of Venice." Whether Shakespeare had any and what part in the tragedy, either then or upon other occasions, is not known; but we do not think any argument, one way or the other, is to be drawn from the fact that the company, when at Harefield, does not seem to have been under his immediate government.
Whether he was or was not one of the "players in" "Othello" in and after 1603, we have no little doubt that as an actor, and moreover as one "excellent in his quality," he must have been often seen and applauded by Elizabeth.
Chettle informs us after her death, in a passage already quoted, that she had "opened her royal car to his lays;"
but this was obviously in his capacity of dramatist, and we have no direct evidence to establish that Shakespeare had ever performed at Court.

James I, reached Theobalds, in his journey from Edinburgh to London, on the 7th May, 1603. Before he quitted his own capital he had had various opportunities of witnessing the performances of English actors; and it is an interesting, but at the same time a difficult question, whether Shakespeare had ever appeared before him, or, in other words, whether our great dramatist had ever visited Scotland? We have certainly no affirmative testimony upon

The MS. from which the above lines are copied seems, at least in one place, defective, but might be cured by the addition of the words,

A ballad was published on the death of Elizabeth, in the commemoration of which Shakespeare, Ben Jonson, and Thomas Greene, is supposed to have written it. Of "A Poetick Epistle to the Queen," 4to, 1663, we are called upon to contribute some verses in honour of the late Queen:

"You poets all, brave Shakespeare, Johnson, Greene, Bestow your time to write for England's Queen alive. Exepting for the fair lady, the production is utterly contemptible, and must have been the work of some of the "goblins and underlives" of poetry, who, according to a poem in H. Chevrel's "English Poets," had put forth, upon the occasion " rude rhymes, and metres reasonless."
the point, beyond what may be derived from some passages in "Macbeth," descriptive of particular localities, with which passages our readers must be familiar: there is, however, ample room for conjecture; and although, on some points, we may be compelled to hit upon a conclusion beyond the Tweed, it is indisputable that the company to which he belonged, or a part of it, had performed in Edinburgh and Aberdeen, and doubtless in some intermediate places. We will briefly state the existing proofs of this fact.

The year 1599 has been commonly supposed the earliest date of London performances by Shakespeare's company. It was in that year, but it can be shown beyond contradiction that "her Majesty's players," meaning those of Queen Elizabeth, were in Edinburgh ten years earlier. In 1589, Ashby, the ambassador extraordinary from England to James VI. of Scotland, thus writes to Lord Burghley, under date of the 23d October—":

"My Lord Bothwell begins to show himself willing and ready to do her Majesty any service, and desires her to be thought of as he shall deserve: he sheweth great kindness to our nation, using her Majesty's Players and Canoniers with all courteously."

In 1589, the date of Ashby's dispatch, Shakespeare had quitted Stratford about three years, and the question is, what company was intended to be designated as "her Majesty's players." It is an admitted fact, that in 1588 the Queen's Company at Court, commanded by Sir Henry Chicheley, had engaged some professional servants of some of her nobility, and they were afterwards called "her Majesty's players." and we also know, that in 1590 the Queen had two companies acting under her name; in the autumn of the preceding year, it is likely that one of these associations had been sent to the Scottish capital for the amusement of the young king; and the company formed in 1588 may have been divided into two bodies for this express purpose. Sir John Sinclair, in his "Statistical Account of Scotland," established that a body of comedians was in Perth in June, 1589; and although we are without evidence that they were English players, we may fairly enough assume that they were the same company spoken of by Ashby, as having been used courteously by Lord Bothwell in the October following. We have no means of ascertaining the names of any of the players, nor indeed, excepting the leaders Lancham and Dutton, can we state who were the members of the Queen's two companies in 1590. Shakespeare might be one of them; but if he were, he might not belong to that division of the company which was dispatched to Scotland.

It is not at all improbable that English actors, having found their way north of the Tweed in 1589, would speedily repeat their visit; but the next we hear of them is not until after a long interval, in the autumn of 1599. The public records of Scotland show that in October, 1599, (exactly the same season as that in which, ten years earlier, they are spoken of by Ashby) 43d, 64, 8d. were delivered to "his Highness' self," to be given to "the English comedians" in the next month they were paid 41l. 12s. at various times. In December they received no less than 33l. 6s. 8d.; in April, 1600, 10s.; and in December, 1601, the royal bounty amounted to 400l. 4

The fact, that English players were in Scotland from October, 1599, to December, 1601, a period of more than two years; but still we are without a particle of proof that Shakespeare was one of the association. We cannot, however, entertain a doubt that Laurence Fletcher, (whose name, we shall see presently, stands first in the patent granted by King James on his arrival in London) was the leader of the association which performed in Edinburgh and elsewhere, because it appears from the registers of the town council of Aberdeen, that on the 9th October, 1601, the English players received 22 marks as a gratuity, and that one of them had performed in the Freedom of the city was confirmed upon Laurence Fletcher, who is especially styled "comedian to his Majesty." The company had arrived in Aberdeen, and had been received by the public authorities, under the sanction of a special letter from James VI. and, although they were in fact the players of the Queen of England, they might on this account be deemed and treated as the players of the King of Scotland.

Our chief reason for thinking it unlikely that Shakespeare would have accompanied his fellows to Scotland, at all events between October, 1599, and December, 1601, is, that, as the principal writer for the company to which he was attached, he could not well have been spared, and because we have good ground for believing that about that period he must have been unusually busy in the composition of plays. No fewer than five dramas seem, as far as evidence, positive or conjectural, can be obtained, to belong to the interval between 1598 and 1602; and the proof appears to us tolerably conclusive, that "Henry V." and "Twelfth Night," were written between 1599, 1600, and 1601. Besides, as far as we are able to decide such a point, the company to which our great dramatist belonged continued to perform in London; for although a detachment under Laurence Fletcher may have been sent to Scotland, the main body of the association called the Lord Chamberlain's players exhibited at court at the usual seasons in 1599, 1600, and 1601. If Shakespeare visited Scotland at all, we think it must have been at an earlier period, and there was undoubtedly ample time between the years 1589 and 1599 for him to have done so. Nevertheless, we have no tides that any English actors were in any part of Scotland during those ten years.

CHAPTER XV.

Before he even set foot in London, James I. thought it necessary to put a stop to dramatic performances on Sunday. This fact has never been mentioned, because the proclamation he issued at Thetford on 7th May, containing the paragraph for this purpose, has only recently come to light. There had been a long pending struggle between the Puritans and the players upon this point, and each party seemed by turns to gain the victory; for various orders were, from time to time, issued from authority, forbidding exhibitions of the kind on the Sabbath, and those orders had been uniformly more or less contravened. We may suppose, that strong remonstrances having been made to the King by some of those who attended him from Scotland, a clause with this special object was appended to a proclamation directed against monopolies and legal extortions. The mere circumstance of the company in which this paragraph, 4 For these particulars of payments, and some other points connected with them, we are indebted to Mr. Lavington of Edinburgh, who has made extensive and valuable collections for a history of the Stage in Scotland.

5 The accounts of the revels' department at this period are not so complete as usual, and in Mr. P. Cunningham's book we find no details of any kind between 1597 and 1604. The interval was a period of the greatest possible interest, as regards the performance of the productions of this company, and we earnestly hope that the missing accounts may yet be recovered.

3 Between September, 1599, and September, 1599, Queen Elizabeth had sent, as a present to the young King of Scotland on his marriage with Anne of Denmark, all the necessary appurtenances, and we find charged for in the accounts, the three pieces of canvass displayed for that period. See "Hist. of Engi. Dram. Poetry and the Stage," vol. 1. p. 170. It is most likely that the actors from London accompanied this gift.

4 From MS. Harl. 4047, being copies of despatches from Mr. Ashby to the Lord Privy Seal, and members of the Council in London. We are indebted to Mr. N. Hill for directing our attention to this curious notice.

against dramatic performances on Sunday, is found, seems to prove that it was an after-thought, and that it was inserted, because his couriers had urged that James ought not even to enter his new capital, until public steps had been taken to put an end to the profanation. 4

The King, having issued this command, arrived at the Court of Augsburg, where he placed all the theatrical companies, which had temporarily suspended their performances, began to act again on the 9th May. Permission to this effect was given by James I., and communicated through the ordinary channel to the players, who soon found reason to rejoice in the accession of the new sovereign; for ten days after his arrival he signed the patent which allowed the King's playhouse to make a little profit out of his patronage, calling them "the King's servants," a title they always afterwards enjoyed. For this purpose he issued a warrant, under the privy seal, for making out a patent under the great seal, authorizing the nine following actors, and others, to perform in his name, not only at the Globe or on the Bankside, but in any part of the kingdom; viz. Lawrence Fletcher, William Shakespeare, Richard Burbage, Augustine Philpilpes, John Heminge, Henry Condell, William Sly, Robert Arny, and Richard Cowley.

We miss from this list the names of Thomas Pope, William Kempe, and Nicholas Toole, who belonged to the company which was discharged by King James in 1594. Lawrence Fletcher, Henry Condell, and Robert Arny, with the addition of Richard Cowley. Pope had been an actor in 1589, and perhaps in May, 1603, was an old man, for he died in the February following. Kempe had joined the Lord Admiral's players soon after the opening of the Fortune, on his return from the Continent, for we find him in Henslowe's pay a year or two after this, from the association at this date, or his name would hardly have been omitted in the patent, as an established actor, and a man of some property and influence; but he, as well as Kempe, not long subsequently rejoined the association with which they had been so long connected.

We may assume, perhaps, in the absence of my direct testimony, that Lawrence Fletcher did not acquire his prominence in the company before James was master of the Tower, for the records are silent respecting Lear and the King. He had been in Scotland, had performed with his associates before James in 1599, 1600, and 1601, and in the latter year he had been registered as "his Majesty's Comedian at Aberdeen. He might, therefore, have been a favourite with the King, and being also a considerable shareholder in the association, he perhaps owed his place in the patent of May, 1603, to his circumstances. 5 The King of Shake- speare comes next, and as author, actor, and sharer, we cannot be surprised at the situation he occupies. His progress upward, in connexion with the profession, had been gradual and uniform: in 1589 he was twelfth in a company of sixteen members, in 1596 he was fifth in a company of eight members; and in 1603 he was second in a company of nine members.

The degree of encouragement and favour extended to actors by James I. in the very commencement of his reign is remarkable. Not only did he take the Lord Chamberlain's players unto his own service, but the Queen adopted the company under the wardship and patronage of Sir Henry Condell, of whom she was a personal friend; the patent was not issued without the Queen's consent, nor could it be obtained without her authority. She had granted the King to license the company, but the King was the proprietor of the stage-company. 6 And then comes, as a sure mark of James's favour, his appointment of John Morall to the Court of August, where, by the act of 37 Car. 2, passed the 27th May, 1603, King James ordained, "that the places of singing, reading, and common place shall be..." The law was not the more effective, because it was never carried into effect; the severe penalties it inflicted were not enforced, and the King'sevil. 7

The patent under the great seal, made out in consequence of this natural, and of the King's licence, was granted on the 11th June, 1603. 8

4 The paragraph is in these terms, and we quote them because they have been thus printed by the writer of what is called the "Memoirs."—By the King.

4 And for that we are informed, that there hath been heretofore great neglect in this kingdom of keeping the Sabbath day; for the inhabitants of the several cities and boroughs do open their usual places of amusements and playing, and also of course are glad to have a day of rest by the law. We do straightway charge and command that no bearer-baying, Bally-baying, Enteriudes, common Plays, or other like disorderly or unlawful exercises, or pastimes, be frequented, kept, or used at any time hereafter upon the Sabbath day.

5 Nothing seems to be known of the birth or origin of Lawrence Fletcher, (who died in September, 1606;) but we may suspect that he was an elder brother of the actor, William Fletcher, (born in 1575.) In the Second Part of King Henry the Fifth, the father, (he died, on 15 June, 1598, having made his will in October, 1601, before he was translated from Worcester to London. But the true and only legitimate and proper effect of this act of 37 Car. 2, passed the 27th May, 1603, King James ordained, "that the places of singing, reading, and common place shall be..."—By Worcester into London brought his state.

7 It afterwards goes on thus:

"The Prince of prelacy, which now long since Was banish'd with the Pope, is said of late to be scale; he must have a council to be made by him, and By Worcester into London brought his state."

the passage in "Hamlet," (brought out, as we apprehend, very shortly before he came to the throne) where it is said of these "abstracts and brief chronicles of the time," that it is "better to have a bad epitaph, than their ill report while you live." James made himself sure of their good report; and an epigram, attributed to Shakespeare, has descended to us, which doubtless was intended in some sort as a grateful token for the royal countenance bestowed upon him, which no one was unconnected with it. We copy it from a coeval manuscript in our possession, which seems to have belonged to a curious accumulator of matters of the kind, and which also contains an unknown production by Dekker, as well as various other pieces by dramatists and poets of the time. The lines are entitled,

"SHAKESPEARE ON THE KING."

"Crowns have their compass, length of days their date,

Triumphs their tomb, felicity her date:

Of nought but earth can earth make us parterker,

But knowledge makes a king most like his Maker."

We have seen these lines in more than one other old manuscript, and as they were constantly attributed to Shakespeare, and in the form in which we have given them above, are in no respect unworthy of his pen, we have little doubt of their authenticity.

Having established his family in "the great house" called "New Place" in his native town in 1597, by the purchase of the homestead, it seems as if Shakespeare the author had contemplated considerable additions to his property there. In May, 1602, he laid out £230 upon 107 acres of land, which he bought of William and John Combe, and attached it to his dwelling. The original indenture and its counterpart are in existence, bearing date 1st May, 1602, but to neither of them is the signature of the poet affixed, and it seems that he being absent, his brother Gilbert was his immediate agent in the transaction, and to Gilbert Shakespeare the property was delivered to the use of William Shakespeare. In the autumn of the same year he became the owner of a copyhold tenement (called a cotugian in the instrument) in Walker's Street, alias Dead Lane, Stratford, surrendered to him by Walter Goley. In November of the next year he gave Horace Underhill £20 for a messuage, barn, granary, garden, and orchard close to or in Stratford; but in the original fine, preserved in the Chapter House, Westminster, the precise situation is not mentioned. In 1603, therefore, Shakespeare's property, in or near Stratford-upon-Avon, besides what he might have bought of, or inherited from, his father, consisted of New Place, with 107 acres of land, the latter a farm of some 70 acres; of New Place, the additional messuage, and the additional mortgage, which he had recently purchased from Underhill.

Whether our great dramatist was in London at the period when the new king ascended the throne, we have no means of knowing; but that he was so in the following autumn we have positive proof for, in a letter written by Mrs. Alleyn, the wife of Edward Alleyn, the actor, to Miss Alleyn, then in the country, dated 20th October, 1603, she tells him that she had seen "Mr. Shakespeare of the Globe" in Southwark. At this date, according to the same authority, most of the companies of players who had left London for the Summer were engaged in the performance of the accounts of the prevalence of the plague, and the consequent cessation of dramatic performances, and had returned to the metropolis; and it is not at all unlikely that Shakespeare was one of those who had returned, having taken the opportunity of visiting his family at Stratford-upon-Avon.

According to Elizabeth the Children of the Chapel (originally the choir-boys of the royal establishment) had become an acknowledged company of players, and these, besides her association of adult performers, Queen Anne took under her immediate patronage, with the style of the Children of her Majesty's Reves, requiring that the pieces they proposed to represent should first be submitted to, and have the approbation of the celebrated Samuel Daniel, Instrument of their appointment bears date 30th January, 1603-4; and from a letter from Daniel to his patron, Sir Thomas Egerton, preserved among his papers, we may perhaps conclude that Shakespeare, as well as Michael Drayton, had been candidates for the post of master of the Queen's revels: he says in it, "I cannot but know, that I am lesse deserving than some that were of the nobility unto her Majesty for this room; and, after introducing the name of "his good friend," Drayton, he adds the following, which, we apprehend, refers with sufficient distinctness to Shakespeare:—"It seemeth to my humble judgement that one is the author of plays, now dayly performed in public places, and that he should have been appointed an actor of no small gain, and moreover himself an actor in the Kinges company of comedians, could not with reason pretend to be master of the Queenes Majesties Revels, for as much as he wold sometimes be asked to approve and allow of his own writings."

This objection would have applied with equal force to Drayton, had we not every reason to believe that at this date he had ceased to be a dramatic author. He had been a writer for Hemowe and Alleyn's company during several years, first at the Rose, and afterwards at the Fortune; but he seems to have relinquished that species of composition about a year prior to the demise of Elizabeth, the last piece in which he was concerned, of which we have no intelligence, being noticed by Hemowe under date of May, 1602; this play was called "The Harpies," and he was assisted in it by Dekker, Middleton, Webster, and Munday.

It is highly probable that Shakespeare was a sutor for this office, in contemplation of a speedy retirement as an actor. We have already spoken of the presumed exertion of the company of players, and, besides the fact that he was the original player of the part of the Ghost in "Hamlet," another character he is said to have sustained is Adam, in "As you like it;" and his brother Gilbert, (who in 1602 had received, on behalf William Shakespeare, the 107 acres of land purchased from William and John Combe) who probably survived the Restoration, is supposed to have been the author of "this tradition." He had acted also in Ben Jonson's "Every Man in his Humour," in 1598, after (as we believe) introducing it to the company; and he is supposed to have written part of, as well as known to have written, the parts of the two thousand, from being imputed to him, to take in this volume, and in this general line of work, it is very evident that the connexion between the Devil and John a Combe, or John of Combe (as he is there called) was much older—"so see had he never rent at the date, the devil and John of Combe should not have feight Kate L. to Briedwell." There is no ground for supposing that Shakespeare was ever on bad terms with any of the Combes, and in his will he expressly left his sword to Mr. Thomas Combe, in a MS. of that time, now before us, we find the following given as an account of the same Sir John a Combe.

"Here ten in the hundred lies dead and imgraved:

But a hundred to ten his soul is not saved."

And the couplet is printed in no very different form in "The Meres of the Muses," 1608, No. 91.

performed in, the same author's "Sejanus" in 1605. This is the last work of him upon the stage but that he continued a member of the company until April 9, 1604, we have the evidence of a document preserved at Dulwich College, where the names of the King's players are enumerated in the following order:—Burbage, Shakespeare, Fletcher, Phillips, Condell, Heminge, Armin, Sly, Cowley, Ostler, and Day. If Shakespeare had not then actually ceased to produce plays, it would inevitably be inferred in deciding that he quit his last and most important profession, that department of the profession very shortly afterwards.

CHAPTER XVI.

No sooner had our great dramatist ceased to take part in the public performances of the King's players, than the company appears to have thrown off the restraint by which it had been usually controlled ever since its formation, and to have produced plays which were objectionable to the court, as well as offensive to private persons. Shakespeare, from his abilities, station, and experience, had pursued a more than usual influence with the body of the public, and the great influence with the body of the law, and due deference, we may readily believe, was shown to his knowledge and judgment in the selection and acceptance of plays sent in for approbation by authors of the time. The contrast between the conduct of the association immediately before, and immediately after his retirement, would lead us to conclude, not only that he was a man of prudence and discretion, but that the exercise of these qualities had in many instances kept his fellows from incurring the displeasure of persons in power, and from exciting the animosity of particular individuals. We suppose Shakespeare to have ceased to act in the summer of 1604, and in the winter of that year we find the King's players giving offence to "aggravated counsellors" by performing a play upon the subject of Gowry's conspiracy. This fact we have upon the evidence of one of Sir R. W. Woodword's correspondents, John Chamberlaine, who, in a letter dated 18th December, 1604, uses these expressions:—"The tragedy of Gowry, with all action and actors, hath been twice represented by the King's players, with exceeding concourse of all sorts of people; but whether the matter or manner be not well handled, or that it be thought unfit that princes should be played on the stage in their lifetime, I hear that some great counsellors are much displeased with it, and so, it is thought, it shall be forbidden." Whether it was so forbidden we do not hear upon the same or any other authority, but no such drama has come down to us.

In the next year (at what particular part of it is not stated) Sir Leonard Haldane, then Lord Mayor of London, backed no doubt by his brethren of the corporation, made a complaint against the same company, "that Kempe, (who at this date had rejoined the association) Armin, and others, players at the Blackfriars, have again most unjustly and wickedly, to bring their stage into the godly and virtuous aldermen of the city of London, to their great scandal and the lessening of their authority," and the interposition of the privy council to prevent the abuse was therefore solicited. What was done in consequence, if anything were done, does not appear in any extant document.

The spring of the next year a still graver charge was brought against the body of actors of whom Shakespeare, until very recently, had been one; and it originated in no less a person than the French ambassador. George Chapman had written two plays upon the history and execution of the Duke of Biron, containing, in the shape in which they were originally produced on the stage, such matter that M. Beaumont, the representative of the King of France in London, thought it necessary to remonstrate against the repetition, and the performance of it was prohibited: as soon, however, as the court had quitted London, the King's players persisted in acting it; in consequence of which three of the players were arrested, (their names are not given) but the author, and the two dramas were printed in 1608, and again in 1625; and looking through them, we are at a loss to discover anything, beyond the historical incidents, which could have given offence; but the truth certainly is, that all the objectionable portions were omitted in the press: there can be no doubt, on the authority of the despatch from the French ambassador to his court, that one of the dramas originally contained a scene in which the Queen of France and Madeleine, a parallel to the Queen of England, were introduced, the former, after having abused her, giving them the latter a box on the ear.

This information was conveyed to Paris under the date of the 5th April, 1606; and the French ambassador, apparently in order to make his court acquainted with the lawless character of dramatic performances at that date in England, adds a very singular paragraph, proving that the King's players, only a few days before they had brought the Queen of France upon the stage, had not hesitated to introduce upon the same boards their own reigning sovereign in a most unseemly manner, making him swear violently, and beat a gentlewoman with his cane, and make her fear for her life for the chase. This course indicates a most extraordinary degree of boldness on the part of the players; but, nevertheless, they were not prohibited from acting, until M. Beaumont had directed the attention of the public authorities to the insult offered to the Queen of France: then, an order was issued putting a stop to the acting of all plays in London; but, according to the same authority, the companies had clapped their money, and, attacking James I. on his weak side, had offered a large sum to be allowed to continue their performances. The French ambassador himself apprehended that the appeal to the King's pecuniary

1 From lines preceding it in the 4to, 1605, we know that it was brought out at the Globe, and Ben Jonson admits that it was ill received by the audience.
2 An many were the productions of this great and various author, one of which is mentioned by Ant. Wood (Ath. Oxon, edit. Blome, vol. ii. p. 576), and the other by Waton (Hist. Eng. Poetr. vol. iv. p. 373, edit. T. S.), on the authority merely of the stationers' registers; but none of our literary antiquaries seem to have been able to meet with them. They are both in existence. The first is a defence of his "Anadromus Librataria," 1604, which Edwards, in consequence of the marriage of the Earl of Somerset and the Countess of Essex, which Chapman tells us he had been "most maliciously misinterpreted." It is called "A free and offencless Justification" of his poem, and it was printed in 1614. It is chiefly in prose, but at the end is a dialogue in rhyme, between Enthus and Theodiscus, the last being meant for Chapman: Wood only supposed that Chapman wrote it; but if he could have read it, he would have entertained no doubt. It appears that "Anadromus Librataria" was a covert attack upon him, and from this action Chapman was anxious to relieve himself. The poetical dialogue is thus rendered by Thence, and sufficiently explains the object of the writer.

"Ho, you! Thedalis! you must not dreams! You're thus dismist in peace; seas too extreme Your song hath strid up to be called too soon: Nay, your very notes are not so just; Your Persists is display'd, and sleighteth now Your work as idle, and as servile yow, Your people are gone, and your plays away Your misty clouds; and he sees, clear as day, Y've made him scandal'd for another wrong."

Bucklersbury, while his apprehensions rise."

The other production, of which our knowledge has also hitherto been "curiously" omitted, is "Seven Peasantable Psalms, paraphrastically translated," with other poems of a miscellaneous kind at the end: it was printed in small folio, 1609, dedicated to Sir Edward Philipps, Master of Trinity, where Chapman speaks of his yet unfinished translation of Homer, which, he adds, the Prince of Wales had commissioned him to translate. Among the epistles which this poetical piece has a copy of Chapman's "Memorable Masque" on the marriage of the Palgrave and Princess Elizabeth, corrected by Chapman in his own hand; but the errors are few, and not very important. It shows the patient accuracy of the accomplished writer.
wants would be effectual, and that permission, under certain restrictions, would not long be withheld. 1

Not all Shakespeare's plays are derived from the Blackfriars or the Globe theatres, as an actor merely, we may be tolerably certain he relinquished when he ceased to perform. He would thus be able to devote more of his time to dramatic composition, and, as he continued a sharer in the two undertakings, perhaps his income on the whole was not much lessened. Certain it is that in 1603 he had already drawn up a lease, in which he was anxious to invest advantageously in property or in near the place of his birth. Whatever may have been the circumstances under which he quitte Stratford, he always seems to have contemplated a permanent return thither, and kept his eyes constantly turned in the direction of his birth-place. As late as January, 1598, he had been advised "to deal in the matter of titles" of Stratford; 2 but perhaps at that date, having recently purchased New Place, he was not in sufficient funds for the purpose, or possibly the party in possession of the lease of the tithe, though not unwilling to dispose of it, required more than it was deemed worth.

At all events, nothing was done on the subject for more than six years; but on the 24th July, 1605, we find William Shakespeare, who is described as "of Stratford-upon-Avon, gentleman," executing an indenture for the purchase of the unexpired term of a long lease of the great tithes of "corn, grain, blade, and hay," and of the small tithes of "wool, lamb, and other small and privy tithes, herbage, oblations," &c., in Stratford, Old Stratford, Bishopton, and Welebone. 3 not twenty-eight at the time of his death, had embraced the profession of a player; having perhaps followed the fortunes of his brother William, and attached himself to the company, and with his name in any list of the associations of the time, nor is he mentioned as an actor among the characters of any old play with which we are acquainted. We may presume, therefore, that he attained no eminence; perhaps his principal employment might be under his brother in the management of his theatrical concerns, where he only took part in the assistance of a number of performers than usual was necessary. Mary Shakespeare survived her son Edmund about eight months, and was buried at Stratford on the 9th Sept. 1608.

There are few points of his life which can be stated with more confidence than that our great dramatist attended the funeral of his mother: filial piety and duty would of course impel him to visit Stratford on the occasion, and in proof that he did so, we may mention that on the 16th of the next month he stood godfather there to a boy of the name of William Walker. Shakespeare's mother had probably resided at New Place, the house of her son; from whence, we may presume also, the body of her husband had been conveyed to the Church of St. Mary ad Crypt, Stratford. She was, in the full age when she was married to John Shakespeare in 1557, she was about 72 years old at the time of her decease.

The reputation of our poet as a dramatist seems in this period to have been at its height. His "King Lear" was printed three times for the same bookseller in 1608; and in order perhaps to increase its sale, (as well as to secure the publisher from the attacks of the old "King Lear," a play upon the same story, being given to him instead) the name of "M. William Shake-speare" was placed very conspicuously, and most unusually, at the top of the title-page. The same observation will in part apply to "Pericles," which came out in 1609, with the name of the author rendered particularly obvious, although in the ordinary place. "Troilus and Cressida," which was published in the same year, also has the name of the author very distinctly legible, but in a somewhat smaller type. In both the latter cases, it would likewise seem, that there were plays by older or rival dramatists upon the same incidents. The most noticeable proof of the advantage which a bookseller conceived he should derive from the announcement that the work he published was by our poet, is afforded by the title-page of the collection of his dispersed sonnets, which was ushered into the world as "Shakespeare's Sonnets," in very large capitals, as if that mere fact would be held a sufficient recommendation.

In a former part of our memoir (p. xxv) we have alluded to the circulation of books that were read by the poet at the time of the Liberty of the Clink in a sum which might possibly indicate that he was the occupant of a commodious dwelling-house in Southwark. The fact that our great dramatist paid six-pence a week to the poor there, (as high a sum as anybody in that immediate vicinity was assessed at) is stated in the account of the Life of Edward Alleyn, printed by the Shakespeare Society, (p. 90) and there it is too hastily inferred that he was rated at this sum upon a dwelling-house occupied by himself. This is very possibly the fact; but, on the other hand, the truth may be, that he paid the rate not for any habitation, good or bad, large or small, but in respect of his theatrical property in the Globe, which was situated in the same district. The parish register of St. Saviour's establishes, that in 1601 the churchwardens had been instructed by the vestry "to talk with the players respecting the payment of tithes and contributions to the maintenance of the poor; and it is not very unlikely that some arrangement was made under which the sharers in the Globe, and Shakespeare as one of them, would be assessed. As a confirmatory circumstance we may add, that when Henslowe and Alleyn were about to build the Fortune play-house, in 1599-1600, the inhabitants of the Lordship of Finsbury, in the parish of Cripplegate, petitioned the privy council in favour of the undertaking, one of their reasons being, that "the players were contented to give a very liberal portion of money weekly towards the relief of the poor." Perhaps the parties interested in the Globe were contented to come to similar terms, and the parish to accept the money weekly from the various individuals. Henslowe, Alleyn, Lowin, Town, Juby, &c., who were assessed, besides Shakespeare, in the Globe, contributed to the payment of the poor, which would include bad, large, small, and moderate houses, and other theatres in the same neighbourhood, contributed in different proportions for the same purpose, the largest amount being six-pence per week, which was paid by Shakespeare, Henslowe, and Alleyn.

The ordinary inhabitants included in the same list, doubtless, paid for their dwellings, according to their several rents, and may have been the case with Shakespeare, we cannot pretend to say for certain, that a moderate house would be needed for his wife and family, because the existing evidence is opposed to the notion that they ever resided with him in London.

The second division consists of seven persons who only paid one penny per week, and among them we perceive the name of no individual who, according to other evidence, appears to have been in any way connected with theatres. Malone (see his "Shakspere," p. 315,) has seen this document; but he mis-states that it belongs to the year 1609, and not 1608.
document has been discovered, which enables us to form some judgment, though not perhaps an accurate estimate, of the sum he annually derived from the private theatre in the Blackfriars.

From the outset of the undertaking, the Lord Mayor and aldermen of London had been hostile to the establishment of players within this precinct, so near to the boundaries, but beyond the jurisdiction of the corporation; and, as we have already shown, they had made several fruitless efforts to dislodge them. The attempt was renewed in 1608, when Sir Henry Montague, the Attorney General of the day, gave an opinion in favour of the claim of the citizens to exercise their municipal powers within the precinct of the late dissolved monastery of the Blackfriars. The question seems in some shape to have been brought before Baron Ellesmere, then Lord Chancellor of England, who required from the Lord Mayor and his brethren proofs that they had exercised any authority in the disputed liberty. The distinguished lawyers of the day retained by the city were immediately employed in searching for records applicable to the point at issue; but as far as we can judge, to no such proofs, as were thought necessary by the highest legal authority of the time, and applicable to any recent period, were forthcoming. Lord Ellesmere, therefore, we may conclude, was opposed to or inclined to distrust the jurisdiction of the city.

Failing in this endeavour to expel the King’s players from their hold by force of law, the corporation appears to have taken a milder course, and negotiated with the players for the purchase of the Blackfriars theatre, with all its properties and appurtenances. To this negotiation we are probably indebted for a paper, which shows with great exactness and particularity the amount of interest then claimed by each sharer, those sharers being Richard Burbage, Laurence Fletcher, William Shakespeare, John Heminge, Henry Condell, Joseph Taylor, and John Lowin, with four other persons named, each the owner of half a share.

We have inserted the document entire in a note, and have found that Richard Burbage was the owner of the freehold of the property (which was then held in fee, for a father) as well as the owner of four shares, the value of all which, taken together, he rated at 1332L 6s. 8d. Laurence Fletcher (if it be he, for the Christian name is written “Laz.”) was proprietor of three shares, for which he claimed 700L. Shakespeare was proprietor of the wardrobe and properties of the theatre, estimated at 500L, as well as four shares, valued, like those of Burbage and Fletcher, at 33L 6s. 8d. each, or 933L 6s. 8d., at seven years’ purchase: his whole demand was 1433L 6s. 8d., or 500L, less than that of Burbage, in as much as the fee was considered worth 1000L, while Shakespeare’s wardrobe and properties were valued at 500L. According to the same calculation, Heminge and Condell were each of them successful in securing their two shares, and Taylor 500L for his share and a half, while the four unnamed half-sharers put in their claim to be compensated at the same rate, 466L 13s. 4d. This mode of estimating the Blackfriars theatre made the value of it 6160L 13s. 4d., and to this sum was to be added remuneration to the hired men of the company, who were not sharers, as well as to the widows and orphans of deceased actors: the purchase money of the whole property was thus raised to at least 7000L.

Each share, out of the twenty into which the receipts of the theatre were divided, yielded, as was alleged, an annual profit of 33L 6s. 8d. to Shakespeare and his four co-sharers. His annual income, from them only, was 1332L 6s. 8d.; he was besides proprietor of the wardrobe and properties, stated to be worth 500L; these, we may conclude, he lent to the company for a certain consideration, and, reckoning wear and tear, ten per cent, seems a very low rate of payment; we will further, at that sum, which would add 500L a year to the 1332L 6s. 8d. already mentioned, making together 1832L 6s. 8d., besides what our great dramatist must have gained by the profits of his pen, upon which we have no data for forming any thing like an accurate estimate. Without including any thing on this account, and supposing only that the Globe was as profitable for a summer theatre as the Blackfriars was for a winter theatre, it is evident that Shakespeare’s income could hardly have been less than 364L 13s. 4d. Taking every known source of emolument into view, we consider 400L a year the very lowest amount at which his income can be reckoned in 1608.

The document upon which this calculation is founded was preserved among the papers of Lord Ellesmere, but a remarkable incidental confirmation of it has still more recently been brought to light in the State-paper office. Sir Dudley Carlton was ambassador at the Hague in 1619, and John Chamberlaine, writing to him on 19th of March in that year, and mentioning the death of Queen Anne, states that “the funeral is put off to the 29th of the next month, to the great hinderance of our players, which are forbidden to play so long as her body is above ground; one special man among them, Burbage, is lately dead, and hath left, they say, better than 300L land.”

Burbage was interred at St. Leonard’s, Shoreditch, on 16th March, 1619, three days anterior to the date of Chamberlaine’s letter, having made his mummificative four shillings per day for each body he interred in the same churchyard; and his partner, Shakespeare, and his other co-sharers were equally as much in need of money as was the widow and orphans of Burbage’s sons. Nevertheless, it must not be forgotten, that although Shakespeare continued a large sharer with the leading members of the company in 1608, he had retired from the stage about four years before; and having ceased to act, but still retaining his shares in the profits of the theatres with which he was connected, it is impossible to say what arrangement

1 These transactions most probably occurred before September, 1608, because Laurence Fletcher died in that month. However, it is not quite certain that the “Laz.” mentioned in the document, was Laurence Fletcher: we know of no person named Lazaz, or Laz. or Fletcher, though he may have been the personal representative of Laurence Fletcher.

1 This new and valuable piece of information was pointed out to us by Mr. Lemon, who has been so indefatigable in his researches as to have since, in 1823, published a edition of Purchas.

2 The passage above quoted renders Middleton’s epigram on the death of Burbage (Works by Dyce, vol. v. p. 563) quite clear:

“Antoanernan and star-gazers this year
Will write of Burbage with good, and ill year.
Death interposing Burbage, and their staying,
Hath made a visible eclipse of playing.”

It has been stated that the death of Burbage, by causing a temporary suspension of plays in consequence of the death of Burbage; but the stay was the prohibition of acting until after the funeral of Queen Anne.”
he may have made with the rest of the company for the regular contribution of dramas, in lieu of perhaps of his own personal exertions.

In a work published a few years ago, containing extracts from the Diary of the Rev. John Ward, who was vicar of Stratford-upon-Avon, and whose memoranda extend from 1602 to 1610, we find it stated that Shakespeare, in his early days lived at Stratford, and supplied the stage with two plays every year, and for it had an allowance so large, that he spent at the rate of 1000l. a year, as I have heard. We only adduce this passage to show what the opinion was as to Shakespeare's circumstances shortly after the Restoration. We take it for granted that the sum of 1000l. (equal to not less than 6000l. now) was a considerable sum; but it may warrant the belief that Shakespeare lived in good style and port, late in life, in his native town. It is very possible, too, though we think not probable, that after he retired to Stratford he continued to write, but it is utterly incredible that subsequent to his retirement he "supplied the stage with two plays every year," He might not be able to once to relinquish his old and confirmed habits of composition; but such other evidence as we possess is opposed to Ward's statement, to which he himself appends the cautionary words, "as I have heard." Of course he could have known nothing but by hearsay forty-six years after our poet's decease. He might, however, easily have known inhabitants of Stratford, and have been informed of the productions, considering the opportunities he possessed, it strikes us as very singular that he collected so little information.

We have already adverted to the bounty of the Earl of Southampton to Shakespeare, which we have supposed to have been consequent upon the dedication of "Venus and Adonis," and "Lucrece," to that nobleman, and coincident in point of date with the building of the Globe Theatre. Another document has been handed down to us among the papers of Lord Ellesmere, which proves the strong interest Lord Southampton still took, about fifteen years afterwards, in Shakespeare's affairs, and in the prosperity of the company to which he was attached; it has distinct reference also to the dignity and unequal struggle between the corporation of London and the players at the Blackfriars, of which we have already spoken. It is the copy of a letter subscribed H. S. (the initials of the Earl) to some nobleman in favour of our great dramatist, and of the chief performer in many of his plays, Richard Burbage, and recollecting what Lord Southampton had before done for Shakespeare and the theatre which from the first he had patronized our stage and drama, it seems to us the most natural thing in the world for him to write a letter personally on behalf of parties who had so many public and private claims. We may conclude that the original was not addressed to Lord Ellesmere, or it would have been found in the depository of his papers, and been inserted in our volume as a copy of it may have been furnished to the Lord Chancellor, in order to give him some information respecting the character of the parties upon whose cause he was called upon to decide. Lord Ellesmere stood high in the confidence of his sovereign; he had many important public duties to discharge besides those belonging to his great office; and notwithstanding he had shown himself at all times a liberal patron of letters, and had had many works of value dedicated to him, we may readily imagine, that although he must have heard of Shakespeare and Burbage, he was in some degree of ignorance as to their individual destinies, which this communication was intended to remove. That it was not sent to him by Lord Southampton, who probably was acquainted with him, may afford a proof of the delicacy of the Earl's mind, who would not seem directly to interpose while a question of the sort was pending before a judge, (though possibly not in his judicial capacity) the history of whose life establishes that there was no cause of the Blackfriars that the Earl's signature was involved was he equally deaf to public and private influence.

We have introduced an exact copy of the document in a note, and it will be observed that it is without date; but the subject of it shows a beyond dispute that it belongs to this period, while the lord mayor and aldermen were endeavouring to expel the players from a situation where they had been uninterruptedly established for more than thirty years. There can be no doubt that the object the players had in view was obtained, because we know that the lord mayor and his brethren were not allowed, until many years afterwards, to exercise any authority within the precinct and boundaries of the Blackfriars that the King's stage fans continued to occupy the theatre long after the death of Shakespeare.

CHAPTER XVIII.

There is reason for believing that the important question of jurisdiction had been decided in favour of the King's players before January, 1609-10, because we have an instrument of that date authorizing a juvenile company to exhibit at Blackfriars, as well as the association which had been in possession of the theatre ever since its original construction. One circumstance connected with this document, to which we shall presently advert, may however appear to cast a doubt upon the point, whether it had yet been finally determined that the corporation of London was by law excluded from the precinct of the Blackfriars. It is a fact, of which it may be said we have conclusive proof, that almost from the first, if not from the first, the good behaviour, he hath been come possessed of the Blackfryers playhouse, which hath been employed for players'shitence it was not by the King's major. There is now seven years since I was sent to you with the warrant, and I would have you hereby to know that the mouth is nothing else deserving favor, and my especiall' frindes, till of late an actor of good account in the company, now a sharer in the same, the writer of some of our best English players, which, as your Lordship knoweth, were most singularly liked of Queen Elizabeth: when the company was called uppon to performe before her Majesty at Whitehall Palace, and the same was so well accepted by both and all, as that the late King James above, since his coming to the crowne, hath extended his royal favour to the company in divers ways and at sundrie tymes. This is a thing of great moment both to the Blackfriars and the Whitehall actors; and indeed allmost of one town: both are rich famous in their qualities, though it longeth not of your Grace and wase (though I desire it) as I rest recommended it to your Grace and to the publice ears. Their trust and stock nowe is not to bee molusted in their way of life, whereby they maintaine their livings, and of their names (of good reputation) as well as the widows and orphans of some of their dead fellowes.

Lord Southampton was clearly mistaken when he stated that the Blackfriars theatre had been built nearly fifty years: in 1607 it had been built about thirty-three years.
Blackfriars theatre had been in the joint possession of the Lord Chamberlain's servants and of a juvenile company called the Children of the Chapel; they were also known as "her Majesty's Children," and "the Children of the Blackfriars," and had been licensed to perform at the Children of the Chapel during the seven months from April to October. After the opening of the Globe in 1598, we may presume that the Lord Chamberlain's servants usually left the Blackfriars theatre to the Children of the Chapel, and that they employed the theatre on alternate days with their older competitors, but that, when the Lord Chamberlain's servants acted elsewhere in the summer, the Children of the Chapel commenced their performances at the Blackfriars. 1 After the opening of the Globe in 1598, we may presume that the Lord Chamberlain's servants usually left the Blackfriars theatre to the Children of the Chapel, and that they employed the theatre on alternate days with their older competitors, but that, when the Lord Chamberlain's servants acted elsewhere in the summer, the Children of the Chapel commenced their performances at the Blackfriars. 1 After the opening of the Globe in 1598, we may presume that the Lord Chamberlain's servants usually left the Blackfriars theatre to the Children of the Chapel, and that they employed the theatre on alternate days with their older competitors, but that, when the Lord Chamberlain's servants acted elsewhere in the summer, the Children of the Chapel commenced their performances at the Blackfriars. 1 After the opening of the Globe in 1598, we may presume that the Lord Chamberlain's servants usually left the Blackfriars theatre to the Children of the Chapel, and that they employed the theatre on alternate days with their older competitors, but that, when the Lord Chamberlain's servants acted elsewhere in the summer, the Children of the Chapel commenced their performances at the Blackfriars. 1 After the opening of the Globe in 1598, we may presume that the Lord Chamberlain's servants usually left the Blackfriars theatre to the Children of the Chapel, and that they employed the theatre on alternate days with their older competitors, but that, when the Lord Chamberlain's servants acted elsewhere in the summer, the Children of the Chapel commenced their performances at the Blackfriars.
The Taming of the Shrew, or for the older play, with nearly the same title, upon which it was founded.

Troilus and Cressida* and "Pericles," which were printed in 1609, are the only other two works which, we think, can be ascribed with little doubt that they had been written and prepared for the stage only a short time before they came from the press. With the single exception of "Othello," which came out in 4to in 1622, no other new drama by Shakespeare appeared in a printed form between 1670 and the date of the publication of the first folio, 1623. Of the plays, which were found in that volume, were penned by our great dramatist after 1609, because we have separately considered the claims of each in our preliminary Introductions. "Timon of Athens," "Coriolanus," "Antony and Cleopatra," "Cymbeline," "The Winter's Tale," and "The Tempest," seem to belong to a late period in our poet's theatrical career, and some of them were doubtless written between 1609 and the period, whatever that period might be, when he entirely relinquished dramatic composition.

Between January 1609-10, when Shakespeare was one of the parties to whom the warrant for the Children of the Queen's Revels was conceded, and the year 1612, when he had taken up his residence at Blackfriars, and so far as we can ascertain, he had disposed of his temporary residence, it is possible that he withdrew from the metropolis, if he did not withdraw from the theatrical life. The fact, however, that neither the stay in London nor the temporary residence, in the absence of other evidence, may be ascribed to Shakespeare's interest in the theatre, and that it was not for his personal advantage or profit. The absence of any fact connected with his personal history*.

It would seem both natural and prudent that, before he withdrew from the metropolis, he would dispose of his theatrical property, which must necessarily be of fluctuating and uncertain value, dependent, then, on the general interest in the theatre, and the success of its management.

In his will (unlike some of his contemporaries who expired in London) he says nothing of any such property, and we are left to infer that he did not die in possession of it, having disposed of it before he finally retired to Stratford. It is to be recollected also that the species of interest he had in the Blackfriars theatre was held independently of his shares in the receipts, was peculiarly precarious: it consisted of the wardrobe and properties, which in 1608, when the city authorities contemplated the purchase of the whole establishment, were valued at 500s.; and we may feel assured that he would sell them to the company which had had the constant use of them, and doubtless had paid an annual consideration to the owner. The fee, or freehold, of the house and ground was in the hands of Richard Burbage, and from him it descended to his two sons: that was a permanent and substantial possession, very different in its character and durability from the dresses and machinery which belonged to Shakespeare. The mere circumstance of his holding a mere temporary interest in the theatre, seems to authorize the conclusion, that he sold it before he retired to the place of his birth, where he meant to spend the rest of his days with his family, in the tranquil enjoyment of the independence he had secured by the exertions of five and twenty years. Supposing him to have begun his theatrical career at the end of 1586, as we have imagined, the quarter of a century would be completed by the close of 1612, and for aught we know, that might be the period Shakespeare had in his mind fixed upon for the termination of his toils and anxieties.

It has been suggested that Edward Alleyn, the actor-founder of the college of "God's Gift" at Dulwich, purchased property in the Blackfriars in 1612*, and although it may possibly have been theatrical, there seems sufficient reason to believe that it was not, but that it consisted of certain leasehold houses, for which according to his own account-book, he paid a quarterly rent of 40l. The brief mention of this purchase, preserved at Dulwich, certainly relates to any thing rather than to the species of interest which Shakespeare indisputably had in the wardrobe and properties of the Blackfriars theatre; the terms Alleyn uses would apply only to tenements or ground, and as Burnage valued his freehold of the theatre at 1000l, we need not hesitate in deciding that the lease Alleyn purchased for 599l. 6s. 8d. was not a lease of the play-house. We shall see presently that Shakespeare himself, though under some peculiar circumstances, became the owner of a dwelling-house in the Blackfriars, unconnected with the theatre, very soon after he had taken up his abode at Stratford, and it is quite possible that he might desire, by a wise investment in the same neighbourhood in 1612. Whatever, in fact, became of Shakespeare's interest in the Blackfriars theatre, both as a sharer and as the owner of the wardrobe and properties, we need not hesitate in concluding that, in the then prosperous state of theatrical affairs in the metropolis, he was easily able to procure a purchaser.

He must, however, have been interested in the theatre in the Globe, but whether he was also the owner of the same species of property there, as at the Blackfriars, we can only speculate. We should think it highly probable that, as far as the mere wardrobe was concerned, the same dresses were made to serve for both theatres, and that when the summer season began, he disposed of his property; when it was conveyed over the water from the Blackfriars, and remained there until the company returned to their winter quarters. There is no hint in any existing document what became of our great dramatist's interest in the Globe; but here again we need not doubt, from the profit that had always attended the undertaking, that he could have had no difficulty in finding parties to take it off his hands. Burbage we know was rich, for he died in 1619" worth 300l a year, in land, besides his personal property, and he and others would have been glad to add to their capital, so advantageously employed, by purchasing Shakespeare's interest.

It is possible, as we have said, that Shakespeare continued to employ his interest in the Globe, and that he would have made a profit during his leisure time, but we must doubt whether, with his long experience of the necessity of personal superstition, he would have continued a shareholder in any concern of the kind over which he had no control. During the whole of his life in connexion with the stage, even after he quitted it as an actor, he seems to have

1 One copy of the folio is known with the date of 1692 upon the title-page. The volume was entered at Stationers' Hall on the 8th Nov. 1692, as if it had not been published until late in that year. Thus it may be ascribed by J. B. and Jaggard some time after publication, in order to secure their right to the plays first printed there, which were by far the least popular. (2) We do not, perhaps, except a writ issued by the borough court in June 1610, as the will of Shakespeare, for the recovery of a small sum. A similar occurrence had taken place in 1604, when our poet succeeded to the property of his mother, and was in possession of the houses at Dulwich, which was mortgaged to Rogers, for corn sold to him. These facts are ascertained from the existing records of Stratford.

2 The "Memoirs of Edward Alleyn," pp. 105, where a conjecture is hastily hazarded that it might be Shakespeare's interest in the Blackfriars theatre. Upon this question we agree with Mr. Knight in his "Shakespeare: a Biography," prefixed to his pictorial edition of the Poet's works.

* We have already inserted an extract from an epistle upon Burbage, in which the writer enumerates many of the characters he sustained. The following lines in Sloane MS. No. 1796 (pointed out by Mr. Bruce) are just worth preserving on account of the eminence of the man to whom they relate

"An Epistle on Mr. Richard Burbage, the Player." The play, or scene, was acted at the Theatre Royal, Where every man has his allotted part, This man has now, as many men can tell, Each man his part, and all is acted well The play now ended, think'st thou this grave to be The house of his retirement, Where to give his fame this be not afraid: Here lies the best tragedian ever play'd."

From hamlet, Act III., s. 8. 319. The infernal, and Screen in the last act, that what was called the "tiring room" in theatres, was so called because the actors retired to it, and not attired in it. It must therefore be understood that this is sometimes found it called "the sitting room" by authors of the time.
THE LIFE OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

The immediate members of this family resided at Stratford in this straw year were comparatively few. Richard Shakespeare had died at the age of forty, only a month before. William Shakespeare signed the deed for the purchase of the house in Blackfriars. Since the death of Edmund, Richard had been our poet's youngest brother, but regarding his way of life at Stratford we have no information. Gilbert Shakespeare, born some two years and a half after William, was also probably at this time an inhabitant of the borough, or its immediate neighbourhood, and perhaps married, for in the register, under date of 3rd February, 1611-12, we read an account of the burial of "Gillibrain Shakespeare, adolescent," who might be his son.

Joan Shakespeare, who was five years younger than her brother William, had been married at about the age of thirty to William Hart, a latter, in Stratford; but as the town had been incorporated twenty-five years, she could not appear in the register. Their first child, William, was baptized on 28th August, 1600, and they had afterwards children of the names of Mary, Thomas, and Michael, born respectively in 1603, 1605, and 1608. Our poet's eldest daughter, Susanna, who, as we have elsewhere stated, was married to Mr. John, afterwards Dr. Hall, in June, 1607, who died a day after the marriage, her husband, was baptized Elizabeth on 21st February, 1607-8; so that Shakespeare was a grandfather before he had reached his forty-fifth year; but Mrs. Hall had no further increase of family.

By whom New Place, otherwise called "the great house," was inhabited at this period, we can only conjecture, though we may assign Shakespeare's youngest daughter Judith (who completed her twenty-eighth year in February, 1612.) resided in it, we cannot doubt, but as it would be much more than they would require, even after they were permanently joined by our great dramatist on his retirement from London, we may perhaps conclude that Mr. and Mrs. Hall were joint occupiers of it, and sided in keeping up the vivacity of the family circle. Shakespeare himself, only completed his forty-eighth year in April, 1612, and every tradition and circumstance of his life tends to establish not only the gentleness and kindness, but the habitual cheerfulness of his disposition.

Nevertheless, although we suppose him to have separated himself from the labours and anxieties attendant

1 It was sold by auction by Messrs. Evans, of Pall Mall, in 1841, for 1625. The autograph of our poet was appended to it, in the year 1812, by a man who was again brought to the hammer of the same parties, when it produced the nearly 100/. for which it had been sold in 1841. The autograph of Shakespeare, on canvas as well as at the auction of Montacute House, folio, 1603, (which we feel satisfied is genuine) had been previously sold by auction for 100l., and it is now deposited in the British Museum. We have never seen a copy of its autograph, but it has only upon the title-page the comparatively worthless signature of the reigning monarch.

2 By his will he left this house, occupied by a person of the name of John Robinson, to his daughter Susanna.

3 The register of Stratford merely contains the following among the deaths in the parish:—

4 Rich. Shakespeare."

5 It appears by the register that Mary Hart died in 1607. When Shakespeare made his will, a blank was left for the name of his nephew Thomas Hart, as if he had not recollected it; but perhaps it was merely the omission of the scrivener. The Harts lived in a house belonging to Shakespeare.

6 It has been generally stated that Charles Hart, the celebrated actor after the Restoration, was the grand-nephew of Shakespeare, the eldest son of Shakespeare's sister Joan, but we are without any evidence for this opinion.

7 Our poet married his second wife, Sarah, daughter of John Hart, a keeper of a house of entertainment close to the Fortune theatre, and she may have been the son of Shakespeare's sister Joan, and the father of Charles Hart the actor, who died about 1679.
upon his theatrical concerns, he was not without his annoyances, though of a different kind. We refer to a chancery suit in which he had been involved in 1604, in the purchase of land in news. 1606, of the remaining term of a lease of part of the title of Stratford. It appears that a rent of 27s. 13s. 4d. had been reserved, which was to be paid by certain lessees under peril of forfeiture, but that some of the parties, disregarding the consequences, had refused to contribute their proportion: and Richard Lane of Avaton, Esquire, Thomas Greene, of Stratford-upon-Avon, Esquire, and William Shakespeare, "of Stratford-upon-Avon, gentleman," were under the necessity of filing a bill before Lord Ellesmere, to compel all the persons deriving estates under the dissolved college of Stratford to pay their shares. What was the issue of the suit is not now where stated; and the only important point of interest is that in the hands of the Shakespeare Society, is, that our great dramatist therein stated the value of his "meas" of the titles to be 60L per annum.

In the summer of 1615 a calamity happened which we do not believe affected our author's immediate interests, on account of the strong probability that he had taken care to divest himself of all theatrical property before he finally took up his residence in his birth-place. The Globe, which had been in use for about eighteen years, was burned down on 29th June, 1613, in consequence of the thatch, with which it was partially covered, catching fire from the discharge of some theatrical artillery. The play that evening was "The Prestige," and the new representation: Sir Henry Wotton gives it the title of "All Is True," and calls it "a new play," while Howes, in his continuation of Stowe's "Annuales," distinctly states that it was "Henry the Eighth." It is very possible that both may be right, and that Shakespeare's historical drama was that night revived under a new name, and therefore mistakenly called "a new play" by Sir Henry Wotton, although it had been nearly ten years on the stage. The Globe was rebuilt in the next year, as we are told on what may be considered good authority, at the cost of King James and of many noblemen and gentlemen, who seem to have contributed sums of money for the purpose. If James I. lent any pecuniary aid on the occasion, it affords another out of many proofs of his disposition to encourage the drama, and to assist the players who acted under the royal name. Although Shakespeare might not be in any way pecuniarily affected by the event, we may be sure that he would not be backward in using his influence, and perhaps in rendering assistance by a gift of money, for the reconstruction of a playhouse in which he had often acted, from which he had derived so much profit, and in the continuance of the performances at which so much of his name was so widely interest.

He must himself have had an escape from another similar disaster at Stratford in the very next year. Fires had broken out in the borough in 1594 and 1595, which had destroyed many of the houses, then built of wood, or of materials not calculated to resist combustion; but that which occurred on 14th July, 1614, seems to have done more damage than both of its predecessors. At the instance of various gentlemen in the neighbourhood, including Sir Fulke Greville, Sir Richard Verney, and Sir Thomas Lucy, King James issued a proclamation, or brief, dated 11th May, 1615, in favour of the inhabitants of Stratford, authorising the collection of donations in the different churches of the kingdom for the repair of the ravages occasioned by the fire. Let it be observed that within two hours the fire had consumed "fifty-four dwelling-houses, many of them being very fair houses, besides barns, stables, and other houses of office, together also with great store of corn, hay, straw, wood, and timber." The amount of loss is stated, on the same authority, to be "eight thousand pounds and upwards." What was the issue of this charitable appeal to the whole kingdom, we know not.

It is very certain that the dwelling of our great dramatist, called New Place, escaped the conflagration, and his property, as far as we can judge, seems to have been situated in a part of the town which fortunately did not suffer the ravages of the flames.

The name of Shakespeare is not found among those of inhabitants whose certificate was stated to be the immediate ground for issuing the royal brief, but it is not at all unlikely that he was instrumental in obtaining it. We are sure that he was in London in November following the fire, and possibly was taking some steps in favour of his fellow-townsmen. However, his rapid intervention to help related to the projected inclosure of certain common lands in the neighbourhood of Stratford in which he had an interest. Some inquiries as to the rights of various parties, were instituted in September, 1614, as we gather from a document yet preserved, and which is now before us. The individuals whose claims are set out are: Mr. Shakespeare, Thomas Parker, Mr. Lane, Sir Francis Smith, Mace, Arthur Cowdrey, and "Mr. Wright, vicar of Bishopston." All that it is necessary to quote is the following, which refers to Shakespeare, and which, like the rest, is placed under the head of "Auncient Freedholders in the fields of Old Stratford and Welcome."

"Mr. Shakespeare, 4 yard 17: noe common, nor ground

3 This fact has been noticed by several other new and curious particulars respecting the fate of the Blackfriars theatre, the Whitefriars (called the Salisbury Court theatre), the Phoenix, the Fortune and the Hope (all of which he had acted in). In some manuscript notes to a copy of Stowe's "Annuales," by Howes, folio, 1613, in the possession of Mr. Pickering: they appear to have been made just after the fire which was noticed in them. The burning of the Globe is there erroneously fixed in 1612. When, too, it is said that the Hope was built in 1610, the meaning must be that it was then repaired and altered to suit the "new playhouse Society."

7 This fact appears in a letter, written by Thomas Greene, on 17th November, 1614, in which he tells some person in Stratford that he intended to go to see his "comin Shakespeare," who had reached town a day before.
8 Malones informs us, without mentioning his authority, that "in Shakespeare's time there were certain lands, called the Saxon yard land, in the town of Stratford, not terraced, that were converted to the same authority, a yard land in Wilmecote consisted of more than fifty acres."

beyond Gospel bush: no ground in Sandfield, nor none in Slow Hill field beyond Bishopton, nor none in the enclosures beyond Bishopton."

The date of this paper is 5th September, 1614, and, as we shall see presently, we may presume that it was chiefly upon this business that Shakespeare came to London on the 16th November. It should appear that Thomas Greene, of Stratford, was officially opposing the inclosure on the part of the corporation; and it is probable that Shakespeare's wishes were accordant with those of the majority of the inhabitants: however this might be, (and it is liable to dispute which party Shakespeare favoured) the members of the municipal body of the borough were nearly unanimous, and, as far as we can learn from the imperfect particulars remaining upon this subject, they wished our poet to use his influence to resist the project, which seems to have been supported by Mr. Arthur Mainwaring, and resident of Lord Ellesmere as auditor of his domestic expenditure.

It is very likely that Shakespeare saw Mainwaring; and, as it was only five or six years since his name had been especially brought under the notice of the Lord Chancellor, in relation to the claim of the city authorities to jurisdiction in the Blackfriars, it is not impossible that Shakespeare may have had conversation with Mr. Mainwaring. He seems at all times to have been of a very accessible and kindly disposition. Greene was in London on the 17th November, and sent to Stratford a short account of his proceedings on the question of the inclosure, in which he mentioned that he had seen Shakespeare and Mr. Hall (probably meaning Shakespeare's son-in-law) on the preceding day, who told him that they thought that it should be done. Greene returned to Stratford soon afterwards, and having left our poet in London, at the instance of the corpora- tion, he subsequently wrote two letters, one to Shakespeare, and the other to Mainwaring, (the latter only has been preserved) setting forth in strong terms the injury the inclosure would do to Stratford, and the heavy loss the inhabitants had not long before sustained from the fire. A petition was also prepared and presented to the privy council, and we may gather that the opposition was effectual, because nothing was done in the business: the common fields of Welcombe, which it had been intended to inclose, remained open for pasture as before.

How soon after the matter relating to the inclosure had been settled Shakespeare returned to Stratford,—how long he remained there, or whether he ever came to London again,—we are without information. He was very possibly in the metropolis at the time when a narrative poem, founded in part upon his historical play of "Richard III.," was published, and which until now has escaped observation, as well as another, dedicated to the memory of Shakespeare, in the same month, and bearing the same name, to our author and to his tragedy. It is called "The Ghost of Richard the Third," and it bears date in 1614; but the writer, C. B., only gives his initials. We know of no poet of that day to whom they would apply, excepting Charles Best, who has several pieces in Davison's "Poetical Rhapsody," 1605, but he has left nothing behind him to im-

"Mr. Greene's comma, no sooner came to him at Stratford, than he desired to see him, how he did. He told me that they assured him they meant to inclose no further than to Gospel bush, and so up straight (leaving out the churchyard) to the garden in Clinton bed, and take in Salisbury yeene; and that they mean in April to survey the land, and then to give satisfaction. And not before: and he and Mr. Hall say they think there will be nothing done at all.

In what way, or in what degree, Shakespeare and Greene were related, so that the latter should call the former his "cousin," we must remain a matter of speculation; but it will be recalled that the parish register of Stratford shows that Thomas Greene, alias Shakespeare, entered the church as a child of eighteen. Whether Thomas Greene, the solicitor, was any relation to Thomas Greene, the actor, we have no means of ascertaining.

It had been, as we have seen, but at the end of the prefatory matter: the whole title runs thus—

London in the middle of November, 1614, as we have remarked, he was perhaps there when "The Ghost of Richard the Third" came out, and, like Ben Jonson, Chapman, and others, might be acquainted with the author. He probably returned home before the winter, and passed the rest of his days in tranquil retirement, and in the enjoy-country, or in the city of London, within the" vicinity of the 2 The registration in the books of the Stratford church is this: funny, position, and then the date of the month only might be altered, leaving the assertion as to health and memory as it had originally stood. What was the nature of Shakepeare's fatal illness we have no satisfactory means of knowing; but it was probably not of long duration; and whether he died before or after his burial, is not noted in the records. What is certain is that in his last illness by his son-in-law, Dr. Hall, who had then been married to Susanna Shakespeare more than eight years; we have expressed our opinion that Dr. and Mrs. Hall lived in the same house with our poet, and it is to be recollected that in his will he leaves New Place to his daughter Susa-nia. Hall must have been a man of considerable science for the time at which he practised, and he has left behind him proofs of his knowledge and skill in a number of cases which had come under his own eye, and which he described in Latin: these were afterwards translated from his manuspcript, and published in 1657 by Jonas Cooke, with the title of "Select Observations on English Bodies," but the case of Dr. Hall's grand-daughter was that of a complaint which fortunately the "observations" only begin in 1617. One of the earliest of them shows that an epidemic, called the "new fever," then prevailed in Stratford and "invaded many." Possibly Shakespeare was one of these; though, had such been the fact, it is not unlikely that, when speaking of "the Lady Beauvoir" who suffered under it on July 1st, 1617, Dr.

Hall would have referred back to the earlier instance of his father-in-law. He does advert to a tertian ague of which,
at a period not mentioned, he had cured Michael Drayton, ( an excellent poet," as Hall terms him) when he was, perhaps, on a visit to Shakespeare. However, Drayton, as formerly remarked, was a native of Warwickshire, and Dr.
Hall may have been called to attend him elsewhere.
We are left, therefore, in utter uncertainty as to the immediate cause of the death of Shakespeare at an age when he would be in full possession of his faculties, and when in the ordinary course of nature he might have lived many years in the enjoyment of the society of his family and friends, in the retirement of his house and the safety and comfort earned by his genius and industry, and to obtain which had apparently been the main object of many years of toil, Anxiety, and deprivation.
Whatever doubt may prevail as to the day of the birth of Shakespeare, none can well exist as to the day of his death. The inscription on his monument in Stratford church tells us,

3 For a copy of this curious and interesting work, we gladly express our obligations to Mr. William Fricker, of Hyde, near Manchester.

And it is remarkable that he was born and died on the same day of the same month, supposing him, as we have every reason to believe, to have first seen the light on the 26th years had he been otherwise; and we are sure also, that if Drayton had been, as Ben Jonson supposed, at Stratford, he would give him a free and hearty welcome. We have therefore no hesitation in saying that Dr.
was at all given to intoxication, although it is certain that Ben Joncontains the following undated paragraph:

6 And we are aware that the "betrayal" is not given in the Stratford records, of the birth of Shakespeare in 1607. "Mrs. Hall, of Stratford, my wife," is more than once introduced in the course of the volume, as well as "Ed-

7 The inscription on Dr. Hall's monument at Stratford, 1617, reads, "Here lies the body of Henry, son of Bernard Hall, and his wife Susanna, who died childless in 1679; and was buried, not at Stratford with her own family, but at Abingdon with that of her second husband. She was the last of the lineal descendants of William Shakespeare."
April, 1654. It was most usual about that period to mention the day of death in inscriptions upon tomb-stones, tablets, and monuments; nay, great daughters, with other members of the Shakespeare family. We are thus informed that his wife, Anne Shakespeare, "departed this life the 6th day of Aug. 1632."

Dr. Hall "deceased Nove. 25. A.D. 1623."

Thomas Nash, who married Hall's daughter, "died April 4, A.D. 1647;" Susanna Hall "deceased the 11th of July, A.D. 1649.

Therefore, although the Latin inscription on the monument is not difficult to read, from its form and punctuation, appear not so decisive as those we have quoted in English, there is in fact no ground for disputing that he died on 23rd April, 1616. It is quite certain from the register of Stratford that he was interred on the 25th April, and the record of that event is placed among the burials in the following manner:

"1616, April 23, Will Shakspeare, Gent."

Whether from the frequent prevalence of infectious disorders, or from any other cause, the custom of keeping the bodies of relatives unburied, for a week or more after death, seems originally to have sprung from superstition, and we may illustrate this point also by reference to facts regarding some of the members of the Shakespeare family. Anne Shakespeare was buried two days after she died, viz. on the 8th Aug., 1623; Dr. Hall and Thomas Nash were buried on the day after they died; and although it is true that there was an interval of time, varying with the length of the day's heat, and with the custom of burying persons very shortly subsequent to their decease. In the case of our hero, indicating that he expired on the 22nd April, there was, as in the case of his wife, an interval of two days before his interment.

Into the particular provisions of his will we need not enter at all at large, because we have printed it at the end of the present memoir from the original, as it was filed in the Probate Court, probate having been granted on the 22nd June following the date of it. His daughter Judith is there only called by her Christian name, although she had been married to Thomas Quiney considerably more than a month anterior to the actual date of the will, and although his eldest daughter, Susanna, was living at the time of his death in a country house, by her husband's patronymic. It seems evident, from the tenor of the whole instrument, that when it was prepared Judith was not married, although her speedy union with Thomas Quiney was contemplated: the attorney or scrivener, who drew it, had first written "son and daughter," (meaning Judith and her intended husband) but, erased the words "son's and daughter's" afterwards, as the parties were not yet married, and were not "son and daughter" to the testator. It is true that Thomas Quiney would not have been Shakespeare's son, only his son-in-law; but the degrees of consanguinity were not at that time strictly marked and attended to, and in the same will Elizabeth Hall is called the testator's "niece," when she was, in fact, his granddaughter.

The bequest which has attracted most attention is an interlineation in the following words, "Itm I give unto my wief my second best bed with the furniture." Upon this passage has been founded, by Malone and others, a charge against Shakespeare, that he only remembered his wife as an afterthought, and then merely gave her "an old bed," as to the last part of the accusation, it may be answered, that the "second best bed" was probably that in which the husband and wife had slept, when he was in Stratford earlier in life, and every night since his retirement from the metropolis: the best bed was doubless reserved for visitors; if, therefore, he were to leave his wife any express legacy of the kind, it was doubtless natural and considerate that he should give her that piece of furniture, which for many years they had jointly occupied. With regard to the second part of the charge, our great dramatist has of late years been relieved from the stigma, thus attempted to be thrown upon him, by the mere remark, that Shakespeare's property being principally landed, the widow by the ordinary operation of the law of England would be entitled to, what is legally known by the term, dower.

It is extraordinary that this explanation should never have occurred to Malone, who was educated to the legal profession; but that many others should have followed him in his unjust imputation is not remarkable, recollecting how prone most of Shakespeare's biographers have been to repeat errors, rather than take the trouble to inquire for themselves, to sift out truth, and to balance probabilities.

"Witty above her sex, but that's not all; "Wise to salvation was good Mistress Hall. Shakespeare's only will, as it is called, that is, the Whol of him with whom she's now in bliss.

Then, passenger, hast ne'er a tear To weep with her that wept for all? The wise shall see her set at ease, Of equal honor, them with comforts cordial. Her love and life, her memory sweet, When thou hast ne'er a tear to shed."

The register informs us that she was buried on the 10th July, 1649. The following is copied from the register:

"1623. August 8. Mrs. Shakespeare,"

"1647. April 5. Thomas Nash, Gent."

We are indebted to Sir F. Madden, Keeper of the MSS. in the British Museum, for the use of a most exact collation of Shakespeare's will; in addition to copies which we have several times gone over, every line and word of it. We have printed it as nearly as possible as it appears in the original.

Another trifling circumstance leading to the conclusion that the will was prepared in January, though not executed until March, is that Shakespeare's sister is called Jone Hart, and not Jone Hart, redivo, as husband and wife died a few days before her; she was buried on 17 April, 1616, as "Will Hart, hatter." She was buried on 4 Nov. 1616. Both entries are contained in the parish registers of Stratford.

This vindication of Shakespeare's memory from the supposed neglect of his wife we owe to Mr. Knight, in his "Pictorial Shakes- pere." See also our account of "Shakespeare's Stricken Rime."
CHAPTER XXI

Monument to Shakespeare was erected anterior to the publication of the folio edition of his "Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies" in 1623, because it is thus distinctly mentioned by Leonard Digges, in the earliest copy of commemorative verses prefixed to that volume, which he states shall outlive the poet's tomb:

"when that stone is rent,
And time dissolves thy Stratford Monument,
Here we shall view still life.

This is the most ancient notice of it; but how long before 1623 it had been placed in the church of Stratford-upon-Avon, we have no means of deciding. It represents the poet sitting under an arch, with a banner before him, a pen in his right hand, and his left resting upon a sheet of paper: it has been the opinion of the best judges that it was cut by an English sculptor, (perhaps Thomas Stanton) and we may conclude, with Condell and others, that the artist was employed by Dr. Hall and his wife, and that the resemblance was as faithful as a bust, not modelled from the life, but probably, under living instructions, from some picture or cast, could be expected to be. Shakespeare is there considerately fuller in the face, than in the engraving on the title-page of the folio of 1623, which must have been made from a different original. It is noticed, more particularly that after he separated himself from the business and anxiety of a professional life, and withdrew to the permanent inpling of his native air, he became more robust, and the half-length upon his monument conveys the notion of a cheerful, good-tempered, and somewhat jovial man. The expression, we apprehend, is less intellectual than it must have been in reality, and the forehead, though lofty and expansive, is not strongly marked with thought: on the whole, it has rather a look of gaiety and good humour than of thought and reflection, and the lips are full, and apparently in the act of giving utterance to some amiable pleasantry.

On a tablet below the bust are placed the following inscriptions, which we give literally:

"Ivedio Pyvies, genio Socrateo, arte Maronem, \quad \text{and other Latin lines.}
Turner testis, pulchra in statua. Olympe labet.
Stay, Passenger, why goest thou by so fast?
Read, if thou canst, whom envieth Death hathCast Within this monument: Shakespeare; with whom Quick natrov disse: whose name doth deck ye Tome
For more than cost; and ye the full, ye he hath writ.
Leaves living art bvt page to serve his writ.

Oluit ano Dot, 1616.
Etatis. 58. die 23 Apri."

On a flat grave stone in front of the monument, and not far from the wall against which it is fixed, we read these lines; and Southwell's correspondent (whose letter was printed in 1597, from the original manuscript dated 1602) informs us, speaking of course from tradition, that they were written by Shakespeare himself:

"Good friend, for Iesse sake forbear
To digg the dust entombed here,
Best be ye man ye spares thes stone,
And ev'ry unkind he ye moves my bones."

The half-length on the title-page of the folio of 1623, engraved by Martin Droeshout, has certainly an expression of greater gravity than the bust on Shakespeare's monument; and, making some allowances, we can conceive the original of that resemblance more capable of producing the mighty works Shakespeare has left behind him, than the original of the bust. Yet, on the other hand, in the first rather looks like the author of " Lear" and "Macbeth," and the last like the author of "Much Ado about Nothing" and "The Merry Wives of Windsor": the one may be said to represent Shakespeare during his later years at Stratford, happy in the intercourse of his family and friends and the cheerful companion of his neighbours and townsman; and the other, Shakespeare in London, which he regarded as the great works he had written or projected, and with his mind somewhat burdened by the cares of his professional life. The last, therefore, is obviously the likeness which ought to accompany his plays, and which his "friends and fellows," Heminge and Condell, preferred to the head upon the "Stratford Monument," of the erection of which they must have been awarded.

There is one point in which both the engraving and the bust in a degree concurs,—we mean in the length of the upper lip, although the peculiarity seems exaggerated in the bust. We have no such testimony in favour of the truth of the resemblance of the bust as the engraving, opposite to which are the following lines, subscribed with the initials of Shakespeare, which are extracted from a letter written by him:

"Let the reader bear in mind that Ben Jonson was not a man who could be hired to commend, and that, taking it for granted he was sincere in his praise, he had the most unmeaningless of questions—whence the resemblance between the living man and the dead representation."

We may then Jonson's testimonial exactly as it stands in the folio of 1623, for it afterwards went through various literary changes.

"To the Reader.

"This Figure, that thou here seest put,
Was for gentle Shakespeare cut;
Wherein the Grauer had a strife
With Nature, to out-do the life;
O, could he but have drawne his wit
As well in brasse, as he hath hit
His face; the print would then surpass
All that we can ever expect.
But, since he cannot, Reader, looke
Not on his Picture, but his Book."

With this evidence before us, we have not hesitated in having an exact copy of Droeshout's engraving executed for the present edition of the Works of Shakespeare. It is, we believe, the first time it has ever been selected for the purpose since the appearance of the folio of 1623; and, although it may not be recommended by the appearance of so high a style of art as some other imputed resemblances, there is certainly not one which has such unequivocal claims to our notice on the grounds of fidelity and authenticity.

The fact that Droeshout was required to employ his skill upon a bad picture may tend to confirm our reliance upon the likeness: had there been so many pictures of Shakespeare as some have contended, but as we are far from believing, Heminge and Condell, when they were seeking for an appropriate ornament for the title-page of their folio, would hardly have chosen one which was an unskillful painting, if it had not been a striking resemblance. If only half the pictures said, within the last century, to represent Shakespeare, were in fact from the life, the poet must have living, who could have contradicted him, had the praise not been deserved. Jonson does not speak of the painter, but of the "graver," who are we inclined to think did full justice to the picture placed in his hands. Besides, Droeshout was a man of considerable eminence in his branch of art, and has left behind him undoubted proofs of his skill—some of them so much superior to the head of Shakespeare in the folio of 1623, as to leave the certainty that the picture from which he worked was a very coarse specimen of art.

1. It was originally, like many other monuments of the time, and some in Stratford church, coloured after the life, and so it continued until Malone, in his mistaken zeal for classical taste and severity, and forgetfulness of the condition in which the work was produced, had it painted one uniform stone-colour. He thus exposed himself to much unmerited ridicule. It was afterwards found that the head had the face and features of a man who never existed.

2. Besides, we may suppose that Jonson would be careful how he applauded the likeness, when there must have been so many persons possessed a vast stock of patience, if not a larger share of vanity, when he devoted so much time to sitting to the artists of the day; and the play-critics could have found no difficulty in procuring a picture, which had better pretensions to their endowments. Do we therefore, the very obfects of the engraving, which accompanies the folio of 1623, are a recommendation, since they serve to show that it was both genuine and faithful.

Aubrey is the only authority, beyond the inferences that may be drawn from the portraits, for the personal appearance of Shakespeare; and he sums up our great poet's physical and moral endowments in two words: "He was a handsome, well-shaped man, very good company, and of a very ready, and pleasant, and smooth wit." We have every reason to suppose that this is a correct description of his personal appearance, but we are unable to add to it from any other source, unless indeed we were to rely upon a few equivocal passages in the "Sonnets." Upon this authority it has been supposed by some that he was lame, and certainly the 37th and 39th Sonnets, without allowing for a figurative mode of expression, might be taken to import as much. If we were to consider the words literally, we should imagine that some accident had befallen him, which rendered it impossible that he should continue on the stage, and that therefore he was rendered of none account on it from then on. We know that such was the case with one of his most famous predecessors, Christopher Marlowe1, but we have no sufficient reason for believing it was the fact as regards Shakespeare; he is evidently speaking metaphorically in both places, where "lame" and "lameness" occur.

His most important, his best words that hiliarity, vivacity, and what Aubrey calls his "very ready, and pleasant, and smooth wit," (in our author's own words, "pleasant without scurrility, witty without affectation") cannot be doubted, since besides what may be gathered from his works, we have it from various quarters; and although nothing very good of this kind may have descended to us, we have sufcient reason to believe that he must have been most welcome visitor in all companies. The epithet, "gentle," has been frequently applied to him, twice by Ben Jonson, (in his lines before the engraving, and in his laudatory verses prefixed to the plays in the folio of 1623) and if it be not to be understood precisely in its modern acceptation, we may be sure that one such distinguishing feature in his character was general kindliness: he may have been "sharp and authenticobut never needlessly bitter or ill-natured": his wit had no malice for an ingredient. Fuller speaks of the "wit-combats" between Shakespeare and Ben Jonson at the convivial meetings at the Mermaid club, established by Sir Walter Ralph2; and he adds, "which two I behold like a Spanish galleon man-of-war, and a Merchant-Admiral, Master Jen-son, like the former, was built far higher in learning; solid, but slow in his performances: Shakespeare, with the English, man-of-war, lesser in bulk, but lighter in sailing, could turn with all tides; tack about, and take advantage of all winds by the quickness of his wit and invention." The simile is well chosen, and it came from a writer who seldom said anything ill. Connected with Ben Jonson's solidity and downright is a witticism between him and Shakespeare, said to have passed at a tavern. One of the Ashmolean manuscripts (No. 38) contains the following—

"Mr. Ben Johnson and Mr. Wm. Shakespeare being merrie at a tavern, Mr. Jonson begins this for his epitaph,

Here lies Ben Jonson
Who was unto me:
It gives it to Mr. Shakespeare to make up, which presently

That, while he liv'd, was a slow thing,
And now, being dead, is no thing!"

It is certainly not of much value, but there is a great difference between the estimate of an extempore joke at the moment of delivery, and the opinion we may form of it long afterwards, when it has been put upon paper, and transmitted to posterity under such names as these of Johnson and Jonson. The same excuse, if required, may be made for two other pieces of unpretending pleasantry between the same parties, which we subjoin in a note, because they relate to such men, and have been handed down to us upon something like authority.

Of a different character is a production preserved by the Heralds' College: it is an epitaph inscribed upon the tomb of Sir Thomas Stanley, in Tongue church; and Dugdale, whose testimony is unimpeachable, distinctly states that the "following verses were made by William Shakespeare, the late famous tragedian."

But Shakespeare, like all mortals, was only an earthly playwright and he had his human frailties. Fuller states:

"Written upon the west end thereof.

Not monumental stone preserves our fame,
Nor sky-aspiring pyramids our name.
The memory of our fame finds firmest stands
Shall out-live marble and defacers' hands.
When all to time's consumption shall be given,
Stanley, for whom these stands, shall stand in heaven."

With Malone and others, who have quoted them, we feel satisfied of the authenticity of these verses, though we cannot perhaps think, as he did, that the last line bears pointed and smooth even as they are taken out of the earth, so nature itself was all the art which was used upon him." Of course Fuller is here only referring to Shakespeare's classical acquisitions; his learning of a different kind, perhaps, exceeded that of all the ancients put together.

Shakespeare was god-father to one of Ben Jonson's children, and after the death of that little Jon of Jonson, Jonson came to cheer him up, and ask him why he was so melancholy?—"No, thank, Ben, (says he) I but have been considering a great while what should be the fitting gift for me to bestow upon my god-child, and I have resolve'd at last."—I presume, what says he?
I mean, Ben, I'll even give him a dozen of Latten spoons, and one of them for his hair.

Of course the joke depends upon the pen between Latin, and the mixed metal called latten. The above is from a MS. of Sir H.
Estrange, who quotes the authority of Mr. Donne. It is inserted in Mr. Tho. H. the amusing volume, printed for the Camden Society, under the title of "Anecdotes and Traditions," p. 9. The next is from a MS. called "Poetical Characters," formerly in the Harrian Collection —

Verstes by Ben Jonson and Shakespeare, occasioned by the "Jonson. If but stage-actors all the world displays, Where shall we find spectators of their plays?

such, "strong marks of the hand of Shakespeare." The coincidence between the line

"Nor sky-aspiring pyramids our name,"

and the passage in Milton's Epitaph upon Shakespeare, prefixed to the folio of 1662,

"Or that his hollow'd relics should be hid Under a star-pointing pyramyd;"

seems, as far as we recollect, to have escaped notice.

We have thus brought into a consecutive narrative (with as little interruption of its thread as, under the circumstances, and with such disjointed materials, seemed to us possible) respecting the life of the "myriad-minded Shakespeare," with which our predecessors were acquainted, or which, from various sources, we have been able, during a long series of years, to collect. Yet, after all, comparing what we really know of our great dramatist with what we might possibly have known, we cannot but be aware how little has been accomplished. "Of William Shakespeare," says one of our greatest living authors of

1 The following reaches us in a more questionable shape: it is from a MS. of the time of Charles I., preserved in the Bodleian Library, which contains also poems by Herrick and others.

INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

THE TEMPEST.

("The Tempest" was first printed in the folio edition of "Mr. William Shakespeare's Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies," published 1623, but the play was not acted until 1611. It occupies nineteen pages, viz. from p. i, to p. 19 inclusive. It fills the same place in the folio of 1632, 1664, and 1685.

A material fact, in reference to the date of the first production of "The Tempest," has only been recently ascertained: we allude to the notice of the performance of it, before King James, on Nov. 16, 1611: the passage, in its correctness, is extracted from the "Accounts of the Revels at Court," edited by Mr. P. Cunningham for the Shakespeare Society, p. 211; the memorandum is in the following form:"

Hallomus nyght was presented att Whitsall before the Kinges Majestye a play called the Tempest.

In the margin is inserted the additional circumstance, that the performance was "by the King's Players," and there can be no reasonable doubt that it was Shakespeare's drama, which had been written for that company. When it had been so written, is still a point of difficulty; but the probability, we think, is that it was selected by the Master of the Revels for representation at Court in 1611, on account of its novelty and popularity on the public stage. Eleven other dramas, as appears by the same document, were exhibited between Oct. 30, and Nov. 16, 1611; and it is remarkable that ten of these (as far as we possess any information respecting them) were comparatively new plays, and with regard to the eleventh, it was not more than three years old. We may, perhaps, be warranted in supposing, therefore, that "The Tempest" was also not then an old play.

It seems to us, likewise, that the internal evidence, derived from style and language, clearly indicates that it was a late production, and that it belongs to about the same period of our great dramatist's literary history as his "Winter's Tale," which was also chosen for a Court-play, and represented at Whitehall only four days after "The Tempest" had been exhibited. In point of construction, it must be admitted at once that "The Tempest" is not modern, but classical, and "The Winter's Tale" is a piece in which the unities are utterly disregarded, while in "The Tempest" they are strictly observed. It is only in the involved and parenthetical character of some of the speeches, and in the occasional insertions of accounts, that we would institute a comparison between "The Tempest" and "The Winter's Tale," and would infer from thence that they belong to about the same period.

Without here advert ing to the real or supposed origin of the story, or to temporary incidents which may have suggested any part of the plot, we may remark that there is one piece of external evidence which strongly tends to confirm the opinion that "The Tempest" was composed not very long before Ben Jonson wrote one of his comedies: we allude to his "Bartholomew Fair," and to a passage in "The Induction," frequently mentioned, and which we concur in thinking was intended as a link not only at "The Tempest," but at "The Winter's Tale." Ben Jonson's "Bartholomew Fair," was acted in 1614, and written perhaps in the preceding year, during the popularity of Shakespeare's two plays; and there we find the following words, which we reprint, for the first time, exactly as they stand in the original edition, where italic type seems to have been used to make the allusions more distinct and obvious:—

"If there be never a Servant, do you know who can do these parts? and what sort of Antiques? Hee is loth to make Nature afraid in his Players like those that begot Tales, Tempestes, and such like Drolleries. The Tempestes, and "drolleries," which last Shakespeare himself employs in "The Tempest," (Act iii. sc. 3) seem so applicable, that they can hardly relate to any thing else.

The interesting, however, is, what form "The Tempest" was put on at Court in 1611 was only a revival of an older play, acted before 1596, and such may have been the case: we do not, however, think it probable, for several reasons. One of these is an apparent difference in circumstances pointed out by Farmer; viz. that in "The Merchant of Venice," written before 1598, the name of Stephano is invariably pronounced with the accent on the second syllable, while in "The Tempest," the proper pronunciation is as constantly required by the verse. It seems certain, therefore, that Shakespeare found his error in the interval, and he may have learnt it from Ben Jonson's "Every Man in His Humor," in which Shakespeare performed, and in the original list of characters to which, in the edition of 1601, the names not only of Stephano, but of Prospero occur.

Another circumstance shows, we think almost decisively, that "The Tempest" was written before the translation of Montaigne's Essays, by Florio, made its first appearance in print. In Act ii. sc. 1, is a passage so closely copied from Florio's version, as to leave no doubt of identity. It will be said that these lines may have been an insertion subsequent to the original production of the plays; but it seems that the passage is not such as could have been introduced, like some others, to answer a temporary or complimentary purpose, and that it is given as a necessary and continuous part of the dialogue.

The Rev. Mr. Hunter, in his very ingenious and elaborate "Disquisition on the Tempest," has referred to this and to other points, with a view of proving that every body has been mistaken, and that one of his latest was, one of Shakespeare's earliest works. With regard to the point derived from Montaigne's Essays by Florio, 1603, he has contended, that if the particular passage is not the work of Shakespeare, we must have no slightest hint Shakespeare may have seen the translation in manuscript; but unless he saw it in print or manuscript as early as 1596, nothing is established in favour of Mr. Hunter's argument; and surely when other circumstances show that "The Tempest" was not written till 1610, we need not hesitate long in deciding that our great dramatist went to no manuscript authority, but took the passage almost verbatim, as he found it in the complete edition. In the same way Mr. Hunter has argued, that "The Tempest" was not omitted by Meres in his list in 1599, but that it is found there under its second title, of "Love's Labour's Won," but this is little better than a gratuitous assumption, even supposing we were to admit that "All's well that ends well" is not the play intended by Meres. Our notion is, that "All's well that ends well" was originally called "Love's Labour's Won," and Malone (Shakes, by Boswell, vol. x. p. 78,) quotes this important passage from Florio's translation of Montaigne with a singular degree of incorrectness: with many minor variations he substitutes partitions for "dividens," and omits the words "no mattering of lands" altogether. This is a case in which verbal, and even literal, error is serious; and surely this is the case we are now considering.

In the Introduction to "The Winter's Tale," we have assigned a reason, founded upon a passage in E. Greene's "Pandosto," showing that "The Tempest" was another of the same sort of play.

Mr. Hunter contends that in "The Tempest," "love's labours"

This is a case in which verbal, and even literal, error is serious; and surely this is the case we are now considering.
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

that it was revived, with some other changes, under a new name in 1605 or 1606.

Neither can we agree with Mr. Hunter in thinking that he has placed the idea of The Tempest in Lear. The play was suggested to Shakespeare by the storm, in July 1609, which dispersed the fleet under Sir George Somers and Sir Thomas Gates, of which an account was published by a person of the name of Jourdan in the following year; but, as we have already said, satisfactorily made out by Malone, and the mention of "the still-vex'd Bermoothes" by Shakespeare seems directly to connect the play with Jourdan's "Discovery of the Bermudas, otherwise called the Bermudas," printed in 1610. We are told at the end of the play, in the folio of 1623, that the scene is laid "in an uninhabited island," and Mr. Hunter has concluded that this island was Lampedusa, which unquestionably lies in the latitude of the Bermudas the scene of Shakespeare's play could take. Our objection to this theory is two-fold: first, we cannot persuade ourselves, that Shakespeare had any particular island in mind; and, secondly, if he had meant to lay his scene in Lampedusa, he could hardly have used Mr. Thoresby's name in some part of his performance: in consequence of the deficiency of scenery, &c., it was the constant custom with our early dramatists to mention distinctly, and often more at once, where the action was supposed to take place. As a minor point, we may add, that we know of no extant English authority to which he could have gone for information, and we do not suppose that he consulted the Turco Greco of Crusins, the only other authority quoted by Mr. Hunter.

No novel, in prose or verse, to which Shakespeare resorted for the incidents of "The Tempest" has yet been discovered; and, that there were any allusions, or points of resemblance, between T. Warton that he had seen such a tale, it has never come to light, and we apprehend that he must have been mistaken. We have turned over the pages of our books, we believe, every Italian novel ever translated into English, but we have found no traces of the incidents of "The Tempest," but without success. The ballad entitled "The Inchanited Island," printed in "Farther Particulars regarding Shakespeare and his Contemporaries," is a tolerably large poem than the play, from which it varies in the names, as well as in some points of the story, as if for the purpose of concealing its connection with a production which was popular on the stage. Our opinion decisively is, that it was founded upon some story containing traces of the incidents of "The Tempest," and not upon any ancient narrative to which Shakespeare also might have been indebted. It may be remarked, that here also no locality is given to the island: on the contrary, we are told, if it ever had any existence but in the imagination of the poet, that it had disappeared—

"From that date forth the Isle has been
By wandering sailors never seen:
Beneath the sea, which breaks and roars
Above its savage rocky shores,
Now is known to sleep.

Mr. Thoms has pointed out some resemblances in the incidents of an early drama, "The Enchanted Isle," by Diderot and Sibert; and "The Tempest"; his theory, that a drama upon a similar story was at an early date performed in Germany, and that if it were not taken from Shakespeare's play, it was perhaps derived from his source, is no new opinion. He is preparing a translation of it for the Shakespeare Society, and we shall then be better able to form an opinion, as to the real or supposed connection between the two.

When Coleridge tells us (Ld. Ber. ii. p. 94) that "The Tempest" is a specimen of the purely romantic Drama," he of course refers to the nature of the plot and personages: in one sense of the words, it is not a "romantic drama," insomuch as the moral is more of the romantic kind than of the tragedy, which contains no allusions to good or bad in 1811, and three years earlier Coleridge had spoken of "The Tempest," as certainly one of Shakespeare's latest works, judging from the language only: Schlegel was of the same opinion, without consulting any other sources; and we have attempted a comparison between "The Tempest" and "Midsummer Night's Dream," adding, "The preponderance of thought in "The Tempest," exhibited in its profound and original characterisation, strikes us at once; but we must also admire the deep sense of the art (Sinnlichkeit Kunst) which is apparent in the structure of the whole, in the wise economy of its means, and in the skill with which the scaffolding is raised to sustain the marvellous aerial structure." Ueber Dram. Kunst und Litt. Vol. iii. p. 128, edit. 1817.

THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

"[The Two Gentlemen of Verona] was first printed in the folio of 1623, where it occupies nineteen pages, viz. from p. 20 to 39. It is the last of the division of Comedies. It is there divided into Acts and Scenes. It also stands second in the later folios."

The only ascertainet fact with which we are acquainted, in reference to "The Two Gentlemen of Verona," is, that it is included in the list of Shakespeare's Plays which Francis Meres furnished in his PalladisTamia, 1598. It comes first in that enumeration, and although this is a very slight circumstance, it may afford some confirmation to the opinion, founded upon internal evidence of plot, style, and characters, that it was one of the earliest, if not the very earliest of Shakespeare's original comedies. It first appeared in the folio of 1623, where it first appeared, but that is no criterion of the period at which it was originally written. We would, therefore, like to fix any part of the great dramatist very soon after he joined a theatrical company; and at all events we do not think it likely that it was composed subsequently to 1591. We should be inclined to place it, as indeed it stands in the works of Meres, immediately before "Love's Labour's Lost." Meres calls it the "Gentlemen of Verona," and Dr. Johnson, in his "Dictionary of the English Language," 1755, first argued that it was produced in 1595, but he afterwards adopted 1591 as the more probable date. The quotes to which he refers, in truth, prove nothing, either as regards 1595 or 1591.

If the "Two Gentlemen of Verona" were not the offspring merely of the author's invention, we have yet to discover the source of its plot. Points of resemblance have been dwelt upon in connection with Sir Philip Sidney's "Arcadia," 1590, and the "Diana" of Montemayor, which was not translated into English by B. Yonge until 1608; but the incidents, common to the drama and to these two works, are only such as are found in every romance, or would present themselves spontaneously to the mind of a young man: the one is in the command of banditti by Valentine; and the other the assumption of male attire by Julia, for a purpose nearly similar to that of Viola in "Twelfth Night." Extracts from the "Arcadia" are found only to be found in "Shakespeare's Library," vol. ii. The notion of some critics, that "The Two Gentlemen of Verona" contains few or no marks of Shakespeare's hand, is a strong proof of their incompetence to form a judgment.

THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

"[A Most pleasant and excellent conceited Comedy, of Sir John Falstaff, and the merry Wives of Windsor. En-}mixed with sundrie variable and pleasing humors, of Sir Hugh the Welsh knight, Justice Shallow, and his wife Cousin the Slander. With whole swaggering vaunts of Altrum, Postell, and Corporal Nym. By William Shakespeare. As it hath bene diners times Acted by the right Honorable my Lord Chamberlaines servants. Both before her Maiestie, and elsewhere. London Printed by T. G. for Arthur Johnson, and are to be sold at his shop in Powles Church-yard, at the sign of the Flower de Leuse and the Crown. 1602." 4to. 27 leaves.

"Every Man in his Humour," while we admit the senten-}ces, we cannot by any means allow the conclusions, of Mr. Hunter's reasoning."
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

The 4to. of 1600, was "printed by T. H. for R. Merlinh." etc. In the folio, 1623, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" occupies twenty-two pages, viz. from p. 69 to p. 80 inclusive, in the division "Comedies." It also stands third in the three later folios."

This comedy was printed for the first time in a perfect state in the folio of 1623: it had come out in an imperfect state in 1602, and again in 1619, in both instances for a bookseller of the name of Arthur Johnson; Arthur Johnson acquired the copyright, and, quoting from John Busby, and the original entry, and the assignment of the play, ran thus in the Registers of the Stationers' Company. 18 Jan. 1601. John Busby] An excellent and pleasant confection of Sir John Falstaff, and the merry wyves of Windsor, (the title-page following the description in the entry) appeared in quarto with the date of 1602. It has been the custom to look upon this edition as the first, but it certainly has not introduced the allusion enlarged and improved to the form in which it appears in the folio of 1623. After the most minute examination, we are not of that opinion: it did not introduce the 4to. out of the quarto; and our conviction is, that is, the first edition of "Henry V." in 1600, it was made up, for the purpose of sale, partly from notes taken at the theatre, and partly from memory, and that the numbers being the same as in both parts as ordered out by the copist of the theatre to the actors. It is to be observed, that John Busby, who assigned "The Merry Wives of Windsor" to Arthur Johnson in 1602, was the same bookseller who, two years before, had joined in the publication of the undoubtedly surreptitious "Henry V." An exact reprint of the 4to. of 1602 has recently been made by the Shakespeare Society, under the care of Mr. J. O. Halliwell; and any person comparing it with that very hasty and mangled outline, and the complete and authorized comedy in the folio of 1623, printed from the play-house manuscript in the hands of Ho- ningham and Condell: on this comparison we rely for evidence to establish the position, that the 4to. of 1602 was not only published without the consent of the author, or of the company for which it was written, but that it was fraudulently made up by some person or persons who attended at the theatre for the purpose. It will be found, that there is no variation in the progress of the plot, and that although one or two transpositions may be pointed out, of most of the speeches, necessary to the development of the connexion of the parts, is lost, or fragmentary: all are made to look like prose or verse, apparently at the mere caprice of the writer, and the edtion is wretchedly printed in a large type, as if the object had been to bring it to the public, in order to take advantage of the interest.

That temporary interest perhaps arose more immediately out the representation of the comedy before Queen Elizabeth, during the Christmas holidays preceding the date of the entry in the Stationers' Registers: the title-page states, that it had been noted "by the Lord Chamberlain's servants" before the Queen "and elsewhere:" but was perhaps at the Globe on the Bankside, and we may suppose, that it had been brought out in the commencement of the summer season of 1600, before the death of Sir Thomas Lucy. If the "dozen white lutes" in the first scene were meant to ridicule him, Shakespeare could not have lived long. But it is certain that the line was reprinted in its original form, and that the play, was "performed" after the death of the object of it. That it continued a favourite play we can readily believe, and we learn that it was acted before James I., not long after he came to the throne: the very same reminiscence accounts of the "Revels at Court," in the latter end of 1604.

"By his Majesty's players. The Sunday following A Play of the Merry Wives of Windsor." 1

This representation occurred "the play following" Nov. 1st, 1604.

What has led some to imagine that the surreptitious impression of 1602 was the comedy as it first came from the hand of the composer, and that the later editions, which transposed the order of the acts and scenes, which with it was composed. This tradition, when traced to its source, can be carried back no farther than 1702: John 1 See Mr. Peter Cunningham's "Extractions from the Accounts of the Revels at Court," (printed for the Shaksper Society) p. 292. We Dennis in that year printed his "Comical Gallants," founded upon the "Merry Wives of Windsor," and in the dedication he states, that "the comedy was written at the command of Queen Elizabeth, and by her special direction, and that in order to see it acted, that she commanded it to be finished in fourteen days." Dennis gives no authority for any part of this assertion, but because he knew Dryden, it is supposed to have been written in 1673, and indeed it was printed by the shop of John Davenant, it has been conjectured that the latter might have communicated it to the former. We own that we place little or no reliance on the story, especially recollecting that Dennis had to a certain extent a case of plagiarism in showing that Shakespeare had composed the comedy in an incredibly short period, and consequently that it was capable of improvement. The assertion by Dennis was repeated by Davenant, Pollock, etc.; and, however exaggerated, was a degree of currency and credit to which it seems by no means entitled. It has been a disputed question, in what part of the series of dramas in which Falstaff is introduced, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" ought to be read: Johnson thought it came in between "Henry IV." part ii. and "Henry V." Malone, on the other hand, argued, that it should be placed between the two parts of "Henry IV." but the truth is, that almost insuperable difficulties present themselves to either hypothesis, and we doubt whether the one or the other is well founded. Shakespeare, having for some reason been compelled to introduce Falstaff into his play, there were persons he might be immediately surrounded, and Bardolph, Pistol, Nym, and Mrs. Quickly, naturally presented them- selves to his mind: he spared to the audience, with whom they had a large following, to show the characters still to be Falstaff's companions; and though Shakespeare had in fact hanged two of them in "Henry V.," and Mrs. Quickly had died, he might trust to the forgetfulness of those before whom the comedy was to be represented, and give little for the consideration, since so eagerly debated, in what part of the series "The Merry Wives of Windsor" ought to be placed. Shakespeare might sit down to write the comedy without reflecting upon the manner in which he had previously disposed of some of the characters he was about to introduce. Any other mode of solving the modern difficulty is unsatisfactory, and do not believe that it ever presented itself to the mind of our great dramatist.

The earliest notice of any of the persons in "The Merry Wives of Windsor" is contained in Dekker's play called "Satromastix," 1602, where one of the characters observes, "we must have false fires to amuse these spangle-habees, these true heers of master Justice Shallow." These allusions must have been made soon after Shakespeare's comedy had appeared, and were, if we are to judge by the Justice Shallow of "Henry IV." part ii.

With regard to the supposed sources of the plot, they have all been collected by Mr. Halliwell in the appendix to his re- publication of the "History of the English Dramatic Literature," in 1602: the tale of "The Two Lovers of Pisa," the only known English version of the time, is also contained in "Shakespeare's Library," Vol. ii.; but our opinion is, that the true original of the story (if Shakespeare did not himself invent the incidents) has not come down to us.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

"Measure for Measure" was first printed in the folio of "Mr. William Shakespeare's Comedies, Histories, & Tragedies," 1623, where it occupies twenty-four pages, viz. from p. 61 to p. 84, inclusive, in the division of "Comedies." The quarto, first printed, reprinted in the later folios of 1662, 1664, and 1685.

In the "History of English Dramatic Poetry," III. 68, it is remarked, that although it seems clear that Shakespeare kept Whetstone's "Promos and Cassandra" in his eye, while writing "Measure for Measure," it is probable that he also made use of "Forman's Dream of a Spirit at Christmas Time," and the same story was treated. I was led to form this opinion from the constant habit of dramatists of that period to employ the productions of their predecessors, and from the extreme likelihood that, when the dramatist was trying in all directions for stories which they could convert to their purpose, they would not have passed over the novel by Giraldi Cinthio, which had not only been translated, but had no previous existing knowledge of any early performance of "The Merry Wives of Windsor."

actually converted into a drama nearly a quarter of a century after his death. In Shak- speare’s "Promes and Cassandra," a play in two parts, was printed in 1576, though, as far as we know, never acted, and he subsequently introduced a translation of the novel (which he admitted to be its original) in his "Quarto of the Three". 2 No plays, however, excepting "Promes and Cassandra," and "Measure for Measure," founded on the same incidents, have reached our day, and Whetstone’s is the only existing ancient version of Shakespeare’s plays.

The Title of Cinthio’s novel, the fifth of the eighth Decad of his "Hedwomithy", gives a sufficient account of the progress of his story as he relates it, and will show its connexion with Shakespeare’s "Othello". Messianico, the Imaginari, in Ispri, once What, in a young vinegar, viola- tore of a vergine, and condemned à morte: la sorella cerca di liberarsi: Juriste di speranza alla donna di pigliarla per mog- lìa: per cui, a lui si face; e la notizia dissantisima Juriste fa tagliar al giovane la testa, e la manda alla sorella. Ella non vuole assicurare l’Imaginari, che quale sua esposa adJuriste la donna; possa lo far dalle due cose. La don- na, libera, e con lui si vive amorevissimi.

Whetstone adopts these incidents pretty exactly in his "Promes and Cassandra," but Shakespeare varies from them chiefly by the introduction of Mariana, and by the final union between the Duke and his lady, chosen for performance in Shakespeare’s "Julio in William,” which was produced in English, 1604. This fact is stated in Edmund Tylney’s "History of the Exces- ses of the revels from the end of Oct. 1604, till the same date in 1606,” preserved in the Audet Office: the name of the master of the revels runs alternation, as follows:

"By his Mat‘s Plagers. On St. Stevens night in the Hall, a Play called Money for Messer."

In the column of the account headed "The Poets which may be Plagers," we find the name of "Shakssbery," entered, which was the mode in which the ignorant scribe, who prepared the account, spelt the name of our great dramatist. This is the first allusion (such as to the war) with Spain, "the sweete," of course, an act of omission. However, such could not have been the case with "The Comedy of Errors," and "Love’s Labour Lost," which were written before 1598, and which were also performed at Christmas and Twelfth-tide, 1599-5. Tyrwhitt was at one time of opinion, from the passage in A. II. se. 4.

"As these blacke masks."
"Proclaim an ever-finding beauty ten times louder. Than beauty could display," that this drama was "written to be acted at Court, as Shake- speare would hardly have been guilty of such an indecorum to set a common audience. He was afterwards disposed to amend his action, but it is supported by the quotations from the Revels account, unless we imagine, as is not at all impossible, that the lines respecting "black masks" and some others (to use Tyrwhitt’s words), "of particular flattry to the courtiers." It is known that the play, on account of its popularity, had been chosen for performance before the king. One of these passages seems to have been the following, which may have had reference to the crowd attending the revival. James I. in London, not very long before "Measure for Measure," had acted a Whet-hall.

"...and even so."

The general, subject to a well-wish’d King, stood to his nobleness in unobvious kindness, Crow’d to his presence, where their unsought love Must needs appear offensive."

1 Whetstone’s "Hegotamor" is not pagd, but "the rare His- torie of Promes and Cassandra," commences on Sigm. N. i b. 5

Steevnes quotes a passage from "A True Narration of the Entertainment of the King," his relation from the essay of London, printed in 1606, where it is said, "he was faine to publish an inhibition against the inordinate and daily acseys of people comming." Taken with the context, the lines make more sense.

We may, therefore, arrive pretty safely at the conclusion, that "Measure for Measure" was written either at the close of 1599, or in the beginning of 1600.

"Measure for Measure" was first printed in the folio of 1623; and exactly fifty years afterwards was published Sir William Davenant’s "Law against Lovers," founded upon it, and "Much ado about Nothing." With some ingenuity it is said that the "Measure" was introduced into London, and to "Measure for Measure" Shakespeare’s throughout, is to me the most painful, say rather, the only painful part of his genuine works. The comic and tragic parts equally border on the middle—the one being disgusting, the other horrible; and the pardon and marriage of Angelo not merely baffles the strong indignant claim of justice (for cruelty, with lust and damnable baseness, cannot be forgiven, because we cannot conceive them as being mo- ral), but like a baseness degrading to the charac- ter of woman." In the course of Lectures on Shakespeare delivered in the year 1818, Coleridge pointed especially to the artifice of Isabella, and her seeming consent to the suit of Angelo, when she is an ancient character of the female sex. He then called "Measure for Measure" only the "least agreeable" of Shakespeare’s dramas.

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

"The Comedie of Errors" was first printed in the folio of 1623, where it occupies sixteen pages, viz. from p. 58 to p. 109 inclusive. In LeRoy’s "Court of Comedies," it was inserted in the three subsequent impressions of the same volume.

We have distinct evidence of the existence of an old play called "The Historie of Error," which was acted at Hampton Court on new-year’s night, 1576-7. The same play, in all probability, was repeated at Windsor on twelfth night, 1582-3, though, in the accounts of the Master of the Revels, it is called "The Historie of Ferrar." Boswell (Mal. Shakep. III. 408) not very happily conjectured, that this "Historie of Ferrar" was some piece by George Ferrars, as if it had been named after its author, who had been dead some years: the fact, no doubt, is, that the clerk who prepared the account merely wrote the title by his ear. Thus we see that, shortly before Shakespeare is supposed to have come to London, a play was performed, and that a "History of Error" might be founded. "The Historie of Error" was, probably, an early adaptation of the "Menadromi of Plauto," of which a free translation was published in 1595, under the long title:

"A pleasant and fine Conceited Comadie, taken out of the most excellent witty Poet Plautus: Chosen purposely from out the rest, as least harmefull, and yet most delightful. Written in English by W. W.—London, Printed by Tho. Creede, and are to be sold by William Barley, at his shop in Gratious streete. 1595." 4to.

The title-page, therefore, does not (as we might be led to suppose from Steevens’s note in "Of Plays") mean that the "Menadromi" by name, but we learn from it the com- mencement of the piece itself.

Ryton was of opinion, that Shakespeare was not under the "plotting obstacles," but it is supported by the quotation from the Revels account, unless we imagine, as is not at all impossible, that the lines respecting "black masks" and some others (to use Tyrwhitt’s words), "of particular flattry to the courtiers." It is known that the play, on account of its popularity, had been chosen for performance before the king. One of these passages seems to have been the following, which may have had reference to the crowd attending the revival. James I. in London, not very long before "Measure for Measure," had acted a Whet-hall.

"...and even so."

The general, subject to a well-wish’d King, stood to his nobleness in unobvious kindness, Crow’d to his presence, where their unsought love Must needs appear offensive."

1 In Act I. and Act II. of "The Comedy of Errors," in the folio of 1623, Antonibals of Syracuse is twice called Errotes and Errotis, which Blackstone entertained the belief, from the "long hollering" which was the "Comedy of Errors," that it was "among Shakespeare's more early productions;" this is plausible, but we imagine, from their general dissimilarity to the style of our great dramatist, that these "long hollering verses" formed a portion of the first draft, of which Shakespeare made more use as answered his purpose: they are quite in the style of plays anterior to the time of Shakespeare, and it is easy to distinguish such portions of the comedy as he must have written.

The earliest notice we have of "The Comedy of Errors," is by Meres, in his Palladis Tamia, 1598, where he gives it to Shakespeare under the name of "Errors." How much before that period it had been written and printed the Preface to the play can only speculate. Malone refers to a part of the dialogue in Act III. sec. 2, where Dromio of Syracuse is conversing with his master about the "kitchen wenches" who insisted upon mistaking him and who who was deceived in his identity. Shakespeare did not have the illusion to the hostility between France and her "heir," after the war had been so long carried on, that interest in, or attention to it in the comedy, had been relaxed.

Another question by Antipholus, and the answer of Dromio, immediately preceding what is above quoted, is remarkable on a different account:

"Ant. S. Where Scotland?

"Jor. S. I found it by the barrenness; hard, in the palm of the hand."

"From this passage," (says Malone) "we may learn that this comedy was not revived after the accession of the Scotch monarch to the English throne; otherwise it would probably have been struck out by the Master of the Revels." However, we are now certain (a curious fact hitherto unknown), that "The Comedy of Errors" was represented at W. and J. in 1602, and that the Master of the Revels allowed the production of the play. Hence, also, the name of Shackerd, or Shakespeare, being inserted in the margin as "the Poet which mayd the Playe." The Comedy of Errors" was, therefore, not only "revived," but represented at court very soon after James I. came to the crown; we may be confident, however, that the question and answer respecting Scotland were not repeated on the occasion, though retained in the MS. used by the actor-editors for the folio of 1623.

In his Lectures on Shakespeare in 1818, Coleridge passed over "The Comedy of Errors" without particular or separate observation; but in his Literary Remains we find it twice mentioned (vol. II. p. 110 and 114), in none of the same terms. Shakespeare, he observes, "has in this piece presented us with a legitimate farce, in exactness consonant with the philosophical principles and character of farce, as distinguished from comedy and entertainments. A proper farce is mainly distinguished from comedy by the license allowed, and even required, in the fable, in order to produce strange and laughable situations. The story need not be probable, and it is often to be gathered from the circumstance, he places "Errors" second, in two persons, yet these are mere individual accidents, causa mensae, and the stage will not excuse the inserting mile. But farces are allowed on the stage, and we are justified in so doing by the laws of its end and constitution."

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

"[Much ado about Nothing. As it hath been sundry times publickly acted by the right honourable, the Lord Chamberlain his seruants. Written by William Shakespeare—"Shakespeare," V. S. Andrew Wise, and William Aspley. 1600. 4to. 36 leaves."

It is also printed in the division of "comedies" in the folio 1623, where it occupies twenty-one pages, viz., from p. 101, to 121, and from p. 122 to 123. It was probably written in 1600.

We have no information respecting "Much Ado about Nothing" anterior to the appearance of the 4to. edition in 1600, excepting that it was entered for publication on the books of the Stationers' Company, on the 26th of August in that year, in the following manner:—

"23 Aug. 1600.

And, Wise Wm. Aspley! Two books, the one called Muche ado about Nothinges, and the other The Second Part of the History of King Henry the fifth, with the Humours of Sir John Falstaff: wrytten by Mr. Shakespeare."

There is another memorandum in the same register, bearing date on the "4th of August," without the year, which runs in the margin "the 4th day 1600," and which, though it seems likely, might be a mistake, is my copy of the book. Every man in his Humour, a book. The Comedy of Much Ado about Nothinges, a book."

Opposite the titles of the above, the following marginal notes are inserted:—

"The first entry, there is little doubt, belongs to the year 1600, for such is the date immediately preceding it; and, as Malone observes, the clerk seeing 1600 just above his pen, when he inserted the notice for staying the publication of "Much Ado about Nothing" and the two other plays, did not think it necessary to repeat the figures. The caveat of the 4th August against the publication had most likely been withdrawn by the 23rd of the same month. The object of the "Stay" was probably to prevent the publication of "Henry V.," or "Every Man in his Humour," and "Much Ado about Nothing," by any other booksellers than Wise and Aspley.

"The title of "Much Ado about Nothing," which came out in 1600, (and we know of no other impression in that form) is a well-printed work for the time, and the type is unusually good. It contains no hint from which we can at all distinctly infer the date of its composition," but Malone supposed that it was written early in the year in which it came from the press. Considering, however, that the comedy would have to be put on, acted, and become popular, before it was published, or at least advertised, it is possible that the book by Shakespeare may reasonably be carried back as far as the autumn of 1599. That it was popular, we can hardly doubt; and the extracts from the Stationers' Registers seen to show that booksellers would fritter it to procure it to be printed.

It is not included by Meres in the list he furnishes in his Palladis Tamia, 1598; and "England's Parlament," 1600, contains no quotation from it. If any conclusion could be drawn from this fact, it might be, that it was written subsequent to the appearance of one work, and prior to the publication of the other. Respecting an early performance of it at Court, Steevens supplies us with the subsequent information:

"Much Ado about Nothing (as 4 understand from one of Mr. Vertue's MSS. formerly passed under the title of Benedict and Beatrice.) Heminge, the player, received on the 30th, 1607, a warrant from the King for exhibiting six plays at Hampton Court, among which was this comedy." The change of title, if indeed it was made, could only have been temporary. The division of Acts (Scenes are not marked) were first made in the folio of 1623. The adaptation of "Much Ado about Nothing," coupled with the chief incidents of another Shakespeare's drama, (see the "Introduction") to Measure for Measure, a play by Beaumont and Fletcher, was first printed in the edition of his works in 1673.

The serious portion of the plot of "Much Ado about Nothing" is conjectured to be a corruption of erraticus. Antipholus of Ephesus, in the same way, is once called Serpens (misprinted, perhaps, for serpent) and there are two Antipholuses of Ephesus; and Antipholus of Syracuse, and "Antipholus of Ephesus," the episdes of erraticus and curreptus were not obtained by Shakespeare from \[\text{\textit{Iliad}}\]. The list supplied by Meres is of twelve plays; and, if anything is to be gathered from the circumstance, he places "Errors" second, "Gentlemen of Verona" coming before it.
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

p. 144, inclusive. It was reprinted in 1631, 4to, "by W.S., for John Smeatons," and the title-page states that it was published "as it was acted by his Majesties Servauns at the Blacke-Friers, at the Blacke-Friers, 1632, for the stage. In his course of Lectures delivered in 1818, Corderly was so convinced upon this point, that he said,
"the internal evidence was indisputable;" and in his "Life-
"Labour's Lost," while Arden is more frequently introduced as "the Braggart" than by his name. Steevens, after stating that he had not been able to discover any novel from which this comedy had been derived, adds that "the story of the features of an ancient romance;" but it is not at all impossible that Shakespeare found some corresponding incidents in an Italian play. However, after a long search,
I have not met with any that suggest any such derivation.
Shakespeare, it most likely came into this country in a printed form.

The question whether Shakespeare visited Italy, and at what period of his life, cannot properly be considered as determined; but it is a very important point in relation both to his biography and works. It was certainly a very general custom for our poets to travel thither towards the close of the reign of James I.; and our earliest authority for the visit, in the words of Mr. Robert Greene, is given in his "Repentance," 1592, that he had been in Italy and Spain: Thomas Nash, about the same date, mentions what he had seen in France and Italy; and Daniel has several early sonnets on his "going to Italy," and his residence there. Some of our most celebrated actors of that time also made journeys across the Alps; and Mr. Hallwell, in the notes to his "Coventy Mysteriws," printed for Shakespeare, 1633, says that "we have seen, performed Dogberry in "Much Ado about Nothing," was in Rome in 1601.

It is vain to attempt to fix with any degree of accuracy the date when at any particular play the title-page has been newly corrected and augmented:
we are likewise told that it was presented before Queen Elizabeth "this last Christmas." It was not uncommon for dramatists to revise and add to their plays when they were published for extempore performances, as in the case with "Love's Labour's Lost." "The last Christmas" probably meant Christmas, 1598; for the year at this period did not end until 26th March. It seems likely that the com-day had been written six or even eight years before that;
but it was revised in 1598, with certain corrections and augmentaments in the history of the middle ages, with their Courts of Lannoy, and all that is connected with it. In the case of many kings, with a sort of epicolic interest, and may well be

"Nothing," which relates to Hero, Claudius, and "John the Bastard," is extremely similar to the story of Ariodante and Genevra, in Ariosto's "Orlando Furioso," B. V. It was "sepa-tately verified in English as well as in Latin," founded upon the kingly portion of "Much Ado about Nothing."

Something of that sort also is suggested in the case of "Love's Labour's Lost," though as in a portrait taken in his own lifetime, as in the case of Shakespeare's character, Vienna in "Love's Labour's Lost," as it is, by the choice of the character and the whimsical determination in which the title-page is a very important point in relation both to his bi-

INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS

To perform before the Queen, and this circumstance has contributed to its publication immediately afterwards. The evidence derived from passages and allusions in the piece, to which Malone refers in his "Chronological Order," is clearly of little value, and he does not give place much confidence to it. In "Love Labour's Lost," 22 leaves were printed in 1629, and the same year came out a poem by R[obert] T[jo]ne] entitled "Alba," in the commencement of one of the stanzas of which this comedy is introduced by name:

"Love's Labour Lost I once did see, a play Yelded so."

This does not read as if the writer intended to say that he had seen it recently. There is a coincidence in Act III. sec. 1, which requires notice: Costard there jokes upon the mixture between Midsommer night's dream and fairy tale; and in "The TAMUris," Dr. Steevens undertook that Shakespeare was "certainly indebted for his vein of jocularity" in this instance to a tract by H[ervase] Markham, called, "A Health to the Gentlemanly Profession of Serving Men," which Dr. Farmer informs us did not appear until 1608, the year in which "Love's Labour's Lost" came from the press. It was, possibly, a current jest, and it will be found, which on the title-page of the original, and not as Steevens inserted it, in a note upon the passage.

It is capable of proof that the play, as it stands in the folio of 1623, was rewritten from the 4to of 1598, as it adopts various passages and alterations, which, without intrusion, went directly into the folio, and it been taken from a distinct manuscript. There are, however, variations, which might show that the player-editors of the folio resorted occasionally to some authority besides the 4to. These differences are pointed out in the notes. The 4to has no divisions into Acts and Scenes; and the folio only distinguishes the Acts, but with considerable inequality: thus the third Act only occupies about a page and a half, while the 4to Act (misprinted "Alba") extends to nine pages. Nevertheless, it would have been taking too great a liberty to alter the arrangement in this respect, although, as the reader will perceive, it might be improved with advantage.

There is no entry of "Love's Labour's Lost" at Stationers' Hall, until 22d Jan. 1606-7, when it was transcribed by Burby (the publisher of it in 1608) to Ling, who perhaps contemplated a new edition. If it were printed in 1606 or 1607, no such impression has come down to us. Its next appearance was in the folio, 1623; but another 4to, of no authority, was published in 1631, the year before the date of the second folio.

MIDSUMMER-NIGHTS DREAM.

"A Midsommer nights dream. As it hath beene sundry times publickely acted, by the Right honourable the Lord Chamberlaine his servants. Written by William Shake- speare. Imprinted at London, for Thomas Fisher, and are to be sold oue at his shoppe, at the Signe of the White Hart, on Fleet streete.

"A Midsommer night's dream. As it hath beene sundry times publickely acted, by the Right honourable, the Lord Chamberlaine his servants. Written by William Shake- speare. Printed by James Roberts, 1630."

In the folio, 1623, it occupies 18 pages, viz., from p. 145 to 163 inclusive, in the division of "Comedies." It is of course, like the other plays, inserted in the later folios. The earliest impressions as not called comedy, history, or tragedy, but which is included by the player-editors of the first folio among the "comedies" of Shakespeare, was twice printed in 1600, for Thomas Cotes, Falstaff, and the London bookseller, and employed some unnamed printer; but Roberts was a printer as well as a bookseller. The only entry of it at Stationers' Hall is to Fisher, and it runs as follows:

There is no memorandum regarding the impression by Roberts, which perhaps was unauthorised, although Heminges and Conyett followed his text when they included "Midsommer-Night's Dream" in the folio of 1623. In some instances the 4to adopts the evident misprints of Roberts, while such improvements as are mentioned in the 1597 folio are more accurate: both the errors and emendations, if not merely trifling, are pointed out in our notes. The chief difference of the twain is that in the latter the Acts are not numbered.

We know from the Palladis Tomis of Meres, that "Midsommer Night's Dream" was in existence at least two years before its date in the press. On the occasion when it was written, two pieces of internal evidence have been especially noticed. Mr. Halliwell, in his "Introduction to a MidsommerNight's Dream" has produced a passage from the Diary of Dr. Samuel Johnson, which he points out as referring to the description of the state of the weather, and the country given by the Fairy Queen. The memorandum in Forman's Diary relates to the year 1594, and Stowe's Chronicle may be quoted to the same effect.

The other supposed temporary allusion occurs in Act v. sec. 1. and is contained in the lines:

"The thrice three Muses mourning for the death / Of learning, late deceased in beggary," which some have imagined to refer to the death of Spenser. It so, must have been an insertion in the drama subsequent to 1596, when first printed, because Spenser died in 1599. When "Midsommer-Night's Dream" was mentioned by Meres. It is very doubtful whether any particular reference was intended to Shakespeare, and who, perhaps, only meant to refer in strong terms to the godly. Warton carried the question back to shortly subsequent to the year 1591, when Spenser's "Tears of the Muses" was printed, which, from the time of its issue to that of Malone, was supposed to be a high literary tragedy of Shakespeare. There is a slight coincidence of expression between Spenser and Shakespeare, in the poem of the one, and in the drama of the other, which deserves remark: Spenser says,

"To W. S. / To W. S., / Yeo, ye Moone, ye dead of late."

And one of Shakespeare's lines is:

"Of learning, late deceased in beggary."

Yet it is quite clear, from a subsequent stanza in "The Tears of the Muses," that Spenser did not refer to the death of "Willy," whoever he were, but merely that he "rather chose to sit in idle cell," than write in such unfavourable times. In the same manner, Shakespeare might not mean that Spenser's death alluded indeed to be caus'd by him, but "deceased," but merely, as Spenser expresses it in his "Colin Clout," that he was "dead in dole." The allusion to Queen Elizabeth as the "fair vestal, throned by the west," in A. ii. sec. 1. seems to have been taken from the "Fair isle," [1598].

It seems highly probable that "A Midsommer-Night's Dream" was not written before the autumn of 1594, and if the speech of Titania in A. ii. sec. 1., were intended to describe the country of Alba, the kingdom, Merchiston, in which part of the season, we may infer that the drama came from the pen of Shakespeare at the close of 1594, or in the beginning of 1595.

"The Knight's Tale" of Chaucer, and the same poet's "Tybe of Babylone," together with Arthur Golding's translation of the story of Pyramus and Thisbe from Ovid, are the only sources yet pointed out of the plots introduced and employed by Shakespeare, [Oberon, Titania, and Robin Goodfellow, or Puck, are mentioned, as belonging to the fairy mythology, by many authors of the time. The Percy Society not long since reprinted a tract called "Robin Goodfellow, and the Devil's Tales," which was printed in 1589, but there is little doubt that it originally came out at least forty years earlier]; together with a ballad inserted in the introduction to that reprint, it shows how Shakespeare called himself of existing popular superstitions. In "Percy's Reliques" (III. 254, edit. 1813), is a ballad entitled "The War."

The war was broken down, and at Stratford Bowre, the water was never so by rackets, with the like. In the 12th Decr. the Queen burst down the bridge at Cambridge. In Rarkshire were many great water, and therewith was much harm done seidely." MS. Ash. 384, fol. 165.

3. A wood-cut is on the title-page, intended to represent Robin Goodfellow: he is like a Satyr, with hoofs and horns, and a broun over his shoulders. Sir Hugh Evans, in "The Merry Wives of Wind- sor," was no doubt thus dressed, when he represented Titania, or Robin Goodfellow. A copy of the wood-cut may be seen in "The Bridge- water Library Catalogue," 4to, 1657, p. 255.
Merry Franks of Robin Good-fellow," attributed to Ben Jonson, of which I have a version in a MS. of the time: it is the more curious, because it has the initials B. J. at the end. It contains some variations and an addition somewhat similar to the subject of the poem, it may be worth while here to subjoin:—

"When as my fellow elves and I
In circled ring do trip around,
If I by our secret eye see
Do happen to be seen or found;
If that they
No words do say,
But mum continue as they go,
Mum and mystery do.
Put great in shoe.
And wind out laughing, ho, ho, hoo!"

The incidents connected with the life of Robin Good-fellow were, no doubt, worked up by different dramatists in different ways; and in "Hamann's Diary," are two entries of money paid to Henry Chettle for a play he was writing in Sept. 1692, under the title of "Robin Good-fellow." There is every reason to believe that, "Midsummer-Night's Dream" was a popular course at the time, for W. Shakespeare, printed in the first folio, it is thus mentioned by Taylor, the water-poet, in his "Sir Gregory Nences:"—"I say, as it is unquestionably written and commended to posterity, in the medium of song, and the same oftens with it is with good will: we came with no intent but to offend, and show our simple skill."—(See A. v. s. 1.)

It appears by a MS. preserved in the Library at Lambeth Palace, that there was printed, "The Dream," in 1566, at the house of John Williams, Bishop of Lincoln, on 27th Sept. 1691. Hist. of Eng. Dram. Poetry and the Stage, ii. 56.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

"The excellent History of the Merchant of Venice. With the extreme cruelty of Shylock the Jew looked towards the said Merchant, in cutting a just pound of his flesh. And the obtaining of it by the choice of three caskets. Written by W. Shakespeare. Printed by J. Roberts, 1600," 4to, 40 leaves.

"The most excellent History of the Merchant of Venice. With the extreme cruelty of Shylock the Jew towards the said Merchant, in cutting a just pound of his flesh: and the obtaining of Portia by the choice of three chests. As it hath beene times times acted by the Lord Chamberlayne his Servants, printed by J. Roberts, 1600, 4to, 40 leaves.

"The two plots of "The Merchant of Venice," of convenient length, and new to English readers, are the only distinct novels in various ancient foreign authorities, but no English original of either of them of the age of Shakespeare has been discovered. That there were such originals is highly probable, but if so the author has no reliance of our popular literature. Whether the separate incidents, relating to the bond and to the caskets, were ever combined in the same novel, at all as Shakespeare combined them in his drama, cannot be determined. (Shakespeare Society's Reprint, p. 30.) The terms, "woolly chasers," may certainly have reference to the choice of the caskets; and the conduct of Shylock is very well intended by the words, "bloody minds of usurers." I do not pretend that a theatrical performance should have existed, anterior to the time of Shakespeare, in which the separate plots were united; and it is not unlikely that the same novel had been published which gave the same incidents in a combined form. "On the whole," says the learned and judicious Tyrwhitt, "I am inclined to suspect that Shakespeare followed some hitherto unknown story, which moved him the trouble of working up the two stories into one."

Both stories are found separately in the Latin Gesta Romanorum, with considerable variations: that of the bond is chap. xlvii. of MS. Harl. 2270, as referred to by Tyrwhitt; and that of the caskets is chap. xex, of the same collection. The Petorone of Ser Giovanni Fiorentino also contains a novel very similar to that of "The Merchant of Venice," with regard to the bond and the wedding, but differs widely from Shakespeare in the dwelling of a lady at Belmont. These adventures seemers afterwards to have been changed, in some English version, for the incidents of the caskets. In Boccaccio's Decameron (Dec. 1, 9, 4, 4, 6) there is a similar story, but the circumstances connected with the bond and its forfeiture, is contained in "The Orator: handling a Hundred several Discourses," a translation from the French of Alexander Silvayn, by Anthony Munday, who published it under the name of "Lazarus Pint, in 1596, 4to. There, with the head of "Declaration 95," we find one "Of a Jew, who for his debt have a pound of flesh of a Christian," and it is followed by "The Christian's Answer," but nothing is said of the incidents, out of which these "declarations" arose. Of the old ballad of "The Cruelte of Germuus, a Jew," in "Percy's Reliques," I. 225 (editor 1812) no dated edition is known; but many readers who know of the old version with our "adventures on the Viarions on the Faerie Queen," I. 128, that it was not founded upon Shakespeare's play, and was anterior to it; it might owe its origin to the ancient drama of "The Jew," mentioned by Groton. When Shakespeare's play was acted in Venice, 1594, contains an entry relating to the performance of "The Venetian Comedy," which Malone conjectured might mean "The Merchant of Venice," and it is a circumstance not to be passed over, that in 1594 the company of actors to which Shakespeare was attached was playing at the theatre in Newington Butts, in conjunction, as far as we can now learn, with the company of which Henslowe was chief manager.

Meres has "The Merchant of Venice" in his list, which was published in 1598, and we may suppose that the author, knowing how long prior to that date is was written. If it were "The Venetian Comedy," of Henslowe, it was in a course of performance in August, 1594. The earliest entry regarding "The Merchant of Venice," as the "Register of the Stationers' Register is curious, from its particularity:—

"22 July, 1598, James Roberts. A book of the Marchant of Venice, or otherwise called the Jewe of Venice. Provided that ye bee not printed by the said James, or by any other whosoever, without licence first had from the right honourable the Lord Chamberlen."

Shakespeare was one of the players of the Lord Chamberlain and the company whose business it was to print the application of the play without the consent of the company, to be signified through the nobleman under whose patronage they acted. This caution was given two years before. "The Merchant of Venice" actually came from the press: we find it published in 1600, both by J. Roberts and by Thomas Heyes, in favour of the last of whom we meet with another entry in the Stationers' books, without any proviso dated.

"28 Oct. 1600, Thomas Heyes. The books of the Merchant of Venice." By this time the "licence" of the Lord Chamberlain for printing the play had probably been obtained. At the bottom of the title-page of Roberts's edition of 1600, no place is stated. At the end of the edition, "Priviledg'd," and "Printed by J. Roberts, 1600," while the imprint to the edition of Heyes informs us that it was "printed by IR," and that it was "to be sold in Pauls Church-yard," &c. J. R., the printer of the edition of Heyes, was, most likely, J. Roberts: but it is entirely a distinct impression to that which appeared in the same year with the name of Roberts. The edition of Roberts is, on the whole, to be preferred to that of Heyes: but the edition of the latter is a much earlier copy, being a single folio, Heyes, adopting various misprints, but inserting also several improvements of the text. These are pointed out in our notes in the course of the play. The similarity between the "Merchant of Venice" and the "Dream of Baldassare, conte de Venezia," has, to some confusion of the speakers in all the copies, quarto and folio, which it has not always been found easy to set right. "The Merchant of Venice" was performed before James I. on Shrove-Sunday, and again on Shrove-Tuesday, 1605: hence we have a right to infer that it gave great satisfaction at court. The fact is thus recorded in the original account.
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

of expenses, made out by the Master of the Revels, and still preserved in the Audit Office:—

By His Maj’st Flaires. On Shrovetuesday a play of the Marchant of Venice was acted at the old Globe Theatre, London:

By his Maj’st Players. On Shrovetuesday a play called the Marchant of Venise again, commanded by the Kings Maj’st.

The name of Shakespeare, for Shakespeare, as "the poet which made the play," is added in the margin opposite both these entries. Notwithstanding the popularity of this drama before the closing of the theatres in 1642, it seems to have been so much forgotten soon after the Restoration, that in 1664, Thomas Jordan made a ballad out of the story of it in his "Royal Arbor of Loyal Poesie," and thought himself in liberty to pervert the original, by making the Jew’s daughter the heroine of his story; and, when, at the trial, she takes the office which Shakespeare assigns to Portia.

AS YOU LIKE IT.

"[As You Like It] was first printed in the folio of 1623, where it occupies twenty-three pages, viz. from p. 155 to p. 167 inclusive, in the division of "Comedies." It preserved its place in the three subsequent impressions of that volume in 1632, 1664, and 1685.

"As You Like It" is not only founded upon, but in some points very closely copied from, a novel by Thomas Lodge, the author of "The Enraged Medicine," and "Euphues's Legacie," which was originally printed in 1590, a second in 1592, and a third edition came out in 1598. We have no intelligence of any re-impression of it between 1592 and 1609. This third edition perhaps appeared early in 1598; and we are disposed to think, that the re-publication of so popular a work directed Shakespeare’s attention to it. If so, "As You Like It" may have been written in the summer of 1598, and first acted in the winter of the same, or in the spring of the following year.

The only entry in the registers of the Stationers’ Company relating to "As You Like It," is confirmatory of this supposition. It has been already referred to in the "Introduction to "Much Ado about Nothing" and it will be well to insert it here, precisely in the manner in which it stands in the original record:

"This 4 August.

Opposite in the memorandum are added the words "To be stiled." It will be observed, that there is an important deficiency in the entry, as regards the purpose to which we wish to apply it:—the date of the year is not given; but Malone conjectured, and in that conjecture I have expressed concurrence, that the name which we read in the text of the folio, with the date of "4 August," did not think it necessary there to repeat the year 1600, as it was found in the memorandum immediately preceding, that the play was written between May and November 1598. Malone, "Henry the fifth," and "Much Ado about Nothing," were both printed in 1600, and Ben Jonson’s "Every Man in his Humour" in the year following; though Gifford, in his edition of that poet’s works (vol. i. p. 2), by a strange error, states, that the first impression was in 1608. The "stay," as regards "Henry the fifth," "Every Man in his Humour," and "Much Ado about Nothing," was doubtless soon removed; for "Henry the Fifth," was entered again for publication on the 14th August; and, as has been already shown, Wisse and Aspley took the same course with "Much Ado about Nothing" on the 3rd August. There is no known edition of "As You Like It" prior to its appearance in the folio of 1623, (where it is divided into Scenes, as well as Acts) and we may possibly assume that the "stay" was not, for some unexplained and uncertain reason, removed as to that comedy.

Malone supposed to refer to an alabaster figure of Diana on the east of Cheapside, which, according to Stowe’s "Survey of London," was set up in 1595, and was in decay in 1603. This description may be compared with that given by Maltese, of Stowe’s "Survey of London," (2rd ed., i. 174), which states that the water came "prilling from her naked breast." Therefore, this passage proves nothing as far as respects the date of "As You Like It." Shakespeare probably intended to make no allusion to any particular fountain.

It is not to be forgotten, in deciding upon the probable date of "As You Like It," that Malone has already shown, as he informs us, while on a voyage with Captain Clarke, "to the islands of Terceras and the Canaries," had either the "Coke’s Tale of Gamelyn" (falsey attributed to Chaucer, as Tyrwhitt discovered, and removed from Chaucer’s "Canaries," i. cxxvii. Ed. 1830) strongly in his recollection, or, which does not seem very probable in such a situation, with a manuscript of it actually before him. It was not printed until more than a century afterwards. According to Farmer, Shakespeare looked no farther than Lodge’s novel, which he followed in "As You Like It," quite as closely as he did Greene’s "Pandosto" in the Winter’s Tale. There are one or two coincidences of expression between "As You Like It" and "The Cokè’s Tale of Gamelyn," but not perhaps more than might be accidental, and the opinion of Farmer appears to be sufficiently borne out. Lodge’s "Rosalynde" has been recently reprinted under the title of "Shakespeare’s "Rosalynde," of which allusion, though it may not be easy, therefore, for the reader to trace the particular resemblances between it and "As You Like It."

In his Lectures in 1878, Coleridge eloquently and justly praised the "pretty beauty and artificial manner of "As You Like It;" but he did not attempt to compare it with Lodge’s "Rosalynde," where the descriptions of persons and of scenery are comparatively forced and artificial:—"Shakespeare," said Coleridge, "in the "Winter’s Tale," gives a description of situation very merely for its own sake, or to show how well he can paint natural objects: he is never tedious or elaborate, but while he now and then displays marvellous accuracy and minuteness of knowledge, usually only to make us remember that he wrote of Shakespeare himself. We have this statement on the authority of Olydy’s MSS.: he is said to have derived it, immediately of course, from Gilbert Shakespeare, who survived the Restoration, and who had a faint recollection of having seen somewhere, either William "in one of his own comedies, wherein, being to personate a decrepit old man, he wore a long beard, and appeared so weak and drooping, and unable to walk, that he forced to be supported and carried by another person to a table, at which he was seated among some company, who were eating, and one of them sung a song." This description very exactly tally with "As You Like It," A. ii. 7. Shakespeare "made no use of it, nor in any other work yet discovered, for the characters of Jaques, Touchstone, and Andrey. On the admirable manner in which he has made them part of the staple of his story, and on the importance of these additions, it is needless to enlarge. It is rather singular, that Shakespeare should have introduced two characters of the name of Jaques into the same play; but in the old impressions, Jaques de Bois, in the prefixes to his speeches, is merely called the "Second Brother."

TAMING OF THE SHREW.

"[The Taming of the Shrew] was first printed in the folio of 1623, where it occupies twenty-three pages, viz. from p. 229 inclusive, in the division of "Comedies." It was rebound in the later third folio."

1 If we suppose that the third edition of Lodge’s "Rosalynde" was occasioned by the popularity of Shakespeare’s comedy, founded upon one of the earlier impressions in 1596 or 1592, it would show that "As You Like It" was acted in 1598, and might have been written in 1597.
Shakespeare was indebted for nearly the whole plot of his "Taming of the Shrew" to an older play, published in 1594, under the title of "The Taming of a Shrew." The mere circumstance of the adoption of the title, alone, being only too excusable, still seems to indicate that he had not the slightest intention of concealing his obligation. When Steevens published the "Six Old Plays," more or less employed by Shakespeare, and especially by his "Taming of a Shrew" than that of 1607 was known. It was conjectured, however, that it had come from the press at an earlier date, and Pope appeared to have been once in possession of a copy of it, and the scene as engraved in 1567, had been recovered, and is now in the collection of the Duke of Devonshire: the exact title of it is as follows:

"A Pleasant Conceited Historie, called The Taming of a Shrew: and was sundry times acted by the Right honorable the Earle of Pembroke his seruants. Printed at London by Peter Short and are to be sold by Cutbert Barthe, at his shop at the Royall Exchange. 1610, 4to.

It was reprinted in 1616, and a copy of that edition is in the possession of Lord Francis Egerton. The impression of 1607, the copy used by Steevens, is in the collection of the Duke of Devonshire.

There are three entries in the Registers of the Stationers' Company relating to "The Taming of a Shrew" but not one referring to Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew." When Blount and Jagard, on the 8th Nov. 1623, entered several copies of "The Taming of the Shrew," and Tragedyes, see many of the said copies as are not formerly entered to other men, "they did not include "The Taming of the Shrew" hence an inference might be drawn, that this play was not yet published in the present year. But such entry has been found, and Shakespeare's comedy, probably, was never printed until it was inserted in the folio of 1623.

On the question, when it was originally written, and whether it varied considerably, but I now think we can arrive at a tolerably satisfactory decision. Malone first believed that "The Taming of the Shrew" was written in 1596, and subsequently gave 1599 as its probable date. It appears to me, that nobody has sufficiently attended to the apparently unimportant fact that in "Hamlet" Shakespeare mistakenly introduces the name of Baptist as that of a woman. In this he is mentioned by the name of Baptist's Father of Katharine and Bianca. Had he been aware when he wrote "Hamlet" that Baptist was the name of a man, he would hardly have used it for that of a woman: but before he produced "The Taming of the Shrew" he had detected his own error. The great probability is, that "Hamlet" was written at the earliest in 1601, and "The Taming of the Shrew" perhaps came from the pen of its author not very long after.

The recent reprint of "The Pleasant Comedy of Patient Grissil," by Dekker, Chettle, and Haukston, from the edition of 1608, tends to throw light on this point. Henslowe's Diary establishes, that the three dramatists acted together when performing it in the winter of 1599. It contains various allusions to the taming of shrews; and it is to be recollected that the old "Taming of a Shrew" was acted by Henslowe's company, and was mentioned by the name of 1595. One of the passages in "Patient Grissil," which seems to connect the two, occurs in Act v. sc. 2, where Sir Owen producing his wands, says to the marques, "I will learn your medicines to tame shrews." This passage is not understood, because we find by Henslowe's Diary that, in July, 1592, Dekker received a payment from the old manager, on account of a comedy he was writing under the title of "A Medicine for a Wound." Sir Owen, in the later text of the play: as the title of "The Taming of the Shrew" was written, one of the managers of the theatre. At this time, the "Taming of a Shrew" had been laid by a public performance, and Shakespeare having very nearly adopted its title, Dekker took a different one, in accordance with the expression he had used two years before."

The silence of Meres in 1598 regarding any such play by Shakespeare is also important: had it then been written, he could scarcely have failed to mention it; so that we have strong negative evidence of its non-existence before the appearance of "Palladio Tame." Sir John Harrington, in his "Memoirs of the Renovation of Poesy," 1598, says, "The fairest specimen of 'Taming a Shrew,' which hath made a number of us so perfect that now every one can rule a shrew in our country, says that he had her," he meant the old "Taming of a Shrew," reprinted in the same year. We have not only the comedy in which Petruchio and Katharine are chiefly engaged, but the Induction, which is carried out to a close, and the Epilogue and the Tapster conclude the piece, as they had begun it.

As it is evident that Shakespeare made great use of the old comedy, both in his Induction and in the body of his play, it is not necessary to inquire to what original the writer of "The Taming of a Shrew" referred. Yet, according to the Induction, Douce was of opinion that the story of "The Sleeper awakened," in the "Arabian Nights' Entertainment," was the source of the many incongruities which here from time to time, been referred to. Warton (Hist. Engl. Poetry, iv. 117. Edit. 1824) tells us, that among the books of Collins was a collection of tales by Richard Edwards, dated in 1570, and including "the Induction of the Tinker in Shakespeare's 'Taming of the Shrew.'" This may be the original employed by the author of the old "Taming of a Shrew." For the play itself he, perhaps, availed himself of some new translation of Nott. vii. p. 2, of the "Petrarch's Notions of Shakespeare's Plays."

The Suppositi of Ariosto, freely translated by Gascoyne, (before 1586, when it was acted at Gray's Inn) under the title of "The Supposes," seems to have afforded Shakespeare part of his plot. It relates to the manner in which Lucentio and Tranio pass off the Pedant as Vincentio, which is not found in the old "Taming of a Shrew." In the list of persons prior to Gascoyne's "Supposes" Shakespeare found the name of Petruchio, (a character not so called by Ariosto,) and hence, perhaps, he adopted it. It affords another slight link of connexion between "The Taming of the Shrew" and the "Supposes," but there exists a third, still slighter, of which no notice has been taken. In the play of "Sleeper awakened," the character of "Petruchio," is a soldier; but in Shakespeare's play, he has a merchant of Venice for a companion. The "Taming of the Shrew," was known in the beginning of the eighteenth century, may be judged from the fact, that "The Tatler," No. 251, contains the story of it, told as of a gentleman's family then residing in Lincolnshire.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL

("All's Well that Ends Well" was first printed in the folio of 1623, and its allusions are twice pointed out, p. 230 to p. 254 inclusive, in the division of "Comedies." It fills the same space and place in the three later folios.)

The most interesting question in connexion with "All's Well that Ends Well" is, whether it was originally called "The Lover's Labor Lost." In the copy of the play in the Folio of 1623 it was written before 1598; because in that year, and under the title of "Love Labour's Wonne," it is included by Francis Meres in the list of Shakespeare's plays introduced into his "Palladio Tame." It was the opinion of Coleridge, an opinion which he first delivered in 1815, and again in 1818, though not found in his "Literary Remains," that "All's Well that Ends Well" was a early composition, and rather distant periods of the poet's life. He pointed out very clearly two distinct styles, not only of thought, but of expression; and Professor Teek, at a later date, adopted and enforced the same belief. So far we are disposed to agree with Teek; but when he adds, that some passages in "All's Well that Ends Well," which it is difficult to understand and explain, are relics of the first draught of the play, we do not concur, because they are chiefly to be discovered in the action of the drama which affords evidence of riper thought, and of a more involved and constrained mode of writing. Surely those parts which reminded Teek, as he states, of "Venus and Adonis," are to be placed among the earlier efforts of Shakespeare. There can be little doubt, however, that Coleridge and Tiele are right in their conclusion, that "All's Well that Ends Well," which was printed for the first time in the folio of 1623, contains indications of the workings of Shakespeare's mind, and specimens of his composition at two separate periods, but possibly at two different parts of the same period. It is often but recently controverted, whether the "Love Labours Won" of Meres were the same piece as "All's Well that Ends Well." The supposition that they were identical is first suggested, but latterly is rejected by Dr. Parr of Bertram, in his "Essay on the learning of Shakespeare." On the other hand, the Rev. Joseph Hunter, in his "Disquisition on the Tempest," Svo. 1839, has contended that "by Love Labours Won" Shakespeare meant "The Tempest," as if it were the original bore to the "Love Labours Won," as its second title. I do not think that Mr. Hunter, with all his acuteness and learning, has made out his case satisfactorily; and in our introduction to that particular volume we cannot assign that play to the year 1610, or 1611. Mr. Hunter argues that "The Tempest," even more than "All's Well that Ends Well," desires the significant name of "Love Labours Won," and he certainly is successful in showing that "All's Well that Ends Well" bosome its own title in two separate quotations. They are from towards the close of the play; and here, perhaps, we meet with the strongest evidence that this portion was one of his author's later efforts.

My notion is (and the speculation deserves no stronger term) that "All's Well that Ends Well" was in the first instance, and prior to 1599, called "Love Labours Won," and that "Love Labours Won" was the title of which it might be considered the counterpart. It was then, or perhaps, laid by for some years, and revived by its author, with alterations and additions, about 1605 or 1606, when the marks of alteration on the Newes Papers Show, that "Love Labours Won" was then in the book. At this date, however, "Love Labours Lost" probably continued to be represented; and we learn from the Readers' Accounts that it was chosen for performance at court between Jane 1st and March 3rd in 1606.

"Betwix Newers Day and Twelfe Day, a play of Loves Labours Lost." The name of the author, and of the company by whom the piece was acted, are not in this instance given. We have no information that "All's Well that Ends Well" met with the same instant success and popularity. Perhaps if it was to be performed at court, it was not chosen because of its title, in order to give an appearance of greater novelty to the representation on its revival. This surmise, if well founded, would account for the difference in the titles, as we find them in Meres and in the folio of 1623.

Without here entering into the question, whether Shakespeare understood Italian, of which, we think, little doubt can be entertained, we need not suppose that he went to Bocaccio in this very form, or in the present translation, of which it might be considered the counterpart. It was then, or perhaps, laid by for some years, and revived by its author, with alterations and additions, about 1605 or 1606, when the marks of alteration on the Newes Papers Show, that "Love Labours Lost" was then in the book. At this date, however, "Love Labours Lost" probably continued to be represented; and we learn from the Readers' Accounts that it was chosen for performance at court between Jane 1st and March 3rd in 1606.

We have no record of the performance of "Twelfth-Night" at court, nor do we find it mentioned at Stationers' Hall until November 5, 1623, when it was revised by Blount and Jaggard, as about to be included in the first new folio of "Mr. William Shakespeare's Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies." This text seems to have been originally that volume, under the double title, "Twelfth-Night, or What You Will," with the Acts and Scenes duly noted.

We cannot determine with precision when it was first written, but we know that it was printed and published in the form of the Reader's Feast at the Middle Temple on Feb. 2, 1623-24, according to our modern computation of the year. The fact of its performance we have on the evidence of an eye-witness, who seems to have been a barrister, and whose Diary, in his own hand-writing, is preserved in the British Museum (Harl. MSS. 5333). The memorandum runs, literary, as follows:—

"Feb'y 2, 1601. [2]. At our feast we had a play called Twelfth-Night, or What You Will, much like the comedy of errors, or Menoend in Plautus, but most like and near to that in Italian, called Janganni. A good practiser in it to make the stewart believe his lady widdows was in love with him, by counterfying a letter, as from his lady, in general terms his own fancy, and sending him new things in verses, &c., and then when he came to practise, making him believe they took him to be mad."

A remarkable entry was pointed out in the "History of English Dramatic Poetry and the Stage," vol. i. p. 327. Svo. 1831, and the Rev. Joseph Hunter, in his "Disquisition on the Tempest," Svo. 1839, has ascertained that it was made by a person of the name of Marlingham. It puts an end to the conjecture of Malone, that "Twelfth-Night" was written in 1607, and to the less probable speculation of Tyrwhitt, that it was not produced until 1614. Even if it is objected that we have no evidence to show that this Comedy was composed shortly prior to its representation at the Middle Temple, it may be ascertained, that it is capable of proof that it was written posterior to the publication of the translation of Lincei in 1609. It is certain that Shakespeare belonged to the characters of the Countess, the Clown, and Parolles, and the comic business in which the last engaged, were, as far as we now know, the invention of Shakespeare. The traditions respecting the original "Pleasure," or "Love's Labours" of Bertram, and he changed Giglietta to Helena, probably because he had already made Juliet the name of one of his heroes. The "Pleasure" is an English adaptation of "Twelfth-Night," as we have shown. According to our supposition, these passages, as well as another in the "Hogard," amid all the signs that "All's well that ends well" is the original text, were added when the play was revived in 1599 or 1606, and when a new name was given to it. "All's well that ends well" is merely a provincial phrase of the same kind as "All was well that it was well" or "All was well that ends well," which Shakespeare wrote. See note 1, p. 97, of "The Comedy of Errors." 2 They were published together in 1575, and hence it has arisen the erroneous notion that this was in Shakespeare's language. See note 1, p. 97. As for the name of "What you will," it is certain that "The Palace of Pleasure" was first printed in that year. Prior dates the dedication of his "second book." From my pore house, besides the Towns of London, the 1I. of November, 1597."
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

The plays of Shakespeare have been a constant source of inspiration and study. In this section, we will explore the notable themes and characteristics found within his works. Starting with his most famous productions, we will delve into the rich tapestry of stories, characters, and language that have made Shakespeare's plays enduring classics of Western literature.

In his list, published in the same year, and we may conclude that the Comedy was not then in existence. The words "new map," employed by Shakespeare, may be translated thus: and the name of the Comedy, with its appearance long before "Twelfth-Night" was produced; but on the whole, we are inclined to fix the period of its composition at the end of 1565, or in the beginning of 1566: it must have been published; and from thence transferred to the Middle Temple about six months afterwards, on account of its continued popularity.

Several originals of "Twelfth-Night," in English, French, and Italian, have been pointed out nearly all of them discovered within the present century, and to these we shall now advert. A voluminous and various author of the name of Barbade Richard, an English actor, and also published a volume, which he called "Rich his farewell to Military Profession," without date, but between the years 1578 and 1581: a re-impression of it appeared in 1606, and it contains a novel entitled "Apolonius and Silla," which has many points of resemblance to Shakespeare's comedy. To this production more particular reference is not necessary, as it forms part of the publication called "Shakespeare's Library." If our great dramatist at all availed himself of its incidents, he must of course have used an earlier edition than that of 1606. One minute circumstance in relation to it may deserve notice. Manningham in his Diary calls Olivia a "widow," and in Bandello, Sirlia is a widow, both in the English edition, with no indication that she is a widow, but in Shakespeare she never had been married. It is possible that in the form in which the comedy was performed on Feb. 2, 1601-2, she was a widow, and that the author, perhaps, intended for it that he so made her. As Olivia must have been in mourning for the loss of her brother, that Manningham mistook her condition, and concluded hastily that she lamented the loss of her husband.

But to the point. This, work to which Shakespeare was indebted; but we may conclude that, either immediately or intermittently, he derived his chief materials from the Italian of Bandello, or from the French of Belleforest. In Bandello it is under the title of "Limpias," and in Belleforest it is called "La fin di Limpias," and it was printed at Paris in 1572, 12mo, it is headed as follows:—

Comme une fille Romaine, se vantant en page, servist long temps un sien ami sans esteigne, et depuis l'est est a marie, avec autres divers discours. Allthough Belleforest inserts no names in his title, he adopts those of Bandello, but abridges or omits many of the speeches and some portions of the narrative: what in Bandello occupies several pages is sometimes reduced to a single sentence. In the subsequent passage, because it will more exactly show the degree of connexion between "Twelfth-Night" and the old French version: it is where Nicola, the Vida of Shakespeare, divides and joins the name of the Duke. It is an interview with Catelle, the Olivia of "Twelfth-Night," on behalf of Lattance, who answers to the Duke.

Mais Catelle, qui avoir plus Puis sur l'orateur et sur la nature beaute, que Porrile aux paroles venant, estoyt en une estrange mane, et volontiers se fut jete a la porte pour le baiser tout a son aise; mais la honte la retint pour un temps: a la fin n'en pouvant plus, et vaine de ceste impatience d'amour, et se trouvant favorable et la comodite, ne seient de tant so commender, que l'embrassant fort estrange- ment elle ne le laisse d'une doumaine de fois, et ce avec telle lastivite et gestes effrontez, que Romme s'apparent bien que ces deux gens estoient la increangeableness that the ambassades de cely qui la courtois.

A certain provoking argument, in the name of David, prie, madame, me faire tant de bien que me donnant congé, j'aye de vous quelque gracieuse responce, avec laquelle je puissé faire content et joyeux ce seigneur, lequel est est continuer et tommenter continu pour me seoir en toute la vertu luy, et s'il a rien acquis en vos bonnes graces. Catelle, humant de plus en plus le venin d'amour par les yeux, lui manifestait une seconde fois, et plus beau.

Upon the novel by Bandello two Italian versions have been composed, which were printed, and have come down to us. The title of one of these is given by Manningham, where he says that Shakespeare's "Twelfth-Night," was most like and neere to that in Italian called "Fornanti." It was acted in 1547, and the earliest edition of it, with which I am acquainted, did not appear until 1582, when it bore the title of "Enea," and another called "Natolia," or "La Donna," bears a somewhat similar title:—

INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

Gastonaz. Where is she?
Ruberto. Not far from you.
Gastonaz. And that content that I should lie with her.
Ruberto. If God wills that you should do it.
Gastonaz. How shall I get to her?
Ruberto. Plead with me to you.
Gastonaz. How do you know that she loves me?
Ruberto. Because she talks to me of her love.
Gastonaz. Do I know her?
Ruberto. As well as you see me.
Gastonaz. Is she young?
Ruberto. Of my age.
Gastonaz. And loves me?
Ruberto. Adore you.
Gastonaz. Have I ever seen her?
Ruberto. As often as you have seen me.
Gastonaz. And to me herself?
Ruberto. Because she sees you the slave of another woman."

The resemblance between Gineura and her brother Fortunato is so great, that Portia has mistaken the one for the other, and in the end, like Sebastian and Olivia, they are united; while Gastonaz, being cured of his passion for Dorotea, and grateful for the persevering and disinterested affection of Gineura, is married to her. Our great dramatist has given an actual, as well as an intellectual elevation to the whole, he was not for to fall in love in which he has treated it; and has converted what may, in most respects, be considered a low comedy into a fine romantic drama.

So much for QF Ingannati, and it now remains to speak of Flamminio, in which Shakespeare directed the "Twelfth Night," attention was first directed by the Rev. Joseph Hunter in his "Disquisition on Shakespeare's Tempest," p. 72. QF Ingannati follows Bandello's novel with more exactness than Flamminio does to Shakespeare's, and here we have the important feature that the heroine called Lelia (dissigned as Fabio) is page to Flamminio, with whom she is in love, but who is in love with a lady named Isabella. In QF Ingannati Flamminio is employed by Flamminio to forward his suit with Isabella. What succeeds is part of the Dialogue between Lelia, in her male attire, and Flammmio:

"Lelia. Do as I advise. A banana Isabella, and love one who loves you in return. You cannot find her as beautiful; but, tell me, is there any woman whom you can love, and who loves you?
Flamminio. There was a young lady named Lelia, whom I was there and thereabout, and who was in the fairest, the cleverest, and the most courteous damsel of this country. I will show you her one of these days, for I formerly looked upon her with some regard. She was then rich and about the court, and continued in love with her for nearly a year, during which time she showed me much favour. Afterwards she went to Miranda, and it was not, for to fall in love with Isabella, who has been as cruel to me as Lelia was kind.
Lelia. Then you deserve the treatment you have received. Since you aligned who she loved you, you ought to be slighted in return by others.
Flamminio. What do you say?
Lelia. How would you treat the first, and still love you more than ever, why did you abandon her for Isabella? I know not who could pardon that offence. Ah! signor Flamminio, did you get any love from her?
Flamminio. You are only a boy, Fabio, and know not the power of love.
Lelia. For the love of others, but help loving Isabella.” I adore her, nor do I wish to think of any other Isabellas.

Elsewhere the resemblance between "Twelfth Night" and QF Ingannati, in point of situation is quite as strong, but there the likeness ends, for in the dialogue we can trace no connexion between the two. The author of the Italian comedy has obviously founded himself entirely upon Bandello's novel, of which there might be some translation in the title of Shakespeare more nearly approaching the original, than the version which Rich published before our great dramatist wrote to "Twelfth Night." Neither had he, in literal translation, had or had not been made, Shakespeare may have gone to the Italian story, and Le Novelle di Bandello were very well known in England as early as about the middle of the sixteenth century. If Shakespeare had followed Rich we should probably have discovered some verbal trace of his obligation, as in the cases where he followed Painter's "Palace of Pleasure," or, still more strikingly, where he availed himself of the works of Greene and Lodge. In QF Ingannati we find nothing but incident in common with "Twelfth-Night."

The vast inferiority of the former to the latter in language and sentiment may be seen in every page, in every line. The mistake of the brother for the sister, by Isabella, is the same in both, and it terminates in a somewhat similar manner, for the female attendant of the lady, meeting Fabriolo (who is the same) elsewhere, enquires for the lady Lelio, his mistress, who receives him with open arms. Flamminio and Lelia are of course united at the end of the comedy.

The likeness between QF Ingannati and "Twelfth-Night" is certainly in some points of the story, stronger than that between QF Ingannati and Shakespeare's drama; but to neither is it confined, with any degree of certainty, that our dramatist retained, as he had perhaps read both, when he was considering the best model of adapting to the stage the incidents of Bandello's novel. There is no hint, in any source discovered, that Flamminio has any part in the smallest portion of the comic business of "Twelfth-Night." In both the Italian dramas it is of the most homely and vulgar materials, by the intervention of empires, braggarts, pedants, and servants, who deal in the coarsest jokes, and are guilty of the grossest buffoonery. Shakespeare shows his infinite superiority in each department: in the more serious portion of his drama he employed the incidents furnished by predecessors as the mere scaffolding for the construction of his own beautiful edifice; and for the comic scenes, combining so admirably with, and assisting so importantly in the progress of the main plot, he seems, as usual, to have drawn merely upon his own inimitable resources.

It was an opinion, confidently stated by Coleridge in his lectures in 1818, that the passage in Act ii. sc. 4, beginning "Too old, by heaven! let still the woman take "Tis merry mischief, for a thing so delightful had a direct application to the circumstances of his own marriage with Anne Hathaway, who was so much senior to the poet. Some of Shakespeare's biographers had previously enforced this notion, and others have since followed it up; but Coleridge does not give the opportunity of enlarging eloquently on the manner in which young poets have frequently connected themselves with women of very ordinary personal and mental attractions, the imagination supplying all deficiencies, clothing them with all the attributes of sex, and supplying them with every accomplishment.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

("The Winter’s Tale" was first printed in folio in 1623, where it occupies twenty-seven pages, from p. 277 to 308, and is the last in the division of "Comedies." The back of p. 308 is left blank and unpagged. The later folios adopt the same arrangement.

Learns does can be entertained, that "The Winter’s Tale" was produced at the Globe, very soon after that theatre had been opened for what might be called the summer season in 1611. In the winter, as has been well ascertained, the king's players performed it at the Blackfriars, and they usually removed to the Globe, which was open to the sky, late in the spring.

Three pieces of evidence tend to the conclusion, that "The Winter’s Tale" was brought out early in 1611: the first of these has never until now been adduced, and it consists of the following entry in the account of the Master of the Revels, Sir George Buc, from the 31st of October, 1611, to the same day, 1612:

"The 5th of November: A play called the winter nights tail."d"

No author's name is mentioned, but the piece was represented at a court entertainment, after the scenes of the Winter's Tale had been acted in the margin, and there can be no hesitation in deciding that "The Winter’s Night’s Tale" was Shakespeare's "Winter’s Tale." The fact of its performance has been established by Mr. Peter Cunningham, in his valuable work, entitled "Extracts from the Accounts of the Revels at Court," 8vo, 1842, printed for the Shakespeare Society. *The Winter’s Tale" was probably selected on account of its novelty and popularity.

1 From the Introduction to the same work, we find that "The Winter’s Tale" was also represented at court on Easter Tuesday, 1615.

2 The expenses of eleven other plays are included in the same account, viz., *"The Almanack," "The Twins' Tragedy," "Cupid's Revenge," "The Silver Age," "I accreta," "The Nobleman," "Hubert's Holiday," and "The Maid's Tragedy." At most, only one of these had been printed before they were thus acted, and some of them never came from the press. *"The Nobleman," by Cyril Tournour, was represented at the Players' Hall for publication on 15th February, 1611. *"Laocritas" is only said to have been retrieved, "Rape of Lucrece," which bears date in 1608: if so, there is no evidence that it was ever published. A play that came from the press at any period were printed subsequently to 1611-12, the earliest in 1613, and the latest in 1655. Hence a strong inference may be drawn, that they were all dramas which had been recommended for court-performance by their novelty and popularity.

The second piece of evidence on this point has also recently come to light. It is contained in a MS. Diary, or Notebook, kept by Dr. Simon Forman, (MSS. Ashm. 398.) in which, under date of the 15th May, 1611, he states that he saw one of Shakespeare's plays at the Globe Theatre on the 15th May preceding the representation of it at Court on the 6th November. He gives the following brief account of the plot, which ingeniously includes all the main incidents:—

"There was a gentleman, the son of a king of Bohemia, who was overcome with jealousy of his wife with the king of Bohemia, his friend that came to see him; and how he contrived his death, and would have had his cup-bearer to have poisoned him, who gave him a dish of the same sort of sou, which did not kill him, but carried him back to Bohemia. Remember, also, how he sent to the oracle of Apollo, and the answer of Apollo that she was guiltless, and that the king was jealous, &c. &e., and how, except the child was found dead, the child was carried into Bohemia, and how the child was caused to be carried into Bohemia, and there laid in a forest, and brought up by a shepherd; and the king of Bohemia’s son married that wife, and how they fled into Sicilia to Leoncet; and the shepherd having showed the letter of the nobleman whom Leoncet sent, it was that child, and by the jewels found about her, she was known to be Leoncet’s daughter, and was then sixteen years old. Remember, also, the rogue that came in all tattered, like Col Pipec, and how he feigned him sick, and to have been robbed of all he had; and how he hoaxed the poor man of all his money, and after came to the sheaf-sheer with a pedlar's pack, and there committed the murder of his wife, after he was apparelled with the king of Bohemia’s son, and then how he turned courier, &c. &c.

We are inclined to reason that "The Winter’s Tale" was in its first run on the 15th May, 1611, and that the Globe Theatre had not then been long opened for the season.

The opinion that the play was then a novelty, is strongly corroborated by the evidence of events when Malvole discovered late in life, which induced him to relinquish his earlier opinion, that "The Winter’s Tale" was written in 1604. He found a memorandum in the office-book of Sir Henry Herbert, Master of the Revels, on the 15th August, 1623, in which it was stated that "The Winter’s Tale," was "an old play formerly allow’d by Sir George Buc." Sir George Buc was Master of the Revels from October, 1610, until his death, and the date of his death is 1611, when he was licensed "The Winter’s Tale" between October, 1610, when he was appointed to his office, and May, 1611, when Forman saw it at the Globe.

It might have been composed by Shakespeare in the autumn and winter of 1609-10, with a view to its production on the Bank-side, as soon as the usual performances by the King’s players commenced there. Sir Henry Herbert informs us, that he gave an order to the Revels Office to retire "The Tempest" in August 1623, "the allowed book" (that to which Sir George Buc had appended his signature) "was missing." It has been supposed that he had been destroyed when the Globe Theatre was consumed by fire on 29th June, 1613.

We have seen that "The Tempest" and "The Winter’s Tale" were both acted at Whitehall, and included in Sir George’s copy of the proceedings of the Revels from October, 1611, to October, 1612. How little older "The Tempest" might be than "The Winter’s Tale," we have no means of determining; but there is a circumstance which shows that the composition of "The Tempest" was anterior to that of "The Winter’s Tale," and this brings us to the novel of which upon the latter is founded.

As early as the year 1588, Robert Greene printed a tract entitled "A Discourse of Timon of Athens, dedicated to the Right Honourable and Illustrious Company of the Revels, and others, to the great benefit and profit of them, and others to come." And while this is the earliest tract printed on the subject, it is not the earliest tract printed on the subject, it is not the earliest tract printed on the subject, it is not the earliest tract printed on the subject, it is not the earliest tract printed on the subject, it is not the earliest tract printed on the subject. The tract is prefixed to "The History of Dorastus," and was printed in 1588, probably before some of the later copies. As far as we now know, it was not reprinted until 1607, and a third impression appeared in 1699; it was probably written with many editions, and yet it does not seem unlike that Shakespeare’s play was directed to it, as a proper subject for dramatic representation, by the third impression which came out before we suppose him to have committed writing his "Winter’s Tale." In many respects our great dramatist follows Greene’s story very closely, as may be seen by some of the notes in the course of the play, and by the recent republication of "Pandosto," from the unique copy of 1668, in "Shakespeare’s Library." There is, however, the remarkable variation, which it is necessary to point out. Greene says:—

"The guard left her" (the Queen) "in this perplexity, and carried the child to the king, who, quite devoted to play, was unable to judge whether to put it to death or not. He was afraid he was doing wrong in having neither sail nor rudder to guide it, and so to be carried into the midst of the sea, and there left to the wind and waves, to be cast into a place to appoint."

The child thus “left to the wind and wave” is the Perdita of Shakespeare, who describes the way in which the infant was exposed very differently, and probably for this reason:—

that in "The Tempest" he had probably not long after the Perdita of "Pandosto" appeared in a different tradition, as the child was left in the sea the same manner as Greene had stated his heroine to have been disposed of. When, therefore, Shakespeare came to write "The Winter’s Tale," instead of following Greene, he had acted alone in other minor circumstances, he varied from the original narrative, in order to avoid an objectionable similarity of incident in his two dramas. It is true, that in the conclusion Shakespeare has also made important and most judicious changes in the story; since nothing could well be more revolting than for Pandosto (who answers to Leoncet) first to fall dotingly in love with his own daughter, and afterwards to commit suicide. The termination to which he gives the play is great, natural, and beautiful, and is an equal triumph of judgment and power.

It is, perhaps, singular that Malvole, who observed upon the two so-called ‘ethical sentences’ prevailing in "The Winter’s Tale," did not in that very peculiarity find a proof that it must have been one of Shakespeare’s later productions. In the Stationers’ Registers there is no earlier entry of it than that of 1623. Northumberland’s copy of the play was contemplated by Blount and Jaggard: it originally appeared in that volume, where it is regularly divided into Acts and Scenes: the "Winter’s Night’s Pastime," noticed in the Stationers’ Registers, is perhaps, not a mystery, but a different work. If any proof of the kind were wanted, we learn from two lines in "Dido, Queen of Carthage," by Marlowe and Nash, 1594, 4to, that "a winter’s tale" was then current:

"Who would not undergird all kinds of a winter’s tale?"

Siga. D. 3 b.

To be well told with such a winter’s tale!"

In representing Bohemia to be a maritime country, Shakespeare adopted the popular notion, as it had been encouraged since 1588 by Greene’s "Pandosto." With regard to the prevailing ignorance of geography, the subsequent passage from John Taylor’s "Travels to Prague in Bohemia," a journey performed in the year 1661, shows that a man may consider, indeed, that an alderman of London was not aware that a fleet of ships could not arrive at a port of Bohemia:—

"I am no sooner eased of him, but Gregory Gandergoose, an Admiral of my Grace’s, catches me and says, ‘Bohemia a great town, and whether there be any merit in it, and whether the last fleet of ships be arrived there.’ It may be observed, that Shakespeare reverses the scene of "Pandosto," and represents as passing in Sicily, what Greene had made to occur in Bohemia. In several places he more verbally followed Greene in this play than he did even Lodge in "As You Like It," but the general variations are greater from "Pandosto" than from "Rosalynde." But Shakespeare does not adopt one of the apppellations given by Greene; and it may be noticed that, just anterior to the time of our poet, the name he assigns to the Queen of Leoncet had been converted to something of a male character: in the rare Triumphs of Love and Fortune," acted at court in 1631-2, and printed in 1588, Hermione is the lover of the heroine.

The idea of this delightful drama (says Coteridge in his Lit. Rem. vol. ii. p. 250) is a genuine jealousy of disposition, and it should be immediately followed by the perusal of Othello, which is the direct contrast of it in every particular.

The circumstance that "The Tempest," and "The Winter’s Tale," while they recall Greene’s novel, are yet so thoughtfully perked, and that they might belong to nearly the same date of composition, indicate a probability to the opinion, that Ben Jonson alluded to them in the following lines:—

"When Pandosto’s play was acted in 1614, while Shakespeare’s two plays were still high in popular favour:—""If there be never a Servant-monster," the Fair woman from the enchanted island, "the least fear is left in the nature afraid in his Plays, like those that begat Tales, Tempes, and such like Dialogueres." The Italian type and the capitals are as they stand in the original editions in folio, 1611, Gifford (Ben Jonson’s Works, Vol. iv. p. 370) could not be brought to acknowledge 2

"How long it continued popular, may be judged from the fact that it was printed as a chap-book as recently as the year 1735, when it was called "The Fortune Lovers; or the History of a Servant and a Flower, only daughter and heir to the King of Bohemia," 12mo.

4 A note in a passage in Act iii. sc. 2, is a reason assigned for thinking that Shakespeare did not employ the first edition of Greene’s novel, but in all probability that of 1609.
lars. For jealousy is a vice of the mind, a culpable tendency of temper, having certain well known and well defined effects and concomitants, all of which are visible in Leontes, and I boldly say, not one of which marks its presence in Othello:—shame, anger, cruelty, revenge, and an eagerness to snatch at proofs; secondly, a grossness of conception, and a disposition to degrade the object of the passion by sensual fancies and images; thirdly, a sense of honour, or a mistaken sense of duty; and lastly, and immediately consequent on this, a spirit of selfish vindictiveness.

In his lectures in 1815, Coleridge dwelt on the "not easily justifiable" frame of Othello's mind, and on the art of the great poet in working upon his generous and unsuspecting nature: he contrasted the characters of Othello and Leontes in this respect, the latter from predisposition requiring no such magnificient ingot as Iago.

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF KING JOHN.

"The Life and Death of King John" was first printed in the folio of 1623, where it occupies twenty-two pages; viz. from p. 1143 to 1165. It is prefixed to the "Histories.

"It occupies the same place and the same space in the re-issues of 1632, 1644, and 1655."

"King John," the earliest of Shakespeare's "Histories" in the folio of 1623, (where they are arranged according to the reign of the different monarchs) first appeared in that volume, and the Registers of the Stationers' Company have searched in vain for any entry regarding it; it is not enumerated by Mount and Jaggard on the 8th Nov. 1623, when their work was published, nor by any other, "about to be included in their folio: hence an inference might be drawn that there had been some previous entry of King John." "To other men," and, perhaps, even to Shakespeare himself, it seems indisputable that Shakespeare's "King John" was founded upon an older play, three times printed anterior to the publication of the folio of 1623: "The first and second part of the Tragicke Life of John, King of England," came from the press in 1591, 1611, and 1622. Malone, and others who have adverted to this production, have obviously not had the several impressions before them. The eldest copy of the folio of 1611 has "W. Sh." to indicate the author, and that of 1622, "W. Shakespeare," the sur-name only at length. Steevens once thought that the ascription of it to Shakespeare by Farrant's bow, because the "Cordelion," a production of 1609, which followed the "Prologue and Prologue," was correct, but he subsequently abandoned this untenable opinion. Pope attributed it jointly to Shakespeare and William Rowley; and Farmer made no doubt that Rowley wrote the first King John. There is, however, reason to believe that Rowley was not an author at so early a date: his first extant printed work was a play, in writing which he aided John Day and George Wilkins, called "The Travels of three English Brothers." 1607. In 1611, he may have been very young; but we are not therefore to conclude decisively that his name is not, at any period, and in any way, to be connected with a drama on the incidents of the reign of King John; for if he had written the play, it may, on the other hand, have been written by Rowley at an earlier date; and the title, or part of the title, "King John," is, in a sense, sufficiently old.

1 It purports to be divided into acts and scenes, but very irregularly; thus what is called Actus Secundus fills no more than about half a page, and Actus Quartus is twice repeated. The later fellow adopt this defective arrangement, excepting that in that of 1632 Actus Quartus is made to precede Actus Quintus.

2 The "Prologue and Prologue," a book called the History of George Lord Panxeaideon, bastard son of Richard Cordelian, was entered on the Stationers' Registers, but this was evidently the prologue romance of which an edition in 1618, 1619, and 1621, is extant. Going back to the records, it appears that a book, called "Cur de Lione," was entered on the Stationers' Register of that year.

3 "The life and death of King John" (says Malone), by Robert Greene, or George Peele, but he produces nothing in support of his opinion. The mention of "the Scythian Tamarines," in the Prologue to the elder "King John," is a circumstance which seems to indicate that it was the production of Marlowe, who did not die until 1603; but the style of the two parts is evidently different: roming couples are much more abundant in the first than in the second, and there is reason to believe, according to the frequent custom of that age, that the fact that, at some later date, he was instrumental in a revival of the old "King John."

How long the old "King John" had been in possession of the stage prior to 1591, when it was originally printed, we are not able to say. The style of the play points to a date which, if not earlier, was not very much later than 1591; and when Shakespeare and his contemporaries took the course usual with dramatists of the times, by applying to his own purposes as much of it as he thought would be advantageous. He converted the "two parts" into his own, and at first printed them in the form of a long epistle, on the occasion of an otherwise unexplained incident, a letter of King John to his son Philip, which bears a strong resemblance to a letter of the old "King John," to have been brought upon the stage not long after the defeat of the Spanish Armada in 1588, when the hatred of the Roman Catholics was at its height, such an exhibition must have been expected to excite the utmost religious and vulgar audiences. Shakespeare might justly hold in contempt such a mode of securing applause; or, possibly, his own religious tenets (a point which is considered at length, with many other points, in the criticism on the "King John," which will be given in the sequel) may have induced him to take a little distance from Shakespeare. It is, however, easy to discover reasons why he would refuse to pander to popular prejudice, without supposing him to feel direct sympathy with the enemies of the Reformation.

Some of the principal incidents of the reign of John had been converted into a drama, with the purpose of promoting the Reformation, very early in the reign of Elizabeth, if not before, as in the case of "King John," by Bishop Bale, which, like the old "King John," in two parts, though we can trace no other particular resemblance. It was printed by the Camden Society, from the author's original MS. (in the library of the duke of Devonshire) in 1588, and is a specimen of the mixture of allegory and history in the same play, perhaps unexamined. As it was, doubtless, unknown both to the author or authors of the "King John," and any one else on the stage before or after, it is not further notice here, than to show at how early a date a portion of our annals had been brought upon the stage.

Upon the question, when "King John" was written by Shakespeare, we may say that it is a question which can be taken from the Press. Francis Meres introduces it into his list in 1598. Malone speculated that it was composed in 1588, but he does not place reliance upon the internal evidence he himself adduces, which certainly is of signs that cannot vogue with the critical historians, on the other hand, would assign the play to 1598, but the chance seems to be, that it was written a short time before it was spoken of by Meres: we should be disposed to assign it to a date between 1596 and 1598, when the old "King John," which was probably in a course of representation in 1591, had gone a little out of recollection, and when Meres would have had time to become acquainted with Shakespeare's drama, thereby increasing its popularity either at the Globe or Blackfriars Theatres.

3 The edition of 1591 was printed for Sampson Clarke: that of 1611, by Valentine Simmes, for John Helme; and that of 1623, by Aug. Mathews, for Thomas Dewe.

4 The edition of 1591 is preceded by a Prologue, omitted in the later impressions, which makes it quite clear that the old "King John," was posterior to Marlowe's "Tamburlaine." It begins, "Yea that with friendly grace of smooth'd brow/ Have hold of all the heart's great seeds." In the Hist of Engl. Dram. Poetry and the Stage, vol. iii. p. 119, reasons are assigned for believing that Marlowe's "Tamburlaine" was acted about 1557.

5 From a MS. Diary, under the date of 1598, we meet with an entry of a play by Robert Wilson, Henry Chettle, Anthony Munday, and Michael Drayton, entitled "The Funerals of Richard VI," which would have had time to become acquainted with Shakespeare's drama, and which certainly is of signs that cannot vogue with the critical historians, to which Shakespeare's play and the old "King John" relate.

8 Anno 1598. We have given the titles of four quarto editions of "King Richard II." which preceded the publication of the folio of 1623, and which were all published during the lifetime of Shakespeare; they bear date respectively in 1597, 1598, 1598, and 1615. It will be observed that the title of the edition of 1598 states that it contains "new additions of the Parliament Scene, and the deposing of King Richard." The Duke of Devonshire is in possession of an unique copy dated 1598, the title of which merely follows the wording of the preceding impression of 1598, omitting any notice of "new additions." The title of this impression is, though containing the whole of them. The name of our grandfathers and our great-grandfathers are to be found in this historical play in 1598, as if Simmes the printer, and Wise the stationer, when they printed and published their edition of 1597, did not know, or were not authorized to state, that Shakespeare had written it. Precisely the same was the case with "King Richard III." printed and published by the same parties in the same year, and of which also a second edition appeared in 1598, with the name of the author.

We will first speak regarding the date of the original production of "Richard II." and then of the period when it is likely that the "new additions" were inserted.

It was entered as the Stationers' Register in 1597, in the following manner:

[29 Aug. 1597.]

Andrew Wise. The Tragedy of Richard the Seconde. This memorium shows the anterior, but perhaps only shortly anterior, to the actual publication of "Richard II."

The quotation was first published in "New Particulars regarding Shakespeare and his Works," 8vo, 1886, where it was suggested that this "Richard II." might be the play mentioned in the letter written by James I. to his son Prince Henry, in which he warned his son to make the nobility to envy the King, and mislike him and his government; by which means he made his own son king, which was Henry Bolingbroke. Remember, also, how the Duke of York wished for a king, and how Richard II. had been in the Commonwealth's power, but say it was a villain's part, and a Judas' kiss, to hang the man for telling him the truth. Beware by this example of noblemen and their fair words, and say little to them, lest they do the like to thee or thy good will.

There is another circumstance belonging to the title-page of the Duke of Devonshire's copy which disagrees with that of the folio. The play was printed "as it hath been publiquely actted by the Right Honourable the Lord Chambrelliss his Seruants." The company to which Shakespeare belonged were the "King's " and it was printed from the other copy of 1598. This fact might give rise to the supposition, that it had been intended to reprint an edition of Richard II., including the "Parliament scene," as the "Register." But as this was not the case, the reference to Richard II. must be to the "Register." But as this was not the case, the reference to Richard II. must be to the "Register."
a lost play by Shakespeare, intended as a "first part" to his extant drama on the later portion of the reign of that monarch. It is also true that Forman says nothing of the formal deposition exhibited by us the Duke of Lancaster and Gaunt of Shakespeare. For the Duke of Lancaster "made his own son King," and he could not do so without something like a deposition exhibited or narrated. It is also to be observed, that if Forman's list of Shakespeare's works, in which he so many times exhibited the characters of the King and of Gaunt so inconsistently in two parts of the same play, The Richard and the Gaunt of Forman, with their treachery and cruelty, are totally different from the Richard and Gaunt of Shakespeare. For these reasons we may, perhaps, arrive at the conclusion, that it was a distinct drama, and not by Shakespeare. We may presume, also, that it was the very piece which Sir Gilly Merrick procured, and the story of which, according to a passage in the arrangement of Cuffe and Merrick, the latter paid forty shillings additional, because it was an old play, and not likely to attract an audience.

The very description of the plot given by Forman reads as if it were an old play, with the usual quantity of blood and treachery. How it came to be popular enough, in 1611, to be performed at the Globe must be matter of more speculation; perhaps the revival of it by the party of the Earls of Essex and Southampton had recalled public attention to it, and improvements might have been made which would render it a favourite in 1611, though it had been neglected in 1601.

This naturally leads us to the question, has the original popularity, may, possibly, have grown the "new additions," which were first printed with the impression of Shakespeare's "Richard II." in 1603, and which solely relate to the deposition of the King, if these "new additions," as they were termed in 1608, were only a suppressed part of the original play, there seems no sufficient ground for concluding that it was not Shakespeare's drama which was acted at the Globe in 1599, and more, I think, in 1601. If they were written in 1593, as Malone imagined, or even in 1598, according to the speculation of Chalmers, it might be called an old play in 1601, considering the rapidity with which dramas were often written and borrowed, which is the case with them. If neither Shakespeare's play, nor that described by Forman, were the pieces selected by Sir Gilly Merrick, there must have been three distinct plays, in the possession of the companies that acted at the Globe, upon the events of the reign of Richard II.

For the incidents of this "most admirable of all Shakespeare's purely historical plays," as Corderle calls it, (Lit. Rem. ii. 161,) our great poet appears to have given no other than Holinshed, who was himself indebted to Hall and Fabian. However, Shakespeare has nowhere felt himself bound to adhere to chronology when it better answered his purpose. So that in "Richard II." we have an instance of Act v. c. 8, as frequently and tawse, when he was in fact only twelve years old. Marston, in a short address before his "Wonder of Women," 1599, aiming a broad side at the ancient and probable authors of the play in this respect upon its true footing, when he says, "I have not laboured to tie myself to relate anything as a historian, but to enlarge everything as a poet;" and what we have just referred to in this play is exactly one of those anachronisms which, in the words of Schlegel, Shakespeare committed "purposely and most deliberately." His design, of course, was in this instance to link together "Richard II." and the first of "Henry IV." Of the four quarto editions of "Richard II." the most valuable, for its readings and general accuracy beyond dispute, is the 1605, London, Peter Short. The other three quarto's were, more or less, printed from a defective folio, and second quartos have taken the latest, that of 1615, as the foundation of its text; but, from a few words found only in the folio, it may seem proper to say that the player-editors referred also to some extrinsic authority. It is quite certain, however, that the folio copied obvious and indisputable blunders from the quarto of 1615. There are no fewer than eight places where the folio omits passages in the quarto, in one instance to the destruction of the continuity of the play. It is evident we have taken the detriment of the play. Hence not only the expediency, but the absolute necessity of referring to the quarto copies, from which these ad-joining passages have been distinguished by placing them between brackets.

1 It may perhaps be inferred that there was an intention to publish the "history," with these "new additions," in 1603: at all events, in that year the right in "Richard II.," "Richard III.," and "Henry IV.," passed to Henslowe and Whetstone. The latter, according to the "Additions," did not come out when the next editions of them appeared. The entry relating to them in the books of the Stationers' Company runs thus:

27 June 1603.
Matth. Lawe in full Courts, iyi Enterludes or Playes. the first of Richard the 3d. the second of Richard the 2d. the third of Richard the 1st. the additio of Andrew Wisse. all in forme of a playe.

INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS. Ixxvii

Diary) were of such an amount as was generally only produced by the wealth of the rose family. This revival of the virtuous and virtuous morals which may have arisen the publication of the early undated edition in the possession of the Duke of Devonshire. The reproduction of "The Famous Victories" by a rival company, and the appearance of this copy, was the first to be employed in the performance of this edition. It was probably the object of the writer to make the play an attractive one to the public, he could avail himself of some of the same incidents for the theatre to which he belonged. This event would at once make the subject popular, and hence, perhaps, the play not be expunged. The former had received a good reception in Devonshire, and the latter. The year 1598 may possibly have been the date when Shakespeare wrote his "Henry IV." Part i.

It is to be observed, then, that the incidents which are summarily dismissed in one old play, are extended by our great dramatist over three—the two parts of "Henry IV." and "Henry V." It is impossible to institute any parallel between "The Famous Victories" and Shakespeare's drama; for, besides that the former has reached us evidently in an imperfect shape, the incomparable superiority of the latter is such, as to render any attempt to trace resemblance rather a matter of contrast than comparison. Who might be the writer of "The Famous Victories," it would be idle to speculate; but it is decidedly inferior to most of the extant works of Marlowe, Greene, Peele, Kyd, Lodge, or any other of the more celebrated predecessors.

Sir John Oldcastle is one of the persons in "The Famous Victories?" and no doubt can be entertained that the character of Sir John Falstaff, in the first part of Shakespeare's "Henry IV," was originally called Sir John Oldcastle. This hesitation could not, however, have been felt at this point, as the fact is hardly removed by Mr. Halliwell's very curious and interesting tract "On the character of Sir John Falstaff, as originally called by Shakespeare," 12mo, 1841. But the identity of Oldcastle and Falstaff could ever have been questioned after the discovery of the following passage in a play by Nathaniel Field, called, "Amends for Ladies," 1613. It is difficult to comprehend: the lines seem to us decisive:

"I did you never see
The play where the fat knight, right Oldcastle,
Died, that the play still truly stood.
This can allude to nothing but to Falstaff's speech in Act v. sc. 2, of the ensuing play; and it would also show (as Mr. Halliwell points out) that Falstaff sometimes retained the name of Oldcastle after the author had altered it to that of Falstaff." This fact is remarkable, recollecting that "Amends for Ladies" could hardly have been written before 1611, that is, prior to the date no fewer than four editions of "Henry IV." Part i. were printed, on the page: "Falstaff was prominently introduced, and that he was called by no other name from the beginning to the end of that drama. The case is somewhat different with respect to Shakespeare's "Henry IV." Part i., where the change was so distinctly made by Shakespeare. The identity of Oldcastle and Falstaff is confirmed by a piece of evidence that Falstaff was still called Oldcastle after that continuation of the "history" had been written and performed. In Act i. sc. 2 of the drama, Old is given as the pre-fix to one character, and Richard to another, the latter being with the other part of the play, and the MS. for the quarto, 1600, was corrected for the press, this single passage escaped observation, and the ancient reading was preserved until it was expunged in the folio of 1623. Malone and Stevens, in opposition to Theobald, argue that Old was not meant for Oldcastle, but was the commencement of the name of some actor: none such belonged to Shakespeare's company, and the probability is all in favour of Theobald's supposition.

This change must have been made by Shakespeare anterior to the spring of 1598, because we then meet with the subsequent entry in the Stationers' Registers, relating to the earliest edition of "Henry IV." Part i.

"25 Feb. 1597. Andrew Wisse: A booke intituled the Historye of Henry the ilxe, with his battelie of Shrewsbury against Henry the Prince of the North: with the concepted Mirth of Sir John Falstaffe."

As the year did not then end until the 25th March, the 25th February, 1596, is the date which Mr. Wisse gives for the entry in the Calendar of the Stationers' Company, "The History of the Fifth." 3

The third edition of "The Famous Victories" was printed after the edition of 1588, or in the year 1597, or in 1600, by the same printer, John Day, and it is dated: "The History of the Fifth." This is the earliest I have found in the Stationers' Register. Mr. Wisse's book, 1600, 4to, a tract recently reprinted, under the editorial care of Mr. Halliwell, for the Percy Society.

1 There is another entry, under date 23th June, 1603, by which we learn that the title-page of the folio of Shakespeare's "Henry V." was printed, for whom the edition of 1594 was in fact printed.

2 Mr. Halliwell does not seem to have been aware, when speaking of the "First Part of the Trauerous and Generall History of the Famous Richard Earl of Huntingdon, and called Sir John Oldcastle, the good Lord Cobham," a play attributed to Shakespeare on the title-page of most of the copies printed in 1609, that it was rather by other hands than Shakespeare, which have no author's name. Hence it might be inferred, that the original title-page was cancelled at the instance of our great dramatist, and another substituted.
tor of the 4to, 1599, strangely misunderstanding it, printed it as follows:—

"I'll steal to Glendower and lose Mortimer;" as if Lov. of the 4to, 1599, were to be taken as the interjection, lo! I then usually printed los, and so the blunder was followed in the subsequent quartos, including that of 1618, from whence it was not yet thrust into Lucretia, 1599, as repeated in the folio, 1623; but Norton, the printer of the 4to, 1639, who, as has been remarked, did not adopt the text of either of the folios, saw that there must be a blunder in the line, and although he did not know exactly how to set it right, he at least made sense of it, by giving it,

"I'll steal to Glendower and lose Mortimer."

We only adduce this instance as one proof, out of many which might be brought forward, to establish the superiority of the text of the 4to. of 1599, to any of the subsequent re-impressions.

SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.

"The second part of Henrie the fourth, continuing to his death. Most of the copies were printed in the hands of Sir Iolin Falstaffe, and swaggersing Pistoll. As it had been sundrie times publikeely acted by the right honourable, the Lord Chamberlain his servants. Written by William Shakspeare. The first edition was printed for Andrew Wise and William Aspley. 1600." 4to. 45 leaves.

Other copies of the same edition, in quarto, not containing Sign. E 5 and E 6, have only 41 leaves. In the folio, 1623, the parts relating to Henry the Fourth, containing his Death: and the Coronation of King Henry the Fifth, occupies twenty-nine pages in the division of "Histories," viz. from p. 74 to p. 102 inclusive, the last twenty-three of which pages, 89 and 90, by an error of the press, are numbered 91 and 92. In the reprint of the folio, 1632, this mistake is repeated. In the two later folios the pagination continued from the beginning to the end of the volume.

We may state with more certainty than usual, that "Henry IV." Part ii. was written before the 25th Feb. 1598. In the preliminary notice of "Henry IV." Part i. it is mentioned, that Act ii. sc. 2, of the "history" before us contains a piece of evidence that Falstaff was still called Oldcastle, when it was written; viz. that the prefix of Olde is retained in the quarto, 1600, before a speech which belongs to Falstaff, and which is assigned to him in the folio of 1623. Now, we know that the name of Cotton was changed to that of Falstaff, the amanuensis of Sir Iolin Falstaffe, and swaggersing Pistoll. As it had been sundrie times publikeely acted by the right honourable, the Lord Chamberlain his servants. Written by William Shakspeare. The first edition was printed for Andrew Wise and William Aspley. 1600." 4to. 45 leaves.

The memorandum in the Stationers' Register, prior to the publication of the following play, is inserted literatim in Vol. i. p. 130: it bears date on 24th Aug. 1598, and it was made by Andrew Wise and William Aspley, who brought out "The Seconde Parte of the History of Kinge Henrie the third," 4to, in that year.

There was only one edition of "Henry IV." Part ii. in 1600, but some copies vary importantly. The play was evidently produced from the press in haste; and besides other large omissions, a whole scene, forming the commencement of Act ii. was left out. Most of the copies are imperfect, and are not to be found in the folio, 1623; but they are found in those of the Duke of Devonshire and Malone. The stationer must have discovered the error after the publication, and sheet E was accordingly reprinted, in order to supply the defect.

The folio 1623 was taken from a complete copy of the edition of 1600; and, moreover, the actor-directors, probably from a play-house manuscript in their hands, furnished many other lines wanting in the quarto. On the other hand, the quarto, 1600, contains several passages not found in the folio, 1623. Our text includes both, (properly distinguished in the notes) in order that no syllable which came from the pen of Shakespeare may be lost. Even if we have omitted to have himself rejected certain portions, preserved in the quarto, the exclusion of them by a modern editor would be unpardonable, as they form part of the history of the poet's mind.

The Life and Death of the Fift, in the folio of 1623, occupies twenty-seven pages, viz. from p. 69 to p. 95 inclusive. The pagination from "Henry IV." Part ii. to "Henry V." is not continued, but a new series begins with "Henry V." on p. 69. The first folio regularly was not published by a bookseller or booksellers by whom Shakespeare's genuine dramas were issued; and the second and third came from the hands of Thomas Pavier, who was instrumental in giving to the world some great pieces of the composition of which Shakespeare had no concern, though ascribed to him on the title-page. The internal evidence shows that the edition was made up, not from any authentic manuscript, nor even from any combination of the parts of the extracts published together with the copist of the theatre, but from what could be taken down in short-hand, or could be remembered, while the performance was taking place. It is true that the quarto impressions contain not the whole of his plays; there are many scenes, and long speeches, found in the folio of 1623; and the inference seems to be that "Henry V." was originally produced by Shakespeare in a comparatively incomplete state, and that large portions contained in the folio, and of which no trace can be pointed out in the quartos, were added at a subsequent date, to give greater novelty and attraction to the drama. Such, we know, was a very common course with the newly staged plays. A play called "Henry V." was represented at Court on the 7th Jan. 1605, as we learn from "The Extracts from the Accounts of the Revels," edited by Mr. P. Cunningham, and printed by the Shakespeare Society, p. 204; and these important additions have been inserted for that occasion. The entry runs, literatim, as follows:—

"On the 7 of January was played the play of Henry the fift."

In the margin we are informed that it was acted by his Majesty's players, but the name of the author is not in this instance given, although "Shaxberd" is placed opposite the title of "Measure for Measure," stated to have been exhibited on a previous occasion, and in a play of which Shakespeare's company renders it most probable that his play was performed on the occasion; but it is to be recollected also, that the old play of "The Famous Victories of Henry the fift" might have been "The King's Majesty's servants," even at so late a date as 1617, when the last edition of it made its appearance. Nevertheless, we may perhaps take it for granted, that the "Henry
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

Ixxxix

The first Folio, "Abridged," played at Whitehall by the King's servants, on 7th Jan. 1603, was Shakespeare's historical drama; and it may not be too much to presume, that most of the additions (Choruses excepted) included in the folio of 1623, were written in consequence of his "London edition of Henry V," by the Master of the Revels for representation before James I.

Our opinion, then, is that Shakespeare did not originally write his "Henry V," by any means as we find it in the folio of 1623, but that it was first produced without various scenes, and speeches subsequently written and introduced: we are perfectly convinced that the three quarto editions of 1600, 1602, and 1604 do not at all connect the play as it was acted in the first instance; but were hastily made up from notes taken at the theatre during the performance, subsequently patched together. Now and then we meet with a few consecutive lines, similar to the authentic copy, but in general the text is not so continuous. We might find proofs in support of our position in every part of the play, but as in his "Twenty quarto" Steevens has reprinted that of 1600, it will be needless to select more than a single specimen. We give the text as we find it, literally, in the quarto, 1600, from the copy in the Library of the Duke of Devonshire: our extract is from Act i. sc. 2, the speech of the King, just before the French Ambassadors are called in:—

"Call in the messenger sent from the Dolphin, and by your aid, the noble sinners of our land, France being our ewe, we will bring it to our own, Gentlemen, it is a rare text. Eyther our Chronicles shal with full mouth speak Freely of our acts, Or our Chronicle must mute.

Not worship with a paper epitaph."

Such is the speech as it is abridged and corrupted in the quarto, 1600: the correct text, as contained in the folio of 1623, may be found in the Quarto, 1600, but which has been certainly related to the expedition of the Earl of Essex to Ireland, between the 15th April and the 25th Sept. 1599, and must have been written during his absence:—

"As, by a lower but loving likelihood, Plays, great and gracious empress (As in good time he may) from Ireland coming, Bringing rebellion brooch'd on his sword, How many would the peacefull city quit. To welcome him."

The above lines were, therefore, composed between the 15th April and the 25th Sept. 1599, and most likely the Choruses formed part of the piece as originally acted, although the short-hand writer did not think it a necessary portion of the performance to be included in the earliest quarto, 1600, which was to be brought out with great speed; and perhaps the length of these Choruses was on this account cut off from the play, by those who employed the short-hand writer. Upon this supposition, the question when Shakespeare wrote his "Henry V," is brought to a narrow point; and confirmed as it is by the omission of all mention of the play by Meres, in his Palladis Tamia, 1598, we need feel little doubt that his first sketch came from the pen of Shakespeare, for performance at the Globe theatre, early in the spring of 1599. The enlarged play, as it stands in the folio of 1593, is to be preferred to the three quarto impressions without various scenes, and speeches. It was put into the complete shape in which it has there come down to us, until shortly before the date when it was played at Court.

FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI.

"The first Part of Henry the Sixt," was printed originally in the folio of 1592, where it occupies twenty-four pages: view from p. 96 to p. 119 inclusive, in the division of "Histories." It was reprinted in the folios 1592, 1664, and 1685.

Thus historical drama is first found in the folio of 1593: no earlier edition of it in any shape, or in any degree of imperfection, has been discovered. Of the second and third parts of "Henry VI.," copies in quarto, under different titles, lengthened in some speeches, and abbreviated in others, are extant; but the first part of "Henry VI." appeared originally in the collected edition of "Mr. William Shakespeare's Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies," put forth under the care of Richard Churb's, in 1623, containing a revised Folio text.

This single fact is sufficient, in our mind, to establish Shakespeare's claim to the authorship of it, even were we to take Malone's assertion for granted (which we are by no means convinced to do) that the internal evidence is all opposed to that claim. While the language, figures, and expressions in this folio of 1623, many of Shakespeare's contemporaries, authors, actors, and auditors, were alive; and the player-editors, if they had committed the first folio, and afterwards have inserted the words, which we believe not Shakespeare's, that was not his production, and perhaps well known to have been the work of some rival dramatist. If we imagine the frequents of theatres to have been comparatively ignorant upon such parts of his authorship, and living actors, who were aware of the truth, and in the face of these Heminge and Condell would not have ventured to appropriate to Shakespeare what had really come from the pen of another. That tricks of the kind were sometimes played by those far more voluble in publishing single plays, is certainly true; but Heminge and Condell were actors of repute, and men of character: they were presenting to the world, in an important volume, sceptr'd performances, which, in the memory of the most worthy a friend and fellow alive, as was our Shakespeare, and we cannot believe that they would have included any drama to which he had no title. In all probability they had already seen with their own eyes what had been done. If they had received his instructions and directions from time to time with reference to the performance of it, and they must almost necessarily have been acquainted with the real state of property, and their check to the publication.

Our opinion is therefore directly adverse to that of Malone, who, having been "long struck with the many evident Shakespeareanisms in these plays," afterwards came to the conclusion that he had been entirely mistaken, and that none of these productions were Shakespeare's. Malone's is in "Henry VI.:" "I am, therefore (he added), decisively of opinion, that this play was not written by Shakespeare." To support this notion, he published a "Dissertation on the Three Parts of Big Act, and living actors in 1605, in which he argued that the first part was not only not the authorship of Shakespeare, but that it was not written by the same persons who had composed the second and third parts of "Henry VI."

It reference to the time Shakespeare became connected with the plays, known as the three parts of "Henry VI.," it is necessary to observe, that it was very usual in the time of our great dramatist, for one play to take the place of another; and, by the addition of such improvements, to add to the stock of the theatre; and to vary the general performances, as Greene, in his "Groatworth of Wit," 1595, spoke of Shakespeare as "the only Shake-scene in a country," and as an "upstart crow beautified with our feathers," he alluded chiefly to the extra in which Shakespeare had employed certain dramas, by Greene and others, as the foundation of his three parts of "Henry VI." These certain dramas were some undiscovered original of the first part of "Henry VI.," the first part of the "Contention," which was the Two Famous Houses of York and Lancaster, 1597; the "True Tragedy of the Duke of York," 1595. It was by making additions, alterations, and improvements in these three pieces, that Shakespeare's name became associated with them as their author, and hence the title of the folio was inserted among his other works in the folio of 1623.

There are two other theories respecting the elder plays we have mentioned, neither of them, as it seems to us, supported by sufficient evidence: first, that the folio is a corrected copy of "Henry VI.," as it is contained in the folio of 1623, the first part of the "Contention," 1594, and the "True Tragedy," 1595, were in fact productions by Shakespeare himself. We do not believe this to be the case. Secondly, there is another theory, that the two latter were early editions of the same dramas that we find in the folio, and that the imperfections or variations in the quarto impressions are to be accounted for by abridgment and condensation of the text, that the whole script, from which they were printed, was obtained by the booksellers. In support of the first of these opinions, little better than conjecture can be produced, contradicted by the expressions of Greene in 1592, as far as those expressions apply to the last-mentioned plays. Directly in consequence, in some places the quarto editions of the first part of the "Contention" and the "True Tragedy" are fuller, by many lines, than the copy in the folio, 1623, which would hardly have been corrected in the printer's office so short-hand, and corrected by memory: in the next place, the speeches have such a degree of completeness and regularity as to render it very improbable that they were obtained by so uncertain and imperfect an expedient. We think it most likely that the first part of "Henry VI." was founded upon a previous play, although none such has been brought to light; and that the materials for the second and third parts of "Henry VI." were mainly derived from the older dramas of the first part of "The Contention betwixt the Two Famous Houses of York and Lancaster," and "The True Tragedy of Richard Duke of York.

If our dramaticist founded his first part of "Henry VI. upon the "Belshazzar" of Heneslews (this, of course, it could not have been written until after March, 1592); but with regard to the precise date of its composition we must remain in uncertainty. Malone's later notion was, as we have already observed, that it was written in a hundred years' time. Shakespeare, by Boswell, vol. iii. p. 288.) concludes decisively in the affirmative on these two points, forgetting, however, that the "Henry VI." acted by Heneslews's company, was thirty years subsequent to the first part, and in consequence of the success of the drama in the authorship of which Shakespeare was concerned.

SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.

"The second part of Henry the Sixth, with the death of the Good Duke Humphry," was first printed in the folio of 1623, where it occupies twenty-six pages; viz. from p. 120 to p. 146 of the division in the folio. It fills the same place in the subsequent folio impressions.

The "history" is an alteration of a play printed in 1594, under the following title: "The First part of the Contention betwixt the two famous houses of York and Lancaster, with the death of the good Duke Humphry, and the beginning and death of the Duke of Suffolke, and the tragical end of the proud Cardinall of Winchester, with the notable Rebellion of Jacke Cade: And the Duke of Yorkes first claim upon the Crown, by the Licentiate Hall, written for Thomas Millington, and are to be sold at his shop under Saint Peter's Church in Cornwall. 1594." By whom it was written we have no information; but it was entered on the Stationers' Register, 1594, 1594, 1595. The second edition of it in 1600: on the 19th April, 1602, it was assigned by Millington to Tho. Pavier, and we hear of it again, in the Stationers' Register, merely as "Yorkes and Lancaster," on the 8th November, 1602.

The name of Shakespeare was not connected with "the first part of the Contention," until about the year 1619, when The "First Part of the Contention" was reprinted by "his Majestie's Servants," what he called "the second part," of the same play, with the name of "William Shakespeare, Gent," upon the general title-page.

The object of Pavier was no doubt fraudulent: he wished to have it believed, that the old play was the production of our great dramatist.

Chettle acknowledges the important share he had in the publication of "The Groatsworth of Wit," in his "Kind-heart's Dream," which was printed at the close of 1599, or in the beginning of 1600. See the excellent reprint of this very curious and interesting tract in some places the quarto editions of the first part of the "Contention" and the "True Tragedy" are fuller, by many lines, than the copy in the folio, 1623, which would hardly have been corrected in the printer's office so short-hand, and corrected by memory: in the next place, the speeches have such a degree of completeness and regularity as to render it very improbable that they were obtained by so uncertain and imperfect an expedient.

It is impossible to assign a date to this play existing by conjecture. Its success, perhaps, led to the entry at Stationers' Hall of the folio of 1598, and to its appearance from the press in 1594.

THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI.

"The third part of Henry the Sixth, with the death of the Duke of Yorke," was first printed in the folio of 1623, where it occupies twenty-six pages, in the division of "Histories." Malone, 1634, vol. ii., p. 133. Malone (or rather, his third part of "Henry VI.") it bears the following title:--

"The true Tragedie of Richard Duke of Yorke, and the death of the good King Heneire the Sixt, with the whole contention betwixt the two houses of York and Lancaster, was presented at the barbrie tyme acted by the Right Honourable the Earl of Pembroke his seruants. Printed at London by E. for Thomas Millington, and are to be sold at his shoppe under Saint Peters Church in Cornwall. 1595." 1595. This play, like the "First Part of the Contention," was reprinted for the same bookseller in 1600, 4to. About the year 1619 a re-impression of both plays was published by K. P.; and the name of Shakespeare has been already observed in our Introduction to "Henry VI." part iii., first appears in connection with these "histories" in that edition.

Believing that Shakespeare was not the writer of "The First Part of the Contention," 1594, nor of "The True Tragedy of Richard Duke of York, 1595, and that Malone established his position, that Shakespeare only enlarged and altered them, it becomes a question by whom they were produced. Chettle, who reprinted the former volumes in 1591, and the latter in 1592, without scruple assigned that piece to Christopher Marlowe.

Although there is no ground whatever for giving it to Marlowe, there is some reason for supposing that it comes from the pen of Robert Greene.

In the Introduction to "Henry VI." part i., we alluded, as far as was there necessary, to the language of Greene, when speaking of Shakespeare in his "Great-worth of Wit," 1592. "The first part of the Contention," as published under the title of "The Groatsworth of Wit," was entered on the Stationer's Register, 1598. The second edition of it in 1600: on the 19th April, 1602, it was assigned by Millington to Tho. See the excellent reprint of this very curious and interesting tract made for the Percy Society, under the editorial care of Mr. Rimbault. In his address to the "Gentlemen Readers," Chettle apologizes to his readers if his copies of his plays have not been instrumental in the publication of Greene's attack upon him.
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS

the change of a word, or a line in "The True Tragedy," 1595.
O tigers heart, wrapp'd in a women's side.

Then Greene, when choosing Shakespeare having appropriated his life, nor parodies a line of his own, if so to show the particular productions to which he added.

Another fact tends to the same conclusion: it is a striking coincidence between the lines of some in which Greene's acknowledged dramatists, "Alphonso, King of Arragon," printed in 1599, by Thomas Creed, the same printer who, in 1584, had produced from his press an edition of "The First Part of the Contention." Greene was the hero kills Flaminius, his enemy, and thus addresses the dying man—

"Go, pack thee hence unto the Stygian lake, And make report unto thy fruitful sire, That he which now heareth hastens; Which he by treason set upon thy head: And if he ask thee who did send these words, Tell him that sent thee wear thy crown.

In "The True Tragedy," 1595, Richard, while stabbing Henry VI, a second time, exclaims,

If any spark of life remain in thee, Dewn, down to hell; and say I sent thee thither.

Shakespeare, when altering "The True Tragedy" for his own theatre, (for, as originally composed, it had been published by the Earl of Rocheser's servants, for whom Greene was in the habit of writing) adopted the line,

O tigers heart, wrapp'd in a women's side, without the change of a letter, and the couplet last quoted with only a very slight variation;

If any spark of life be yet remaining, Tell him that sent thee wear thy crown.

As in "Henry VI." part ii, Shakespeare availed himself of "The First Part of the Contention," 1594, so in "Henry VI." part iii., he applied to his own purposes much of "The True Tragedy of Richard Duke of York," 1595. He made, however, considerable omissions, as well as additions, and in the last two Acts he sometimes varied materially from the conduct of the story as he found it in the older play. One improvement may be noticed, as it shows the extreme simplicity of Greene's "true tragedy" at a period when Shakespeare's "true tragedy"; and it is to be ascertained by comparing two scenes of his "Henry VI." part iii., (Act iv. sc. 2 and 3) with a portion of "The True Tragedy." In the older play, Warwick, Oxford, and Clarence, aided by a party of soldiers, standing on one part of the stage, enact a plan for surprising Edward IV. In his tent on another part of the stage. Having resolved upon the enterprise, they merely cross the boards of Edward's encampment, the audience being required to suppose that the assailing party had travelled from their own quarters in order to arrive at Edward's tent. Shakespeare showed his superior judgment by changing the place, as if his object had been to show the Watchmen, who guard the King's tent. Robert Greene, in his "Pinner of Wakefield," (See "Hist. of Engl. Dram. Poetry and the Stage," vol. iii. p. 983.) relied on the imagination of his adders in the same way as the author of "The True Tragedy."

It is to be observed of "Henry VI." part iii., as was remarked in the Introduction to the second part of the same play, that a line, necessary to the understanding of the whole folio, 1595, and has been introduced into our text from "The True Tragedy," 1595. It occurs in Act ii. sc. 6, and it was, probably, accidentally omitted by the copyist of the manuscript from which Shakespeare's "history," or, as it appears in the folio, was printed.

In the folio of 1623, "The Tragedy of Richard the Third, Henry the Sixth, the First Part, the Earl of Northumberland, and the Batell at Bosworth Field," occupies thirty-two pages; viz. from p. 178 to p. 204 inclusive. There is no material variation in the later folios.

The popularity of Shakespeare's "Richard the Third" must have been great, judging only from the various quarto editions of the play. They were printed in 1597, 1599, 1603, 1604, 1605, and 1613, of which the last, which was said to be a reprint of an earlier quarto, 1596, is extant. The play was printed in 1603, and 1614, in the folio of 1623, with other additions, and with many marginal variations between the earlier quarto and the folio, that they did not think them of importance, or that the publishers of the later quarto did not think them of importance. These additions, extending in one instance to more than fifty lines, are pointed out in our notes. It will also be found that more than one speech in the folio is unintelligible without aid from the quarto; and for some other characteristic omissions, particularly for one in Act iv. sc. 6, see the notes.

With respect to the additions in the folio of 1623, we have no means of ascertaining whether they formed part of the original play. Stevens was of opinion that the book of 1603, 4to., was merely a reprint of the previous impression of 1597 and 1598, for the same bookseller. It is possible that the augmentations observable in the folio of 1623 may be referred by them to Shakespeare himself, and yet this it is not our opinion; for though the quarto sets right several doubtful matters, it is not well printed, even for a production of that

1 There is a trifling fact connected with "Henry VI." part i., a notice of which ought not to be omitted, when considering the question of the date of the composition of that play. It is impossible that the play might be founded. In Act v. sc. 3, these two lines occur—

She's beautiful, and therefore to be wed; O lady angery, wherein thy tongue.

The last of these lines is inserted in Greene's "The Planetomachia," printed as early as 1585. In "The First Part of the Contention," a pirate is introduced, who has killed another of Greene's productions.

2 By the title-pages of the four earliest editions on the opposite leaf, it will be seen, that it was unknown to Andrew Wise, that the play in 1599, had been "newly augmented," although it was in fact only pation: with the whole course of his detested life, and most deserved death. As it hath beene lately Acted by the Right Honourable the Lord Chamberlaine his servants. 2 An impression in 1623 is mentioned in some lists, but the existence of a copy of that date is doubtful.

3 Malone gives the date 1612, and in his copy at Oxford the last figure is blurred. The title-page in no respect differs from that of the copy at Oxford, except that the word " Nayehold " has been "acted by the King's Majesty's servants." They were not so called, until after May, 1603.
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

day, and bears marks of having been brought out in haste, and from an imperfect manuscript. The copy of the "History" in the folio of 1623 was in some places a reprint of the quarto, 1608; passages, facsimiles of the press are repeated, right for "right," help for "help," &c. For the additions, a manuscript was no doubt employed; and the variations in some scenes, particularly in the latter part of the play, are much too frequent, and the corrections so frequent, that it is probable a transcript belonging to the theatre was there consulted. Our text is that of the folio, with due notice of all the chief variations. The only entries in the Stationers' Registers relating to Shakespeare's "Richard the Third," is in these terms:—

"20 Oct. 1597
And here begins The Tragedie of King Richard the Third, with the death of the Duke of Clarence."

This memorandum, probably, immediately preceded the publication of the quarto, 1597. The only other entry relating to Richard the Third that we have already mentioned, and the exact words of it may be seen in a note to our Introduction to "Richard the Second." It is certain that there was a historical drama upon some of the events of the reign of Richard III. anterior to that of Shakespeare. T. Warton quoted Sir John Harington's "Apologie for Poetry," prefixed to his translation of Ariosto in 1591, respecting a tragedy of "Richard the Third," acted at Oxford in 1587. In 1612, W. Shakspeare moved Plaistowe, the tyrant, and terrified all the age and men's minds; and Stevens added Heywood's "Apology for Actors," 1612, to the same effect, without apparently being aware that Harington had anticipated many years before. The same year 1587 W. Shakespeare wrote "Hamlet." Both those authors, however, referred to a Latin drama on the story of Richard III., written by Dr. Legge, and acted at Cambridge before 1583. Stevens followed up his quotation from Harington by a reference to the play of Richard in the Stationers' Registers, dated June 19, 1594, relating to an English play on the same subject. When Stevens wrote, and for many years afterwards, it was not known that such a dramatist as Shakespeare could have written a large fragment of it (with many errors) from a copy wanting the commencement. A perfect copy of this very rare play is in the collection of the Duke of Devonshire, and from it we have been enabled to transcribe the whole. 1821 Boswell republished a London edition, and there are some peculiar features. It is in some respects unlike any relic of the kind, and was evidently written several years before Shakespeare's "Richard." It opens with a singular dialogue between Truth and Poetry:

"Poetrie. Truth, well met.
Truth. Thanks, Poetrie: what makes thee on such a stage?

Poet. Shadows.

Poet. Why, will Truth be a Player?"

Hence Truth proceeds with a sort of argument of the play; but before the Induction begins, the ghost of George, Duke of Clarence, had passed over the stage, delivering two lines as follows, which we give precisely as in the original copy now before us:

"Creesa cruce sanguinis, acietur sanguine creste.
Quod sepelit obru. O atio, atio, vendita.

The effects here are the same as those represented in Stevens's "The Antignus Unjaminion," as indeed it was entitled when it was republished (with alterations and insertions) by Cartwright the Comedian, without date, but during the Civil Wars. Some of the adaptations of the phrase by the Shakespeare Society, the text being taken from the first impression.

2 It is as follows, being rather unusually particular:

Richard, therefore, not only is a play of Richard the Third, wherein is shown the Death of Edward the Fourth, ng the death of Edward IV., and the whole story is thenes-forward most inartificially and clumsily conducted, with a variety of unconnected and accidental matters imperfectly drawn and ill sustained. Shore's wife plays a comspious part; and the tragedy does not finish with the battle of Bosworth Field, but is carried on subsequently, and the corruptions of certain matters in the play are quite as remarkable as the commencement. After the death of Richard, Report (a personification like some of those in the old Morallities) enters, and holds a dialogue with a Page, to inform the audience of certain matters in the drama, after a long scene between Richmond, the Queen mother, Princess Elizabeth, &c., two Messengers enter, and, mixing with the personages of the play, detail the succession of the princes, and their adventures from the death of Richard until the accession of Elizabeth. The Queen mother then comes forward, and pronounces an elaborate panegyric upon Elizabeth, ending with these lines:

"If she is, her life be twain,
God grant her souls may live in heaven for aye.
For, if her Graces dayes be brought to end
Four hope is gone, and all desire depend."
longed, and that under the management of Henslowe, it may be looked upon as singular, that the latter should have been without a drama on that portion of English history until after 1609; and it is certainly not less singular, that as late as 1610, Ben Johnson had yet to be employed in writing a new play upon the subject. Possibly, about that date Shakespeare's "Richard the Third" had been revived with the additions; and hence the employment of Jonson on a rival play of the same tragic theme. The publication of Shakspeare's tragedy after an interval of four years.

Malone was of opinion that Shakespeare wrote "Richard the Third" in 1593, but did not adduce a particle of evidence, and none of his conclusions was open to be supposed to be somewhat nearer the time of publication.

INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

KING HENRY VII.

"The Famous History of the Life of King Henry the Eight," was first printed in the folio of 1623, where it occupies twenty-eight pages; viz. from p. 209 to p. 222, inclusive. It is the last play in the division of "Histories." It fills the same place in the later impressions in the same form.

The principal question, in relation to Shakespeare's "Henry the Eighth," is, when it was written. We are satisfied, both by the internal and external evidence, that it came from the poet's pen after James I. had ascended the throne. Independently of the whole character of the drama, which was little calculated to please Elizabeth, it seems to us that Cranmer, who was the central character in the story, could not have been mentioned in the poet's mind before he had heard and read of the"supposition," which is, that the poet first speaks of Elizabeth, and of the advantages derived from her rule, and then proceeds in the clearest manner to notice her successor—:

"Nor shall this peace sleep with her: but as when
The bird of wonder dies, the maiden phoenix,
Herself creates another out of her ashes.
As great in estimation as herself;
So shall she leave her blessedness to one (Whose feet shall call her from the cloud of darkness)
Who from the sacred ashes of her honour
Shall star-like rise, as great in fame as she was,
And so stand fix'd.

Ingerity cannot pervert these lines to any other meaning; but it has been said that they, and some others which follow them, were a subsequent introduction; and, moreover, that they were the work of Ben Jonson, on some revival of the play in the reign of James I. There does not exist the slightest evidence to establish either proposition. Any person, reading the play, and remembering its author's speech at the christening, can hardly fail to perceive such an unison in language and thought as is not to be found in any other part of the drama. The finish and grandeur of the Elizabethan in the teeth of this supposition, they charged it as a subsequent addition, fixed the authorship of it upon a different poet, and printed it within brackets. As to external evidence, there is one fact which has never had sufficient importance given to it. We allude to the following memorandum in the Registers of the Stationers' Company:

"12 Feb. 1604. Nath. Butter. Ye get good allowance for the Enterlude of K. Henry 8th before he began to print it; and ye correct the print the wardens hands to ye for the enterlude of K. Henry 8th: he is to have the same for his copy." (Chalmers, unqualified, without qualification, that this entry referred to a contemporaneous play by Samuel Rowley, under the title of "When you see me you know me," 1605; but the "enterlude" is expressly called in the entry "K. Henry 8th," and we feel no hesitation in concluding that it referred to Shakespeare's drama, which had probably been brought out at the Globe Theatre in the summer of 1604. The memorandum, judging from its terms, seems to have been made, not at the request of Butter, but by the bookseller, of the company to which Shakespeare belonged, and in order to prevent a surreptitious publication of the play. The "12 Feb. 1604," was, of course, according to our present reckoning the 1st March, 1605, and that date Butter had not begun to print "Henry the Eighth." No edition of it is known before it appeared in the folio of 1623, and we may infer that Butter failed in getting "good allowance" with the wardens' hands to it."

The Historie of Troynol and Cressed. As it was actyd by the Kings seruants at the Globe. Written by William Shakespeare. London Imprinted by G. Eld for B. Bonian and H. Wa1ley, and are to be sold at the spred Eagle in Paulus Church-yerd, ouer against the great North doore. 1600. 4to. 46 leaves.

In the folio of 1623, "The Tragedie of Troynol and Cressed" occupies twenty-nine pages, the Prologue filling the first page and the last being left blank. It retains its place in the 1668 quarto, and in such a form as has come down to our time, printed at the head of the page on which the play commences.

We will first state the facts respecting the early impressions of "Troilus and Cressida," and then make such observations upon them as seem necessary.

The play was originally printed in 1609. It was formerly supposed that there were two editions in that year, but they were merely different issues of the same impression: the book was not divided into quarto and folio, nor is there anything extraneous to the present play. On the title-page of the copies first circulated, it is not stated that the drama had been represented by any company; and in a sort of preface headed, "A Never Writer to an ever Reader," it is inferred that it had been acted with the stage, never clapper-clawed with the palms of the vulgar; in other words, that the play had not been acted. This was probably true; but as "Troilus and Cressida" was never performed upon the stage, it becomes necessary for the publishers to substitute a new title-page, and to suppress their preface: accordingly a re-issue of the same edition took place, by the title-page of which it appears that the play was acted by the King's Majesty's servants at the Globe.

In the Stationers' Registers are two entries, of distinct dates, relating to a play, or plays, called, "Troilus and Cressida," they are in the following terms:—

" Feb. 1602-3. Mr. Roberts—The book of Troilus and Cressida, as yt is acted by my Lo. Chamberlens men."

The editions issued in 1609 and 1610 are issued as if from the cutaneous of the entry of "28 Jan. 1608-9;? but if Roberts printed a "Troilus and Cressida," whether by Shakespeare or by any other dramatist, in consequence of the earlier entry of "25 Jan. 1609-9;", the quarto was probably reprinted for the reason that Shakespeare's tragedy was again not printed, as far as can now be ascertained, until it appeared, under rather peculiar circumstances, in the folio of 1623.

In that volume the dramatic works of Shakespeare, as is well known, are printed in three divisions—"Comedies," "Histories," and "Tragedies;" and a list of them, under those heads is inserted at the commencement. In that list "Troilus and Cressida" is placed firstnote; but it is remarkable, that it is inserted near the middle of the folio of 1623, without any paging, excepting that the second leaf is numbered 74 and 80: the signatures also do not correspond with any form of the series. Hence it was inferred by Farmer, that the insertion of "Troilus and Cressida" was an afterthought by the player-editors, and that the rest of the folio was printed, they had not intended to include it. It seems to me that there is no adequate ground for this notion, and that the peculiar circumstances to which we have alluded may be sufficiently accounted for by the supposition that "Troilus and Cressida" was given to, and executed by, a different company of players, and in a different form of expression of that day this may have been a dramatic performance. More than a century earlier, viz. in 1471, Caxton had printed his "Rieneyl of the Histories of Troye," which was reprinted, together with Watteville's "Troye," by Lydgate's "History, Sege, and Descreycon of Troye" came from Pyson's press in 1518; but Shakespeare seems to have been so attentive a reader of Chaucer's five books of "Troynol and Cressed" (of which the last edition, anterior to the production of Shakespeare's play, appeared in 1602) as to have been considerably indebted to them. It is not easy to trace any direct or indirect obligations on the part of Shakespeare on this source before the concluding portion came out in 1635. It is well known that the adventures of Troilus and Cressida are not any where mentioned in the Iliad.

"Histories," and "Tragedies," at the beginning of the volume was most likely printed last, and the person who printed it may have omitted it because it had been as accidentally omitted in the pagination. No copy of the folio of 1623 is, we believe, known, which does not contain "Troilus and Cressida;" it is not there divided into quarto and folio, but with a view to its production at the Globe as soon as the season commenced at that theatre: before it was so produced, and after it had been licensed, Bonian and Wa1ley seem to have possessed themselves of a copy of it; having proceeded to be printed, insatct it to the world as "a new play, never staled with the stage, never clapper-clawed with the palms of the vulgar." That they had obtained without the consent of the company, "the grand possessors," as they are called, may be gathered from the conclusion of the preface. The second issue of Bonian and Wally's edition of 1609 was not made until after the tragedy was acted at the Globe, as is stated on the title-page. This is an admission of the libels as well as of the points of main differences in the quarto copies; and it enables us with some plausibility to conjecture, that the date when Shakes-peare wrote "Troilus and Cressida" was not long before it was first represented, and a still shorter time before it was first printed.

Some difficulty has arisen out of the entry, already quoted, of a "Troilus and Cressida" in the Stationers' books, with the following note: "Pynson printed a 'Troilus' and a 'Cressida' in 1602 and 1603, but it is not certain whether the play was acted by the Lord Chamberlain's servants; the company to which Shakespeare belonged having been so designated anterior to the license of James I. in May, 1603, which occurs in the stationers' books, an inference being drawn that Shakespeare wrote his 'Troilus and Cressida' in 1609. It may, however, be reasonably inferred that this was a different play on the same subject. Every body must be aware of the probability that in 1602-3 Shakespeare's 'Troilus and Cressida,' especially towards the conclusion, they could hardly have been written by the pen which produced the magnificent speeches of Ulysses and other earlier portions, and were probably relics of a drama acted by the Lord Chamberlain's servants about 1602, and in the spring of 1608 intended to be printed by Roberts. In April and May, 1609, it appears by Henslowe's Diary that he paid various sums to Dekker and Chettle for a play they were then writing under the title of 'Troilus and Cressida;' it may be concluded that it was soon afterwards acted by the Earl of Nottingham's players, for whom it was compos'd; and the黡 of the title was not altered, if the one word was altered, among many others, to "present" the play to the Earl of Nottingham."

This brings us to the question of the source from which Shakespeare derived his ideas: how far he did, or did not, follow the older play we suppose him to have employed, it is not possible to determine. In 1581 a "proper ballad, dialogue-wise, between Troynol and Cressed" was entered on the Stationers' Register. This is not recorded as written by Shakespeare, but is dated 1603, and it is possible that the drama may have been written by some company of players, but not necessarily by Shakespeare. In 1602-3, may have been a tragedy, not by Shakespeare, brought out by the Lord Chamberlain's servants at the Globe, in competition with their rivals at the Rose or Fortune. Of this play the title is unknown. It is impossible to say, as Shakespeare himself; and he might be too much in haste to have time to alter and improve all that his own taste and genius would otherwise have rejected.

We infer this from the terms of the entry in the Stationers' Registers, but that the "Troilus and Cressida," or any part of it, as printed by Segar, is not mentioned. It is upon this evidence only that we know that Segar
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS. XCV

After adverting to the real or supposed origin of the story of "Troylus and Cressida," Coleridge remarks in his Literary Remains, vol. ii. p. 180, that it "can scarcely be classed with his own and with Robert Hooke's two books. The intermediate link between the fictitious Greek and Roman histories, which we call legendary dramas, and the proper ancient histories, that is, between the Pericles and Titus Andronicus, seems to have been given to the characters of the hero and heroine, and the purpose Shakespeare had in view of portraying them, and goes on to observe:—"I am half inclined to believe that Shakespeare's main object in the matter to my mind, his ruling impulse, was to translate the poetic horrors of jargonism into the not less rude, but more intellectually vigorous, and more featurably, warriors of Christian chivalry,—and to substantiate the distinction between the former and the latter by the Homeric epic into the flesh and blood of the romantic drama,—in short, to give a grand history-piece in the robust style of Albert Durand. 1 Consistently with some degree with this opinion, Schlegel remarks, that "the whole play is one continued Troy of the crown of all heroic tales—the tale of Troy," and after dwelling briefly upon this point, he adds:—"in all this let no man conceive that an indignity was intended to Homer: Shakespeare had not the Bill before him, but the chiparulous romances of the Trojan war derived from Dares Phrygius." Shakespeare, in fact, found the story popular, and he applied it to a popular purpose in a popular manner.

Of course the interest of the question is, that "Troylus and Cressida" came from the hands of a different printer, though little or no distinction can be traced in the type, is that there is hardly any play in the folio of 1623 which contains so many errors of typography as this. Whether this is in the foundations of the text, for in various instances the latter adopts the literal blunders of the former; it besides introduces not a few important corrections, for which it is not easy to account, so that the later copy, correct as it is not a whit, is perhaps better represented in the quarto. There are, however, some valuable additions in the folio, not found in the quarto, while on the other hand the quarto contains passages passages which as they are sometimes absolutely romances of the Trojan war derived from Dares Phriygius." Shakespeare, in fact, found the story popular, and he applied it to a popular purpose in a popular manner.

For "thrice-reputed nectar," the Duke of Devonshire's copy of the quarto has "thrice-nectar" or thrice purified and refined nectar. The other instance of the same kind occurs near the end of the play (Act v. sc. 7) where Achilles is exciting his armed Myrmidons to the slaughter of Hector, and tells them—

"Emplee him in thy weapons round about: in best manner, expel our foe when thou art our." Thus it stands in all editions, from the folio of 1623 downwards, and the commentators have been at some pains to explain the phrase "execute your arms," when in truth, as Strachey remarks, it was a misprint for "execute your aim," as appears upon the title-page. He in fact, in the folio of 1623, in the collection of the Duke of Devonshire: for Achilles, to charge his followers to encircle Hector with their weapons, and then execute their aim against him in the fullest manner, requires no explanation, and is an improve-ment of the received text. This copy of the second issue of the quarto, 1609, seems originally to have belonged to Humphry Dyson, a curious collector, who considerably outlived Shakespeare. It is in this copy that the signature, that "Troylus and Cressida" was "printed amongst the works" of Shakespeare, referring to course of the folio of 1623.

Due then produced an alteration of "Troylus and Cressida" at the Dorset Garden Theatre in 1679, and it was printed in the same year: in the preface he states that he had "refined Shakespeare's language, which before was obsolete."
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

made from the French of Amiot, Bishop of Auxerre, and appears to have been very popular, though published at a high price in 1563. Malone supposed that "Coriolanus" was written in 1610; but we are destitute of all evidence on the point, beyond what may be derived from the style of composition: this would certainly induce us to fix it somewhat late in the career of Shakespeare.

It is on the whole well printed for the time in the folio of 1623; but in Act ii. sc. 3, either the transcriber of the manuscript or the composer must have omitted a line, which Pope has inserted (from a copy of the First Folio of Pinckard), and which has ever since been received into the text, because it is absolutely necessary to the intelligibility of the passage. For the sake of greater distinction, we have printed these additions, besides pointing out the circumstance in a note.

TITUS ANDRONICUS

The most lamentable Roman Tragedy of Titus Andronicus. As it hath sundry times beene playd by the Right Honourable Francis Meres, Esquire, his own time, and the Earl of Southampton's, and the Earl of Pembroke, the Earl of Derby, and the Earl of Sussex. The first impression (dated 1594, and attributed to Richard Halle) was printed by I. R. for Edward White, and is to be sold at his shopke, at the little North doore of Pauls, at the signe of the Adam and Eve.
The most lamentable Tragedy of Titus Andronicus. As it hath sundry times beene playde by the Kings Maiesties Servants. London, Printed for Ewdard White, and are to be solde at his shopke, nere the little North door of Pauls, at the signe of the Adam and Eve. 1594.
The Tragedy, or Tragedies, called "Titus Andronicus," occupies twenty-two pages, in the division of "Tragedies," viz. from p. 51 to p. 52 inclusive. The three later impressions (supposed to be those of the third and fourth editions) are without the volume-title.

We feel no hesitation in assigning "Titus Andronicus" to Shakespeare. Whether he may lay claim to it as the author of the entire tragedy, or only in a qualified sense, as having made the principal improvements in it, is a different and a more difficult question.

We find it given to him by his contemporary, Francis Meres, in his Palladii Tamia, 1598, where he mentions "Titus Andronicus" ("an excellent composition by Richard Halle") as "Richard III., "Henry IV.," "King John, and "Romeo and Juliet." It was also inserted in the folio of 1623 by Shakespeare's fellow-actors, Heminge and Condell, and they place it between "Coriolanus" and "Titus Andronicus." Had it not been by our great dramatist, Meres, who was well acquainted with the literature of his time, would not have attributed it to him; and the player-editors, who had been Shakespeare's contemporaries, could not have hesitated to assign to him a character and experience, would not have included it in their oeuvre. These two facts are, in our view, sufficient.

It was, undoubtedly, one of his earliest, if not his very earliest dramatic production. We are not to suppose that at the time he first joined a theatrical company in London, he could not be between twenty-two or twenty-three years old, his style was as formed and as matured as it afterwards became; all are aware that there is a most marked distinction between his mode of composition early and late in life: we have, however, for instance, in "Love's Labour's Lost," and in "The Winter's Tale," and we apprehend that "Titus Andronicus" is as a sort of preface. Supposing "Titus Andronicus" to have been written about 1587, we would only add the qualifying word of very little value; in his suppressed Prologue he asserted it to be the unquestionable work of Shakespeare, while in his preface to the printed copy in 1627, he mentions it as a stage-tradition, that Shakelested from the piece itself, in certain real or supposed dissimilarities of composition. When Dantzer entered the "noble Roman History of Titus Andronicus" in 1558, he coupled with it "the ballad thereof," which is the style of the title-page, vol. i. p. 241, edit. 1612. A play called "Andronicus" is mentioned by Ben Jonson in the induction to his "Bartholomew Fair," (played first in 1614,) as a piece of twenty-five or thirty verses, a sort of metrical fable, or "the looking-ingrate," 1604, imputed to Thomas Middleton, where (Signs. F. 3) the author speaks of the "lamentable action of one arm, like old Titus Andronicus." The loss of his hand by the hero would no doubt form an incident in every drama written upon the subject.

ROME AND JULIET. An excellent concealed Tragedie of Romeo and Juliet. As it hath been often (with great applause) played publicly, by the right Honourable the L. of Hunsdon his servants. London, Printed by John Danter. 1597. 4to. 39 leaves. The most excellent and lamentable Tragedie, of Romeo and Juliet. Notwithstanding its augmentation, it hath been sundry times publicly Acted, by the right Honourable the Lord Chamberlain's his servants. London Printed by Thomas Creede, for Cuthbert Burby, and are to be sold at the Bow Exchange. 1599. 4to. 46 leaves. The most excellent and Lamentable Tragedie, of Romeo and Juliet. As it hath been sundry times publicly Acted, by the Kings Malesties servants at the Globe. Newly corrected and augmented by Mr. L. Smethwick, and are to be sold at his Shop in Saint Dunstanes Church-yard, in Fleetstreet under the Dyall. 1609. 4to. 45 leaves.

In his letter of 1598 "The Tragedie of Romeo and Iuliet" occupies twenty-five pages, viz. from p. 38 to p. 79, inclusive, in the division of "Tragedies." It fills the same space in the folios of 1602, 1604, and 1615. It seems evident that there was an English play upon the story of Romeo and Juliet before the year 1599; and the fact establishes that, even at that early date, our dramatists resorted to Italian novels, or translations of them, for the subjects of their productions. It is the most ancient piece of evidence of the kind yet discovered, and it is given by Arthur Brooke, who in that year published a narrative poem, called "The Tragedial Historie of Romes and Juliet." At the close of his address "to the Reader" he observes "through I saw the same argument lately set forth on stage with more commendation than I can look for (being there much better set forth, than I have, or can do); yet the same matter, penned as it is, may serve the like end, if not the like purpose." During the First Stage, vol. ii. p. 416. Thus we see also, that the play had been received "with commendation," and that Brooke himself, unquestionably a competent judge, admits its excellence. If we had not been assured that there was founded upon the same interesting incidents between 1599 and the date when Shakespeare wrote his tragedy, a period of, probably, more than thirty years; but no hint of the kind is given in any record, and certainly the supposition is more frequent, and sometimes more particular; and our inference is, that it owed part of its popularity, not merely to printed narratives in prose or verse, nor to the play spoken of by Brooke in 1599, but to subsequent dramatic representations, perhaps, more or less accurate, of the same story. How far Shakespeare might be indebted to any such production we have no means of deciding; but Malone, Stevens, and others have gone upon the supposition, that Shakespeare himself had some sort of a work representing the incidents of Po- Paynter's novel; and least of all do they seem to have con- templated the possibility, that he might have obtained assistance from some foreign source.

Arthur Brooke's "Romeo and Juliet," that he derived his materials from Bandello (Part ii. Nov. 9), La spartuta morte di due infe-ciissimi Amanti, &c.; and Paynter very literally translated Brissman's Histoire de deux Amans, &c., in the collection of Nicholas Rowe, 1705, which established a couple of the Po- Laynter's prose version have recently been reprinted in a work called "Shakespeare's Library," where the antiquity of the story is considered. Stevens was disposed to think that Shakespeare had only more fully taken a hint from that than from Brooke, while Malone supported, and we think established, a contrary opinion. He examined a number of minute points of resemblance; but, surely, no doubt can be drawn, and by those imperfections, which would belong to manuscript prepared from defective short-hand notes. As Stevens printed the first and the third edition of "Romeo and Juliet" in his "Twenty Quarto's," a comparison, to test the truth of his own claim, was made by the printers, who do not of course go the length of contending that Shakespeare did not alter and improve the play, subsequent to its earliest produc- tion on the stage, but merely that the quarto, 1597, does not contain "any other thing as it stands." The second edition was printed in 1599, and it professes to have been "corrected, augmented, and amended;" the third dated edition appeared in 1609; but some copies without a date are known, which most likely were posterior in point of time, anterior to the appearance of the folio in 1623. The quarto, 1597, is of no authority.

The quarto, 1609, was printed from the edition which came out ten years以前 and the folio, 1623, of some decided errors of the press, shows that it was a re- print of the quarto, 1609. It is remarkable, that although every quarto impression contains a Prologue, it was not the Prologue of the First Folio, though this does not of course go the length of contending that Shakespeare did not alter and improve the play, subsequent to its earliest production on the stage, but merely that the quarto, 1597, does not contain "any other thing as it stands." The second edition was printed in 1599, and it professes to have been "corrected, augmented, and amended;" the third dated edition appeared in 1609; but some copies without a date are known, which most likely were posterior in point of time, anterior to the appearance of the folio in 1623. The quarto, 1597, is of no authority.

The quarto, 1609, was printed from the edition which came out ten years以前 and the folio, 1623, of some decided errors of the press, shows that it was a re-
It is remarkable that in no edition of "Romeo and Juliet," printed anterior to the publication of the folio of 1623, do we find Shakespeare's name upon the title-page. Yet Meres, in his Palladis Tamia, had distinctly assigned it to him in 1598; and although the name of the author might be purposely left out of the imprint of the first quarto edition, to white the announcement by Meres, for not inserting it in the "corrected, augmented, and amended" edition of 1599, the Shakespearean popularity had increased, and the successful application of the so-called "title-page" of 1609, although Shakespeare's popularity must then have been at its height. "King Lear," in 1608, had been somewhat ostentatiously called "M. William Shake-speare, his, Acc. Life," and the death of "Juliet" (The Taming of a Shrew), in 1664, were recommended to purchasers, as "Shakespeare's Sourets," in unusually large characters on the title-page.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

"The Life of Tymon of Athens" first appeared in the folio of 1623, where it occupies, in the division of "Tragedies," twenty-two pages immediately following the "Winter's Tale." It was, however, reprinted in the folio of 1632, and may be found in the third folio edition of Shakespeare's Works, 1664. The first part appears to have been written in 1594, and the second part in 1598.
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

JULIUS CAESAR.

["The Tragedy of Julius Caesar"] was first printed in the folio of 1623, where it occupies twenty-two pages; viz. from p. 109 to p. 130 inclusive, in the division of "Tragedies." The Acts, but not the Scenes, are distinguished; and it appeared in the same manner in the three later folios.

No early quarto edition of "Julius Caesar" is known, and there is reason to believe that it never appeared in that form. The manuscript originally used for the folio of 1623 must have been extremely perfect, and free from corruptions, for there is, perhaps, no drama in the volume more accurately preserved.

Malone and others have arrived at the conclusion that "Julius Caesar" could not have been written before 1607. We think there is good ground for believing that it was acted before 1608.

We found this opinion upon some circumstances connected with the publication of Drayton's "Barons' Wars," and the resemblance between a stanza there found, and a passage in "Julius Caesar," both of which it will be necessary to quote. In Act v. sc. 5, Antony gives the following character of Brutus:

"His life was gentle; and the elements
So mix'd in him, that Nature might stand up
And say to all the world, This was a man."

In Drayton's "Barons' Wars," book iii. edit. Svo., 1603, we meet with the subsequent stanza. The author is speaking of Mortimer:

"Such one he was, of him we boldly say,
In which real soul all sort of services did suit,
In whom in peace th' elements all lay
So mix'd, as none could sovereignty impute;
As all at once, yet so as none could perfect;
This his lively temper was so absolute,
That 'tis said, when heaven's his model first began,
Yet Mortimer was perfect'd, a stanzas to begin."

I think type is hardly necessary to establish that one poet must have availed himself, not only of the thought, but of the very words of the other. The question is, was Shakespeare indebted to Drayton, or Drayton to Shakespeare! We shall see presently that Drayton himself has been most probable to the use of Shakespeare of these and other stories. He was a sound and unexhaustible store of the mind of our great dramatist, but adroit to a few dates, which, we think, warrant the conclusion that Drayton, having heard "Julius Caesar" at the theatre, or seen it in manuscript before 1608, applied to his own purpose, perhaps unconsciously, what, in fact, belonged to another poet.

Drayton's "Barons' Wars" first appeared in 1596, quarto, under the title of "Mortimeriados." Malone had a copy of the folio edition of 1610, and Drayton's poem, which had originally been printed in 1598. In the quarto of 1596, and in the unedited edition, it is not divided into books, and is in seven-line stanzas; and what is there said of Mortimer seems to have been the basis or origin of Shakespeare's "Julius Caesar." Drayton afterwards changed the title from "Mortimeriados" to "The Barons' Wars," and re-modelled the whole historical poem, altering the stanza from the seven-line form to the nine-line form given to "Julius Caesar." This course he took before 1608, when it came out in octavo, with the stanza first quoted, which contains so marked a similarity to the lines from "Julius Caesar." We apprehend that he did so, presumably having heard or seen Shakespeare's tragedy before 1608; and we think that strong presumptive proof that he was the borrower, and not Shakespeare, is derived from the fact, that in the subsequent impressions of "The Barons' Wars," in 1606, 1610, and 1615, the stanza remained precisely as in the edition of 1608; but that in 1619, after Shakespeare's death and before "Julius Caesar" was printed, Drayton made even a nearer approach to the words of his original, by striking a likeness:

"He was a man, then boldly dare to say,
In whose rich soul the virtues well did suit;
In whom so mix'd the elements did lie,
That none to one could seem so perfect and so wise;
As did all govern, so did all obey:
He of a temper so was absolute,
And such a sort of man, when he began,
She meant to show all that might be in man."

We have been thus particular, because the point is obviously of importance, as regards the date when "Julius Caesar" was brought upon the stage. Malone seems to have thought Drayton was the author of Shakespeare's "Julius Caesar," and so he is in his first shape until the edition of 1608, and concluded that the resemblance to Shakespeare was first to be traced in
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

MACBETH.

"The Tragedie of Macbeth" was first printed in the folio of 1623, where it occupies twenty-one pages; viz. from p. 131 to p. 151 inclusive, in the division of "Tragedies." The Acts and Scenes are regularly marked there, as well as in the later folios.

The only ascertained fact respecting the performance of "Macbeth," in the lifetime of its author, is that it was represented at the Globe Theatre on the 29th of April, 1606. When the play was performed in London, we know nothing, but we are inclined to think that it was not, and that Malone was right in his conjecture, that it was first acted about the year 1606. The subsequent account of the plot is derived from Drummond of Hawthornden's manuscript in the Ashmolean Museum, from which it appears, that he saw "Macbeth" played at the Globe on the day we have stated—

"In Macbeth, at the Globe, 1610, the 20th of April, Saturday, there was to be observed, first, how Macbeth and Banquo, two noblemen of Scotland, were suddenly made kings by a most curious form of equivocation; then, how Banquo, overpowered by the thought of being slain, and nothing to me? Yes, said the Nymphs, Hail to thee, Banquo, thou shalt beget kings, yet be no King. And so they departed, and the magicians were dismissed, King Duncan, King of Norway."—1 1 Lord Stirling published a tragedy under the title of "Julius Caesar," as early as 1604, and, consequently, unless Shakespeare was indebted to him, must have been in existence. That Drayton had not remodelled his "Mortimeriado" as late as 1606, we gather from the circumstance, that he reprinted his poems in that year without "The Bankside Tragedies." Another slight circumstance might be adduced to show that "Julius Caesar" was even an older tragedy than "Hamlet." In the latter (Act ii, sc. 2) it is said that Julius Caesar was "in the presence of King Caius," that that tragedy must then have been in existence. IN THE days of Edward the Confessor, and Duncan had them both kindly welcome, and made Macbeth forth with Prince of Northumberland; and sent him hame to his own Castle, and appointed Macbeth to be his son, for he would say with him the next day at night, and did so.

And Macbeth contrived to kill Duncan, and through the persuasions of his wife, he made an attempt, not being his guest. And there were many prodigies seen that night and the day before. And when Macbeth had murdered Duncan, the King, the supposition was that he did it by his wife's hands, which held the bloody daggers in hiding, by a means that are not yet discovered. But Duncan, being slain, the murder known. Duncan's two sons fled, the one to England, the other to Wales, to save themselves; they, being fled, and subsequently supposed guilty of the murder of their father, which was nothing so.

"Then was Macbeth crowned King, and then he for bare of Banquo, who was suspected, in some ways, so resembling himself, that he permitted the death of Banquo, and caused him to be murdered on the way that he rode. The night, being full of supper with his nobility, he went towards the place to which he was to return, and there he began to speak of noble Banquo, and to wish that he were there. And as he thus did, standing up to drink a cup to him, the ghost of Banquo came, and sat down in his chair behind him. And he, turning about to sit down again, saw the ghost of Banquo, which fronted him, so that he fell in a great passion of fear and fury, uttering many words about his murder, by which, when they heard that Banquo was murdered, they suspected Macbeth.

"Then Macduff fled to England to the King's son, and so they raised an army, and came to Scotland, and at Dunsinane overthrew Macbeth. In the mean time, while Macduff was in England, Shakespeare wrote Macbeth's wife and children, and after, in the battle, Macduff slew Macbeth."

"Observe also, how Macbeth's Queen did rise in the night in her sleep, and walk, and talked and confused all, and the Doctor noted two.

Our principal reason for thinking that "Macbeth," had been originally represented at least four years before 1610, is the striking allusion, in Act iv, sc. 1, to the union of the three kingdoms of England, Scotland, and Ireland, in the hands of one. The Macbeth ascended the throne in March, 1602-3, and the words, "Some see," That two-fold balls and treble sceptres carry, would have had little point, if we suppose them to have been delivered after the King who bore the balls and sceptres had ascended to the throne. The union of the three kingdoms was claimed of Great Britain and Ireland on the 24th of October, 1604, and we may perhaps conclude that Shakespeare wrote "Macbeth" in the year 1605, and that it was first acted at the Globe, when it was opened for the summer season, in the spring of 1606.

Malone elaborately supports his opinion, that "Macbeth" was produced in 1606, by two allusions in the speech of the Porter, in Act iii, sc. 4, and the scene of equivocation, which had been supported by Robert Garnet, who was executed on the 3d of May, 1606. We are generally disposed to place little confidence in such passages, not only because they are susceptible of various interpretations, but because they may have been introduced at any subsequent period, either by the author or actor, with the purpose of exciting the applause of the audience, by reference to some circumstances then at large in the public mind.

We know that during the reign of James I., there was the constant habit of making additions and alterations, and that comic performers had the vice of delivering more than was set down for them. The speech of the Porter, in which the two successive temporaries of allusions are contained, is exactly of the kind which the performer of the part might be inclined to enlarge, and so strongly was Coleridge convinced that it was an interpolation by the player, that he boldly pledged himself to demonstrate its origin; and the poet, Shakspere, in 1618, for three years earlier he had publicly declared it in a lecture devoted to "Macbeth," although he admitted that there was something of Shakespeare in it, "the primrose path of dalliance," and then demonstrated the existence of the lines, and that, ultimately, he would have made this concession, if he had not recollected the "primrose path of dalliance" in "Hamlet."

Shakespeare, doubtless, derived all the materials he required from Holinshed's "Chronicles," and many other sources. Steevens continued to maintain, that Shakespeare was indebted, in some degree, to Middleton's "Witch" for the preternatural portion of "Macbeth;" but Malone, who first entertained this opinion, surrendered it, and became convinced that "The Witch" was a play written subsequently to the production of "Macbeth," of Shakespeare's tragedy about 1603 may have led to the printing of that which by Lord Sterling in 1604, and on this account the date is considered.

Macbeth's plays are known to be of Lord Stirling's "Julius Caesar" until 1607.
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

Three who read the two will, perhaps, wonder how a doubt could have been entertained. "The Witch," in all probability, was not written until about 1619; and what most surprise every body is, that a poet of Middleton's rank could so degrade the awful beings of his invention; for although, as James Boswell, "the power of Middleton's witch" is in some measure over the mind," (Specimens of Engl. Dram. Poets, p. 174,) they are of a degenerate race, as if Shakespeare having created them, no other mind was sufficient to introduce them into the stage.

Whether Shakespeare obtained his knowledge regarding these agents, and of the locality he supposes them to have frequented, from actual observation, is a point we have considered. In the first place, the existence evidence on the question is there collected, and we have shown, that ten years before the date hitherto assigned to that circumstance, a company called "the Queen's Players" had visited London; and we deplore very much the introduction of English theatrical performances into Scotland.

That the Queen's comedians were north of the Tweed in 1625, on the invitation of James VI, we have distinct evidence: we know also that they were in Aberdeen in 1601, when the freedom of the city was presented to Laurence Fletcher (the first name in the patent of 1608); but to establish that they were in Edinburgh in 1599 gives much more latitude for speculation on the question, whether Shakespeare, in the interval of about fourteen years before James I. ascended the throne of England, had at any time accompanied his fellow-actors to Scotland.

The date we suppose Shakespeare to have written "Macbeth," we may perhaps infer, from a passage in Kemp's "Nine Days Wonder," 1600, that there existed a ballad upon the story, which may have been older than the tragedy: such is the notice which has been given us in the introduction of this tract by the Camden Society. p. 84. The point, however, is doubtful, and it is obvious that Kemp did not mean to be very intelligible: his other allusions to ballad-makers of his age are equally enigmatic.

"Macbeth" was inserted by the player-editors in the folio of 1623; and, as in other similar cases, we may presume that it had not come from the press at an earlier date, because in the edition of the Stage-Books, Chappell and Jaggard, on the 8th of November, 1623, as one of the plays "not formerly entered to other men." It has been handed down in an unusually complete state, for not only are the divisions of the acts pointed out, but the subdivisions of the scenes are fully and accurately noted.

S. for John Smethwick, and are to be sold at his shop in Saint Dunstans Church-yard in Fleestreet: Vnder the Diall. 4to. 51 leaves.

This undated edition was probably printed in 1607, as it was entered at Stationers' Hall on Nov. 19, in that year. An impression, by R. Young, in 1610, has also John Smithwick at the bottom of the title-page.

In the folio of 1623, the full title of Hamlet, Prince of Denmark, occupies thirty-one pages, in the division of "Tragedies": viz. from p. 152 to p. 280, inclusive, there being a mistake of 100 pages between p. 156 and what ought to have been p. 157."

The story upon which there is reason to believe, Shakespeare composed his tragedy of Hamlet. We have improved, from the only known perfect copy, as part of a work called "Shakespeare's Library," and there is, perhaps, nothing more remarkable than the manner in which our great dramatist concealed his secret, and introduced us to the magnificent structure he left behind him. A comparison of "The Historie of Hamlet," as it was translated at an early date from the French of Bellforest, with "The Tragedy of Hamlet," is calculated to give to players and critics, the thought of, and profound reverence, for the genius of Shakespeare: his vast superiority to Green and Lodge was obvious in "The Winter's Tale," and "As You Like It:" but the proofs of "Hamlet," and "Macbeth," as narrative verse, perhaps as far above "The Historie of Hamlet," as "The Winter's Tale" and "As You Like It" were above the originals from which their main incidents were derived. Nothing, in point of fact, can be more marvellous, than the multiplicity of which it is impossible to enumerate. Shakespeare was indebted for the foundation of his "Hamlet." There is, however, some ground for thinking, that a lost play upon similar incidents preceded the work of Shake- speare; but whether that play is "The Tragedy of Hamlet" of 1603, that was translated from the Latin of Francesco Bertoldi, to which the old translated "Historie" we have no means of deciding, nor to what extent Shakespeare availed himself of such improvement. A drama, of which Hamlet was the hero, was printed in 1598, and may have anticipated the events of the play. It was enlarged by the insertion of the woman, and it is possible that Shakespeare may have obtained his knowledge of the character of the woman, from that source. We have not found any evidence, that Hamlet was written before 1600, for we are satisfied that the evidence of Shakespeare's "Hamlet," which has come down to us in at least six quarto impressions, in the folio of 1603, and in the later impressions in that form as the first entry of the title-page, was not written until the winter of 1601, or the spring of 1602.

Malone, Steevens, and the other commentators, were acquainted with no edition of the tragedy anterior to the quarto of 1604, which professes to be "enlarged to almost as much again as it was," they, therefore, reasonably suspected that it had been printed before; and within the last twenty years a single copy of an edition in 1603 has been discovered. This, however, is only partial, and a full impression of the first edition, consisting of only about half as much as the impression of 1604. It belongs to the Duke of Devonshire, and, by the favour of his Grace, is now before us. From whose press this was printed we do not know; but it is remarkable, that it is printed for "N. L. and John Trudell." The edition of the following year was printed by I. R. for N. L. only; and why Trudell ceased to have any interest in the publication we know not. N. L. was Nicholas Ling; and I. R., the printer of "Shakespeare's Library."
The impression of 1604 was intended to supersede that of 1603, which gave a most mangled and imperfect notion of the drama in its true state, we may perhaps presume that the impression of 1604 was, at least, as authentic a copy of "Hamlet" as the editions of any of Shakespeare's plays that came from the press during his lifetime. It contains various passages, some of them of great importance to the conduct and character of the drama, which had been added to the quarto of 1603, while the folio includes other passages which are left out in the quarto of 1604; although, as before remarked, we have the evidence of the quarto of 1604, that they were originally acted. The difference in impression, therefore, is not derived from copy or defect; and even that of 1607, though it makes some verbal changes, contains no distinct indication that the printer had resorted to the folio.

The three later folios, in this instance as in others, were printed from the immediately preceding edition in the same form; but we are inclined to think, that if "Hamlet," in the edition of 1623, were not composed of some now unknown quarto, it was derived from a manuscript obtained by Hens-ung and Condell from the theatre. The Acts and Scenes are, however, marked only in the first and second Acts, after which no division of the kind are noticed, and where Act and Scene commences is merely matter of modern conjecture. Some large portions of the play appear to have been omitted for the sake of shortening the performance; and any editor who should entertain the idea of restoring these parts should carefully examine the subsequent editions, which the quarto does not possess, but an imperfect notion of the drama as it came from the hand of the poet. The text of "Hamlet" is, in fact, only to be obtained from a compilation of the editions in quarto and folio, but the misprints in the latter are quite as numerous and glaring as in the former. In various instances we have been able to correct the one by the other, and it is in this respect chiefly that the quarto, 1604, was, in spite of all the part which it has to play, an indispensable aid to the producer, after vindicating himself from the accusation that he had derived his ideas of Hamlet from Schlegel, and that we should therefore choose the text of 1604, published by Chappell in 1836. It seems proper to add, that although we are not inclined to think that Shakespeare derived his ideas from Schlegel, it is clear that he could not have written his play without a knowledge of the latter's work, and that it would be impossible to estimate Hamlet without a reference to Schlegel's character. This is because the text of 1604 was so much altered and rewritten by the printer, that it is impossible to say with certainty which passages are original. The printer has, however, made it evident that he took the text of 1604 for his copy, as is evident from the number of passages in which the printer introduces new words, and in which he changes the spelling of certain names, and the length of certain passages. It is not possible, therefore, to say with certainty which passages are original, and which are the result of the printer's alterations. The printer has, however, made it evident that he took the text of 1604 for his copy, as is evident from the number of passages in which the printer introduces new words, and in which he changes the spelling of certain names, and the length of certain passages. It is not possible, therefore, to say with certainty which passages are original, and which are the result of the printer's alterations.

It has generally been supposed that Joseph Taylor was the printer of Hamlet and of "Hamlet," in his "Historia Historica," 1599, certainly speaks of him as having performed the part. This, however, must have been after the death of Richard Burbage, which happened precisely eighty years before. This is a point on which we cannot insist, as we have no direct information on the subject. It is possible, however, that the printer of Hamlet was the same as that of the folio of 1623, and that he was the printer who published the text of 1604. We have, however, no direct evidence on the subject, and we cannot be sure that the printer of Hamlet was the same as that of the folio of 1623.
The title-page of a third impression in 1609 corresponds with that last given above.

In a recent copy of the Tragedy of King Lear 8 occupies twenty-seven pages, in the division of "Tragedies," viz., from p. 288 to p. 305, inclusive. The last page but one, by an error, is numbered 83, instead of 85. In the first, as well as in the second, 1600, and 1605, the Acts and Scenes are regularly marked.

The most remarkable circumstance connected with the early publication of "King Lear," is, that the same stationer published three quarto impressions of it in 1608, that stationer being a person who could not put forth any of his own name (as far as they can deserve to be so considered) editions of Shakespeare's plays. After it had been thus thrice printed (for they were not merely re-issues with fresh title-pages) in the same year, the tragedy of them, the type being again printed until it appeared in the folio of 1623. Why it was never reprinted, we are in quarto, in the interval, must be matter of speculation, but such was not an unusual occurrence with the works of our great dramatist: ..."Midsummer Night's Dream," "Merchant of Venice," and "Two Gentlemen of Verona," were printed twice, the first in 1619, and the last in 1619, and they were not again seen in type until they were inserted in the folio of 1623. There was also a second quarto edition of "Late History of King Lear," published in 1608. The extreme popularity of "King Lear" seems proved by the mere fact that the public demand for it, in the first year of its publication, could not be satisfied without three distinct impressions.

It will be seen by the exact copies of the title-pages which we have inserted on the opposite leaf, that although Nathaniel Butter was the publisher of the three quarto editions, he only put his address on the title-pages of the first and second impressions. The third has impossible now to ascertain upon what account the difference was made; but it is to be observed that "Printed by J. Roberts," without any address, is found at the bottom of the title-page, the folio of 1615, a copy of which is in answer to the original impressions of the "Late History of King Lear," and "Midsummer Night's Dream." In 1606, a more remarkable circumstance, in relation to the title-pages of "King Lear," is, that the name of William Shakespeare is not put on the title-page of the third quarto, though it is that used for any other part of the work: moreover, we have it again at the head of the leaf on which the tragedy commences, "M. William Shakspeare, his History of King Lear, a Tragedie," which we attribute to the greatest attention, and it belongs not to any other of Shakespeare's plays, but to no other production of any kind of that period which we recollect. It was clearly intended to enable purchasers of the book to recollect the names of some of the principal, characters, which was not by Shakespeare, but which the publisher probably had endeavors to pass off as his work. An edition of this play was printed in 1605, under the following title: "The True Chronicle History of King Lear," and on the opposite page of the title-page, the name of Thomas Heminge and Henry Condell, the three Daughters, Gonerill, Ragan, and Cordelia. As it hath bene divers and sundry times lately acted." It was printed, because, as we are informed by William Jordon, and with Malone in thinking that the impression was for the reason the name of King Lear was not put forth, in consequence of the popularity of Shakespeare's "King Lear," which was then in a course of successful performance at the Globe theatre. But this edition of "The True Chronicle History of King Lear," 1605, was, in our opinion, a recreation we have much doubt, because it was entered at Stationers' Hall for publication as early as 14th May, 1604; it was entered again on 5th May, 1605, anterior to the appearance of the impression with that date, and we have not seen any mention of it entered.

We may presume that in 1605 no bookseller was able to obtain from the King's Players a copy of Shakespeare's "King Lear," for there is perhaps no point in our early stage-history more deserving of peculiar notice, than the extreme care the company took in preserving their property. We have in possession a copy signed to them. However, in the autumn of 1607, Nathaniel Butter had in some way possessed himself of a manuscript of "King Lear," and on the 26th November he procured the following unusually minute memorandum to be made in the Stationers' Registers: --

"21st Nov. 1607. Mr. Butter and Jo. Busby, Entered for their Copy under t' Hands of Sir Geo. Bucke, Kt. and the Wardens, a Books called Mr. Wilm Shakespeare, his Tragedy of King Lear, as yt was played before the King's Majestie. Whole the First Day in Christmas last, by his Majesties Servants, playing usally at the Globe on the Bank Side." This entry in the Stationers' Register of "King Lear" had been placed at Court on the 26th December, 1607, and not on the 26th December, 1607, as we might infer from the title-pages of the three editions of 1608.

The mention of the original "King Lear" has just inserted would lead us to believe that John Busby was the printer of "King Lear," although his name does not otherwise at all appear in connection with it. The differences between the quarto are seldom more than verbal, but they are sometimes important: after a very patient comparison, we may state, that the quarto without the publisher's address are more accurate than with that address; and we presume that the latter was first issued. It would seem that the folio of 1623 was composed from a manuscript, which had been much, and not very publicly, abridged for the purposes of the theatre; and although it contains some additions, not in any of the quarto, there are, perhaps, few quarto of any of Shakespeare's plays more valuable for the quantity of matter they contain, of which there is no trace in the folio.

We have said that we agree with Malone in opinion, that "King Lear" was brought out at the Globe Theatre in the spring of 1605, and that the Collen title-page was issued at the end of the year. We may decide with certainty that it was not written until after the appearance of Harsnet's "Discovery of Popish Impostors," in 1603, because from it, as Steevens has remarked, the plot of the present tragedy was taken by Edgar in the course of his scene of pretended madness. As we find a "King Lear" entered on the Stationers' books in 1594, we can have no hesitation in arriving at the conclusion that the "late impression" was published in 1605, and not 1606, as stated by Mr. C. John Wright, in 1603, when Shakespeare's "King Lear" was, (as we have supposed) experiencing a run of popularity at the Globe, was considerably anterior in point of date. There is little doubt that Shakespeare was employed in the work, and probably adopted it from at least that part of the conduct of his story which relates to the faithful Kent. There are other general, but few particular resemblances; for both the chief material was evidently derived from Holinshed, but Shakespeare varied from all authorities, and not very strongly, he seems to have thought, that to abandon the course of the ordinary and popular narrative, would heighten and improve the effect of the drama, and give a novelty to its termination. The story of Othello is so well known, that we cannot enter into the analysis of it, and probably may be followed by Sir Philip Sidney's "Ariadne," first printed in 1590, 4to. B. ii. 10. of that romance is thus headed:—

The pitiful state and story of the Paphian goddess unkindly treated, and his kind son." An early ballad on King Lear was also published (see Perey's Reliques, vol. ii. p. 249; edit. 1812, but no copy with a date has come down to us: although it employs the older names of some of the characters, it adopts that of Cordelia; and there are several circumstances, besides a more modern style of composition, which lead us to the belief that it was written posterior to the production of Shakespeare's Tragedy.

Othello.

("The Tragedy of Othello, The Moor of Venice," is the inscription on the title-page of the folio of 1623; viz., from p. 310 to p. 359 inclusive, in the division of "Tragedies:" it is there, as in the three folio editions of the works of Shakespeare, and on the last page is a list of the characters, headed, "The Names of the Actors."
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

By the subsequent extract from "The Egerton Papers," printed by the Camden Society, (p. 548) it appears that "Othello" was acted for the entertainment of Queen Elizabeth, at the quarto of 1603, or 1604 (then Sir Thomas Egerton, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal) at Harefield, in the beginning of August, 1602:

"6 August 1602. Rewards to the Vaulters, players, and dancers. Of this x c to Burbridge's players for Othello, kiln" in.

The part of the memorandum which relates to "Othello" is interlined, as if added afterwards; but thus we find decisively, that this tragedy was in being in the summer of 1602; and the probability is, that it was selected for performance at that sitting at Harefield, where it has been brought out at the Globe theatre in the spring of that year.

The incidents, with some variation, are to be found in Cinthio's "Erotesmata," where the novel is the seventh of the third December; and it bears a fair resemblance to "The Tragedy of Othello, the Moor of Venice," in the Monte Regale edition of 1565: "Un Capitano Moro pigliass per mogliera una cittadina Venetiana: un anno Alferis l'accesa di adulatori al marito; cerca che l'Alferis uccida colui ch'egli creda l'adulatore: il Capitano uccide la moglie, è accusato dal Signorini, non confessa il Moro, ma essendovi chiaro indizi è bandito; e lo scelerato Alferis, credendo nuocere ad altri, procede a se la morte miseramente." This novel was early translated into English, and in all probability made its way into English, but no such version has descended to us. Our great dramatist may indeed have read the story in the original language; and it is highly probable that he was sufficiently acquainted with Italian to understand its purpose. Hence he took only the name of Desdemona.

We have seen, by the quotation from "The Egerton Papers," that the company by which "Othello" was performed at Harefield, was called "Burbridge's players," and there can be no doubt that he was the leading actor of the company, and thereby in the account gave his name to the association, though properly denominated the Lord Chamberlain's Servants. Burbridge, an original actor of the part of Othello, as we learn from an elegy upon his death, among the late Mr. Heber's manuscripts. To the same fact we may quote the concluding stanza of a ballad, on the incident of "Othello," sung after the play. Burbridge, which has also come down to us in manuscript:

"Dick Burbridge, that most famous man, That actor without peer, With this same part his course began, And kept it many a year. Shakespeare was fortunate, I trow, That such an actor had: If we had but his equal now, For one I should be glad."

The writer spoke at random, when he asserted that Burbridge began his career with Othello, for we have evidence to show that he entered the company of the Earl of Hertford (where Shakespeare's "Othello" was written, and we have no proof that there was any older play upon the same subject. There are two quarto editions of "Othello," one bearing date 1622, and it is therefore possible the "Mr. William Shakespeare's Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies" appeared, and the other printed in 1630. An exact copy of the title-page of the quarto of 1622, will be found in the usual place, and that published in 1630 differs only in the imprint, which is "by A. M. for Richard Hawkins," &c. We have frequent occasion in our notes to refer to this impression, which has, indeed, been mentioned by the commentators, but nothing like sufficient attention has been paid to it. Malone summarily dismissed it as "an edition of no authority," but it is very clear that he had never sufficiently examined it. It was unquestionably printed from a manuscript different from that used for the quarto of 1623, and it presents a number of various readings, some of which singularly illustrate the original text of "Othello." Of this fact it may be fit here to supply some proof.

In Act III, sc. 2, we may observe a passage which occurs in the folio of 1623, which is not contained in the quarto of 1622, and which runs thus imperfectly in the folio:

"...Like to the Pontick sea, Whose isle in Idus and calendar name Ne'er keeps retiring ebb, but keeps due To the Propontic and the Hellaspen, &c."

It will not be disputed that "Ne'er keeps retiring ebb"

It appears from Mr. P. Cunningham's "Extracts from the Accounts of the Revels at Court," (printed for the Shakespeare Society) p. 203, that a play, called "The Moor of Venice," no doubt, "Othello," was acted at Whitehall on Nov. 1, 1611. The tragedy seems to have must be wrong, the composer of the folio having caught "keeps" from the later portion of the same line. In Pope's edition, "feels" was substituted for "keeps," and the word has stood ever since. It is clear that the correction was made by Mr. Pope. The truth is, that Pope was right in his conjecture as to the misprinted word, for in the quarto of 1630, which Malone could not have consulted, it is there in the text, and although it appears to have been a hap hazard change, it is really correct, as the word as now printed, is as unmeaning as any word in the English language.

If Malone had looked at the quarto of 1630, he would have seen that Pope had been anticipated in his proposed emendation about a hundred years; and that in the manuscript from which the quarto of 1630 was printed, the true word was "feels," and not "keeps," as it was misprinted in the folio of 1623. We will take an instance, only six lines earlier in the same scene, to show the value of the quarto of 1630, in supporting the quarto of 1623, and in correcting the folio of 1630. Othello exclaims, as we find the words in the folio,

"Aries, black vengeance, from the hollow hell," a line which has been generally thus printed, adopting the text of the quarto of 1623:

"Aries, black vengeance, from thy hollow cell!

and these are exactly the words in the quarto of 1630, although it can be established that it was printed, not from the quarto of 1623, but from the folio of 1630, which in many places differed materially from both, and in some few supplied a text inferior to both. It is not necessary to pursue this point further, especially as our brief notes abundantly establish the fact that in 1630, instead of being "of no authority," is of great value, with reference to the true reading of some important passages.

Walkley, the publisher of the quarto of 1622, thus entered the following in his Stationers' Registers, shortly previous to its appearance:

"16 Oct. 1621.
Tho. Walkley Entered for his, to wit, under the handwritings of Sir George Buck and of the Wardens: The Tragedy of Othello, the Moore of Venice.

It is perhaps not too much to presume, that this impression, though dated 1622, had come out at the close of 1621; and that it preceded the folio of 1623 is very obvious, from the fact, that "Othello" was not included in their list by Hunt and Jaggard, the publishers of the folio of 1623, because they were aware that it had already been printed, and that it had entered as the property of another bookseller. The quarto of 1622 was preceded by the following address:

"To the Stationer to the Reader.
"To set forth a book which is so much like to the old English play, 'A blue coat without a badge,' and the author being dead, I thought good to take that piece of work upon me. To commend it I will not—for that which is good, I hope every man will say for himself, and I think, because the author's name is sufficient to vent his work. Thus leaving one to the liberty of judgment, I have ventured to print this play, and leave to the general censure.

Yours, Thomas Walkley.

The publishers of the folio of 1623, perhaps purchased Walkley's interest in "Othello.""

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

("The Tragedy of Antiochus and Cleopatra" occupies twenty-nine pages in the folio of 1623; viz. from p. 840 to p. 863 inclusive, in the division of "Tragedies." Although at the beginning it has Actus Primi, Secundus Prima, it is only usually continued in the same direction in any of the subsequent folio impressions of 1623, 1644, and 1655. They are all without any list of characters.)

We are without any record that "Antony and Cleopatra" was over performed, and in Act v. sc. 2, the heroine anticipate, "only one that equalled Antony and Cleopatra" will "boy her greatness" on the stage. Shakespeare seems to hint that no young male performer would be able to sustain the part without exciting ridicule. However, the same remark will, somehow, always be popular as to remain what is termed a "stock piece," and it was performed again before King Charles and his Queen at Hampton Court on Dec. 8, 1636. Ibid. Introd. p. xxi.

"The Tragedy of Antiochus and Cleopatra" was published in 1623."

"Like to the Pontick sea, Whose isle in Idus and calendar name Ne'er keeps retiring ebb, but keeps due To the Propontic and the Hellaspen, &c."
The novel by Boccaccio has many corresponding features: it is the ninth of Giornate, and bears the following title: "An Academy at Santa Croce, and a commanda that the maggie innocent sia uscia. Ella scamai, et in habitu di umano serve il Soldano; ritrova Pian- gamatore, a Bernabo conduna in Alessandria, dove Pian ganatore, and belong."

"Antony and Cleopatra," with "The Winter's Tale," are close of his novel, where theSoldano is introduced: the villain, instead of being forgiven, is punished by being anointed with honey, and exposed in the sun to flies, wasps, and mos- quitoes, which eat the flesh from his bones. The whole of this"The Winter's Tale," and that the two dramas belong to about the same period of the poet's life. Forman has had a great many of his works translated into French, Italian, and English. We will speak of them separately.

They had been employed for a dramatic purpose in France at an early date, in Miracle-play, printed in 1589 by Messer, Mennucon and Michel, in their Theatre Francais au Moyen Age, from a manuscript in the Bibliothèque du Roi. In that piece, mixed up with many romantic circumstances, we find the inward and outward appearances of the heroines, their flight in the disguise of other persons, and the various chances which Shakespeare was clearly under no obligation. Any slight resemblance between the two is to be accounted for by the fact, that both poets resorted to the same authority for their materials—Pla- ntarch whose "Lives" had been translated by Sir T. North in 1579. The minutes with which Shakespeare adhered to history is more remarkable in this drama than in any other; and sometimes the most trifling circumstances are artistically, but yet with much truth, interwoven. Shakespeare's use of history in "Antony and Cleopatra" may be contrasted with Ben Jonson's subjection to it in "Sejanus."

Of all Shakespeare's historical plays (sayes Cerimonia, "Antony and Cleopatra" is the most wonderful. There is not one in which he has followed history so minutely, and yet there are few in which he impresses the notion of national strength so much—perhaps none in which he impresses more. Thus, while the fiery force is sustained throughout, and to the numerous momentary flashes of nature, contrasting the historical ab- straction."

(Lit. Rem. vol. ii. p. 145.)

CYMBELINE.

"The Tragedy of Cymbeline" was first printed in the folio of 1623, where it stands last in the division of "Trage- dies," and occupies thirty-one pages; viz. from p. 320 to p. 329, misprinted p. 328. There is another error in the pagination, as 337 is numbered p. 329. These errors were corrected in the three later folios.

The materials in Heliodorus for the historical portion of "Cymbeline" are so imperfect and scanty, that a belief may be entertained that Shakespeare resorted to some other more fertile sources, which the most diligent inquiries have yet failed to reveal. Long ago, The Old Tragedies of Shakespeare, Guides and Artus, occur in the old Chronicle, and in it we hear of the murder demanded by the Roman emperor, but nothing is said of the stealing of the two young princes, the murder of their father, the inferences and mountain, and final restoration to their father.

All that relates to Posthumus, Imogen, and Iachino is merely fabulous, and some of the chief incidents of this part of the plot are to be found in French, Italian, and English*. We will speak of them separately."

"Remember, also, the story of Cymbeline, king of England in the time of Edgar: a very passionate and pitiful story, and being denied, after sent Lucina with a great army of soldiers, who landed at Milford Haven, and after were vanquished by Cymbeline and Lucina together: and so, in the end, two of the two of whom were the sons of Cymbeline, stole from him when they were but two years old, by an old man whom Cymbeline banished; and he kept them as his own two years, and brought him a case. And how one of them slew Olselin, that was the queen's son, going to Milford Haven to seek the love of his daughter. How the Italian that came from her love conveyed himself to a chest, and said it was a chest of plate, sent from her love to others to be presented to the king. And in the deepest of the night, how the queen's son broke open the chest, and found her in her bed, and the marks of her body, and took away her trousseau, and after accused her of adultery to her love, &c. And in the end how the king, being absent, and not knowing of the love, is taken in, and taken prisoner, and after revealed to Imogen, who had turned herself into man's apparel, and fled to meet her love at Milford Haven; and how, at last, the two brothers, the two sons of the old lady, returned: and how by eating a sleeping drug they thought they had been dead, and laid her in the woods, and the body of Cloten by her, and a love's signal that he left behind him, and how she was found by Lucina, &c."

We have certainly no right to conclude that "Cymbeline" was a new piece when Forman witnessed the performance of it in the *Westward for Smelts", in 1613. (which we ourselves entertain) that in style and variation it re- sembles "The Winter's Tale," and that the two dramas belong to about the same period of the poet's life. Forman

we feel persuaded that we could extract nearly every line that was not dictated by his great intellect. We apprehend that Shakespeare's name is associated with the names of every one of the companies performing in London, and that, in accordance with the ordinary practice of the time, he made additions to and improvements in it, and procured it to be performed by the company for which he composed it. In the case of the original piece, it would be in vain to conjecture.

Although we have no decisive proof that Shakespeare ever worked in immediate concert with any of his contemporaries, it is well known that he had a share in the management of one of the companies, the Stationers', Company, and that he had some connection with the Book'sellers and Printers of the day. We have reason to suppose that it had not been printed at any earlier date. The divisions of acts and scenes are throughout remarkably regular.

PERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE.

[The late, And much admired Play, called Pericles, Prince of Tyre. With the true Relation of the whole History, adventures, and fortunes of the said Prince: As also, The no lesse strange, and worthy accidents, in the Birth and Life, of his Daughter Mariana. Imprinted at London for Henry Gosson, and are to be sold at the signe of the Sunne in Futer-noster row, &c. 1609.] 4to. 34 leaves.

"The late, And much admired Play, called Pericles, Prince of Tyre. With the true Relation of the whole History, adventures, and fortunes of the said Prince. Written by W. Shakespeare, and published in his life time." It occupies twenty-pages; viz. from p. 1 to p. 20, inclusive, a new pagination of the volume commencing with "Pericles." It is there divided into Acts, but irregularly, and the Scenes are not marked.

The first question to be settled in relation to "Pericles," is that of the date of its original composition. There is so marked a character about every thing that proceeded from the pen of our great dramatist,—his mode of thought, and his style of expression, are so unlike those of any other author, that they must be the effect of his own composition. They are clearly visible in all the later portion of the play, and so indisputable does this fact appear to us, that, we confidently assert, however strong may be the external evidence to the same point, the internal evidence is infinitely stronger: to those who have studied his works it will seem incontrovertible. As we do not rely merely upon particular expressions, nor upon separate passages, but upon the general complexion of whole scenes and acts, it is, obvious, that we cannot here enter into proofs, which would require the reproduction of many of the succeeding pages. An opinion has long prevailed, and we have no doubt it was entertained by the Stationers' Company, when they were traced, that the composition of "Pericles." The larger part of the first three Acts were in all probability the work of an inferior dramatist; to these Shakespeare added comparatively little; but he found it fitted up, and improved it, and he then composed the continuation of "Pericles." Hence the original name of the play, Pericles, Prince of Tyre, was changed to the enumeration of "Pericles." The novel is contained in a work called "Shakespeare's Library," and as it was written by Shakespeare himself, it is certain that it was written from his Confessiones. Hence the propriety of giving the speaker the various interludions in "Pericles." The origin of the Angle Saxon narrative, is in the "Sons of the Dispute:" Bellesions asserts that the version in his "Histories" is the great chief characters in the Angle Saxon narrative, not the original play, but Shakespeare's original version. We shall treat it in a very summary manner, but shall give the names of the persons and the incidents of the plot. The incidents of the play are found in Lawrence Twine's translation of the "Gesta Romanorum," first published in 1576, under the title of "The Pattern of Painful Adversities." The plot is so extravagantly complicated, that it may be traced in the original play. It is one of the most remarkable in Shakespeare, but are called Apollonius, Lucian, and Tharsis. This novel was several times reprinted, and an eighth edition of it came out in 1607, which perhaps was the year in which "Pericles" was first represented "at the Globe on the Bank-side," as is stated on the title-page of the earliest edition in 1609. The drama seems to have been extremely popular, but the usual difficulty being experienced by booksellers in obtaining a copy of it, Nathaniel Butter probably employed some person to attend the performance at the theatre, and with the aid of notes there taken, and of Twine's version of the story, (which, as we remarked, had just before been reprinted) to compose a novel out of the incidents of the play under the following title: "The Painful Adventures of Pericles Prince of Tyre. Being the true History of the Play of Pericles, as it was lately presented by the worthy and ancient poet John Gower. At London. Printed by T.T. for Nat. Butter. 1608." It has also a wood-cutt of Gower, no doubt, in the costume he wore at the Globe. This publication is valuable, not merely because it is the only known specimen of the kind of that date in our language, but because though in prose, (with the exception of a song) it gives some of the speeches more at length, than in the play as it has come down to us, and explains several obscure and disputed passages. For this latter purpose it will be seen that we have availed ourselves of it in our notes; but it will not be out of place here to speak of the strong presumptive evidence it affords, that the drama has not reached us by any means in the shape in which it was originally represented. The subsequent is given, in the novel of 1608, as the speech of Marina, when she is visited in the brothel by Lyaimachus, the governor of Mitylene, whom, by her virtue, beauty, and eloquence, she diverts from the purpose for which he came.

11 If as you say, my lord, you are the governor, let not your authority, which should teach you to rule others, be the means to make you misgovern yourself. If the eminence of your place came unto you by descent, and the royalty of your blood, let not your life prove your birth bastard: if it were thrown upon you by opinion, make good that opinion was the cause to make you great. What reason is there in your justice, who hath power over all, to undo any? If you take from me mine honour, you are like him that makes a gap into forbidden ground, after whom many enter, and you are guilty of all their evils. My life is yet unspotted, my chastity unstained in thought: then, if your violence deface this building, the workmanship of heaven, made up for good, and not to be the exercises of sin's intemperance, you do kill your own honour, abuse your own justice, and impair me.

Of this speech in the printed play we only meet with the following emphatic germ:

"If you were born to honour, show it now: if put upon you, make the judgment good, that thought you worthy of it."—(A. iv. sc. 6.)

It will hardly be required of us to argue, that the powerful address, copied from the most well-authenticated, could not be the mere enlargement of a short-hand writer, who had taken notes at the theatre, who from the very difficulty of the operation, and from the haste with which he must afterwards have compounded the history, would be much more likely to abridge than to expand. In some parts of the novel it is evident that the prose, there used, was made up from the blank-verse composition of the drama, as acted at the Globe. In the latter we meet with no passage similar to what succeeds, but still the ease with which it may be reconverted into blank-verse renders it almost certain that

It was so originally. Pericles tells Simonides, in the novel, that "His blood was yet untainted, but with the heat got by the wrong the king had offered him, and that he boldly durst and did defy himself, his subjects, and the profoundest danger that either tyranny or treason could inflict upon him."

To leave out only two or three expletives renders the sentence perfect as dramatic blank-verse:

"His blood was yet untainted, but with heat
Got by the wrong the king had offer'd him;
And that he boldly durst and did defy him,
His subjects, and the profoundest danger
That tyranny or treason could inflict."

Many other passages to the same end might be produced from the novel of which there is no trace in the play. We shall not, however, dwell farther upon the point, than to mention a peculiarly Shakespearean expression, which occurs in the novel, and is omitted in the drama. Lychorida brings the new-born infant to Pericles, who in the printed play (Act iii. sc. 1) says to it.

"This, thou'rt the rudest welcome to this world
That e'er was prince's child. Happy what follows!
Thee hast as chiding a nature,
As fire, air, water, earth, and heaven can make."

In the novel founded upon the play, the speech is thus given, and we have printed the expression, which, we think, must have come from the pen of Shakespeare, in italics type:

"Poor wretch of nature! (quoth he) thou art as rudely welcome to the world, as ever princess' babe was, and hast as chiding a nativity as fire, air, earth and water can afford thee."

The existence of such a singular production was not known to any of the commentators; but several copies of it have been preserved, and one of them was sold in the library of the late Mr. Heber.

It will have been remarked, that the novel printed in 1608 states that "Pericles" had been "lately presented," and on the title-page of the edition of the play in 1609 it is termed "the late and much-admired Play called Pericles." It is, besides, spoken of as "a new play," in a poetical tract called "Fimlico or Run Red-cap," printed in 1609. Another piece, called "Shore," is mentioned in "Fimlico," under exactly similar circumstances: there was an older drama upon the story of Jane Shore, and this, like "Pericles," had, in all probability, about the same date been revived at one of the theatres, with additions.

"Pericles" was five times printed before it was inserted in the folio of 1664, viz. in 1609, 1611, 1619, 1650, and 1685. The folio seems to have been copied from the last of these, with a multiplication of errors, but with some corrections. The first edition of 1609 was obviously brought out in haste, and there are many corruptions in it; but more pains were taken with it than Malone, Steevens, and others imagined: they never compared different copies of the same edition, or they would have seen that the impressions vary importantly, and that several mistakes, discovered as the play went through the press, were carefully set right: these will be found pointed out in our notes. The commentators dwelt upon the blunders of the old copies, in order to warrant their own extraordinary innovations; but wherever we could do so, with due regard to the sense of the author, we have restored the text to that of the earliest impression.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—On a Ship at Sea.
A tempestuous noise of Thunder and Lightning heard. Enter a Ship-master and a Boatswain, as on ship-board, shaking off wet.

Master. Boatswain!
Boats. Here, master; what cheer?

Master. Good. Speak to the mariners: fall to't yet, or we run ourselves aground: bestir, bestir. [Exit. Enter Mariner.

Boats. Heigh, my hearts! cheerily, cheerily, my hearts! yare, yare. Take in the topsail: tend to the master's whistle.—Blow, till thou burst thy wind, if room enough! Enter ALONSO, SEBASTIAN, ANTONIO, FERDINAND, GONZALO, and Others, from the Cabin.

Alon. Good boatswain, have a care. Where's the master? Play the men.

Boats. I pray now, keep below.
Ant. Where is the master, boatswain?

Boats. Do you not hear him? You mar our labour.

Keep your cabins: you do assist the storm.

Gon. Nay, good, be patient.

Boats. When the sea is. Hence! What care these roarers for the name of king? To cabin: silence! trouble us not.

Gon. Good; yet remember whom thou hast aboard.

Boats. None that I more love than myself. You are a counsellor: if you can command these elements to silence, and work the peace of the present, we will not hand a rope more; use your authority: if you cannot, give thanks you have lived so long, and make yourself ready in your cabin for the mischance of the hour, if it so hap. Cheerly, good hearts!—Out of our way, I say. [Exit.

Gon. I have great comfort from this fellow: me-thinks, he hath no drowning mark upon him; his complexion is perfect gallows. Stand fast, good fate, to his hanging: make the rope of his destiny our cable, for our own doth little advantage. If he be not born to be hanged, our case is miserable. [Exit. Re-enter Boatswain.

Boats. Down with the top-mast: yares; lower, lower. Bring her to try with main-course. [A cry within.] A plague upon this howling! they are louder than the weather, or our office.—Re-enter SEBASTIAN, ANTONIO, and GONZALO.

Yet again! what do you here? Shall we give o'er, and drown? Have you a mind to sink?

Seb. A pox o' your throat, you bawling, blasphemous, inanimate dog!

Boats. Work you, then.

Ant. Hang, eu, hang! you whoreson, insolent noisemaker, we are less afraid to be drowned than thou art.

Gon. I' ll warrant him for drowning; though the ship were no stronger than a nutshell, and as leaky as an unsanctified wench.

Boats. Lay her a-hold, a-hold. Set her two courses: off to sea again; lay her off.

Enter Mariner, wet.

Mar. All lost! to prayers, to prayers! all lost! [Ex. Boats. What! must our mouths be cold? [Them. Gon. The king and prince at prayers! let us assist For our ease is as theirs.

Seb. I am out of patience.

Ant. We are merely' cheated of our lives by drunkards.

This wide-chapp'd rascal,—would, thou might'st lie drowning,
The washing of ten tides!

Gon. He'll be hanged yet, Though every drop of water swear against it,
And gape at wid'st to glut him. [A confused noise within.] Mercy on us!—

We split, we split,—Farewell, my wife and children!—

Farewell, brother!—We split, we split, we split!—

THE TEMPEST.

SCENE II.—The Island: before the cell of PROSPERO.

Enter PROSPERO and MIRANDA.

Pro. If by your art, my dearest father, you have Put the wild waters in this roar, allay them.
The sky, it seems, would pour down stinking pitch,
But that the sea, mounting to the walkin' hea',
Dashes the fire out. O! I have suffer'd
With those that I saw suffer: a brave vessel,
Who had no doubt some noble creatures in her,
Dash'd all to pieces. O! the ery did knock Against my very heart. Poor souls, they perish'd.
Had I been any god of power, I would
Have sunk the sea within the earth, or e'er
It should the good ship have swallow'd, and
The flattering souls within her.

Mira. No more amazement. Tell you piteous heart,
There's no harm done.

Mira. O, woe the day!

Pro. I have done nothing but in care of thee,
(Of thee, my dear one! thee, my daughter!) who Art ignorant of what thou art, nought knowing
Of whence I am; nor that I am more better
Than Prospero, master of a full poor cell,
And thy no greater father.

Mira. More to know.

Pro. 'Tis time I should inform thee farther. Lend thy hand,
And pluck my magic garment from me.—So:

Lays down his robe.

Pro. Lie there my art.—Wipe thou thine eyes; have comfort.
The direful spectacle of the wreck, which touch'd
The very virtue of compassion in thee.
I have with such provision in mine art
So safely order'd, that there is no soul—
No, not so much perdition as a hair,
Betid to any creature in the vessel
Which thou hear'dst ery, which thou saw'st sink. Sit down;
For thou must now know farther.

Mira. You have often
Begun to tell me what I am; but stopp'd,
And left me to a bootless inquisition,
Concluding, "Stay, not yet." The hour's now come,
The very minute bids thee ope thine ear;
Obey, and be attentive. Canst thou remember
A time before we came unto this cell? [Sits down.]
I do not think thou canst, for then thou wast not
Out three years old.

Mira. Certainly, sir, I can.

Pro. By what? by any other house, or person?
Of any thing the image tell me, that
Hath kept with thy remembrance.

Mira. 'Tis far off;
And rather like a dream, than an assurance
That my remembrance warrants. Had I not Four or five women once, that tended me?

Pro. Thou hast'd, and more, Miranda. But how is it,

That this lives in thy mind? What seest thou else
In the dark backward and abyss of time?
If thou remember'st aught, ere thou cam'st here,
How thou cam'st here, thou may'st.

Mira. But that I do not.

Pro. Twelve year since, Miranda, twelve year since,
Thy father was the duke of Milan, and
A prince of power.

Mira. Sir, are not you my father?

Pro. Thy mother was a piece of virtue, and
She said—thou wast my daughter; and thy father
Was duke of Milan, thou' his only heir
And princess, no worse issued.

Mira. O, the heavens!
What foul play had we, that we came from thence?
Or blessed was't, we did?

Pro. Both, both, my girl:
By foul play, as thou say'st, we were heavy thence;
But blessedly holp hither.

Mira. O! my heart bleeds
To think of the teen' that I have turn'd you to,
Which is from my remembrance. Please you, farther.

Pro. My brother, and thy uncle, call'd Antonio,—
I pray thee, mark me,—that a brother should
Be so peridious!—he whom, next thyself,
Of all the world I lov'd, and to him put
The management of my state; as, at that time,
Through all the sinneries it was the first,
(And Prospero the prime duke, being so reputed
In dignity) and, for the liberal arts,
Without a parallel: those being all my study,
The government I cast upon my brother,
And to my state grew stranger, being transported
And rapt in secret studies. Thy false uncle—
Dost thou attend me?

Mira. Sir, most heedfully.

Pro. Being once perfected how to grant suits,
How to deny them, whom 't advance, and whom
To trash! for over-topping, new created
The creatures that were mine, I say, or chang'd them,
Or else new form'd them; having both the key
Of officer and office, set all hearts i' the state
To what tune pleas'd his ear; that now he was
The ivy, which had hid my princely trunk,
And suck'd my verdure out on't. Thou attendest not.

Mira. O good sir! I do.

Pro. I pray thee, mark me.
I thus neglecting worldly ends, all dedicated
To closeness, and the bettering of my mind
With that, which but by being so retired
O'er-priz'd all popular rate, in my false brother
Awak'd an evil nature: and my trust,
Like a good parent, did beget of him
Falsehood, in its contrary as great
As my trust was; which had, indeed, no limit,
A confidence sans bound. He being thus loaded, 1
Not only with what my revenue yielded,
But what my power might else exact,—like one,
Who having to untruth, by telling of it,
Made such a sinner of his memory,
To ered the own lie,—he did believe
He was indeed the duke; out o' the substitution,
And executing the outward face of royalty,
With all prerogative;—hence his ambition
Growing—Dost thou hear?

Mira. Your tale, sir, would cure deafness.

Pro. To have no screen between this part he play'd,
And him he play'd it for, he needs will be

1 check: in f. e. 2 creature: in f. e. 3 mantle: in f. e. 4 provision: in f. e. 5 Not in f. e. 6 and: in f. e. 7 Trouble. 8 A hunting term, signifying to beat back. See Othello, II, 1. 9 lorded: in f. e. 10 unto truth: in f. e.
Absolute Milan. Me, poor man!—my library
Was dukedom large enough: of temporal royalties
He thinks me now incapable; confederates
(So dry he was for sway) with the king of Naples,
To give him annual tribute, do him homage,
Subject his consort to his crown, and bend
The dukedom, yet unbow’d, ( alas, poor Milan!)
To most ignoble stooping.

Mira. O the heavens!

Pro. Mark his condition, and th’ event; then tell me,
If this might be a brother.

Mira. I should sin
To think but nobly of my grandmother:
Good wombs have borne bad sons.

Pro. Now the condition.

This king of Naples, being an enemy
To me inveterate, hearkens my brother’s suit;
Which was, that he in lieu o’ the premises,—
Of homage, and I know not how much tribute,—
Should presently extirpate me and mine
Out of the dukedom, and confer fair Milan,
With all the honours, on my brother: whereon,
A treacherous army levied, one midnight,
Faded to the practice, 1 did Antonio open
The gates of Milan; and, i’ the dead of darkness,
The ministers for the purpose hurried thence
Me, and thy crying self.

Mira. Alack, for pity! I,
Not remembr’ing how I cried out then,
Will cry it o’er again: it is a hint,
That wrings mine eyes to’t.

Pro. Hear a little farther,
And then I’ll bring thee to the present business
Which now is upon ’s; without the which this story
Were most impertinent.

Mira. Wherefore did they not
This hour destroy us?

Pro. Well demanded, wench: My tale proves that question. Dear, they durst not,
So dear the love my people bore me, nor set
A mark so bloody on the business; but
With colours fairer painted their foul ends. In few, they hurried us abroad a bark,
Bore us some leagues to sea, where they prepar’d
A rotten carcass of a boat, 2 not rigg’d,
Nor tackle, sail, nor mast; the very rats
Instinctively had quit it: there they hoist us,
To cry to the sea that roar’d to us; to sigh
To the winds, whose pity, sighing back again,
Did us but loving wrong.

Mira. Alack! what trouble
Was I then to you!

Pro. O! a cherubim
Thou wast, that did preserve me. Thou didst smile,
Infused with a fortitude from heaven,
When I have deck’d the sea with drops full salt,
Under my burden groan’d; which rais’d in me
An undergoing stomach, to bear up Against what should ensue.

Mira. How came we ashore?

Pro. By Providence divine.
Some food we had, and some fresh water, that
A noble Neapolitan, Gonzalo,
Out of his charity, (who being then appointed Master of this design) did give us: with Rich garments, linens, stuffs, and necessaries,
Which since have steaded much: so, of his gentleness,
Knowing I lov’d my books, he furnish’d me,
From my own library, with volumes that

THE TEMPEST.

ACT I.

Pro. Of the king's ship
The mariners, say, how thou hast dispos'd,
And all the rest o' the fleet?
Ari. Safely in harbour
Is the king's ship: in the deep nook, where once
Thou call'dst me up at midnight to fetch dew
From the still-vex'd Beroomeith, there she's hid:
The mariners all under hatches stow'd;
Whom, with a charm joined to their suffer'd labour,
I have left asleep: and for the rest o' the fleet
Which I dispers'd, they all have met again,
And all' upon the Mediterranean float,
Bound sadly home for Naples,
Supposing that they saw the king's ship wreck'd,
And his great person perish.

Pro. Ariel, thy charge
Exactly is perform'd; but there's more work.
What is the time o' the day?
Ari. Past the mid season.

Pro. At least two glasses. The time 'twixt six and now
Must by us both be spent most presently.
Ari. Is there more toil? Since thou dost give me pains,
Let me remember thee what thou hast promis'd,
Which is not yet perform'd me.

Pro. How now! moody?
Ari. My liberty.

Pro. Before the time be out? no more.
Ari. I prihhe
Remember, I have done thee worthy service;
Told thee no lies, made thee no mistakes, serv'd
Without or grudge, or grumblings. Thou didst promise
To hate me a full year.

Pro. Hast thou forget
From what a torment I did free thee?
Ari. No.

Pro. Thou dost; and think'st it much, to tread the ozo
Of the salt deep,
To run upon the sharp wind of the north,
To do me business in the veins o' th' earth,
When it is bak'd with frost.
Ari. I do not, sir.
Pro. Thou liest, malignant thing! Hast thou forget
The foul witch Sycorax, who, with age and envy,
Was grown into a hoop? hast thou forgot her?
Ari. No, sir.
Pro. Thou hast. Where was she born?
Ari. Sir, in Argier.
Pro. O! was she so? I must,
Once in a month, recount what thou hast been,
Which thou forget'st. This damn'd witch. Sycorax,
For mischiefs manifold, and sorceries terrible
To enter human hearing, from Argier,
Thou know'st, was banish'd: for one thing she did,
They would not take her life. Is not this true?
Ari. Ay, sir.

Pro. This blue-eyed hag was hither brought with child,
And here was left by the sailors: thou, my slave
As thou report'st thyself, wast then her servant:
And, for thou wast a spirit too delicate
To act her earthy and abhor'd commands,
Refusing her grand hats, she did confine thee,
By help of her more potent ministers,
And in her most unmitigable rage,
Into a cloven pine; within which rift
Imprison'd, thou didst painfully remain
A dozen years; within which space she died,
And left thee there, where thou didst vent thy groans
As fast as mill-wheels strike. Then was this island (Save for a' son that she did litter here,
A freckled whelp, hag-born) not honour'd with
A human shape.
Ari. Yes; Caliban, her son.

Pro. Dull thing, I say so; he, that Caliban,
Whom now I keep in service. Thou best know'st
What torment I did find thee in: thy groans
Did make wolves howl, and penetrate the breasts
Of ever-angry bears. It was a torment
To lay upon the damn'd, which Sycorax
Could not again undo: It was mine art,
When I arrived and heard thee, that made gape
The pine, and let thee out.

Ari. I thank thee, master.

Pro. If thou more murmurst, I will rend an oak,
And peg thee in his knotty entraile, till
Thou hast how'd away twelve winters.
Ari. Pardon, master:
I will be correspondent to command,
And do my spritling gently.

I will discharge thee.
Ari. That's my noble master!
What shall I do? say what? what shall I do?

Pro. Go, make thyself a like nymph o' the sea: be subject
To no sight but thine and mine; invisible
To every eyeball, else. Go, take this shape,
And hither come in,; go; hence, with diligence.

[Exit Ariel.

Awake, dear heart, awake! thou hast slept well;
Awake!

Mira. The strangeness of your story put [Waking.
Heaviness in me.

Pro. Shake it off. Come on:
We'll visit Caliban, my slave, who never Yields us kind answer.

Mira. 'Tis a villain, air,
I do not love to look on.

Pro. But, as 'tis,
We cannot miss him: he does make our fire,
Fetch in our wood, and serves in offices
That profit us.—What ho! slave! Caliban!
Thou earth, thou! speak.

[Enter Ariel. There's wood enough within.

Pro. Come forth, I say; there's other business for thee,
Come, thou tortoise! when?

Re-enter Ariel, like a water-nymph.

Fine apparition! My quaint Ariel,
Hark in thine ear.
Ari. My lord, it shall be done. [Exit.

Pro. Thou poisonous slave, got by the devil himself
Upon thy wicked dam, come forth!

Enter Caliban.

Cal. As wicked dew, as e'er my mother brush'd
With raven's feather from unhospitable fen,
Drop on you both! a south-west blow on ye,
And blister you all o'er!

Pro. For this, be sure, to-morrow thou shalt have cramps,
Side-stitches that shall pen thy breath up; archins
Shall, for that vast of night that they may work,
All exercise on thee: thou shalt be pinch'd
As thick as honey-combs, each pinch more stingig
Than bees that made them.

Cal. I must eat my dinner.
This island's mine, by Sycorax my mother,
Which thou tak'st from me. When thou can'st have first,
SCENE II.

THE TEMPEST.

Thou strok'dst me, and mad'st much of me; would'st give me
Water with berries in 't; and teach me how
To name the bigger light, and how the less,
That burn by day and night: and then I lov'd thee,
And show'd thee all the qualities o' th' isle,
The fresh springs, brine pits, barren place, and fertile.
Cursed be I that did so!—All the charms
Of Sycorax, toads, beetles, bats, light on you;
For I am all the subjects that you have,
Which first was mine own king: and here you stye me,
In this hard rock, whilsts you do keep from me
The rest o' th' island.

Pro. Thou most lying slave,
Whom stripes may move, not kindness, I have us'd thee,
Fifth as thou art, with human care; and lodg'd thee
In mine own cell, till thou didst seek to violate
The honour of my child.

Cal. O ho! O ho!—would it had been done!
Thou didst prevent me; I had peoples else
This isle with Calibans.

Pro. Abhorred slave,
Which any print of goodness will not take,
Being capable of all ill! I pitied thee,
Took pains to make thee speak, taught thee each hour.
One thing or other: when thou didst not, savage,
Know thine own meaning, but wouldst gabble like
A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purposes
With words that made them known: but thy vile race,
Though thou didst learn, hadst in't which good nature
Could not abide to be with: therefore wast thou
Deservedly confin'd into this rock,
Who hadst desp'rd more than a prison.

Cal. You taught me language; and my profit on't
Is, I know how to curse. The rod plague rid you,
For learning me your language!

Pro. Hag-seed, hence!—Fetch us in fuel; and be quick, thou'rt best,
To answer other business. Shrug'st thou, malice? If Thou neglect'st, or dost unwillingly
What I command, I'll rack thee with old cramps;
Fill all thy bones with aches; make thee roar,
That beasts shall tremble at thy din.

Cal. I must obey; his art is of such power,
It would control my dam's god, Setebos,
And make a vassal of him.

Pro. So, slave; hence! [Exit Caliban.
Re-enter ARIEL, invisible, playing and singing; FERDINAND following.]

ARIEL'S SONG.

Come unto these yellow sands,
And then take hands:
Court'sied when you have, and kiss'd
The wild waves, whist,
Foot it fealy here and there;
And, sweet sprites, the burden bear.

Hark, hark! [Burden. Bow, wow.]

Burden. Bow, wow. [Dispersed.

Hark, hark! I hear
The strain of strainingchanticleer
Cry, cock-a-doodle-doo.

Fer. Where should this music be? 'tis air, or th' sky?
It sounds no more:—and sure, it waits upon
Some god o' th' island. Sitting on a bank,
Weeping again the king my father's wreck,
This music crept by me upon the waters,
Allaying both their fury, and my passion,
With its sweet air: thence I have follow'd it,
Or it hath drawn me rather—but 'tis gone.
No, it begins again.

ARIEL SINGS.

Full fathom five thy father lies;
Of his bones are coral made;
Those are pearls that were his eyes:
Nothing of him that doth fade,
But doth suffer a sea-change
Into something rich and strange.
Sea-nymphs hourly ring his knell:
[Burden: ding-dong, ding-dong, bell.]
Fer. The ditty does remember my drown'd father.
This is no mortal business, nor no sound
That the earth owes—I hear it now above me.

Pro. The fringed curtains of thine eye advance
And say, what thou seest yond?

Mira. What's t' a spirit?
Lord, how it looks about! Believe me, sir;
It carries a brave form:—but 'tis a spirit.

Pro. No, wench: it eats, and sleeps, and hath such senses
As we have; such. This gallant, which thou seest,
Was in the wreck; and but he's something staint'd
With grief, that's beauty's canker, thou might'st call him
A goodly person. He hath lost his fellows,
And strays about to find 'em.

Mira. I might call him
A thing divine, for nothing natural
I ever saw so noble.

Pro. It goes on, I see. [Aside.
As my soul prompts it.—Spirit, fine spirit! I'll free thee
Within two days for this.

Fer. Most sure, the goddess [Seeing her.]
On whom these airs attend!—Vouchsafe, my prayer
May know if you remain upon this island.

Kneels. And that you will some good instruction give,
How I may bear me here: my prime request,
Which I do last pronounce, is, O you wonder!
If you be maid, or no?

Mira. No wonder, sir;
But, certainly a maid.

Fer. My language! heavens!—Rises.
I am the best of them that speak this speech,
Were I but where 'tis spoken.

Pro. How! the best?
What wert thou, if the king of Naples heard thee?
Fer. A single thing; as I am now, that wonders
To hear thee speak of Naples. He does hear me,
And that he does I weep; myself I am Naples;
Who with mine eyes, ne'er since at ebb, behold
The king, my father, wreck'd.

Mira. Alack, for mercy!
Fer. Yes, faith, and all his lords; the duke of Milan,
And his brave son, being twain.

Pro. The duke of Milan,
And his more braver daughter, could control thee,
If now 'twere fit to do't. [Aside. At the first sight
They have chang'd eyes:—delineate Ariel,
I'll set thee free for this!—[To him.] A word, good sir; I fear, you have done yourself some wrong; a word.

Mira. Why speaks my father so urgently? This

1 f. e. have "him." 2 The old copies read: "Foot it fealy here and there, and sweet sprites bear the burden." 3 The MS. annotator of the folio of 1632, anticipated later critics in altering the passage as it stands in the text. 4 Owns. 5 Not in f. e. 6 Not in f. e.
Is the third man that e'er I saw; the first
That e'er I sigh'd for. Pity move my father
To be inclin'd my way!

Fer. O! if a virgin,
And your affection not gone forth, I'll make you
The queen of Naples.

Pro. Soft, sir; one word more.—

[Aside.] They are both in either's powers: but this swift business
I must uneasy make, lest too light winning
Make the prize light.—To him. One word more: I charge thee,
That thou attend me. Thou dost here usurp
The name thou ow'st not; and hast put thyself
Upon this island as a spy, to win it
From me, the lord on't.

Fer. No, as I am a man.

Mira. There's nothing ill can dwell in such a temple:
If the ill spirit have so fair a house,
Good things will strive to dwell with 't.

Pro. Follow me.—

[To Ferd.]

Speak not for you him; he's a traitor.—Come.
I'll manacle thy neck and feet together;
Sea-water shall thou drink, thy food shall be
The fresh-brook muscles, witter'd roots, and husks
Wherein the acorn cradled. Follow.

Fer. No;

I will resist such entertainment, till
Mine enemy has more power.

[He draws, and is charmed from moving.

Mira. O, dear father!

Make not too rash a trial of him, for
He's gentle, and not fearful.

Pro. What! I say:

My foot my tutor?—Put thy sword up, traitor;
Who mak'st a show, but dar'st not strike, thy conscience
Is so possess'd with guilt: Come from thy ward,
For I can here disarm thee with this stick,
And make thy weapon drop.

---

Mira. Beseech you, father!

Pro. Hence! hang not on my garments.

Mira. Sir, have pity:

I'll be his surety.

Pro. Silence! one word more Shall make me chide thee, if not hate thee. What!
An advocate for an impostor! hush! Thou Think'st there are no more such shapes as he,
Having seen but him and Caliban: foolish wench!
To the most of men this is a Caliban,
And they to him are angels.

Mira. My affections
Are then most humble: I have no ambition
To see a goodlier man.

Pro. Come on; obey: [To Ferd.]

Thy nerves are in their infancy again,
And have no vigour in them.

Fer. So they are:
My spirits, as in a dream, are all bound up.
My father's less, the weakness which I feel,
The wreck of all my friends, nor this man's threats,
To whom I am subdued, are but light to me,
Might I but through my prison once a day
Behold this maid: all corners else o' the earth
Let liberty make use of; space enough
Have I in such a prison.

Pro. It works.—Come on.—

Thou hast done well, fine Ariel!—Follow me.—

Hark, what thou else shalt do me. [To Ferd. and Mira.]

Mira. Be of comfort.

My father's of a better nature, sir,
Than he appears by speech: this is unwonted,
Which now came from him.

Pro. Thou shalt be as free
As mountain winds: but then, exactly do
All points of my command.

Ari. To the syllable.

Pro. Come, follow.—Speak not for him. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Another part of the Island.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Gonzalo,
Adrian, Francisco and Others.

Gon. Beseech you, sir, be merry; you have cause
(So have we all) of joy, for our escape
Is much beyond our loss. Our hint of woe
Is common: every day, some sailor's wife,
The master of some merchant, and the merchant,
Have just our theme of woe; but for the miracle,
I mean our preservation, few in millions
Can speak like us: then, wisely, good sir, weigh
Our sorrow with our comfort.

Alon. Prythieve, peace.

Seb. He receives comfort like cold porridge.

Ant. The visitor will not give him o'er so.

Seb. Look; he's winding up the watch of his wit:
by and by it will strike.

Gon. Sir,

Seb. One—tell.

Gon. When every grief is entertain'd, that's offer'd,
Comes to the entertainer—

Seb. A dollar.

Gon. Delour comes to him, indeed: you have spoken truer than you purposed.

---

Seb. You have taken it wiser than I meant you should.

Gon. Therefore, my lord,

Ant. Fez, what a spendthrift is he of his tongue!

Alon. I prythee, spare.

Gon. Well, I have done. But yet—

Seb. He will be talking.

Ant. Which, or he or Adrian, for a good wager, first begins to crow?

Seb. The old cock.

Ant. The cockrel.

Seb. Done. The wager?

Ant. A laughter.

Seb. A match.

Adv. Though this island seem to be desert—

Seb. Ha, ha, ha!

Ant. So, you're paid.

Adv. Uninhabitable, and almost inaccessible—

Seb. Yet—

Adv. Yet—

Ant. He could not miss it.

Adv. It must needs be of subtle, tender, and delicate temperance.

Ant. Temperance was a delicate wench.

1 masters: in f. e. 2 of them: in f. e. Knight's edition reads, "of them."
Scene I

Seb. Ay; and a subtle, as he most learnedly delivered.

Adr. The air breathes upon us here most sweetly.

Seb. As if it had lungs, and rotten ones.

Ant. Or was it twa perfumed by a fen.

Gon. Here is every thing advantageous to life.

Ant. True; save means to live.

Seb. Of that there's none, or little.

Gon. How lusty! and lusty the grass looks! how green!

Ant. The ground, indeed, is tawny.

Seb. With an eye of green in't.

Ant. He misses not much.

Seb. No; he doth but mistake the truth totally.

Gon. But the rarity of it is, which is indeed almost beyond credit—

Seb. As many vouch'd rarities are.

Gon. That our garments, being, as they were, drenched in the sea, held, notwithstanding, their freshness, and glosses; being rather new dyed, than stain'd with salt water.

Ant. If but one of his pockets could speak, would it not say, he lies?

Seb. Ay, or very falsely pocket up his report.

Gon. Methinks, our garments are now as fresh as when we put them on first in Afric, at the marriage of the king's fair daughter Claribel to the king of Tunis.

Seb. 'Twas a sweet marriage, and we prosper well in our return.

Adr. Tunis was never graced before with such a paragon to their queen.

Gon. Not since widow Dido's time.

Seb. What if he had said, widow Encas too? good lord, how you take it!

Adr. Widow Dido, said you! you make me study of that: she was of Carthage, not of Tunis.

Gon. This Tunis, sir, was Carthage.

Adr. Carthage?

Gon. I assure you, Carthage.

Ant. His word is more than the miraculous harp.

Seb. He hath rais'd the wall, and houses too.

Ant. What impossible matter will he make easy next?

Seb. I think he will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple.

Ant. Androwing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands.

Gon. Ay?

Ant. Why, in good time.

Gon. Sir, we were talking, that our garments seem now as fresh, as when we were at Tunis in the marriage of your daughter, who is now queen.

Ant. And the rarest that e'er came there.

Ant. O! widow Dido; ay, widow Dido.

Gon. Is not, sir, my doubtlet as fresh as the first day I wore it? I mean, in a sort.

Ant. That sort was well fish'd for.

Gon. When I wore it, at your daughter's marriage?

Adr. You cram these words into mine ears, against the stomach of my sense. Would I had never married my daughter there! for, coming there, my son is lost; and, in my rate, she too, who is so far from Italy remov'd, I ne'er again shall see her. O thou, mine heir! Of Naples and of Milan! what strange fish Hath made his meal on thee?

1 Juicy. 2 Slight shade of color. 3 at: in f. c. 4 She'd: in f. c. 5 It is a nation, would I answer Plato, that hath no kind of traffic, no knowledge of Letters, no intelligence of numbers, no name of magistrate, nor of politike superloritie; no use of service, of riches, or of poverty; no contracts, no successions, no divisions, no occupation but idle; no respect of kindred, but common, no apparel but natural, no measuring of lands, no use of wine, corn, or mettle. The very that import lying, falsehood, treason, dissimulations, covetousness, envy, detraction, and pardon, were never heard of amongst them.—Montaignes, Florio's translation, 1603. 6 Pliny.
Ant. Long live Gonzalo!

Gon. And, do you mark me, sir?—

Alon. Pr'ythee, no more: thou dost talk nothing to me.

Gon. I do well believe your highness; and did it to minister occasion to these gentlemen, who are of such sensible and nimble lungs, that they always use to laugh at nothing.

Ant. 'Twas you we laugh'd at.

Gon. Who, in this kind of merry fooling, am nothing to you: so you may continue, and laugh at nothing still.

Ant. What a blow was there given!

Seb. An it had not fallen flat-long.

Gon. You are gentlemen of brave mettle: you would lift the moon out of her sphere, if she would continue in it five weeks without changing.

Enter Ariel above, invisible, playing solemn music.

Seb. We would so, and then go a bat-fowling.

Ant. Nay, good my lord, be not angry.

Gon. No, I warrant you; I will not adventure my discretion so weakly. Will you laugh me asleep, for I am very heavy!

Ant. Go sleep, and hear us.

[All sleep but Alon. See. and Ant.]

Ant. What! all so soon asleep? I wish mine eyes Would, with themselves, shut up my thoughts: I find, They are inclined to do so.

Seb. Please you, sir, Do not omit the heavy offer of it: It seldom visits sorrow; when it doth, It is a comforter.

Ant. We two, my lord, Will guard your person while you take your rest, And watch your safety.

Alon. Thank you. Wondrous heavy.—[Alon. sleeps.]

Seb. What a strange drowsiness possesses them!

Ant. It is the quality of the climate.

Wh, Doth it not, then, our eye-lids sink? I find not Myself disposed to sleep.

Ant. Nor I: my spirits are nimble. They fell together all, as by consent; They dropp'd, as by a thunder-stroke. What might, Worthy Sebastian?—O! what might?—No more:— And yet, methinks, I see it in thy face, What thou should'st be. Th' occasion speaks thee, and My strong imagination sees a crown Dropping upon thy head.

Seb. What! art thou waking?

Ant. Do you not hear me speak?

Seb. I do; and, surely,

It is a sleepy language, and thou speakest Out of thy sleep. What is it thou didest say?

This is a strange repose, to be asleep With eyes wide open; standing, speaking, moving, And yet so fast asleep.

Ant. Noble Sebastian, Thou let'st thy fortune sleep—die rather; wince'st While's thou art waking.

Seb. Thou dost more distinctly: There's meaning in thy snores.

Ant. I am more serious than my custom: you Must be so too, if heed me; which to do, Trebles thee o'er.

Seb. Well; I am standing water.

Ant. I'll teach you how to flow.

Seb. Do so: to ebb.

Hereditary sloth instructs me.

Ant. O! If you but knew, how you the purpose cherish,

Whiles thus you mock it! how, in stripping it,

You more invest it! Ebbing men, indeed,

Most often do so near the bottom run

By their own fear, or sloth.

Seb. Pr'ythee, say on.

The setting of thine eye, and check, proclaim

A matter from thee; and a birth, indeed,

Which throes thee much to yield.

Ant. Thus, sir, Although this lord of weak remembrance, this (Who shall be of as little memory,

When he is earth'd) hath here almost persuaded (For he's a spirit of persuasion, only Prefaces to persuade) the king, his son's alive,

'Tis as impossible that he's undrown'd,

As he that sleeps here, swims.

Seb. I have no hope

That he's undrown'd.

Ant. O! out of that no hope,

What great hope have you! no hope, that way, is Another way so high a hope, that even

Ambition cannot pierce a wing beyond,

But doubts discovery there. Will you grant, with me,

That Ferdinand is drown'd?

Seb. He's gone.

Ant. Who's the next heir of Naples?

Seb. Claribel.

Ant. She that is queen of Tunis; she that dwells

Ten leagues beyond man's life; she that from Naples

Can have no note, unless the sun was post,

(The man i the moon's too slow) till new-born chins

Be rough and razonable; she, for whom

We all were sea-swallow'd, though some cast again;

And by that destiny to perform an act

Whereof what's past is prologue, what's to come,

In yours and my discharge.

Seb. What stuff is this!—How say you?

'Tis true; my brother's daughter's queen of Tunis; So is she heir of Naples; ²twixt which regions There is some space.

Ant. A space whose every cubit

Seems to cry out, "How shall that Claribel

Measure us back to Naples?"—Keep in Tunis,

And let Sebastian wake!—Say, this were death

That now hath seized them; why, they were no worse

Than now they are. There be, that can rule Naples

As well as he that sleeps; lords that can prate

As amply, and unnecessarily,

As this Gonzalo: I myself could make

A chough of as deep chat. O, that you bore

The mind that I do! what a sleep were this

For your advancement! Do you understand me?

Seb. Methinks, I do.

Ant. And how does your content

Tender your own good fortune?

Seb. I remember, You did supplant your brother Prospero.

Ant. True:

And look how well my garments sit upon me;

Much fatter than before. My brother's servants

Were then my fellows, now they are my men.

Seb. But, for your conscience—

Ant. Ay, sir; where lies that? if it were a kybe,

'Twould put me to my slipper; but I feel not

This deity in my bosom: twenty consciences,

That stand 'twixt me and Milan, candied be they,
And yet I need must curse; but they’ll not pinch,
Fright me withurchin shows, pitch me i’ the mire,
Nor lead me, like a fire-brand, in the dark
Out of my way, unless he bid ‘em; but
For every want, are they set upon me?
Sometimes like apes, that moe and chatter at me,
And after, bite me; then like hedge-hogs, which Lie tumbling in my bare-foot way, and mount
Their pricks at my foot-fall: sometime am I
All wound with adders, who with cloven tongues
Do hiss me into madness.—Io, now! Io!

Enter Trinculo.

Here comes a spirit of his, and to torment me
For bringing wood in slowly: I’ll fall flat;
Perehance, he will not mind me.

Tri. Here’s neither bush nor shrub to bear off any weather at all, and another storm brewing; I hear it sing; the wind: yond’ same black cloud, yond’ huge one, looks like a foul bernbard that would shed his liquor. If it should thunder, as it did before, I know not where to hide my head: yond’ same cloud cannot choose but fall by pillafins.—What have we here?
[Seeing Caliban.] A man or a fish? Dead or alive?
A fish: he smells like a fish; a very ancient and fish-like smell; a kind of, not of the newest, Poor-John.
A strange fish! Were I in England now, (as once I was) and had but this fish painted, not a holiday fool there but would give a piece of silver: there would this monster make a man: any strange beast there makes a man. When they will not give a doit to relieve a lampe beggar, they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian. Legg’d like a man! and his fins like arms! Warm, of my truth! I do now let loose my opinion, hold it no longer: this is no fish, but an islander, that hath lately suffered by a thunder-bolt.
[Thunder.] Alas! the storm is come again: my best way is to creep under his gaberdine; there is no other shelter herabout: misery acquaints a man with strange bedfellows. I will here shroud, till the drench1 of the storm be past.

Enter Stephano, singing; a bottle in his hand.

Ste. I shall no more to sea, to sea,
Here shall I die a-shore.—

This is a very scurry tune to sing at a man’s funeral
Well, here’s my comfort.

[Drinks.

The master, the swabb, the boatswain, and I,
The gunner, and his men.

Lov’d Moll, Meg, and Marian, and Margery,
But none of us car’d for Kate;
For she had a tongue with a tang,
Would cry to a sailor, Go, hang;
She lov’d not the savour of tar, nor of pitch,
Yet a tailor might scratch her where’er she did itch;
Then, to sea, boys, and let her go hang.

This is a scurry tune too; but here’s my comfort. [Drinks.

Cal. Do not torment me: O!

Ste. What’s the matter? Have we devils here?
Do you put tricks upon us with savages, and men of Indie? Ha! I have not ‘scape’d drowning, to be a‘ear’d now of your four legs; for it hath been said, as proper a man as ever went on four legs cannot make him give ground, and it shall be said so again, while Stephano breathes at nostrils.

Cal. The spirit torments me: O!

Ste. This is some monster of the isle, with four legs, who hath got, as I take it, an ague. Where the devil should he learn our language? I will give him some relief, if it be but for that: if I can recover him, and keep him tame, and get to Naples with him, he's a present for any emperor that ever trod on neat's-leather.

Cal. Do not torment me, pr'ythee: I'll bring my wood home faster.

Ste. He's in his fit now, and does not talk after the wisest. He shall taste of my bottle: if he have never drunk wine afore, it will go near to remove his fit. If I can recover him, and keep him tame, I will not take too much for him: he shall pay for him that hath him, and that soundly.

Cal. Thou dost me yet but little hurt; thou wilt anon, I know it by thy trembling: now Prosper works upon thee.

Ste. Come on your ways: open your mouth; here is that which will give language to you, eat. Open your mouth: this will shake your shaking, I can tell you, and that soundly: you cannot tell who's your friend; open your chaps again.

[Caliban drinks.]

Trin. I should know that voice. It should be—but he is drowned, and these are devils. O, defend me!—

Ste. Four legs, and two voices! a most delicate monster. His forward voice, now, is to speak well of his friend; his backward voice is to utter foul speeches, and to detract. If all the wine in my bottle will recover him, I will help his age. Come,—Amen! I will pour some in thy other mouth.

Trin. Stephano!

Ste. Dost thy other mouth call me? Mercy! mercy! This is a devil, and no monster: I will leave him; I have no long spoon.

Trin. Stephano!—if thou beest Stephano, touch me, and speak to me, for I am Trinculo:—be not afraid,—thy good friend Trinculo.

Ste. If thou beest Trinculo, come forth. I'll pull thee by the lesser legs: if any be Trinculo's legs, these are they. Thou art very Trinculo, indeed! How came'st thou to be the siege* of this moon-calf? Can he vent Trinculo?

Trin. I took him to be killed with a thunder-stroke. —But art thou not drowned, Stephano? I hope now, thou art not drowned. Is the storm overblown? I hid me under the dead moon-calf's gaberdine for fear of the storm. And art thou living, Stephano? O Stephano! two Neapolitans 'scaped?

Ste. Pr'ythee, do not turn me about: my stomach is not constant.

Cal. These be fine things, an if they be not sprites. That's a brave god, and bears celestial liquor: I will kneel to him.

Ste. How didst thou 'scape? How came'st thou hither? swear by this bottle, how thou cam'st hither. I escaped upon a butt of sack, which the sailors heaved over-board, by this bottle! which I made of the bark of a tree, with mine own hands, since I was cast a-shore.

Cal. I'll swear, upon that bottle, to be thy true subject, for the liquor is not earthy. [Kneels.]

Ste. Here: swear, then, how thou escap'dst.

Trin. Swam a-shore, man, like a duck. I can swim like a duck, I'll be sworn.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Before Prospero's Cell.

Enter Ferdinand, bearing a log.

Fer. There be some sprits are painful, and their labour

1 Not in f. e. 2 sent. 3 Not in f. o. 4 Not in f. e. 5 trenchering: in f. e.

Ste. Here, kiss the book. Though thou canst swim like a duck, thou art made like a goose.

Trin. 0 Stephano! hast any more of this? Ste. The whole butt, man; my cellar is in a rock by the sea-side, where my wine is hid. How now, moon-calf! how does thine auge?

Cal. Hast thou not dropped from heaven?

Ste. Out o' the moon, I do assure thee: I was the man in the moon, when time was.

Cal. I have seen thee in her, and I do adore thee: my mistress showed me thee, and thy dog, and thy bush.

Ste. Come, swear to that; kiss the book: I will furnish it anon with new contents. Swear.

Trin. By this good light, this is a very shallow monster.—I'afraid of him?—a very weak monster.—The man? the moon?—a most poor credulous monster.—Well drawn, monster, in good sooth.

Cal. I'll show thee every fertile inch o' the island; and I will kiss thy foot. I pr'ythee, be my god.

Trin. By this light, a most perfidious and drunken monster: when his god's asleep, he'll rob his bottle.

Cal. I'll kiss thy foot: I'll swear myself thy subject.

Ste. Come on, then; down and swear.

[Caliban lies down.]

Trin. I shall laugh myself to death at this puppy-headed monster. A most scurv,y monster: I could find in my heart to beat him,—

Ste. Come, kiss.

Trin. —But that the poor monster's in drink. An abominable monster!

Cal. I'll show thee the best springs; I'll pluck thee berries;

I'll fish for thee, and get thee wood enough.

A plague upon the tyrant that I serve!

I'll bear him no more sticks, but follow thee,

Thou wondrous man.

Trin. A most ridiculous monster, to make a wonder of a poor drunkard!

Cal. I pr'ythee, let me bring thee where crabs grow;

And with my long nails will dig thee pig-nuts;

Show thee a jay's nest, and instruct thee how

To snare the nimble marmozet: I'll bring thee

To clustering filberds, and sometimes I'll get thee

Young scamel's from the rock: Wilt thou go with me?

Ste. I pr'ythee now, lead the way, without any more talking.—Trinculo, the king and all our company else being drowned, we will inherit here.—Here; bear my bottle.—Fellow Trinculo, we'll fill him by and by again.

Cal. Farewell, master; farewell, farewell.

[Fires drunkenly.]

Trin. A howling monster; a drunken monster.

Cal. No more dams I'll make for fish;

Nor fetch in firing

At requiring,

Nor scrape trencher, nor wash dish;

'Ban 'Ban, Ca—Caliban,

Has a new master—Get a new man.

Freedom, hey-day! hey-day, freedom! freedom! hey-day, freedom!

Ste. O brave monster! lead the way. [Exeunt.]

Delight in them sets off: some kinds of baseness Are nobly undergone; and most poor matters Point to rich ends. This my mean task Would be as heavy to me, as odious; but
The flesh-fly blow my mouth. Hear my soul speak: The very instant that I saw you, did My heart fly to your service; there resides, To make me slave to it; and for your sake, Am I this patient log-man.

Mira. Do you love me?

Fer. O heaven! O earth! hear witness to this sound, And crown what I profess with kind event, If I speak true; if hollowly, invert What best is boded me to mischief! I, Beyond all limit of aught else? the world, Do love, prize, honour you.

Mira. I am a fool,
To weep at what I am glad of.

Pro. Fair encounter
Of two most rare affections! Heavens rain grace On that which breeds between them!

Fer. Wherefore weep you?

Mira. At mine unworthiness, that dare not offer What I desire to give; and much less take, What I shall die to want. But this is trifling; And all the more it seeks to hide itself, The bigger bulk it shows. Hence, bashful cunning, And prompt me, plain and holy innocence! I am your wife, if you will marry me; If not, I'll die your maid: to be your fellow You may deny me; but I'll be your servant, Whether you will or no.

Fer. My mistress, dearest,
And I thus humble ever.

Mira. My husband then?

Fer. Ay, with a heart as willing
As bondage e'er of freedom: here's my hand.

Mira. And mine, with my heart in't: and now farewell,
Till half an hour hence.

Fer. A thousand thousand! [Exeunt Fer. and Mira.

Pro. So glad of this as they, I cannot be,
Who are surpris'd with all: but my rejoicing
At nothing can be more. I'll to my book;
For yet, ere supper time, must I perform
Much business appertaining.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—Another part of the Island.

Enter Stephano and Trinculo; Caliban following with a bottle.

Ste. Tell not me:—when the butt is out, we will drink water; not a drop before: therefore bear up, and board 'em. Servant-monster, drink to me.

Trin. Servant-monster? the folly of this island! They say, there's but five upon this isle: we are three of them; if the other two be trained like us, the state totters.

Ste. Drink, servant-monster, when I bid thee: thy eyes are almost set in thy head.

Trin. Where should they be set else? he were a brave monster indeed, if they were set in his tail.

Ste. My man-monster hath drowned his tongue in sack: for my part, the sea cannot drown me. I swear, ere I could recover the shore, five-and-thirty leagues, off and on, by this light. Thou shalt be my lieutenant, monster, or my standard.

Trin. Your lieutenant, if you list; he's no standard.

Ste. We'll not run, monsieur monster.

Trin. Nor go neither; but you'll lie, like dogs, and yet say nothing neither.

Ste. Moon-calf, speak once in thy life, if thou beest a good moon-calf.

Cal. How does thy honour? Let me lick thy shoe.
I'll not serve him, he is not valiant.

Trin. Thou liest, most ignorant monster: I am in case to justle a constable. Why, thou debauched fish thou, was there ever man a coward, that hath drunk so much sack as I to-day? Wilt thou tell a monstrous lie, being but half a fish, and half a monster?

Cal. Lo, how he mocks me! wilt thou let him, my lord?

Trin. Lord, quoth he!—that a monster should be such a natural!

Cal. Lo, lo, again! bite him to death, I pray thee.

Ste. Trinculo, keep a good tongue in your head: if you prove a mulineer, the next tree—The poor monster, my subject, and he shall not suffer indignity. Cal. I thank my noble lord. Wilt thou be pleased to hearken once again to the suit I made to thee?

Ste. Marry will I; kneel and repeat it: I will stand, and so shall Trinculo. [CALIBAN KNEELS.]

Enter Ariel, invisible.

Ari. Thou liest.

Cal. Thou liest, thou jesting monkey, thou; I would, my valiant master would destroy thee: I do not lie.

Ste. Trinculo, if you trouble him any more in his tale by this hand, I will supplant some of your teeth.

Trin. Why, I said nothing. [ceed.

Ste. Mum then, and no more.—[TO CALIBAN.]—Proceed.

Cal. I say by sorcery he got this isle.

From me he got it: if thy greatness will, Revenge on him—for, I know, thou dar'st; But this thing dare not.

Ste. That's most certain.

Cal. Thou shalt be lord of it, and I'll serve thee.

Ste. How now, shall this be compassed? Canst thou bring me to the party?

Cal. Yea, yes, my lord: I'll yield him thee asleep, Where thou may'st knock a nail into his head.

Ari. Thou liest; thou canst not.

Cal. What a pied6 miny's this! Thou scurvy patch! I do beseech thy greatness, give him blows, And take his bottle from him: that when's gone, He shall drink nought but brine; for I'll not show him Where the quick freshes are.

Ste. Trinculo, run into no farther danger: interrupt the monster one word farther, and, by this hand, I will turn my merry out of doors, and make a stock-fish of thee.

Ste. Didst thou not say, he lied?

Ari. Thou liest.

Cal. Thou liest; I'll take thee that. [STRIKES HIM.] As you like this, give me the other time too.

Trin. I did not give the lie. Out o' your wits, and hearing too? A pox o' your bottle! this can sack, and drinking do. A murrain on your monster, and the devil take your fingers!

Cal. Ha, ha, ha!

Ste. Now, forward with your tale. Pr'ythee stand farther off.

Cal. Beat him enough: after a little time, I'll beat him too.

Cal. Why, as I told thee, 'tis a custom with him I the afternoon to sleep: then thou may'st brain him, Having first seiz'd his books; or with a log Batter his skull, or paunch him with a stake, Or cut his wizard with thy knife. Remember, First to possess his books; for without them He's but a sot, as I am, nor hath not One spirit to command: they all do hate him, As rootedly as I. Burn but his books; He has brave utensils, (for so he calls them) Which, when he has a house, he'll deck withal: And that most deeply to consider is The beauty of his daughter: he himself Calls her a nunnery: I never saw a woman, But only Sycorax my dam, and she; But she as far surpasseth Sycorax, As great'st does least.

Ste. Is it so brave a lass?

Cal. Ay, lord; she will become thy bed, I warrant, And bring thee forth brave brood.

Ste. Monster, I will kill this man: his daughter and I will be king and queen; (save our graces!) and Trinculo and thyself shall be viceroyes. Dost thou like the plot, Trinculo?

Trin. Excellently.

Ste. Give me thy hand: I am sorry I beat thee; but, while thou livest, keep a good tongue in thy head.

Cal. Within this half hour will he be asleep; Wilt thou destroy him then?

Ste. Ay, on mine honour.

Ari. This will I tell my master.

Cal. Thou mak'st me merry: I am full of pleasure. Let us be jocund: will you troll the catch you taught me but while-ere?

Ste. At thy request, monster, I will do reason, any reason. Come on, Trinculo, let us sing.

[Sings.

Flont 'em, and scout 'em; and scout 'em, and flont 'em;

Thought is free.

Cal. That's not the tune.

[Ariel plays a tune on a Tabor and Pipe.

Ste. What is this same?

Trin. This is the tune of our catch, played by the picture of our shrew.

Ste. If thou beest a man, show thyself in thy likeness: if thou beest a devil, take't as thou list.

Trin. O, forgive me my sins!

Ste. He that dies, pays all debts: I defy thee.—Mercy upon us!

Cal. Art thou afeard?

Ste. No, monster, not I.

Cal. Be not afeard; the isle is full of noises, Sounds, and sweet airs, that give delight, and hurt not.

Sometimes a thousand twangling instruments Will hum about mine ears; and sometimes voices, That if I hear them, I do fear them, and think That if I were withal asleep, in dreams Will make me sleep again: and then, in dreaming, The clouds, methought, would open, and show riches Ready to drop upon me, that when I wak'd I cry'd to dream again.

Ste. This will prove a brave kingdom to me, where I shall have my music for nothing.

Cal. When Prospero is destroyed.

Ste. That shall be by and by: I remember the story. Trin. The sound is going away: let's follow it, and after do our work.

Ste. Lead, monster; we'll follow.—I would, I could see the taborer: he lays it on.

Trin. Will come? I'll follow, Stephano. [Exeunt.]
SCENE III.—Another part of the Island.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Gonzalo, Adrian, Francisco, and Others.

Alon. By'r la'kin, I can go no farther, sir; my old bones ache: here's a maze trod, indeed; through forth-rights, and meanders! by your patience, I must needs rest me.

Alon. Old lord, I cannot blame thee, who am myself attach'd therewith; to the dulling of my spirits: sit down, and rest. Even here I will put off my hope, and keep it no longer for my fatterer: he is drown'd, whom thus we stray to find; and the sea mocks our fruitless search on land. Well, let him go.

Ant. I am right glad that he's so out of hope. [Aside to Sebastian.] Do not, for one repulse, forego the purpose that you resolv'd to effect.

Seb. The next advantage will we take thoroughly.

Ant. Let it be to-night; for now they are oppress'd with travel, they will not, nor cannot, use such vigilance, as when they are fresh.

Seb. I say, to-night: no more.

[Sollemn and strange music; and Prospero above, invisible. Enter several strange Shapes, bringing in a banquet: they dance about it with gentle actions of salutations; and, inviting the King, &c. to eat, they depart.]

Alon. What harmony is this? my good friends, hark! Marvelous sweet music! Give us kind keepers, heavens! What were Seb. A living drollery. Now I will believe that there are unicorns; that in Arabia there is one tree, the phoenix' throne; one phoenix at this hour reigning there.

Ant. I'll believe both; and what does else want credit, come to me and I'll be sworn 'tis true: travellers' never did lie, though fools at home condemn them.

Gon. If in Naples I should report this now, would they believe me? if I should say, I saw such islanders, (for, cer'tain, those are people of the island) who, though they are of monstrous shape, yet, note, their manners are more gentle kind, than of our human generation you shall find.

Many, nay, almost any.

Pro. [Aside.] Honest lord, thou hast said well; for some of you there present, are worse than devils.

Alon. I cannot too much muse, fing such shapes, such gestures; and such sounds, express—(although they want the use of tongue) a kind of excellent dumb discourse.

Pro. [Aside.] Praise in departing.

Frances. They vanish'd strangely.

Seb. No matter, since they have left their viands behind, for we have stomachs. Will't please you taste of what is here?

Alon. Not I.

Gon. Faith, sir, you need not fear. When we were boys,

Who would believe that there were mountaineers, dew-lapp'd like bulls, whose throats had hanging at them. Wallets of flesh? or that there were such men, whose heads stood in their breasts? which now, we find, each putter-out of five for one, will bring us good warrant of.

Alon. I will stand to, and feed, although my last: no matter, since I feel the best is past.—Brother, my lord the duke, stand to, and do as we.

Thunder and lightning. Enter Ariel, like a harpy, claps his wings upon the table, and, with a quaint device, the banquet vanishes.

Ari. You are three men of sin, whom destiny (that hath to instrument this lower world, and what is in't) the never-surfeited sea hath caused to belch up, and on this island where man doth not inhabit; you 'mongst men being most unfit to live. I have made you mad; and even with such like valour men hang and drown their proper selves. You fools! I and my fellows are ministers of fate: the elements.

[Alon., Sen., &c. draw their Swords.]

Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well wound the loud winds, or with bemoak'd-at stabs kill the still-closing waters, as diminish one dowlie that's in my plume: my fellow-ministers are like invulnerable. If you could hurt your swords are now too maesy for your strengths, and will not be uplifted. But, remember, (for that's my business to you) that you three from Milan did supplant good Prospero; exposed unto the sea (which hath requit it) him, and his innocent child: for which foul deed the power delaying not forgetting, have incensed the seas and shores, yea, all the creatures, against your peace. Thee, of thy son, Alonzo, they have bereft; and do pronounce by me, lingering perdition (worse than any death can be at once) shall step by step attend you, and your ways; whose wrathes to guard you from (which here, in this most desolate isle, else falls upon your heads) is nothing, but heart's sorrow, and a clear life ensuing. He vanishes in thunder: then, to soft music, enter the Shapes again, and dance with mockes and moves, and carry out the table.

Pro. [Above.] Bravely the figure of this happy hast thou perform'd, my Ariel; a grace it had, devising. Of my instruction hast thou nothing 'bated, in what thou hast to say: so, with good life and observation strange, my meaner ministers their several kinds have done. My high charms work, and these, mine enemies, are all knit up in their distractions: they now are in my power; and in these fits I leave them, while I visit young Ferdinand, (whom they suppose is drown'd) and his and my lov'd darling. [Exit Prospero.]

Gon. I the name of something holy, sir, why stand you in this strange stare?

Alon. O, it is monstrous! monstrous! Methought, the billows spoke, and told me of it; the winds did sing it to me; and the thunder, that deep and dreadful organ-pipe, pronounce'd the name of Prosper: it did base my trespass.
Therefore my son! the ooze is bedded; and I'll seek him deeper than o'er plummet sounded,
And with him there lie mudd'd.

[Exit. Scb.
I'll fight their legions o'er.

Ant. I'll be thy second.

[Exeunt Seb. and Ant. Gon. All three of them are desperate: their great guilt,

Like poison given to work a great time after,
Now 'tis in to bite the spirits.—I do beseech you,
That are of suppler joints, follow them swiftly,
And hinder them from what this ecstasy
May now provoke them to.

Adr. Follow, I pray you.

[Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Before Prospero's Cell.

Enter Prospero, Ferdinand, and Miranda.

Pro. If I have too austerity punish'd you,
Your compensation makes amends; for I
Have given you here a thread of mine own life,
Or that for which I live: whom once again
I tender to thy hand. All thy vexations
Were but my trials of thy love, and thou
Hast strangely stood the test: here, afore Heaven,
I ratify this my rich gift! O Ferdinand!
Do not smile at me that I boast her off,
For thou shalt find she will outstrip all praise,
And make it halt behind her.

Fer. I do believe it,
Against an oracle.

Pro. Then, as my gift, and thine own acquisition Worthily purchase'd, take my daughter: but
If thou dost break her virgin knot before
All sanctimonious ceremonies may,
With full and holy rite, be minister'd,
No sweet aspersion shall the heavens let fall
To make this contract grow; but barren hate,
Sour-eyed disdain, and discord, shall bestrew
The union of your bod with weeds so loathly,
That you shall hate it both: therefore, take heed,
As Hymen's lamps shall light you.

Fer. As I hope
For quiet days, fair issue, and long life.
With such love as 'tis now, the muriest den,
The most opportune place, the strong'st suggestion
Our worser genius can, shall never melt
Mine honour into lust, to take away
The edge of that day's celebration,
When I shall think, or Phaebus' steeds are founder'd,
Or night keep'd chain'd below.

Pro. Fairly spoke.
Sit then and talk with her; she is thine own.—
What, Ariel! my industrious servant Ariel!

Enter Ariel.

Ari. What would my potent master? here I am.

Pro. Thou and thy meaner fellows your last service
Did worthy perform, and I must use you
In such another trick. Go, bring the rable,
O'er whom I give thee power, here, to this place:
Incite them to quick motion; for I must Bestow upon the eyes of this young couple
Some vanity of mine art: it is my promise,
And they expect it from me.

Ari. Presently?

Pro. Ay, with a twink.

Ari. Before you can say, "Come," and "go,"
And breathe twice; and cry, "so so?"
Each one, tripping on his toe,
Will be here with mop and mow.
Do you love me, master? no?

SCENE II.

Pro. Dearly, my delicate Ariel. Do not approach,
Till thou dost hear me call.

Ari. Well I conceive. [Exit.

Pro. Look, thou be true. Do not give dalliance
Too much the rein: the strongest oats are straw
To the fire i' the blood. Be more abstemious,
Or else, good night, your vow.

Fer. I warrant you, sir;
The white-cold virgin snow upon my heart
Abates the ardour of my liver.

Pro. Well.
Now come, my Ariel! bring a corollary,1
Rather than want a spirit: appear, and pertly.2—
No tongue all eyes; be silent. [Soft music
A Masque. Enter Iris.

Iris. Ceres, most bounteous lady, thy rich leas
Of wheat, rye, barley, vetches, oats, and peas;
Thy turfy mountains, where live nibbling sheep,
And flat meads thatch'd with stover,3 them to keep;
Thy banks with pioned4 and tilled5 brims,
Which spongy April at thy best betrims,
To make cold nymphs chaste crowns; and thy brown6 groves,
Whose shadow the dismissed bachelor loves,
Being lass-orn; thy pole-clip vineyard;
And thy sea-marge, storni, and rocky-hard,
Where thou thyself dost air; the queen o' the sky,
Whose watery arch and messenger am 1,
Bids thee leave these, and with her sovereign grace,
Here on this grass-plot, in this very place, [Enter Iris.

To come and sport. Her peacocks fly amain:
Approach, rich Ceres, her to entertain.

Enter Ceres.

Cer. Hail, many-colour'd messenger, that ne'er
Dost disobey the wife of Jupiter;
Who with thy saffron wings upon my flowers
Diffusest honey-drops, refreshing showers;
And with each end of thy blue bow dost crown
My bosky acres, and my unshrubb'd down,
Rich seat to my proud earth; why hath thy queen
Sown thee a hither, to this short-graz'd green?

Iris. A contract of true love to celebrate,
And some donation freely to estate
On the bless'd lovers.

Cer. Tell me, heavenly bow, If Venus, or her son, as thou dost know,
Do now attend the queen? since they did plot
The means that dusky Dis my daughter got,
Her and her blind boy's scandal'd company
I have forsworn.

Iris. Of her society
Be not afraid: I met her deity
Cutting the clouds towards Paphos, and her son
Dove-drawn with her. Here thought they to have done
Some wanton charm upon this man and maid,
THE TEMPEST.

Scene I.

Whose vows are, that no bed-right shall be paid
Till Hymen's torch be lighted; but in vain:
Mars' hot minion is return'd again;
Her waspish-headed son has broke his arrows,
Swears he will shoot no more, but play with sparrows,
And be a boy right out.

Cer. Highest queen of state,
Great Juno comes: I know her by her gait.

Enter Juno.

Juno. How does my bounteous sister? Go with me,
To bless this twain, that they may prosperous be,
And honour'd in their issue.

Song.

Juno. Honour, riches, marriage, blessing,
Long continuance, and increasing,
Hourly joys be still upon you!
Juno sings her blessings on you.
Earth's increase, foison plenty,
Borns, and garners never empty;
Vines, with clustering branches growing;
Plants, with goodly burden bowing;
Raina come to you, at the farthest,
In the very end of harvest!
Soearly and want shall shun you;
Ceres' blessing so is on you.

Per. This is a most majestic vision, and Harmonious charmingly. May I be bold
To think these spirits?

Pro. Spirits, which by mine art
I have from their confines call'd to enact
My present fancies.

Sir. Let me live here ever:
So rare a wonder'd father, and a wife,
Makes this place Paradise.

Juno and Ceres whisper, and send Iris on employment.

Pro. Sweet now, silence!
Juno and Ceres whisper seriously;
There's something else to do. Hush, and be mute,
Or else our spell is marr'd.

Iris. You nymphs, call'd Naiads, of the winding Brooks,
With your sedge' crowns, and ever harmless looks,
Leave your crisp channels, and on this green land
Answer your summons: Juno does command.
Come, temperate nymphs, and help to celebrate
A contract of true love: be not too late.

Enter certain Nymphs
You sun-burn'd sickleman, of August weary,
Come hither from the furrow, and be merry,
Make holy-day: your rye-straw hats put on,
And these fresh nymphs encounter every one
In country footing.

Enter certain Reapers, properly habited: they join with the Nymphs in a graceful dance; towards the end whereof Pros, starts suddenly, and speaks; after which, to a strange, hollow, and confused noise, they heavily vanish.

Pro. [Aside.] I had forgot that foul conspiracy
Of the beast Caliban, and his confederates,
Against my life; the minute of their plot
Is almost come.—[To the Spirits.] Well done.
Avoid;—no more.

Per. This is strange; your father's in some passion
That works him strongly.

Mira. Never till this day,
Saw I him touch'd with anger so distemper'd.

Pro. You do look, my son, in a mov'd sort,
As if you were dismay'd: be cheerful, sir.
Our revels now are ended. These our actors,

1 In f. e. the remainder of the song is given to Ceres.
2 Spring: in f. e.
3 wise: in f. e.
4 sedge'd: in f. e.
5 A corop, from reek.
6 shins: in f. e.
7 A decay.
8 f. e. have only the direction, Prospero and Ariel remain unseen.
9 Jack o' lantern.
Shall hood-wink this mischief: therefore, speak softly;
All's hush'd as midnight yet.

Trin. Ay, but to lose our bottles in the pool.—
Ste. There is not only disgrace and dishonour in that, monster, but an infinite loss.

Trin. That's more to me than my wetting: yet this is your harmless fairy, monster.

Ste. I will fetch off my bottle, though I bo' er cars for my labour.

Cal. Pr'ythee, my king, be quiet. Secest thou here?
This is the mouth of the cell: no noise, and enter:
Do that good mischief, which may make this island
Thine own for ever, and I, thy Caliban,
For ay, thy foot-stoolker.

Ste. Give me thy hand. I do begin to have bloody thoughts.

Trin. O king Stephano! O peer! O worthy Stepphano! look, what a wardrobe here is for thee!
[Seeing the apparel.]

Cal. Let it alone, thou fool: it is but trash.

Trin. O, ho, monster! we know what belongs to a tripping. — O king Stephano!

Ste. Put off that gown, Trinculo: by this hand, I'll have that gown.

Trin. Thy grace shall have it.

Cal. The dropery drown this fool! what do you mean,
To do that on such luggage? Let 't alone,
And do the murder first: if he awake,
From toe to crown he' ll fill our skins with pinches;
Make us strange stuff.

Ste. Bo you quiet, monster.—Mistress line, is not this my jerkin? Now is the jerkin under the line:
now, jerkin, you are like to lose your hair, and prove a bald jerkin.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Before the Cell of Prospero.

Enter Prospero in his magic robes; and Ariel.

Pro. Now does my project gather to a head:
My charms crack not, my spirits obey, and time
Goes upright with his carriage. How's the day?

Ari. On the sixth hour: at which time, my lord,
You said our work should cease.

Pro. I did say so,
When first I rais'd the tempest. Say, my spirit,
How fares the king and his followers?

Ari. Confined together
In the same fashion as you gave in charge;
Just as you left them: all prisoners, sir,
In the line-grove which weather-fends your cell;
They cannot badge till your release. The king,
His brother, and yours, abide all three distracted,
And the remainder mourning over them,
Brim-full of sorrow, and dismay; but chiefly
Him that you term'd, sir, the good old lord, Gonzalo:
His tears run down his beard, like winter's drops
From eaves of reeds. Your charm so strongly works them,
That if you now behold them, your affections
Would become tender.

Pro. Dost thou think so, spirit?

Ari. Mine would, sir, were I human.

Pro. And mine shall.

Hast thou, which art but air, a touch, a feeling
Of their afflictions, and shall not myself,

---

Trin. Do, do: we steal by line and level, and 't like your grace.

Ste. I thank thee for that jest; here's a garment for't: wit shall not go unrewarded, while I am king of this country. "Stea by line and level," is an excel-

---

Ste. Monster, lay to your fingers: help to bear this away where my hoghead of wine is, or I'll turn you out of my kingdom. Go to, carry this.

Trin. And this.

Ste. Ay, and this.

[A noise of hunters heard. Enter divers Spirits, in shape of hounds, and hunt them about; Prospero and Ariel setting them on.]

Pro. Hey, Mountain, hey!

Ari. Silver! there it goes, Silver!

Pro. Fury, Fury! there, Tyrant, there! hark, hark!

[Cal., Ste., and Trin. are driven out.

Go, charge my goblins that they grind their joints
With dry convulsions; shorten up their sinews
With aged cramps, and more pinch-spotted make them,
That 's paid, or eat o' mountain. [Griers and roa-

Ari. Hark! they roar.

Pro. Let them be hunted soundly. At this hour
Lie at my mercy all mine enemies:
Shortly shall all my labours end, and thou
Shalt have the air at freedom: for a little,
Follow, and do me service.

[Exeunt.]
I here abjure; and, when I have requir’d
Some heavenly music, (which even now I do)
To work mine end upon their senses, that
This airy charm is, that I’ll break my staff,
Bury it certain fathoms in the earth,
And, deeper than did ever plummet sound,
I’ll drown my book.

Re-enter Ariel: after him Alonso, with a frantic gesture, attended by Gonzalo; Sebastian and Antonio in like manner, attended by Adrian and Francisco: they all enter the circle which Prospero had made, and there stand charmed; which Prospero observing, speaks.

A solemn air, and the best comforter
To an unsettled fancy, cure thy brains, now.
Useless, boil’d within thy skull! There stand,
For you are spell-stopp’d. —

Noble 1 Gonzalo, honourable man,
Mine eyes, even sociable to the flow 2 of thine,
Fall fellowly drops. —The charm dissolves space,
And as the morning steals upon the night,
Melting the darkness, so their rising senses
Begin to chase the ignorant fumes that mantle
Their clearer reason. —O good Gonzalo!
My true preserver, and a loyal servant 3
To him thou follow’st, I will pay thy graces
Home, both in word and deed. —Most cruelly
Didst thou, Alonso, use me and my daughter:
Thy brother was a furtherer in the act;
Thou’rt pinch’d force now, Sebastian. —Flesh and blood,
You brother mine, that entertain’d ambition,
Expell’d remorse and nature; who, with Sebastian,
(Whose inward pinches therefore are most strong)
Would here have kill’d your king; I do forgive thee,
Unnatural though thou art. —Their understanding
Begins to swell, and the approaching tide
Will shortly fill the reasonable shores,
That now lie foul and muddy. Not one of them,
That yet looks on me, ever would know me. —Ariel,
Fetch me the hat and rapier in my cell; [Exit Ariel.
I will dis-case me, and myself present,
As I was sometime Milan. Quickly, spirit;
Thou shalt ere long be free.

Ari. Where the bee suckes, there suck I;
In a cowslip’s bell I lie:
There I cough. When owls do cry,
On the bat’s back I do fly,
After summer, merrily:
Merrily, merrily, shall I live now,
Under the blossom that hangs on the bough.

Pro. Why, that’s my dainty Ariel! I shall miss thee;
But yet thou shalt have freedom: —so, so, so;
To the king’s ship, invisible as thou art:
There shalt thou find the mariners asleep
Under the hatchets; the master, and the boatswain,
Being awak’d, enforce them to this place,
And presently, I pr’ythee.

Ari. I drink the air before me, and return
Or e’er thy pulse twice beat. [Exit Ariel.

Gon. All torment, trouble, wonder, and amazement
Inhabit here: some heavenly power guide us
Out of this fearful country!

Pro. [Attired as Duke.] Behold, sir king,
The wronged duke of Milan, Prospero.
For more assurance that a living prince
Does now speak to thee, I embrace thy body;
And to thee, and thy company, I bid
A hearty welcome.

1 Holy: in f. e. 2 Cow: in f. e. 3 sir: in f. e. 4 or: in f. e.

Ari. Who’er thou beest he, or no,
Or some enchanted devil to abuse me,
As late I have been, I know: thy pulse
Beats as of flesh and blood; and, since I saw thee,
Th’ affliction of my mind amends, with which,
I fear, a madness held me. This must crave
(An if this be at all) a most strange story.
Thy dukedom I resign; and do entreat
Thou pardon me thy wrongs. —But how should Prospero
Be living, and be here?

Pro. First, noble friend,
Let me embrace thine age, whose honour cannot
Be measur’d, or confin’d.

Gon. Whether this be,
Or be not, I’ll not swear.

Pro. You do yet taste
Some subtleties o’ the isle, that will not let you Believe things certain.—Welcome, my friends all.
But you, my brace of lords, were I so minded,
[Aside to Sen. and Ant.
I here could pluck his highness’ frown upon you,
And justify you traitors: at this time
I will tell no tales.

Seb. [Aside.] The devil speaks in him.

Pro. No.—
For you, most wicked sir, whom to call brother
Would even infect my mouth, I do forgive
Thy rankest faults; of all of them; and require
My dukedom of thee, which, perforce, I know
Thou must restore.

Alon. If thou beest Prospero,
Give us particulars of thy preservation:
How thou hast met us here, who three hours since
Were wreck’d upon this shore; where I have lost, (How short the point of this remembrance is!) My dear son Ferdinand.

Pro. I am wo for ‘t, sir.

Alon. Irreparable is the loss, and patience
Says it is past her cure.

Pro. I rather think,
You have not sought her help; of whose soft grace,
For the like loss I have her sovereign aid,
And rest myself content.

Alon. You the like loss?

Pro. As great to me, as late; and, supportable
To make the dear loss, have I means much weaker
Than you may call to comfort you, for I
Have lost my daughter.

Alon. A daughter?
O heavens! that they were living both in Naples,
The king and queen there! that they were, I wish
Myself were muddied in that oozy bed
Where my son lies. When did you lose your daughter?

Pro. In this last tempest. I perceive, these lords
At this encounter do so much admire,
That they devour their reason, and scarce think
Their eyes do offices of truth, their words
Are natural breath; but, howso’er you have Been justified from your senses, know for certain,
That I am Prospero, and that very duke
Which was thrust forth of Milan; who most strangely
Upon this shore, where you were wreck’d, was landed,
To be the lord on’t. No more yet of this;
For ‘tis a chronicle of day by day,
Not a relation for a breakfast, nor Befitting this first meeting. Welcome, sir;
This cell my court: here have I few attendants,
And subjects none abroad: pray you, look in.
My dukedom since you have given me again,
I will require you with as good a thing;
At least, bring forth a wonder, to content yo-
As much as me my dukedom.

PROSPERO draws a curtain, and discovers FERDINAND and MIRANDA playing at chess.

Mira. Sweet lord, you play me false.

Fer. No, my dearest love,
I would not for the world.

Mira. Yes, for a score of kingdoms you should wrangle,
And I would call it fair play.

Alon. If this prove
A vision of the island, one dear son
Shall I twice lose,

Seb. A most high miracle!
Fer. Though the seas threaten they are merciful:
I have ears'd them without cause. [Kneels to Alon.

Alon. Now, all the blessings
Of a glad father compass thee about!
Ari. Arise, and say how thou'lt find here.

Mira. O, wonder!
How many goodly creatures are there here!
How beauteous mankind is! O, brave new world,
That has such people in't!

Pro. 'Tis new to thee.

Alon. What is this maid, with whom thou wast at play?
Your el'dest acquaintance cannot be three hours:
Is she the goddess that hath sev'rd us,
And brought us thus together?
Fer. Sir, she is mortal;
But, by immortal providence, she's mine:
I chose her, when I could not ask my father
For his advice, nor thought I had one. She
Is daughter to this famous duke of Milan,
Of whom so often I have heard renown,
But never saw before; of whom I have Received a second life, and second father
This lady makes him to me.

Alon. I am hers.
But O! how oddly will it sound, that I
Must ask my child forgiveness.

Pro. There, sir, stop;
Let us not burden our remembrances
With a heaviness that's gone.

Gon. I have inly wept,
Or should have spoke ere this. Look down, you gods,
And on this couple drop a blessed crown,
For it is you that have chal'd forth the way,
Which brought us hither!

Alon. I say, Amen, Gonzalo.

Gon. Was Milan thrust from Milan, that his issue
Should become kings of Naples? O! rejoice
Beyond a common joy, and set it down
With gold on lasting pillars. In one voyage
Did Claribel her husband find at Tunis;
And Ferdinand, her brother, found a wife,
Where he himself was lost; Prospero his dukedom,
In a poor isle; and all of us, ourselves,
When no man was his own.

Alon. Give me your hands:
Let grief and sorrow still embrace his heart;
That doth not wish you joy!

Gon. Be it so: Amen.

Re-enter ARIEL, with the Master and Boatswain amazedly following.

O look, sir! look, sir! here are more of us,
I prophesied, if a gallows were on land,
This fellow could not drown.—Now, blasphemy,
SCENE I.
THE TEMPEST.

Alon. Is not this Stephano, my drunken butler?

Seb. He is drunk now: where had he wine?

Alon. And Trinculo is reeling ripe: where should they Find this grand liquor that hath gilded 'em?—
How cam'st thou in this pickle?

Trin. I have been in such a pickle, since I saw you last, that, I fear me, will never out of my bones: I shall not fear fly-blowing.

Seb. Why, how now, Stephano!

Seb. O! touch me not: I am not Stephano, but a cramp.

Pro. You'd be king of the isle, sirrah?

Seb. I should have been a sore one then.

Alon. This is as strange a thing as 'c'er I look'd on.

[Pointing to Caliban.

Pro. He is as disproportion'd in his manners,
As in his shape.—Go, sirrah, to my cell;
Take with you your companions: as you look
To have my pardon, trim it handsomely.

Cal. Ay, that I will; and I'll be wise hereafter,
And seek for grace. What a thrice-double ass
Was I, to take this drunkenard for a god,
And worship this dull fool?

Pro. Go to; away!

Alon. Hence, and bestow your luggage where you found it.

Pro. Sir, I invite your highness, and your train,
To my poor cell, where you shall take your rest
For this one night; which, part of it, I'll waste
With such discourse, as, I not doubt, shall make it
Go quick away; the story of my life;
And the particular accidents gone by,
Since I came to this isle: and in the morn,
I'll bring you to your ship, and so to Naples,
Where I have hope to see the nuptial
Of these our dear-beloved solemniz'd;
And thence retire me to my Milan, where
Every third thought shall be my grave.

Alon. I long
To hear the story of your life, which must Take the ear strangely.

Pro. I'll deliver all;
And promise you calm seas, auspicious gales,
And sail, so expeditious, that shall catch
Your royal fleet far off.—My Ariel;—chick,—
That is thy charge: then, to the elements;
Be free, and fare thou well!—Please you draw near.

EPILOGUE.
Spoken by Prospero.

Now my charms are all o'erthrown,
And what strength I have's mine own;
Which is most faint: now, 'tis true,
I must be here confin'd by you,
Or sent to Naples. Let me not,
Since I have my dukedom got,
And pardon'd the deceiver, dwell
In this bare island, by your spell;
But release me from my bands,
With the help of your good hands.

1 f. e. Exeunt.

SCENE: sometimes in Verona; sometimes in Milan, and on the frontiers of Mantua.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—An open place in Verona.

Enter VALENTINE and PROTEUS.

Val. Cease to persuade, my loving Proteus; Home-keeping youth have ever homely wits. Wer't not, affection chains thy tender days. To the sweet glances of thy honour'd love, I rather would entreat thy company. To see the wonders of the world abroad, Than, living dully sluggardiz'd at home. Wear out thy youth with shapeless idleness. But since thou lov'st, love still, and thrive therein, Even as I would, when to love begin.

Pro. Wilt thou begone? Sweet Valentine, adieu. Think on thy Proteus, when thou haply seest Some rare note-worthy object in thy travel: Wish me partaker in thy happiness, When thou dost meet good hap; and in thy danger, If ever danger do environ thee, Command thy grievance to my holy prayers, For I will be thy bead's-man, Valentine.

Pro. Upon some book I love, I'll pray for thee.

Val. That's on some shallow story of deep love, How young Leander cross'd the Hellespont.

Pro. That's a deep story of a deeper love, For he was more than over shoes in love.

Val. 'Tis true; but you are over boots in love, And yet you never swam the Hellespont.

Pro. Over the boots? nay, give me not the boots.

Val. No, I will not, for it boots thee not.

Pro. What?

Val. To be in love where scorn is bought with groans; Coy looks, with heart-sore sighs; one fading moment's mirth,

With twenty watchful, weary, tedious nights:
If haply won, perhaps, a hapless gain;
If lost, why then a grievous labour won:

1 for, in f. e. 2 One who prays for another; the word is derived from the dropping of a bead in a rosary, at each prayer recited. 3 for, in f. e. 4 Supposed by Knight to refer to the instrument of torture, by which the sufferer's leg was crushed by wedges driven between it and the boot in which it was placed. Collier says it is a proverbial expression, signifying 'don't make a laughing-stock of me.'
LAURENCE PROTESTS AND JULIA.
Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act. IV, Scene 1
SCENE II.

THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

Pro. But now he parted hence to embark for Milan.

Speed. Twenty to one, then, he is shipp'd already, and I have play'd the sheep in losing him.

Pro. Indeed a sheep doth very often stray; an if the shepherd be awhile away.

Speed. You conclude, that my master is a shepherd, then, and I a sheep?

Pro. I do.

Speed. Why then, my horns are his horns, whether I wake or sleep.

Pro. A silly answer, and fitting well a sheep.

Speed. This proves me still a sheep.

Pro. True, and thy master a shepherd.

Speed. Nay, that I can deny by a circumstance.

Pro. It shall go hard, but I'll prove it by another.

Speed. The shepherd seeks the sheep, and not the sheep the shepherd; but I seek my master, and my master seeks not me: therefore, I am no sheep.

Pro. The sheep for fodder follow the shepherd, the shepherd for food follows not the sheep: thou for wages followest thy master, thy master for wages follows not thee: therefore, thou art a sheep.

Speed. Such another proof will make me cry "baa!" But, dost thou hear? gav'st thou my letter to Julia?

Speed. Ay, sir: I, a lost mutton, gav'e your letter to her, a laced mutton; and she, a laced mutton, gav'e me, a lost mutton, nothing for my labour.

Pro. Here's too small a pasture for such store of muttons.

Speed. If the ground be overcharg'd, you were best stick your

Pro. Nay, in that you are a stray, 'twere best pound you.

Speed. Nay, sir, less than a pound shall serve me for carrying your letter.

Pro. You mistake: I mean the pound, the pinfold.

Speed. From a pound to a pin? fold it over and over, 'tis threefold too little for carrying a letter to your lover.

Pro. But what said she? did she nod?

Speed. I. [Speed nods.

Pro. No, I? why that's noddy.

Speed. You mistake, sir: I say she did nod, and you ask me, if she did nod? and I say I.

Pro. And that set together, is noddy.

Speed. Now you have taken the pains to set it together, take it for your pains.

Pro. No, no; you shall have it for bearing the letter.

Speed. Well, I perceive I must be fain to bear with you.

Pro. Why, sir, how do you bear with me?

Speed. Marry, sir, the letter very orderly; having nothing but the word noddy for my pains.

Pro. Beshrew me, but you have a quick wit.

Speed. And yet it cannot overtake your slow purse.

Pro. Come, come; open the matter in brief: what said she?

Speed. Open your purse, that the money, and the matter, may be both at once deliver'd.

Pro. Well, sir, here is for your pains. What said she?

Speed. [Giving him money.]

Pro. Truly, sir, I think you'll hardly win her.

Speed. Why? Couldst thou perceive so much from her?

Speed. Sir, I could perceive nothing at all from her better; No, not so much as a ducat for delivering your letter; And being so hard to me that brought to her your mind, I fear she'll prove as hard to you in telling you her mind.

Give her no token but stones, for she's as hard as steel.
Pro. What! said she nothing?

Speed. No, not a much as— "Take this for thy pains." To testify your bounty, I thank you, you have testern'd me; in requital whereof, henceforth carry your letters yourself. And so, sir, I'll commend you to my master.

[Exit.]

Pro. Go, go, be gone, to save your ship from wreck, Which cannot perish, having thee aboard, Being destin'd to a drier death on shore.—I must go send some better messenger: I fear my Julia would not deign my lines, Receiving them from such a worthless post.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—The Same. Julia's Garden.

Enter Julia and Lucetta.

Jul. But say, Lucetta, now we are alone, Wouldst thou then, counsel me to fall in love?

Luc. Ay, madam; so you stumble not unheedfully.

Jul. Of all the fair resort of gentlemen, That every day with parle encounter me, In thy opinion which is worthiest love?

Luc. Please you, repeat their names, I'll show my mind, According to my shallow simple skill.

Jul. What think'st thou of the fair Sir Eglamour?

Luc. As of a knight well-spoken, neat and fine; But, were I you, he never should be mine.

Jul. What think'st thou of the rich Mercutio?

Luc. Well, of his wealth; but of himself, so, so.

Jul. What think'st thou of the gentleman Proteus?

Luc. Lord, lord, I to see what folly reigns in us! Jul. How now? what means this passion at his name?

Luc. Pardon, dear madam: 'tis a passing shame, That I, an unworthy body as I am, Should censure thus a loving gentleman.

Jul. Why not on Proteus, as of all the rest?

Luc. Then thus,—of many good I think him best. Jul. Your reason?

Luc. I have no other but a woman's reason: I think him so, because I think him so.

Jul. And wouldst thou have me cast my love on him?

Luc. Ay, if you thought your love not cast away.

Jul. Why, he, of all the rest, hath never mov'd me.

Luc. Yet he, of all the rest, I think, best loves ye. Jul. His little speaking shows his love but small.

Luc. First, that he's the closest kept burns most of all. Jul. They do not love, that do not show their love.

Luc. O! they love least, that let men know their love.

Jul. I would I knew his mind.

Luc. Peruse this paper, madam.

Jul. Say, say, who gave it thee?

Luc. Sir Valentine's page; and sent, I think, from Proteus.

He would have given it you, but I, being in the way, Did in your name receive it: pardon the fault, I pray.

Jul. Now, by my modesty, a goodly broker! Dare you presume to harbour wanton lines To whisper and conspire against my youth? Now, trust me, 'tis an office of great worth, And you an officer fit for the place.

There, take the paper: see it be return'd, [Gives it back.] Or else return no more into my sight.

Luc. To plead for love deserves more fee than hate. Jul. Will you be gone?
THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

ACT I.

Luc. That you may ruminate. [Exit.

Jul. And yet, I would I had o'erlook'd the letter. It was a shame to call her back again, and pray her to a fault for which I chid her. What folly is, she, that knows I am a maid, and would not force the letter to my view, Since maids, in modesty, say "No," to that Which they would have the profiser construe, "Ay!"

Fie, fie! how wayward is this foolish love, That like a testing babe will scratch the nurse, And presently, all humbled, kiss the rod. How charishly I chid Lucetta hence, When willingly I would have had her here: How angrily I taught my brow to frown, When inward joy confirm'd my heart to smile, My penance is to call Lucetta back, And ask remission for my folly past. —

What ho! Lucetta! Re-enter Lucetta.

Luc. What would your ladyship?

Jul. Is it near dinner-time?

Luc. I would, it were; That you might kill your stomach on your meat, And not upon your maid. [Drops the letter, and takes it up again.

Jul. What is 't that you took up so gingerly?

Luc. Nothing.

Jul. Why didst thou stoop, then?

Luc. To take a paper up that let fall.

Jul. And is that paper nothing?

Luc. Nothing concerning me.

Jul. Then let it lie for those that it concerns.

Luc. Madam, it will not lie where it concerns, Unless it have a false interpreter.

Jul. Some love of yours hath writ to you in rhyme.

Luc. That I might sing it, madam, to a tune, Give me a note: your ladyship can set.

Jul. As little by such toys as may be possible. Best sing it to the tune of "Light o' love."

Luc. It is too heavy for so light a tune. Jul. Heavy? belleke, it hath some burden then.

Luc. Ay; and melodious were it, would you sing it. Jul. And why not you? I cannot reach so high.

Jul. Let's see your song:—[Snatching the letter.] How now, minion!

Luc. Keep tune there still, so you will sing it out: And yet, methinks, I do not like this tune.

Jul. You do not?

Luc. No, madam; it is too sharp.

Jul. You, minion, are too saucy.

Luc. Nay, now you are too flat, And mar the concord with too harsh a descant. There wanteth but a mean to fill your song.

Jul. The mean is drowned with your unruly base. Luc. Indeed I do, but the base for Proteus.

Jul. This babble shall not henceforth trouble me. Here is a coil with protestation! —

[Tears the letter, and throws it down.

Go; get you gone, and let the papers lie: You would be fingering them to anger me. [better]

To be so anger'd with another letter. [Exit.

Jul. Nay, would I were so anger'd with the same! O hateful hands! to tear such loving words: Injurious wasps, to feed on such sweet honey, Attends the emperor in his royal court.

Ant. I know it well.

Pant. 'T were good, I think, your lordship sent him thither.

There shall he practise tilts and tournois,

Hear sweet discourse, converse with noblemen,

And be in eye of every exercise,

Worthy his youth, and nobleness of birth.

Ant. I like thy counsel: well hast thou advis'd;

And, that thou may'st perceive how well I like it,

The execution of it shall make known.

Even with the speediest expedition

I will dispatch him to the emperor's court.

Pant. To-morrow, may it please you, Don Alphonso.

With other gentlemen of good esteem,

Are journeying to salute the emperor,

And to commend their service to his will.

Ant. Good company; with them shall Proteus go;

And, in good time,—now will we break with him.

Enter Proteus, not seeing his Father.

Pro. Sweet love! sweet lines! sweet life!

Here is her hand, the agent of her heart:

Kissing a letter.

Here is her oath for love, her honour's pawn.

O! that our fathers would applaud our loves,

And seal our happiness with their consent!

O heavenly Julia!

Ant. How now! what letter are you reading there?

Pro. May 't please your lordship, 't is a word or two

Of commendations sent from Valentine, [Putting it up, Delivered by a friend that came from him.

Ant. Lend me the letter: let me see what news.

Pro. There is no news, my lord, but that he writes

How happily he lives, how well belov'd,

And daily graced by the emperor;

Wishing me with him, partner of his fortune.

Ant. And how stand you affected to his wish?

Pro. As one relying on your lordship's will,

And not depending on his friendly wish.

Ant. My will is something sorted with his wish.

Muse not that I thus suddenly proceed,

For what I will, I will, and there an end.

I am resolv'd, that thou shalt spend some time

With Valentino in the emperor's court;

What maintenance he from his friends receives,

Like exhibition thou shalt have from me.

To-morrow be in readiness to go:

Excuse it not, for I am peremptory.

Pro. My lord, I cannot be so soon provided:

Please you, deliberate a day or two.

Ant. Look, what thou want'st shall be sent after thee:

No more of stay; to-morrow thou must go.—

Come on, Panthino: you shall be employ'd

To hasten on his expedition.

[Exeunt Antonio and Panthino.

Pro. Thus have I shunn'd the fire for fear of burning,

And drench'd me in the sea, where I am drown'd.

I fear'd to show my father Julia's letter,

Lest he should take exceptions to my love;

And, with the vantage of mine own excuse,

Hath he excepted most against my love.

O! how this spring of love resembles

The uncertain glory of an April day,

Which now shows all the beauty of the sun,

And by and by a cloud takes all away.

Re-enter Panthino.

Ant. Sir Proteus, your father calls for you:

He is in haste; therefore, I pray you, go.

Pro. Why, this it is: my heart accords thereto,

And yet a thousand times it answers no. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

Enter Valentine and Speed.

Speed. Sir, your glove.

Val. Not mine; my gloves are on.

Speed. Why then this may be yours, for this is but one.

Val. Ha! let me see: ay, give it me, it's mine.—

Sweet ornament that deck's a thing divine!

Ah Silvia! Silvia! Silvia!

Speed. Madam Silvia! madam Silvia!

Val. How now, sirrah?

Speed. She is not within hearing, sir.

Val. Why, sir, who bade you call her?

Speed. Your worship, sir; or else I mistook.

Val. Well, you'll still be too forward.

Speed. And yet I was last chidden for being too slow.

Val. Go to, sir. Tell me, do you know madam Silvia?

Speed. She that your worship loves?

Val. Why, how know you that I am in love?

Speed. Marry, by these special marks. First, you have learn'd, like sir Proteus, to wreath your arms, like a mal-content; to relish a love song, like a robin-red-breast; to walk alone, like one that hath the pestilence; to sigh, like a schoolboy, that hath lost his A B C; to weep, like a young wench, that hath buried her gran'dam; to fast, like one that takes diet; to watch, like one, that fears robbing; to speak puling, like a beggar at Hallowmas. You were wont,—when you laugh'd, to crow like a cock; when you walk'd, to walk like one of the lions; when you fasted, it was presently after dinner; when you look'd sadly, it was for want of money; and now you are so metamorphosed with a mistress, that, when I look on you, I can hardly think you my master.

Val. Are all these things perceived in me?

Speed. They are all perceived without ye.

Val. Without me? they cannot.

Speed. Without you? nay, that's certain; for, without you were you so simple, none else would bee: but you are so without these follies, that these follies are within you, and shine through you like the water in an urban, that not an eye that sees you, but is a physician to comment on your malady.

Val. But tell me, dost thou know my lady Silvia?

Speed. She, that you gaze on so, as she sits at supper?

Val. Hast thou observed that? even she I mean.

Speed. Why, sir, I know her not.

Val. Dost thou know her by my gazing on her, and yet know'st her not?

Speed. Is she not hard-favour'd, sir?

Val. Not so fair, boy, as well favour'd.

Speed. Sir, I know that well enough.

Val. What dost thou know?
Speed. That she is not so fair, as (of you) well-favour'd.
Val. I mean, that her beauty is exquisite, but her favour infinite.
Speed. That's because the one is painted, and the other out of all count.
Val. How painted? and how out of count?
Speed. Marry, sir; so painted to make her fair, that no man 'counts of her beauty.
Val. How eستپ'st thou me? I account of her beauty.
Speed. You never saw her since she was deform'd.
Val. How long hath she been deform'd?
Speed. Ever since you loved her.
Val. I have loved her ever since I saw her, and still I see her beautiful.
Speed. If you love her, you cannot see her.
Val. Why?
Speed. Because love is blind. O! that you had mine eyes; or your own eyes had the lights they were wont to have, when you chid at sir Proteus for going ungarnered!
Val. What should I see then?
Speed. Your own present folly, and her passing deformity; for he, being in love, could not see to garner his hose; and you, being in love, cannot see to put on your hose.
Val. Belike, boy, then you are in love; for last morning you could not see to wipe my shoes.
Speed. True, sir; I was in love with my bed. I thank you, you swunged me for my love, which makes me the bolder to chide you for yours.
Val. In conclusion, I stand affected to her.
Speed. I would you were set, so your affection would cease.
Val. Last night she enjoin'd me to write some lines to one she loves.
Speed. And have you?
Val. I have.
Speed. Are they not lamely writ?
Val. No, boy, but as well as I can do them.—
Peace! here she comes.

Enter Silvia.

Speed. O excellent motion! O exceeding puppet! Now will he interpret to her.
Val. Madam and mistress, a thousand good morrows.
Speed. O! give ye good even: here's a million of manners. [Aside.
Sil. Sir Valentine and servant; to you two thousand.
Speed. He should give her interest, and she gives it him.
Val. As you enjoin'd me, I have writ your letter Unto the secret nameless friend of yours; Which I was much unwilling to proceed in, But for my duty to your ladyship. [Giving a paper.*
Sil. I thank you, gentle servant. 'Tis very clerky done.
Val. Now trust me, madam, it came hardly off;
For, being ignorant to whom it goes, I writ at random, very doubtfully.
Sil. Perchance you think too much of so much pains?
Val. No, madam: so it stead you, I will write, Please you command, a thousand times as much.
And yet—
Sil. A pretty period. Well, I guess the sequel: And yet I will not name it;—and yet I care not;— And yet take this again;—and yet I thank you, Meaning henceforth to trouble you no more.
Speed. And yet you will; and yet, another yet. [Aside.

Val. What means your ladyship? do you not like it?
Sil. Yes, yes: the lines are very quaintly writ, But since unwillingly, take them again.
Nay, take them. [Giving it back.*
Val. Madam, they are for you.
Sil. Ay, ay; you writ them, sir, at my request, But I will none of them: they are for you.
I would have had them writ more movingly.
Val. Please you, I 'll write your ladyship another.
Sil. And, when it's writ, for my sake read it over
And if it please you, so; if not, why, so.
Val. If it 'll please me, madam; what then?
Sil. Why, if 't please you, take it for your labour; And so good-morrow, servant. [Exit.

Speed. O jest! unseen, inscrutable, invisible, As a nose on a man's face, or a weathercock on a steeple.

My master sues to her, and she hath taught her suitor, He being her pupil, to become her tutor.
O excellent device! was there ever heard a better,
That my master, being scribe, to himself should write the letter?
Val. How now, sir! what, are you reasoning with yourself?
Speed. Nay, I was rhyming: 'tis you that have the reason.
Val. To do what?
Speed. To be a spokesman from madam Silvia.
Val. To whom?
Speed. To yourself. Why, she woos you by a figure.
Val. What figure?
Speed. By a letter, I should say.
Val. Why, she hath not writ to me?
Speed. What need she, when she hath made you write to yourself? Why, do you not perceive the jest?
Val. No, believe me.
Speed. No believing you, indeed, sir: but did you perceive her earnest?
Val. She gave me none, except an angry word.
Speed. Why, she hath given you a letter.
Val. That's the letter I writ to her friend.
Speed. And that letter hath she deliver'd, and there an end.
Val. I would it were no worse!
Speed. I 'll warrant you, 'tis as well:
For often have you writ to her, and she, in modesty, Or else for want of idle time, could not again reply; Or fearing else some messenger, that might her mind discover;
Her self hath taught her love himself to write unto her lover.—
All this beak in print, for in print I found it—
Why muse you, sir? 'tis dinner time.
Val. I have dined.
Speed. Ay, but hearken, sir: though the cameleon love can feed on the air, I am one that am nourish'd by my victuals, and would fain have meat. O! be not like your mistress: be moved, be moved. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Verona. A Room in Julia's House.

Enter Proteus and Julia.

Pro. Have patience, gentle Julia.
Jul. I must, where is no remedy.
Pro. When possibly I can, I will return.
Jul. If you turn not, you will return the sooner.
Keep this remembrance for thy Julia's sake.†
Pro. Why then, we'll make exchange: here, take you this.
[Exchange rings.†
Jul. And seal the bargain with a holy kiss.

* A puppet show. † Not in f. e. 2 An old term for lover. 4 A puppet show. 5 Not in f. e. 6 giving a ring is added in f. e. 8 Not in f. e.
Scene IV.

The Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Pro. Here is my hand for my true constancy; And when that hour o'er-slips me in the day, Wherein I sigh not, Julia, for thy sake, The next ensuing hour some foul mischance Torment me for my love's forgetfulness. My father stays my coming; answer not. The tide is now: nay, not thy tide of tears; That tide will stay me longer than I should. [Exit Julia.]

Launce. Farewell. What! gone without a word? Ay, no true love should do: it cannot speak; For truth hath better deeds, than words, to grace it.

Enter Pantinio.

Pant. Sir Proteus, you are stay'd for.

Pro. Go; I come, I come.

Alas! this parting strikes poor lovers dumb. [Exit.]

Scene III.—The Same. A Street.

Enter Launce, leading his Dog.

Launce. Nay, 't will be this hour ere I have done weeping; all the kind of the Launcest have this very fault. I have received my proportion, like the prodigies at once: and am going with Sir Proteus to the imperial court. I think Crab, my dog, be the sourest-natured dog that lives: my mother weeping, my father wailing, my sister crying, our maid howling, our cat wringing her hands, and all our house in a great perplexity, yet did not this cruel-hearted cur shed one tear. He is a stone, a very pebble-stone, and has no more pity in him than a dog; a Jew would have wept to see our parting: why, my grandam having no eyes, look you, wept herself blind at my parting. Nay, I'll show you the manner of it. This shoe is my father:—no, this left shoe is my father;—no, no, not this left shoe is my mother;—nay, that cannot be so, neither:—yes, it is so, it is so; if it were the worse sale. This shoe, with the hole in it, is my mother, and this my father. A vengeance on't! there 'tis: now, sir, this staff is my sister; for, look you, she is as white as a lily, and as small as a wand: this hat is Nan, our maid. I am the dog:—no, the dog is himself, and I am the dog. O! the dog is me, and I myself: ay, so, so. Now come I to my father:— Father, your blessing?— now should not the shoe speak a word for weeping: now should I kiss my father; well, he weeps on. Now come I to my mother, [O, that she could speak now!] like a wild woman:—well, I kiss her; why there 'tis; here's my mother's breath, up and down. Now come I to my sisters mark the time; now, the dog all this while sheds not a tear, nor speaks a word, but see how I lay the dust with my tears.

Enter Pantinio.

Pant. Launce, away, away, aboard: thy master is shipped, and thou art to post after with oars. What's the matter? why weep'st thou, man? Away, ass; you'll lose the tide, if you tarry any longer.

Launce. It is no matter if the tide were lost; for it is the unluckiest tide that ever any man tied.

Pant. What's the unluckiest tide?

Launce. Why, he that's tied here; Crab, my dog.

Pant. Tut, man, I mean thou 'tis the flood; and, in losing thy voyage, lose thy master, and, in losing thy master, lose thy service; and, in losing thy service,—Why dost thou stop my mouth?

Launce. For fear thou shouldst lose thy tongue.

Pant. Where should I lose my tongue?

Launce. In thy tale.

Pant. In thy tail?

Launce. Lose the tide, and the voyage, and the master, and the service, and the tide. Why, man, if the river were dry, I am able to fill it with my tears; if the wind were down, I could drive the boat with my sighs.

Pant. Come; come, away, man: I was sent to call thee.

Launce. Sir, call me what thou dar'st.

Pant. wilt thou go?

Launce. Well, I will go. [Exit.]

Enter Valentine, Silvia, Thurio, and Speed.

Sil. Servant.—

Val. Mistress.

Speed. Master, sir Thurio frowns on you.

Val. Ay, boy, it 's for love.

Speed. Not of you.

Val. Of my mistress, then.

Speed. 'T were good you knock'd him.

Sil. Servant, you are sad.

Val. Indeed, madam, I seem so.

Thu. Seem you that you are not?

Val. Haply, I do.

Thu. So do counterfeit.

Val. So do you.

Thu. What seem I that I am not?

Val. Wise.

Thu. What instance of the contrary?

Val. Your folly.

Thu. And how quote you my folly?

Val. I quote it in your jerkin.

Thu. My jerkin is a doublet.

Val. Well, then, 'twill double your folly.

Thu. How shall I quote you?

Sil. What, angry, sir Thurio? do you change colour?

Val. Give him leave, madam: he is a kind of cameoleon.

Thu. That hath more mind to feed on your blood, than live in your air.

Val. You have said, sir.

Thu. Ay, sir, and done too, for this time.

Val. I know it well, sir: you always end ere you begin.

Sil. A fine volley of words, gentlemen, and quickly shot off.

Val. 'T is indeed, madam; we thank the giver.

Sil. Who is that, servant?

Val. Yourself, sweet lady; for you gave the fire.

Sir Thurio borrows his wit from your ladyship's looks, and spends what he borrows kindly in your company.

Thu. Sir, if you spend word for word with me, I shall make your wit bankrupt.

Val. I know it well, sir: you have an exchequer of words, and, I think, no other treasure to give your followers; for it appears by their bare liveryes, that they live by your bare words.

Sil. No more, gentlemen, no more. Here comes my father.

Enter the Duke.

Duke. Now, daughter Silvia, you are hard beset.

Sil. Valentine, your father's in good health:

What say you to a letter from your friends Of much good news?

Val. My lord, I will be thankful To any happy messenger from thence.

Duke. Know you Don Antonio, your countryman?

Val. Ay, my good lord; I know the gentleman To be of wealth * and worthy estimation, And not without desert so well reputed.
Duke. Hath he not a son?

Val. Ay, my good lord; a son, that well deserves
The honour and regard of such a father.

Duke. You know him well?

Val. I knew him, as myself; for from our infancy
We have convers'd, and spent our hours together:
And though myself have been an idle truant,
Omitting the sweet benefit of time
To clothe mine age with angel-like perfection,
Yet hath sir Proteus, for that 's his name,
Made use and fair advantage of his days:
His years but young, but his experience old;
His head unmel'd, but his judgment ripe;
And in a word, (for far behind his worth Come all the praises that I now bestow)
He is complete in feature, and in mind,
With all good grace to grace a gentleman.

Duke. Beshrew me, sir, but, if he make this good,
He is as worthy for an empress's love,
As meet to be an emperor's counsellor.

Val. Well, sir, this gentleman loves me truly:
With commendation from great potentates;
And here he means to spend his time a-while.
I think, 'tis no unwelcome news to you.

Val. Should I have wish'd a thing, it had been he.

Duke. Welcome him, then, according to his worth.

Silvia, I speak to you; and you, sir Thurio:—
For Valentine, I need not cite him to you.
I will send him hither to you presently. [Exit Duke.

Val. This is the gentleman, I told your ladyship,
Had come along with me, but that his mistress
Did hold his eyes lock'd in her crystal looks.

Sir. Belike, that now she hath enfranchis'd them,
Upon some other pattern for fidelity to me.

Val. Nay, sure, I think, she holds them prisoners still.
Sir. Nay, then he should be blind; and, being blind,
How could he see his way to seek you out?

Val. Why, lady, love hath twenty pair of eyes.

Thu. They say, that love hath not an eye at all.

Val. To see such lovers, Thurio, as yourself:
Upon a homely object love can wink.

[Enter Proteus.

Sil. Have done, have done. Here comes the gentleman.

[Exit Thurio.

Val. Welcome, dear Proteus!—Mistress, I beseech you, Confirm him welcome with some special favour.

Sil. His worth is warrant for his welcome hither,
If this be he you oft have wish'd to hear from.

Val. Mistress, it is. Sweet lady, entertain him.
To be my fellow-servant to your ladyship.

Sil. Too low a mistress for so high a servant.

Pro. Not so, sweet lady; but too mean a servant
To have a look of such a worthy mistress.

Val. Leave off discourse of disability.

Sweet lady, entertain him for your servant.

Pro. My duty will I boast of, nothing else.

Sil. And duty yet did never want his meed.

Servant, you are welcome to a worthless mistress.

Pro. I'll die on him that says so, but yourself.

Sil. That you are welcome?

Pro. 1

Re-enter Thurio.

Thu. Madam, my lord, your father, would speak with you.

Sil. I wait upon his pleasure; come, sir Thurio,
Go with me.—Once more, new servant, welcome:
I'll leave you to confer of home-affairs;
When you have done, we look to hear from you.

1 Enter: in f. e. 2 swelling: in f. e.

Pro. We'll both attend upon your ladyship.

[Enter Silvia, Thurio, and Speed.

Val. Now, tell me, how do all from whence you came?

Pro. Your friends are well, and have them much commended.

Val. And how do yours?

Pro. I left them all in health.

Val. How does your lady, and how thrives your love?

Pro. My tales of love were wont to weary you:
I know, you joy not in a love-discourse.

Val. Ay, Proteus, but that life is alter'd now:
I have done penance for contemning love;
Whose high imperious thoughts have punish'd me
With bitter fasts, and penitential groans,
With nightly tears, and daily heart-sore sighs;
For, in revenge of my contempt of love,
Love hath chas'd sleep from my enthrall'd eyes,
And made them watchers of mine own heart's sorrow.

Val. O, gentle Proteus! love's a mighty lord,
And hath so humbled me, as, I confess,
I cannot ever free my self from his gentle love.

Nor, to his service, no such joy on earth!

Now, no discourse, except it be of love;
Now can I break my fast, dine, sup, and sleep,
Upon the very naked name of love.

Pro. Enough; I read your fortune in your eye.

Was this the idol that you worship so?

Val. Even she; and is she not a heavenly saint?

Pro. No, but she is an earthly paragon.

Val. Call her divine.

Pro. I will not flatter her.

Val. O! flatter me, for love delights in praises.

Pro. Why, I was sick, you gave me bitter pills,
And I must minister the like to you.

Val. Then speak the truth by her: if not divine,
Yet let her be a princedom,
Sovereign to all the creatures on the earth.

Pro. Except my mistress.

Val. Sweet, except not any,
Except thou wilt except against my love.

Pro. Have I not reason to prefer mine own?

Val. And I will help thee to prefer her, too:
She shall be dignified with this high honour,—
To bear my lady's train, lest the base earth,
Should from her posture chance to steal a kiss,
And, of so great a favour growing proud,
Dissipate the summn'd beauty of the flower,
And make rough winter everlasting.

Pro. Why, Valentine, what bragardism is this?

Val. Pardon me, Proteus: all I can, is nothing
To her, whose worth makes other worthies nothing.
She is alone.

Pro. Then, let her alone.

Val. Not for the world. Why, man, she is mine own,
And I as rich in having such a jewel,
As twenty seas, if all their sand were pearl,
The water nectar, and the rocks pure gold.

Forgive me, that I do not dream on thee,
Because thou seest me dote upon my love,
My foolish rival, that her father likes
Only for his possessions are so huge,
Is gone with her along, and I must after,
For love, thou know'st, is full of jealousy.

Pro. But she loves you?

Val. Ay, and we are betroth'd; nay, more, our marriage hour,
With all the cunning manner of our flight
Determin'd of: how I must climb her window,
The ladder made of cords, and all the means SCENE VI.

THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

Plotted, and 'greed on for my happiness.

Good Proteus, go with me to my chamber,
In these affairs to aid me with thy counsel.

Pro. Go on before; I shall enquire you forth.
I must unto the road, to disembark
Some necessaries that I needs must use,
And then I'll presently attend on you.

Vol. Will you make haste?

Pro. I will—

[Exit Valentine.

Even as one heat another heat expels,
Or as one nail by strength drives out another,
So the remembrance of my former love
Is by a newer object quite forgotten.
Is it mine own, or Valentino's praise,
Her true perfection, or my false transgression,
That makes me, reasonless, to reason thus?
She's fair, and so is Julia that I love—
That I did love, for now my love is thaw'd,
Which, like a waxen image 'gainst a fire,
Bears no impression of the thing it was.

Methinks, my zeal to Valentine is cold,
And that I love him not, as I was wont:
O! but I love his lady too much;
And that's the reason I love him so little.

How shall I dote on her with more advice,
That thus without advice begin to love her?
'T is but her picture I have yet beheld,
And that hath dazzled so my reason's light;
But when I look on her perfections,
There is no reason but I shall be blind.

If I can check my erring love, I will;
If not, to compass her I'll use my skill.

[Exit.

SCENE V.—The Same. A Street.

Enter Speed and Launce.

Speed. Launce! by mine honesty, welcome to Milan.

Launce. Forswear not thyself, sweet youth, for I am not welcome. I reckon this always—that a man is never undone, till he be hang'd; nor never welcome to a place, till some certain shot be paid, and the hostess say, welcome.

Speed. Come on, you mad-cap, I'll to the alehouse with you presently; where for one shot of five pence thou shalt have five thousand welcomes. But, sirrah, how did thy master part with madam Julia?

Launce. Marry, after they closed in earnest, they parted very fairly in jest.

Speed. But shall she marry him?

Launce. No, neither.

Speed. What, are they broken?

Launce. No, they are both as whole as a fish.

Speed. Why then, how stands the matter with them?

Launce. Marry, thus: when it stands well with him it stands well with her.

Speed. What an ass art thou? I understand thee not.

Launce. What a block art thou, that thou canst not.

My staff understands me.

Speed. What thou say'st?

Launce. Ay, and what I do too: look thee, I'll but lean, and my staff understands me.

Speed. It stands under thee, indeed.

Launce. Why, stand-under and under-stand is all one.

Speed. But tell me true, will't be a match?

Launce. Ask my dog: if he say, ay, it will; if he say, no, it will; if he shake his tail, and say nothing, it will.

Speed. The conclusion is, then, that it will.

Launce. Thou shalt never get such a secret from me, but by a parable.

Speed. 'Tis well that I get it so. But, Launce, how say'st thou, that my master is become a notable lover?

Launce. I never knew him otherwise.

Speed. Than how?

Launce. A notable luber, as thou reportest him to be.

Speed. Why, thou whoreson ass, thou mistakest me.

Launce. Why, fool, I meant not thee; I meant thy master.

Speed. I tell thee, my master is become a hot lover.

Launce. Why, I tell thee, I care not though he burn himself in love, if thou wilt go with me to the ale-house: if not, thou art an Hebrew, a Jew, and not worth the name of a Christian.

Speed. Why?

Launce. Because thou hast not so much charity in thee, as to go to the ale with a Christian. Wilt thou go?

Speed. At thy service.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—The Same. An Apartment in the Palace.

Enter Proteus.

Pro. To leave my Julia, shall I be forsworn?
To love fair Silvia, shall I be forsworn?
To wrong my friend, shall I be much forsworn;
And even that power, which gave me first my oath,
Proves me to this threefold perjury:
Love bad me swear, and love bids me forswear.
O sweet-suggesting love! if I have sin'd,
Teach me, thy tempted subject, to excuse it.
At first I did adore a twinkling star,
But now I worship a celestial sun.
Unheedful vows may heedfully be broken;
And he wants wit, that wants resolved will.
To learn his wit I exchange the bad for better.
Fio, fie, unreverend tongue! to call her bad,
Whose sovereignty so oft thou hast 'prett'r'd
With twenty thousand soul-confirming oaths,
I cannot leave to love, and yet I do;
But there I leave to love, where I should love.

Julia I lose, and Valentine I lose:
If I keep them, I needs must lose myself;
If I lose them, thus find I, by their loss,
For Valentine, myself; for Julia, Silvia.
I to myself am dearer than a friend,
For love is still most precious to itself;
And Silvia, (witless heaven that made her fair!)
Shows Julia but a swarthy Ethiope.
I will forget that Julia is alive,
Remembering that my love to her is dead;
And Valentine I'll hold an enemy,
Aiming at Silvia, as a sweeter friend.
I cannot now prove constant to myself
Without some treachery used to Valentine.
This night, he meaneth with a corded ladder
To clumb celestial Silvia's chamber window;
Myself in counsel, his competitor.
Now, presently I'll give her father notice
Of their disguising, and pretended flight; flight,
Who all enroll'd, will banish Valentine.
For Thurio, he intends, shall wed his daughter:
But, Valentine being gone, I'll quickly cross
By some sly trick blunt Thurio's dull proceeding.
Love, lend me wings to make my purpose swift,
As thou hast lent me wit to plot this drift! [Exit.
SCENE VII.—Verona. A Room in Julia's House.

Enter Julia and Lucetta.

Jul. Counsel, Lucetta; gentle girl, assist me: And, o'en in kind love, I do conjure thee, Who art the table wherein all my thoughts Are visibly character'd and engrav'd, To lesson me; and tell me some good mean, How, with my honour, I may undertake A journey to my loving Proteus.

Luc. Alas! the way is wearsome and long.

Jul. A true-devoted pilgrim is not weary

To measure kingdoms with his feeble steps, Much less shall she, that hath love's wings to fly; And when the flight is made to one so dear, Of such divine perfection, as sir Proteus.

Luc. Better forbear, till Proteus make return.

Jul. O! know'st thou not, his looks are my soul's food?

Pity the dearth that I have pined in, By longing for that food so long a time.

Didst thou but know the inly touch of love, Thou wouldst as soon go kindle fire with snow, As seek to quench the fire of love with words.

Jul. That he doth not seem thy love's hot fire, But qualify the fire's extreme rage,

Lest it should burn above the bounds of reason.

Jul. The more thou damnest it up, the more it burns.

The current, that with gentle murmurs glides, Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;

But, when his fair course is not hindered,

He makes sweet music with the enamel'd stones,

Giving a gentle kiss to every sedge

He overleth in his pilgrimage;

And so by many winding nooks he strays

With willing sport to the wide ocean.

Then, let me go, and hinder not my course.

I'll be as patient as a gentle stream,

And make a pasture of each weary step,

Till the last step have brought me to my love;

And there I'll rest, as, after much turmoil,

A blessed soul doth in Elysium.

Luc. But in what habit will you go along?

Jul. Not like a woman, for I would prevent

The loose encounters of lascivious men.

Gentle Lucetta, fit me with such weeds

As may beseech some well-reputed page.

Luc. Why, then your ladyship must cut your hair.

Jul. No, girl; I'll knit it up in silken strings,

With twenty odd-conceited true-love knots:

To be fantastic, may become a youth

Of greater time than I shall show to be.

Luc. What fashion, madam, shall I make your breeches?

Jul. That fits as well, as—tell me, good my lord,

What compass will you wear your farthingale?

Why, even what fashion thou best lik'st, Lucetta.

Luc. You must needs have them with a codpiece, madam.

Jul. Out, out, Lucetta! that will be ill-favour'd.

Luc. A round hose, madam, now's not worth a pin.

Unless you have a codpiece to stick pins on.

Jul. Lucetta, as thou lov'st me, let me have

What thou think'st meet, and is most mannerly.

But tell me, wench, how will the world repute me For undertaking so unstaid a journey?

I fear me, it will make me scandaliz'd.

Luc. If you think so, then stay at home, and go not.

Jul. Nay, that I will not.

Luc. Then never dream on infamy, but go.

If Proteus like your journey, when you come,

No matter who's displeas'd, when you are gone.

I fear me, he will scarce be pleas'd withal.

Jul. Thou art the least, Lucetta, of my fear.

A thousand oaths, an ocean of his tears,

And instances as infinite of love,

Warrant me welcome to your Proteus.

Luc. All these are servants to deceitful men.

Jul. Base men, that use them to so base effect;

But truer stars did govern Proteus' birth;

His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles;

His love sincere, his thoughts immaculate;

His tears, pure messengers sent from his heart;

His heart as far from fraud, as heaven from earth.

Luc. Pray heaven, he prove so, when you come to him!

Jul. Now, as thou lov'st me, do him not that wrong,

To bear a hard opinion of his truth:

Only deserve my love by loving him,

And presently go with me to my chamber,

To take a note of what I stand in need of,

To furnish me upon my loving journey.

All that is mine I leave at thy dispose,

My goods, my lands, my reputation;

Only, in lieu thereof, dispatch me hence.

Come; answer not, but to it presently:

I am impatient of my tardance.

[Exeunt.]

ACT III.

Enter Duke, Thurio, and Proteus.

Duke. Sir Thurio, give us leave, I pray, awhile:
We have some secrets to confer about.—Exit Thurio.

Now, tell me, Proteus, what's your will with me?

Pro. My gracious lord, that which I would discover,
The law of friendship bids me to conceal;
But, when I call to mind your gracious favours Done to me, undeserving as I am,
My duty pricks me on to utter that,
Which else no worldly good should draw from me.

Know, worthy Prince, sir Valentine, my friend,
This night intends to steal away your daughter:

1 wild: in f. e. 2 longing: in f. e.
Sir Valentine her company, and my court;
But, fearing lest my jealous aim might err,
And so unworthily disgrace the man,
(A rashness that I ever yet have shunn'd)
I gave him gentle looks; whereby to find
That which myself hast now disclos'd to me.
And, that thou may'st perceive my fear of this,
Knowing that tender youth is soon suggested,
I nightly lodge her in an upper tower,
The key whereof myself have ever kept;
And thence she cannot be convey'd away.

Pro. Know, noble lord, they have devis'd a mean
How she and her chamberhow shall be send,
And with a corded ladder fetch her down.
For which the youthful lover now is gone,
And this way comes he with it presently,
Where, if it please you, you may intercept him.
But, good my lord, do it so cunningly,
That my discovery be not aimed at;
For love of you, not hate unto my friend,
Hath made me publisher of this prentice.

Duke. Upon mine honour, he shall never know
That I had any light from thee of this.

Pro. Adieu, my lord: sir Valentine is coming.[Exit.
Enter VALENTINE, in his cloak.]

Duke. Sir Valentine, whither away so fast?
Val. Please it your grace, there is a messenger
That stays to bear my letters to my friends,
And I am going to deliver them.

Duke. Be they of much import?
Val. The tenor of them doth but signify
My health, and happy being at your court.

Duke. Nay, then no matter: stay with me awhile.
I am to break with thee of some affairs
That touch me near, wherein thou must be secret.
'Tis not unknown to thee, that I have sought
To match my friend, sir Thurius, to my daughter.

Val. I know it well, my lord; and, sure, the match
Were rich and honourable: besides, the gentleman
Is full of virtue, beauty, worth, and qualities
Beseeching such a wife as your fair daughter.
Cannot your grace win her fancy to him?

Duke. No, trust me: she is peevish, sullen, froward,
Proud, disobedient, stubborn, lacking duty;
Neither regarding that she is my child,
Nor fearing me as if I were her father:
And, may I say to thee, this pride of hers
Upon advice hath drawn my love from her:
And, where I thought the remnant of mine age
Should have been cherish'd by her child-like duty,
I now am full resolv'd to take a wife,
And turn her out to who will take her in:
Then, let her beauty be her wedding-dower;
For me and my possessions she esteemeth not.

Val. What would your grace have me to do in this?

Duke. There is a lady in Milan here,
Whom I affect; but she is nice, and coy,
And nought esteems my aged eloquence:
Now, therefore, would I have thee to my tutor,
(For long ago I have forgot to court;
Besides, the fashion of the time is chang'd)
How, and which way, I may bestow myself,
To be regarded in her sun-bright eye.

Val. Win her with gifts, if she respect not words.
Dumb jewels often, in their silent kind,
More than quick words do move a woman's mind.

Duke. But she did scorn a present that I sent her.

Val. A woman sometime scorces what best contenteth her,
THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

ACT III.

Thank me for this, more than for all the favours Which, all too much, I have bestowed on thee; But if thou linger in my territories Longer than swiftest expedition Will give thee time to leave our royal court, By heaven, my wrath shall far exceed the love I ever bore my daughter, or thyself. Begone: I will not hear thy vain excuse; But, as thou lovest thy life, make speed from hence.

[Exit Duke.]

Val. And why not death, rather than living torment? To die is to be banish'd from myself, And Silvia is my self: banish'd from her, Is self from self; a deadly banishment. What light is light, if Silvia be not seen? What joy is joy, if Silvia be not by? Unless it be, to think that she is by, And feed upon the shadow of perfection. Except I be by Silvia in the night, There is no music in the nightingale; But, I look on Silvia in the day, There is no day for me to look upon. She is my essence, and I leave to be, If I be not by her fair influence. Foster'd, illumined, cherish'd, kept alive. I fly not death, to fly his deadly doom: Tarry I here, I but attend on death; But fly hence, I fly away from life.

[Enter Proteus and Launce.]

Launce. So ho! so ho! Val. What seekest thou? Launce. Him we go to find: there's not a hair on's head, but 'tis a Valentine. Val. Valentine? Val. No. Val. Who then? his spirit? Val. Neither. Val. What then? Val. Nothing. Launce. Can nothing speak? master, shall I strike? Val. Whom wouldst thou strike? Launce. Nothing. Val. Villain, forbear. Launce. Why, sir, I'll strike nothing: I pray you,— Sirrah, I say, forbear.—Friend Valentine, a word. Val. My ears are stopp'd, and cannot hear good news, So much of bad already hath possess'd them. Val. Then in dumb silence will I bury mine, For they are hurst, unfurnace, and bad. Val. Is Silvia dead? Val. No, Valentine. Val. No Valentine, indeed, for sacred Silvia!— Hath she forsworn me? Val. No, Valentine. Val. No Valentine, if Silvia have forsworn me!— What is your news? Launce. Sir, there is a proclamation that you are vanish'd. Val. That thou art banish'd: O! that is the news, From hence, from Silvia, and from me, thy friend. Val. O! I have lod on this woeful, And excess of it will make me suifer. Doth Silvia know that I am banish'd? Val. Ay, ay; and she hath offer'd to the doom, (Which, unverses'd, stands in effectual force) A sea of melting pearl, which some call tears: Those at her father's churlish feet she tender'd, With them, upon her knees, her humble self; Wringing her hands, whose whiteness so became them, As if but now they waxed pale for woe: But neither bended knees, pure hands held up, Sad sighs, deep groans, nor silver-shedding tears, Could penetrate her uncompassionate sire, But Valentine, if he be ta'en, must die. Besides, her intercession chaf'd him so, When she for thy repeal was suppliant, That to close prison he commanded her, With many threats of bidding there.

Val. No more; unless the next word that thou speak'st Have some malignant power upon my life: If so, I pray thee, breathe it in my ear, As ending anthem of my endless sorrow. Pro. Cease to lament for that thou canst not help, And study help for which thou lamentest. Time is the nurse and breeder of all good. Here if thou stay, thou canst not see thy love; Besides, thy staying will abridge thy life. Hope is a lover's staff; walk hence with that, And manage it against despairing thoughts. Thy letter shall not come here, though thou art hence: Which, being writ to me, shall be deliver'd even in the milk-white bosom of thy love. The time now serves not to expostulate: Come, I'll convey thee through the city-gate, And, ere I part with thee, confer at large Of all that may concern thy love affairs. As thou lov'st Silvia, though not for thyself, Regard thy danger, and along with me. Val. I pray thee, Launce, an if thou seest my boy, Bid him make haste, and meet me at the north-gate. Pro. Go, sirrah, find him out. Come, Valentine. Val. O my dear Silvia! hapless Valentine! [Exit Valentine and Proteus.]

Launce. I am but a fool, look you, and yet I have the wit to think, my master is a kind of a knife; but that's all one, if he be but one knife. He lives not now, that knows me to be in love: yet I am in love; but a team of horse shall not pluck that from me, nor who 'tis I love; and yet 'tis a woman: but what woman, I will not tell myself; and yet 'tis a milk-maid; yet 't is not a maid, for she hath had gossips: yet 't is a maid, for she is her master's maid, and serves for wages. She hath more qualities than a water-spaniel, which is much in a bare Christian. Here is the cat-log [pulling out a paper] of her conditions. Imprimis, "She can fetch and carry." Why, a horse can do no more: nay, a horse cannot fetch, but only carry; therefore, is she better than a jade. Item, "She can milk," look you, a sweet virtue in a maid with clean hands.

[Enter Speed.]

Speed. How now, signior Launce? what news with your mastership? Launce. With my master's ship? why, it is sea. Speed. Well, your old vice still; mistake the word. What news, then, in your paper? Launce. The blackest news that ever thou heard'st. Speed. Why, man, how black? Launce. Why, as black as ink. Speed. Let me read them. Launce. Fear on thee, or the head! thou canst not read. Speed. Thou liest, I can. Launce. I will try thee. Tell me this: who begot thee? Speed. Marry, the son of my grandfather. Launce. O, illiterate loiterer! it was the son of thy grandmother. This proves that thou canst not read.
Well, I'll have her; and if it be a match, as nothing is impossible,— Speed. What then?
Launce. Why, then will I tell thee,—that thy master stays for thee at the north-gate.
Speed. For me?
Launce. For thee? ay; who art thou? he hath stay'd for a better man than thee.
Speed. And must I go to him?
Launce. Thou must run to him, for thou hast stay'd so long, that going will scarce serve the turn.
Speed. Why didst not tell me sooner? posy of your love-letters!

[Exit, running.]
Launce. Now will he be swing'd for reading my letter. An unmannerly slave, that will thrust himself into secrets.—I'll after, to rejoice in the boy's correction.

[Exit.]

Enter Duke and Thurio.

Duke. Sir Thurio, fear not but that she will love you,
Now Valentine is banish'd from her sight.

Thurio. Since his exile she hath despair'd me most;
Forsworn my company, and rail'd at me,
That I am desperate of obtaining her.

Duke. This weak impress of love is as a figure Trenched in ice, which with an hour's heat
Dissolves to water, and doth lose his form.
A little time will melt her frozen thoughts,
And worthless Valentine shall be forgot.—

Enter Proteus.

How now, sir Proteus! Is your countryman,
According to our proclamation, gone?

Pro. Goy, my good lord.

Duke. My daughter takes his going grievously.

Pro. A little time, my lord, will kill that grief.

Duke. So I believe; but Thurio thinks not so.

Pro. Longer than I prove loyal to your grace,
Let me not live to look upon your grace.

Duke. Thou know'st how willingly I would effect
The match between sir Thurio and my daughter.

Pro. I do, my lord.

Duke. And also, I think, thou art not ignorant
How she opposes him against my will.

Pro. She did, my lord, when Valentine was here.

Duke. Ay, and perversely she perseveres so.
What might we do to make the girl forget
The love of Valentine, and love sir Thurio?

Pro. The best way is, to slander Valentine
With falsehood, cowardice, and poor descent;
Three things that women highly hold in hate.

Duke. Ay, but she'll think that it is spoke in hate.

Pro. Ay, if his enemy deliver it:
Therefore, it must, with circumstance, be spoken
By one whom she esteemeth as his friend.

Duke. Then, you must undertake to slander him.

Pro. And that, my lord, I shall be loth to do:
'T is an ill office for a gentleman,
Especially, against his very friend.

Duke. Where your good will cannot advantage him,
Your slander never can endanger him:
Therefore, the office is indifferent,
Being entreated to it by your friend.

Pro. You have prevail'd, my lord. If I can do it,
By aught that I can speak in his dispraise,
The Two Gentlemen of Verona

ACT IV.

Scene I.—A Forest, between Milan and Verona.

Enter certain Outlaws.

1 Out. Fellows, stand fast: I see a passenger.
2 Out. If there be ten, shrunken, but down with 'em.

Enter Valentine and Speed.

3 Out. Stand, sir, and throw us that you have about you.

If not, we'll make you sit, and rifle you.

Speed. Sir, we are undone. These are the villains that all the travellers do fear so much.

Val. My friends,—
1 Out. That's not so, sir: we are your enemies.
2 Out. Peace! we'll hear him.
3 Out. Ay, by my beard, will we; for he is a proper man.

Val. Then know, that I have little wealth to lose. A man I am cross'd with adversity: My riches are these poor habiliments, Of which if you should here disturb me, You take the sum and substance that I have.

2 Out. Whither travel you?

Val. To Verona.

1 Out. Whence came you?

Val. From Milan.

3 Out. Have you long sojourn'd there?

Val. Some sixteen months; and longer might have stay'd, If crooked fortune had not thwarted me.

2 Out. What! were you banish'd thence?

Val. I was.

2 Out. For what offence?

Val. For that which now torments me to rehearse. I kill'd a man, whose death I much repent; But yet I slew him manfully, in fight, Without the vantage, or base treachery.

1 Out. Why, not repent you it, if it were done so. But were you banish'd for so small a fault?

Val. I was, and held me glad of such a doom.

You sacrifice your tears, your sighs, your heart. Write, till your ink be dry, and with your tears Moist it again; and frame some feeling line, That may discover strict integrity: For Orpheus' lute was strung with poets' sinews, Whose golden touch could soften steel and stones, Make tigers tame, and huge leviathans Forsake unsounded deeps to dance on sands. After your dire-lamenting elegies, Visit by night your lady's chamber window With some sweet consort: to their instruments Tune a deploring dump; the night's dead silence Will well become such sweet complaining grievance. This, or else nothing, will inherit her.

Duke. This discipline shows thou hast been in love.

Thou. And 'tby advice this night I'll put in practice. Therefore, sweet Proteus, my direction-giver, Let us into the city presently, To sort some gentlemen well-field'd in music. I have a sonnet that will serve the turn To give the onset to thy good advice, Duke. About it, gentlemen.

Pro. We'll wait upon your grace till after supper, And afterward determine our proceedings.

Duke. Even now about it: I will pardon you. [Exeunt.

1 Out. Have you the tongues?

Val. My youthful travel therein made me happy, Or else I had been often miserable.

3 Out. By the bare scalp of Robin Hood's fat friar, This fellow were a king for our wild faction.

1 Out. We'll have him. Sirs, a word.

[They talk apart.

Speed. Master, be one of them:
It is an honorable kind of thievish voyeur.

Val. Peace, villain!

2 Out. Tell us this: have you any thing to take to?

Val. Nothing, but my fortune.

3 Out. Know then, that some of us are gentlemen, Such as the fury of ungovern'd youth Thrust from the company of awful men:

Myself was from Verona banished,

For practising to steal away a lady,

An heir, and near allied unto the duke.

2 Out. And I from Mantua, for a gentleman,

Who, in my mood, I stabb'd unto the heart.

1 Out. And I, for such like petty crimes as these,

But to the purpose: for we cite our faults, That they may hold excus'd our lawless lives:
And, partly, seeing you are beautify'd

With goodly shape; and by your own report

A linguist, and a man of such perfection,

As we do in our quality much want—

3 Out. Indeed, because you are a banish'd man,

Therefore, above the rest, we parley to you. Are you content to be our general? To make a virtue of necessity, And live, as we do, in this wilderness? [consort?

3 Out. What say'st thou? wilt thou be of our Say, ay, and be the captain of us all.

We'll do thee homage, and be ruled by thee, Love thee as our commander, and our king.

1 Out. But if thou scorn our courtesy, thou diest.

2 Out. Thou shalt not live to brag what we have offer'd.

1 weed: in f. e. 2 Not in f. e.
Val. I take your offer, and will live with you;
Provided that you do no outrages
On silly women, or poor passengers.

3 Out. No; we detest such vile, base practices.
Come, go with us: we'll bring thee to our cave;
And show thee all the treasure we have got,
Which, with ourselves, all rest at thy dispose.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Milan. The Court of the Palace.

Enter Proteus.

Pro. Already have I been false to Valentine,
And now I must be as unjust to Thurio.
Under the colour of commending him,
I have access my own love to prefer;
But Silvia is too fair, too true, too holy,
To be corrupted with my worthless gifts.

When I protest true loyalty to her,
She twits me with my falsehood to my friend;
When to her beauty I commend my vows,
She bids me think how I have been forsworn,
In breaking faith with Julia whom I lov'd:
And, notwithstanding all her sudden quirks,
The least whereof would quell a lover's hope,
Yet, spaniel-like, the more she spurns my love,
The more it grows, and fawneth on her still.
But here comes Thurio. Now must we to her window,
And give some evening music to her ear.

Enter Thurio, and Musicians.

Thu. How now, sir Proteus! are you crept before us?
Pro. Ay, gentle Thurio; for, you know, that love
Will creep in service where it cannot go.

Thu. Ay; but I hope, sir, that you love not here.

Pro. Sir, but I do; or else I would be hence.

Thu. Whom? Silvia?

Pro. Ay, Silvia,—for your sake.

Thu. I thank you for your honest. Now, gentlemen,
Let's tune, and to it lustily awhile.

Enter Host and Julia (in boy's clothes), behind.

Host. Now, my young guest; methinks you're allycholy: I pray you, why is it?

Jul. Marry, mine host, because I cannot be merry.

Host. Come, we'll have you merry. I'll bring you where you shall hear music, and see the gentlemen that you ask'd for.

Jul. But shall I hear him speak?

Host. Ay, that you shall.

Jul. That will be music.

Host. Hark! Hark!

[Music plays.]

Jul. Is he among these?

Host. Ay; but peace! let's hear 'em.

Song.

Who is Silvia? what is she,
That all our swains commend her?
Holy, fair, and wise as free;
The heaven such grace did lend her,
That she might admired be.

Is she kind, as she is fair,
For beauty lives with kindness?
Love doth to her eyes repair,
To help him of his blindness;
And, being help'd, inhabits there.

Then to Silvia let us sing,
That Silvia is excelling;
She excels each mortal thing,
Upon the dull earth dwelling:
To her let us garlands bring.

Host. How now! are you sadder than you were before? How do you, man? the music likes you not.

Jul. You mistake: the musician likes me not.

Host. Why, my pretty youth?

Jul. He plays false, father.

Host. How? out of tune on the strings?

Jul. No; but yet so false, that he grieves my very heart-strings.

Host. You have a quick ear.

Jul. Ay; I would I were deaf! it makes me have a slow heart.

Host. I perceive, you delight not in music.

Jul. Not a whit, when it jars so. [Music plays again.]

Host. Hark! what fine change is in the music.

Jul. Ay, that change is the spite.

Host. You would not have them always play but one thing?

Jul. I would always have one play but one thing.

But, Host, doth this sir Proteus, that we talk on,
Often resort unto this gentlewoman?

Host. I tell you what Launce, his man, told me, he lov'd her out of all nick.

Jul. Where is Launce?

Host. Gone to seek his dog; which, to-morrow, by his master's command, he must carry for a present to his lady.

Pro. Sir Thurio, fear you not: I will so plead,
That you shall say my enning drift excels.

Thu. Where meet we?

Pro. At St. Gregory's well.

Thu. Farewell. [Exeunt Thurio and Musicians.

Enter Silvia above, at her window.

Pro. Madam, good even to your ladyship.

Sil. I thank you for your music, gentlemen,
Who is that, that spake?

Pro. One, lady, if you knew his pure heart's truth,
You would quickly learn to know him by his voice.

Sil. Sir Proteus, as I take it.

Pro. Sir Proteus, gentle lady, and your servant.

Sil. What is your will?

Pro. That I may compass yours.

Sil. You have your wish: my will is even this,
That presently you hie you home to bed.

Thou subtle, perjur'd, false, disloyal man!
Think'st thou, I am so shallow, so conceitless,
To be seduced by thy flattery,
That hast deceiv'd so many with thy vows?
Return, return, and make thy love amends.

For me, by this pale queen of night I swear,
I am so far from granting thy request,
That I despise thee for thy wrongful suit,
And by and by intend to chide myself,
Even for this time I spend in talking to thee.

Pro. I grant, sweet love, that I did love a lady;
But she is dead.

Jul. [Aside.] 'T were false, if I should speak it;
For, I am sure, she is not buried.

Sil. Say, that she be; yet Valentine, thy friend,
Survives, to whom thyself art witness
I am betroth'd; and art thou not ashamed
To wrong him with thy importunity?

Pro. I likewise hear, that Valentine is dead.

Sil. And so, suppose, am I; for in his grave,
Assure thyself, my love is buried.

Pro. Sweet lady, let me rake it from the earth.

Sil. Go to thy lady's grave, and call her's thence;
Or, at the least, in her sepulchre thine.

Jul. [Aside.] He heard not that.
PRO. Madam, if your heart be so obdurate, Vouchsafe me yet your picture for my love, The picture that is hanging in your chamber: To that I'll speak, to that I'll sigh and weep; For, since the substance of your perfect self Is else devoted, I am but a shadow, And to your shadow will I make true love.

JUL. [Aside.] If 't were a substance, you would, sure, deceive it, And make it but a shadow, as I am.

SIL. I am very loth to be your idol, sir; But, since your falsehood, 't shall become you well To worship shadows, and adore false shapes, Send to me in the morning, and I'll send it, And so, good rest.

PRO. As wretches have o'er night, That wait for execution in the morn. [Exeunt Proteus and Silvia.

JUL. Host, will you go?

Host. By my halidom, I was fast asleep.

JUL. Pray you, where lies sir Proteus?

Host. Marry, at my house. Trust me, I think, 't is almost day, I'll give it a look.

JUL. Not so; but it hath been the longest night That e'er I watch'd, and the most heaviest. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same.

Enter Eglamour.

EGL. This is the hour that madam Silvia Entreated me to call, and know her mind. There's some great matter she'd employ me in,— Madam, madam!

Enter Silvia above, at her window.

SIL. Who calls?

EGL. Your servant, and your friend; One that attends your ladyship's command.

SIL. Sir Eglamour, a thousand times good morrow.

EGL. As many, worthy lady, to yourself. According to your ladyship's impose.⁴ I am thus early come, to know what service It is your pleasure to command me in.

SIL. O Eglamour, thou art a gentleman, Think not I flatter, for I swear I do not, Valiant, wise, remorseful, well accomplish'd. Thou art not ignorant what dear good will I bear unto the banish'd Valentine; Nor how my father would enforce me marry Vain Thurio, whom my very soul abhors. Thyself hast lov'd; and I have heard thee say, No grief did ever come so near thy heart, As when thy lady and thy true love died, Upon whose grave thou vow'dst pure chastity. Sir Eglamour, I would to Valentine, To Mantua, where, I hear, he makes abode; And, for the ways are dangerous to pass, I do desire thy worthy company, Upon whose faith and honour I repose. Urge not my father's anger, Eglamour, But think upon my grief, a lady's grief; And on the justice of my flying hence, To keep me from a most unholy match, Which heaven and fortune still reward with plagues. I do desire thee, even from a heart As full of tears as the sea of sands, To bear me company, and go with me: If not, to hide what I have said to thee, That I may venture to depart alone.

EGL. Madam, I pity much your grievances, And the most true affections that you bear; Which since I know they virtuously are plac'd, I give consent to go along with you; Recking as little what betideth me, As much I wish all good before you. When will you go?

SIL. This evening coming.

EGL. Where shall I meet you?

SIL. At friar Patrick's cell, Where I intend holy confession.

EGL. I will not fail your ladyship. Good morrow, Gentle lady.

SIL. Good morrow, kind sir Eglamour. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Same.

Enter LANCE with his dog.

LANCE. When a man's servant shall play the cur with him, look, it goes hard: one that I brought up of a puppy; one that I saved from drowning, when three or four of his blind brothers and sisters went to it. I have taught him, even as one would say precisely, thus I would teach a dog. I was sent to deliver him as a present to mistress Silvia from my master, and I came no nearer into the dining-chamber, but he steps me to her trompeter, and steals her canop'y leg. O 'tis a foul thing, when a cur cannot keep himself in all companies. I would have, as one should say, one that takes upon him to be a dog indeed, to be, as it were, a dog at all times. If I had not had more wit than he, to take a fault upon me that he did, I think verily, he had been hang'd for 't: sure as I live, he had suffer'd for 't. You shall judge. He thrusts me himself into the company of three or four gentlemen-like dogs under the duke's table; he had not been there (bless the mark) a pissing while, but all the chamber smell him. "Out with the dog!" says one; "what cur is that?" says another; "whip him out," says the third; "hang him up," says the duke. I, having been acquainted with the smell before, knew it was Crab, and goes me to the fellow that whips the dogs: "Friend," quoth I; "do you mean to whip the dog?" "Ay, marry, do I," quoth he. "You do him the more wrong," quoth I; "I was I did the thing you wot of?" He makes me no more ado, but whips me out of the chamber. How many masters would do this for his servant? Nay, I'll be sworn I have sat in the stocks for puddings he hath stolen, otherwise he had been executed: I have stood on the pillory for geeze he hath kill'd, otherwise he had suffer'd for 't: thou know'st not of this now.—Nay, I remember the trick you served me, when I took my leave of madam Silvia. Did not I bid thee still mark me, and do as I do? When didst thou see me heave up my leg, and make water against a gentlewoman's farthingale? Didst thou ever see me do such a trick?

Enter Proteus and Julia.

PRO. Sebastian is thy name? I like thee well, And will employ thee in some service presently.

JUL. In what you please: I will do what I can.

PRO. I hope thou wilt.—How now, you whoreson peasant! Where have you been these two days loitering:

LANCE. Marry, sir, I carried mistress Silvia the dog you bade me.

PRO. And what says she to my little jewel?

LANCE. Marry, she says, your dog was a cur; and tells ye, currish thanks is good enough for such a present.

PRO. But she receiv'd my dog?

LANCE. No, indeed, did she not. Here have I brought him back again.

¹ From the Saxon haligdome, holy place or kingdom. ² Injunction. ³ Compassionate. ⁴ This line is not in 'o.
Pro. What! didst thou offer her this eur\(^1\) from me?
_Launce._ Ay, sir; the other squirrel was stolen from me by a hangman boy\(^2\) in the market-place; and then I offered her my own, who is a dog as big as ten of you, and therefore, the gift the greater.

_Pro. Go; get thee hence, and find my dog again,_ _or ne'er return again into my sight._

_Away, I say! Stayest thou to vex me here?_
_A slave that still an end\(^3\) turns me to shame._

[Exit Launce.]

_Sebastian._ I have entertained thee,
Partly, that I have need of such a youth,
That can with some discretion do my business,
For 'tis no trusting to you foolish lout;
But, chiefly, for thy face, and thy behaviour,
Which (if my augury deceive me not)
Witness good bringing up, fortune, and truth:
Therefore, know thou, for this I entertain thee.
Go presently, and take this ring with thee:
Deliver it to madam Silvia.

_She lov'd me well deliver'd it to me._

_Jul._ It seems, you lov'd her not, to leave her token.

_She's dead, belike?_

_Pro._ Not so: I think she lives,

_Jul._ Alas!

_Pro._ Why dost thou cry alas?

_Jul._ I cannot choose but pity her.

_Pro._ Wherefore shouldst thou pity her?

_Jul._ Because, methinks, that she lov'd you as well
As you do love your lady Silvia,
She dreams on him, that has forgot her love;
You dare on her, that care not for your love.
"Tis pity, love should be so contrary,
And thinking on it makes me cry alas!

_Pro._ Well, give to her that ring; and therewithal
This letter—that's her chamber.—Tell my lady
I claim the promise for her heavenly picture.
Your message done, hie home unto my chamber,
Where thou shalt find me sad and solitary.

[Exit._

_Jul._ How many women would do such a message?
Alas, poor Proteus! thou hast entertain'd
A fox to be the shepherd of thy lambs.
Alas, poor fool! why do I pity him,
That with his very heart despatch me?
Because he loves her, he despiseth me;
Because I love him, I must pity him.
This ring I gave him when he parted from me,
To bind him to remember my good will,
And now am I (unhappy messenger!)
To plead for that which I would not obtain;
To carry that which I would have refuse'd;
To praise his faith which I would have disprais'd.
I am my master's true confirmed love,
But cannot be true servant to my master,
Unless I prove false traitor to myself.
Yet will I woo for him; but yet so coldly,
As, heaven it knows, I would not have him speed.

_Enter Silvia._ attended._

_Gentlewoman._ Good day. — I pray you, be my mean
To bring me there to speak with madam Silvia.

_Sil._ What would you with her, if I be she?

_Jul._ If you be she, I do entreat your patience
To hear me speak the message I am sent on.

_Sil._ From whom?

_Jul._ From my master, sir Proteus, madam.

_Sil._ Of! he sends you for a picture.

_Jul._ Ay, madam.

_Sil._ Ursula, bring my picture there.A Picture brought._

_Go, give your master this: tell him from me,_

One Julia, that his changing thoughts forget,
Would better fit his chamber, than this shadow.
Pardon me, madam; I have unaudac'd [Giving a letter.
Deliver'd you a paper that I should not:
This is the letter to your ladyship. [Giving another letter.
_Sil._ I pray thee, let me look on that again.

_Jul._ It may not be: good madam, pardon me.

_Sil._ There, hold. [Giving it back._

_I will not look upon your master's lines: I know, they are stuff'd with protestations,
And full of new-found oaths, which he will break,
As easily as I do tear his paper._

_Jul._ Madam, he sends your ladyship this ring.

_Sil._ The more shame for him that he sends it me;
For, I have heard him say, a thousand times,
His Julia gave it him at his departure.

Though his false finger have profess'd the ring,
Mine shall not do his Julia so much wrong.

_Jul._ She thanks you.

_Sil._ What say'st thou?

_Jul._ I thank you, madam, that you tender her.

_Poor gentlewoman! my master wrongs her much._

_Sil._ Dost thou know her?

_Jul._ Almost as well as I do know myself:
To think upon her woes, I do protest,
That I have wept a hundred several times.

_Sil._ Belike, she thinks, that Proteus hath forsook her.

_Jul._ I think she doth, and that's her cause of sorrow.

_Sil._ Is she not passing fair?

_Jul._ She hath been fairer, madam, than she is.

_When she did think my master lov'd her well,
She, in my judgment, was as fair as you;
But since she did neglect her looking-glass,
And threw her sun-expelling mask away,
The air hath stardy'd the roses in her cheeks,
And pinched the lily-tincture of her face,
That now she is become as black as I._

_Sil._ How tall was she?

_Jul._ About my stature; for, at pentecost,
When all our pageants of delight were play'd,
Our youth got me to play the woman's part,
And I was trimm'd in madam Julia's gown,
Which served me as fit, by all men's judgments,
As if the garment had been made for me:
Therefore, I know she is about my height,
And at that time I made her weep a-good.
For I did play a lamentable part,
Madam, 'twas Ariadne, passioning
For Theseus' perjury, and unjust flight;
Which I so lively acted with my tears,
That my poor mistress, moved therewithal,
Wept bitterly; and, would I might be dead,
If in I thought felt not her very sorrow.

_Sil._ She is beholding to thee, gentle youth.—
Alas, poor lady! desolate and left!—
I weep myself, to think upon thy words,
Here, youth; there is my purse: I give thee this
For thy sweet mistress' sake, because thou lov'st her.

_Farewell._

[Exit Silvia._

_Jul._ And she shall thank you for it, if e'er you know her. —

_A virtuous gentlewoman, mild, and beautiful! I hope my master's suit will be but cold,
Since she respects her mistress' love so much.
Alas, how love can trifle with itself!
Here is her picture. Let me see: I think,
If I had such a tire, this face of mine
Were full as lovely as is this of hers;_
SCENE I.—The Same. An Abbey.

Enter Eglamour.

Egl. The sun begins to gild the western sky, And now it is about the very hour, That Silvia at friar Patrick’s cell should meet me. She will not fall; for lovers break not hours, Unless it be to come before their time, So much they spur their expedition.

Enter Silvia.

See, where she comes.—Lady, a happy evening. Sil. Amen, amen. Go on, good Eglamour, Out at the postern by the abbey-wall. I fear, I am attended by some spies. Egl. Fear not: the forest is not three leagues off; If we recover that, we are sure enough. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in the Duke’s Palace.

Enter Thurio, Proteus, and Julia.

Thu. Sir Proteus, what says Silvia to my suit? Pro. O, sir! I find her milder than she was; And yet she takes exceptions at your person. Thu. What! that my leg is too long? Pro. No, that it is too little. Thu. I’ll wear a boot to make it somewhat rounder. Jul. But love will not be spur’d to what it loathes. [Aside.

Thu. What says she to my face? Pro. She says it is a fair one. Thu. Nay, then the wanton lies; my face is black. Pro. But pearls are fair, and the old saying is, Black men are pearls in beauteous ladies’ eyes. Jul. ’T is true, such pearls as put out ladies’ eyes; For I had rather wink than look on them. [Aside. Thu. How likes she my discourse? Pro. Ill, when you talk of war. Thu. But well, when I discourse of love and peace. Jul. But better, indeed, when you hold your peace. [Aside.

Come, shadow come, and take this shadow up, For ’tis thy rival. O thou senseless form! Thou shalt be worshipp’d, kiss’d, lov’d, and ador’d; And, were there sense in his idolatry, My substance should be statue in thy stead. I’ll use thee kindly for thy mistress’ sake, That us’d me so; or else, by Jove I vow, I should have scratch’d out your unseeing eyes, To make my master out of love with thee. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Forest.

Enter Silvia, and Outlaws.

1 Out. Come, come; be patient, we must bring you to our captain. [Drawing her in. Sil. A thousand more mischances than this one Have learn’d me how to break this patiently. 2 Out. Come, bring her away. 1 Out. Where is the gentleman that was with her? 3 Out. Being nimble-footed, he hath outrun us; But Moyes, and Valerius, follow him. Go thon with her to the west end of the wood; There is our captain. We’ll follow him that’s fled; The thicket is beset; he cannot scape. 1 Out. Come, I must bring you to our captain’s cave. Fear not; he bears an honourable mind, And will not use a woman lawlessly. Sil. O Valentine! this I endure for thee. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Forest.

Enter Valentine.

Val. How use doth breed a habit in a man! These shadowy, desert, unfrequented woods,
I better brook than flourishing peopleed towns.

Here can I sit alone, unseen of any,
And to the nightingale's complaining notes
Tune my distresses, and record my woes.
O! thou that dost inhabit in my breast,
Leave not the mansion too long tenantless,
Lest, growing rancious, the building fail,
And leave no memory of what it was!
Repair me with thy presence, Silvia.
Thou gentle nymph, eternal forlorn swain!—
These my rude mutes, 2 that make their wills their law,
Have some unhappy passenger in chase.
They love me well; yet I have much to do,
To keep them from uncivil outrages.
Withdraw thee, Valentine: who's this comes here?—

[Aside.] 4

Enter Proteus, Silvia, and Julia.

Pro. Madam, this service having 2 done for you,
(Though you respect not aught your servant doth)
To hazard life, and rescue you from him,
That would have fore'd your honour and your love, 8
Vouchsafe me, for my meed, but one fair look:
A smaller boon than this I cannot beg.
And less than this, I am sure, you cannot give.
Val. How like a dream is this, I see and hear!
Love, lend me patience to forbear awhile.
Sil. O, miserable! unhappy that I am!
Pro. Unhappy were you, madam, ere I came;
But by my coming I have made you happy.
Sil. By thy approach thou mak'st me most unhappy.
Jul. And me, when he approacheth to your presence.

[Aside.]

Sil. Had I been seized by a hungry lion,
I would have been a breakfast to the beast,
Rather than have false Proteus rescue me.
O, heaven! be judge, how I love Valentine,
Whose life's as tender to me as my soul;
And full as much (for more there cannot be)
I do detest false, perjurd Proteus:
Therefore be gone: solicit me no more.
Pro. What dangerous action, stood it next to death,
Would I not undergo for one calm look.
O! 'tis the curse in love, and still approv'd,
When women cannot love where they're belov'd.
Sil. When Proteus cannot love where he's belov'd.
Read over Julia's heart, thy first best love,
For whose dear sake thou didst then rend thy faith
Into a thousand oaths; and all those oaths
Descended into perjury to love me.
Thou hast no faith left now, unless thou'st two,
And that's far worse than none: better have none
Than plentiful faith, which is too much by one.
Thou counterfeit to thy true friend!

Pro.

Who respects friend?
Sil. All men but Proteus.
Pro. Nay, if the gentle spirit of moving words
Can no way change you to a milder form,
I'll woo you like a soldier, at arm's end,
And love you 'gainst the nature of love: force you.
Sil. O heaven!

Pro. [Aside.]

I'll force thee yield to my desire.
Val. [Coming forward.] Ruffian, let go that rude uncivil touch;
Thou friend of an ill fashion!
Pro. Valentine! [love; Sil. Thou common friend, that's without faith or

[For such is a friend now] treacherous man!
Thou hast beguil'd my hopes: nought but mine eye
Could have persuaded me. Now dare I to say,
I have one friend alive, thou wouldst dispute me.
Who should be trusted now, when one's right hand
Is perjur'd to the bosom? Proteus,
I am sorry I must never trust thee more,
But count the world a stranger for thy sake.
The private wound is deep'st. 0 time accurst!
'Mongst all my foes 2 a friend should be the worst!

Pro. My shame and desperate guilt at one 11 confound me.—

Forgive me, Valentine. If hearty sorrow
Be a sufficient ransom for offence,
I tender 't here: I do as truly suffer,
As e'er I did commit.
Val. Then, I am paid;
And once again I do receive thee honest.
Who by repentance is not satisfied,
Is nor of heaven, nor earth; for these are pleas'd:
By penitence th' Eternal's wrath's appeas'd.
And, that my love may appear plain and free,
All that was mine in Silvia I give thee.
Jul. O me unhappy!

Pro. Look to the boy.

Val. Why, boy! why, wag! how now! what's the matter! look up; speak.
Jul. O good sir! my master charg'd me to deliver a ring to madam Silvia, which, out of my neglect, was never done.
Pro. Where is that ring, boy?
Jul. Here 't is: this is it. [Gives a ring.

Pro. How! let me see.
This is the ring I gave to Julia.
Jul. O! cry you mercy, sir; I have mistook:
This is the ring you sent to Silvia. [Shoves another ring.
Pro. But, how can't thou by this ring?
At my depart I gave this unto Julia.
Jul. And Julia herself did give it me;
And Julia herself hath brought it hither.

Jul. Behold her that gave aim to all thy oaths,
And entertain'd them deeply in her heart:
How oft hast thou with perjury clef't the root!
O Proteus! let this habit make thee blush:
Be thou ashamed, that I have took upon me
Such an immodest raiment; if shame live
In a disguise of love.
It is the lesser blot, modesty finds,
Women to change their shapes, than men their minds.
Pro. Than men their minds: 'tis true. O heaven!

But, constant, he were perfect: that one error [signs:
Fills him with faults; makes him run through all the Inconstancy falls off, ere it begins.
What is in Silvia's face, but I may spy
More fresh in Julia's, with a constant eye? 2
Val. Come, come, a hand from either.
Let me be blest to make this happy close:
'T were pity two such friends should be long foes.

Pro. Bear witness, heaven, I have my wish for ever.
Jul. And I mine.

Enter Outlaws, with Duke and Thurio.

Out. A prize! a prize! a prize!

Val. Forbear: forbear, I say: it is my lord the duke.—

Your grace is welcome to a man disgrac'd, Banished Valentine.

1. sing. 2. Not in f. e. 3. are my mates: in f. e. 4. Steps aside: in f. e. 5. I have: in f. e. 6. f. e. have a period. 7. f. e. have a semi colon. 8. swore. 9. Not in f. e. 10. that: in f. e. 11. My shame and guilt confound: in f. e.
Duke. Sir Valentine!
Thu. Yonder is Silvia; and Silvia's mine.
Val. Thurio, give back, or else embrace thy death.

Come not within the measure of my wrath:
Do not name Silvia thine; if once again,
Milano's shall not hold thee. Here she stands:
Take but possession of her with a touch.
I dare thee but to breathe upon my love.

Thu. Sir Valentine, I care not for her, I
I hold him but a fool, that will endanger
His body for a girl that loves him not:
I claim her not, and therefore she is thine.

Duke. The more degenerate and base art thou,
To make such means for her as thou hast done,
And leave her on such slight conditions.
Now, by the honour of my ancestry,
I do applaud thy spirit, Valentine,
And think thee worthy of an empress' love.

Know then, I here forget all former griefs,
Cancel all grudge, repeal thee home again,
Plead a new state in thy unrivalled merit,
To which I thus subscribe.—Sir Valentine,
Thou art a gentleman, and well deriv'd:
Take thou thy Silvia, for thou hast deserv'd her.

Val. I thank your grace; the gift hath made me happy.

I now beseech you, for your daughter's sake,
To grant one boon that I shall ask of you.

Duke. I grant it for thine own, whate'er it be.

Val. These banish'd men, that I have kept withal,
Are men endued with worthy qualities:
Forgive them what they have committed here,
And let them be recall'd from their exile.
They are reformed, civil, full of good,
And fit for great employment, worthy lord.

Duke. Thou hast prevail'd; I pardon them, and thee
Dispose of them, as thou know'st of their deserts.
Come; let us go: we will conclude all jars
With triumphs, mirth, and rare solemnity.

Val. And as we walk along, I dare be bold
With our discourse to make your grace to smile.
What think you of this stripling page, my lord?

Duke. I think the boy hath grace in him: he blushes.

Val. I warrant you, my lord, more grace than boy.

Duke. What mean you by that saying, Valentine?

Val. Please you, I'll tell you as we pass along,
That you will wonder what hath fortun'd.—
Come, Proteus; 'tis your pensance, but to hear
The story of your love's discoverer.
Our day of marriage shall be yours no less;
One feast, one house, one mutual happiness.

[Exeunt.

Slen. In the county of Gloucester, justice of peace, and coroner.

Shal. Ay, cousin Slenner, and cust-alorum.

Slen. Ay, and ratolorum too; and a gentleman born, master parson; who writes himself armigerus; in any bill, warrant, quittance, or obligation, armigerus.

Shal. Ay, that I do; and have done any time these three hundred years.

Slen. All his successors, gone before him, have done it; and all his ancestors, that come after him, may: they may give the dozen white lucres in their coat.

Shal. It is an old coat.

Eva. The dozen white louses do become an old coat well; it agrees well, passant: it is a familiar beast to man, and signifies love.

Slen. The luce is the fresh fish; the salt fish is an old coat.

Shal. I may quarter, coz?

Slen. You may, by marrying.

Eva. It is marring, indeed, if he quarter it.

Shal. Not a whit.

Eva. Yes, per-lady: if he has a quarter of your coat, there is but three skirts for yourself, in your simple conjectures. But that is all one; if sir John Falstaff have committed disparities unto you, I am of the church, and will be glad to do my benevolence, to make amends and compromises between you.

Shal. The council shall hear it: it is a riot.

Eva. It is not meet the council hear a riot; there is no fear of Got in a riot. The council, look you, shall desire to hear the fear of Got, and not to hear a riot; take your vizziments in that.

1. A title by which the clergy were ordinarily addressed.
2. The old name for a pike—an allusion to the coat of arms of the Lucy's.
3. Enter Page in f. e.
Page. I am glad to see your worship's well. I thank you for your venison, master Shallow.

Shal. Master Page, I am glad to see you: much good do it your good heart. I wished your venison better; it was ill kill'd.—How doth good mistress Page?—and I thank you always with my heart, la; with my heart.

Page. Sir, thank you.

Shal. Sir, I thank you; by yes and no, I do.

Page. I am glad to see you, good master Slender.

Slen. How does your fallow greyhound, sir? I heard say, he was outrun on Costume.2

Page. It could not be judged, sir.

Slen. You'll not confess, you'll not confess.

Shal. That he will not;—tis your fault, 'tis your fault.2—'T is a good dog.

Page. A cur, sir.

Shal. Sir, he's a good dog, and a fair dog; can there be more said? he is good, and fair. Is sir John Falstaff here?

Page. Sir, he is within; and I would I could do a good office between you.

Eva. Even she spake as a Christians ought to speak.

Shal. He hath wrong'd me, master Page.

Page. Sir, he doth in some sort confess it.

Shal. If it be confess'd, it is not redress'd: is not that so, master Page? He hath wrong'd me; indeed, he hath;—at a word, he hath;—believe me:—Robert Shallow, esquire, saith he is wrong'd.

Page. Here comes sir John.

Enter Sir John Falstaff, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol.

Fal. Now, master Shallow; you'll complain of me to the king.

Shal. Knight, you have beaten my men, killed my deer, and broke open my lodge.

Fal. But not kiss'd your keeper's daughter.

Shal. Tut, a pin! this shall be answered.

Fal. I will answer it straight:—I have done all this.—That is now answered.

Shal. The council shall know this.

Fal. 'T were better for you, if it were known in counsel: you'll be laughed at.

Eva. Pauca verba, sir John; good words.

Fal. Good words? good cabbage.—Slender, I broke your head; what matter have you against me?

Slen. Marry, sir, I have matter in my head against you; and against your coney-catching rascals, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol. They carried me to the tavern, and made me drunk, and afterwards picked my pocket.

Bard. You Banbury cheese.

Slen. Ay, it is no matter.

Pist. How now, Mephostophilus?

Slen. Ay, it is no matter.

Nym. Slice, I say! pauca, pauca; slice! that's my humour.

Slen. Where's Simple, my man?—can you tell, cousin?

Eva. Peace! I pray you. Now let us understand: there is three umpires in this matter, as I understand; that is, master Page, fideltet, master Page; and there is myself, fidelius myself; and the three party is, lastly and finally, mine host of the Garter.

Page. We three, to hear it, and end it between them.

Eva. Ferry goot: I will make a prief of it in my note-book; and we will afterwards 'ork upon the cause, with as great discreetly as we can.

Pist. Pistol!

Pist. He hears with ears.

Eva. The tevil and his tam! what phrase is this?

"He hears with ear?" Why, it is affectations.

Fal. Pistol, did you pick master Slender's purse?

Slen. Ay, by these gloves, did he, or I would I might never come in mine own great chamber again else of seven groats in mill-sixpences, and two Edward shovel-boards,4 that cost me two shilling and two pence a-piece of Yed Miller, by these gloves.

Fal. Is this true, Pistol?

Eva. No; it is false, if it is a pick-purse.

Pist. Ha, thou mountain-foreigner!—Sir John and master mine, I combat challenge of this latter bilbo;5 Word of denial in thy labras6 here;

Word of denial; froth and scum, thou liest.

Slen. By these gloves, then 'tis he was.

Nym. Be advised, sir, and do good humours. I will say, "marry trap,"7 with you, if you run the nuthook's8 humour on me; that is the very note of it.

Slen. By this hat, then he in the red face had it; for though I cannot remember what I did when you made me drunk, yet I am not altogether an ass.

Fal. What say you, Scarlet and John?9

Bard. Why, sir, for my part, I say, the gentleman had drunk himself out of his five sentences.

Eva. It is his five senses: fie, what the ignorance is! Bard. And being fay,10 sir, was, as they say, cashier'd;11 and so conclusions pass'd the carriers.12

Slen. Ay, you speak in Latin then too; but 'tis no matter. I'll never be drunk whilst I live, but in honest, civil, godly company, for this trick: if I be drunk, I'll be drunk with those that have the fear of God, and not with drunken knaves.

Eva. So God jUDGE me, that is a virtuous mind.

Fal. You hear all these matters denied, gentlemen; you hear it.

Enter Anne Page with wine; and Mistress Ford and Mistress Page.

Page. Nay, daughter, carry the wine in; we'll drink within.

[Exit Anne Page.

[Following and looking after her.13

Page. How now, mistress Ford!

Fal. Mistress Ford, by my troth, you are very well met: by your leave, good mistress. [Kissing her.

Page. Wife, bid these gentlemen welcome.—Come, we have a hot venison pasty to dinner: come, gentlemen, I hope we shall drink down all unkindness.

[Exeunt all but Shallow, Slender, and Evans.

Slen. I had rather than forty shi'llings, I had my book of songs and sonnets here.—

Enter Simple.

Page. How now, Simple! Where have you been? I must wait on myself, must I? You have not the book of riddles about you, have you?

Sim. Book of riddles! why, did you not lend it to Alice Sylvester upon Allhallowmas last, a fortnight after Michaelmas?10

Falstaff, Host, Nym, Pistol, and Robin.

Fal. Mine host of the Garter!

Host. What says my bully-rook? Speak scholarly, and wisely.

Fal. Truly, mine host, I must turn away some of my followers.

Host. Discard, bully Hercules; cashier: let them wag; trot, trot.

Fal. I sit at ten pounds a-week.

Host. Thou'rt an emperor, Cesar, Reiser, and Pheazar. I will entertain Bardolph: he shall draw, he shall tap: said I well, bully Hector?

Fal. Do so, good mine host.

Host. I have spoke; let him follow.—Let me see thee forth, and time! I am at a word; follow. [Exit Host.
Fal. Bardolph, follow him. A tapster is a good wight: an old cloak makes a new jerkin; a withered servingman, a fresh tapster. Go; adieu.
Bard. It is a life that I have desired. I will thrive.
[Exit Bardolph.
Pist. O base Gongarian! wilt thou the spigot wield?
Nym. He was gotten in drink: is not the humour connected? His mind is not heroic, and there's the humour of it.
Fal. I am glad I am so aquit of this tinder-box: his thefts were too open; his phlegm was like an unskilful singer, he kept not time.
Nym. The good humour is to steal at a minims' rest.
Pist. Convey the wise it call. Steal? foa! a fico for the phrase!
Fal. Well, sirs, I am almost out at heels.
Pist. Why then, let kibes ensue.
Fal. There is no remedy; I must coney-catch, I must shift.
Pist. Young ravens must have food.
Fal. Which of you know Ford of this town?
Pist. I ken the wight: he is of substance good.
Fal. My honest lads, I will tell you what I am about.
Pist. Two yards, and more.
Fal. No quips, no pique, Pistol. Indeed I am in the waist two yards about; but I am now about no waste: I am about thrift. Briefly, I do mean to make love to Ford's wife: I spy entertainment in her; she discourses, she scarce, she gives the leer of invitation: I can construe the action of her familiar style; and the hardest voice of her behaviour, to be Englished rightly, is, "I am sir John Falstaff's.
Pist. He hath studied her will, and translated her well; out of honesty into English.
Nym. The anchor is deep: will that humour pass?
Fal. Now, the report goes, she has all the rule of her husband's purse; he hath a legion of angels.
Pist. As many devils entertain, and "To her, boy," say I.
Nym. The humour rises; it is good: humour me the angels.
Pist. I have writ me here a letter to her; and here another to Page's wife, who even now gave me good eyes too, examin'd my parts with most judicious oiliads: sometimes the beam of her view gilded my foot, sometimes my portly belly.
Pist. Then did the sun on dunghill shine.
Nym. I thank thee for that humour.
Fal. O! she did so course o'er my exterior with such a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye did seem to search me up like a burning glass. Here's another letter to her; she bears the purse too; she is a region in Guinea, all gold and beauty. I will be cheated! to them both, and they shall be exchequers to me: they shall be my East and West Indies, and I will trade to them both. Go, bear thou this letter to mistress Page; and thou this to mistress Ford. We will thrive, lads, we will thrive.
Pist. Shall I sir Pandarus of Troy become,
And by my side wear steel? then, Lucifer take all!
Nym. I will run no base humour: here, take the humour-letter. I will keep the 'haviour of reputation.

Fal. Hold, sirrah, [to Robin.] bear you these letters tightly:
Sail like my pinnae* to these golden shores.—
Rogues, hence! avoind! vanish like hailstones, go; Trudge, plod away o' the hoof; seek shelter, pack! Falstaff will learn the humour10 of the age,
French thrift, you rogues: myself, and skirled page.
[Exit Falstaff and Robin.
Pist. Let vultures grip thy guts! for gourd, and fullam holds,
And high and low11 beguiile the rich and poor.

Base Phrygian Turk.
Nym. Hears not Mr. Exchequer, which be honours of re-
Pist. Wilt thou revenge?
Nym. By welkin, and her star.s.13
Pist. With wit, or steel?
Nym. With both the honours, I: will discuss the humour of this love to Page.14
Pist. And I to Ford14 shall eye unfold,
How Falstaff, varlet vile,
His dove will prove, his gold will hold,
And his soft couch defile.
Nym. My humour shall not cool: I will incense Page to deal with poison; I will possess him with yellowness, for the revolt of mine is dangerous: that is my true humour.
Pist. Thou art the Mars of malcontents: I second thee; troop on.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Dr. Caius's House.
Enter Mrs. Quickly, Simple, and John Rugby.
Quick. What, John Rugby!—I pray thee, go to the casement, and see if you can see my master, master doctor Caius, coming: if he do, i' faith, and find any body in the house, here will be an old abusing of God's patience, and the king's English.
Rug. I'll go watch.
[Exit Rugby.
Quick. Go; and we'll have a posset for 't soon at night, in faith, at the latter end of a sea-coat fire.—An honest, willing, kind fellow, as ever servant shall come in house shall; and, I warrant you, no tell-tale, nor no breed-bate*: his worst fault is, that he is given to prayer; he is something peevish16 that way, but nobody but has his fault; but let that pass. Peter Simple, you say your name is?
Sim. Ay, for fault of a better.
Quick. And master Slender's your master?
Sim. Ay, forsooth.
Quick. Does he not wear a great round beard, like a grover's paring-knife?
Sim. No, forsooth: he hath but a little wee face, with a little yellow beard; a Caius-coloured beard.17
Quick. A softly-sprighted man, is he not?
Sim. Ay, forsooth; but he is as tall18 as I am, and between this and his head; he hath fought with a warrencer.
Quick. How say you?—O! I should remember him: does he not hold up his head, as it were, and strut in his gait?
Sim. Yes, indeed, does he.
Quick. Well, heaven send Anne Page no worse fortune! Tell master parson Evans, I will do what I can for your master: Anne is a good girl, and I wish—— Re-enter Rugby, running.

Quick. We shall all be shent.¹ Run in here, good young man; go into this closet. [Shuts Simple in the closet.] He will not stay long.—What, John Rugby! John, what, John, I say!—Go, John, go inquire for my² master; [Exit Rugby.] I doubt, he be not well, that he comes not here:— and down, down, adown-a,³ &c. [Sings.]

Enter Doctor Caius.

Caius. Vat is you sing? I do not like dese toys. Pray you, go and viech me in my closet; un boltier word: a box, a green-a box; do intend vat I speak a green-a box.

Quick. Ay, forsooth; I'll fetch it you. [Aside.] I am glad he went not in himself: if he had found the young man, he would have been horn-mad.

Caius. Fe, fe, fe! ma foi, il fait ford chaud. Je m'en vais à la cou[r]-the grande affaire.

Quick. Is it this, sir? Caius. Oui; mette le au mon pocket; dépêche, quickly, —Vere is dat knave Rugby? Quick. What, John Rugby! John! Rug. Here, sir. [Enter Rugby.] Caius. You are John Rugby, and you are Jack Rugby together, take-a your rapiers, and come after my heel to de court.

Rug. 'Tis ready, sir, here in the porech.

Caius. By my troth, I tarry too long.—Oh! me! Quoi j'oublie? dere is some simples in my closet, dat I will not for the world I shall leave behind. [Going to it.] Quick. [Aside.] Ah me! he'll find the young man there, and he be mad.

Caius. O double, dable! vat is in my closet?—Vil-lainy! larron! [Dragging Simple out.] Rugby, my rapiers!

Quick. Good master, be content.

Caius. Verefore shall I be content-a? Quick. The young man is an honest man.

Caius. Vat shall the honest man do in my closet? dere is no honest man dat shall come in my closet.

Quick. I beseech you, be not so phlegmatic. Hear the truth of it: he came of an errand to me from parson Hugh.

Caius. Voll.

Sim. Ay, forsooth, to desire her to— Quick. Peace, I pray you.

Caius. Peace-a your tongue!—Speak-a your tale. Sim. To desire this honest gentlewoman, your maid, to speak a good word to mistress Anne Page for my master, in the way of marriage.

Quick. This is all, indeed, la; but I'll ne'er put my finger in the fire, and need not.

Caius. Sir Hugh send-a you?—Rugby, boillez me some paper: tarry you a littel-a while. [Writer]

Quick. I am glad he is so quiet: if he had been thoroughly moved, you should have heard him so loud, and so melancholy.—But notwithstanding, man, I'll do you your master what good I can: and the very yea and the no is, the French doctor, my master,—I may call him my master, look you, for I keep his house; and I wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat and drink, make the beds, and do all myself.—

Sim. 'Tis a great charge, to come under one body's hand.

Quick. Are you avis'd o' that? you shall find it a great charge: and to be up early and down late:—but notwithstanding, to tell you in your ear, (I would have no words of it) my master himself is in love with mistress Anne Page: but notwithstanding that, I know Anne's mind; that's neither here nor there.

Caius. You jack'nape, give-a a dis letter to Sir Hugh. By gar, it is a challenge: I will cut his trost in de park; and I will teach a securv jack'nape priest to meddle or make.—You may be gone; it is not good you tarry here:—by gar, I will cut all his two stones; by gar, he shall not have a stone to trow at his dog. [Exit Simple.]

Quick. Alas! he speaks but for his friend.

Caius. It is no matter-a for dat:—do not you tell-a me, dat I shall have Anne Page for myself?—By gar, I will kill de Jack priest; and I have appointed mine Host of de Jarretière to measure our weapon.—By gar, I will myself have Anne Page.

Quick. Sir, the maid loves you, and all shall be well. We must give folks leave to prate: what, the good year!

Caius. Rugby, come to the court vit me.—By gar, if I have not Anne Page, I shall turn your head out of my door. —Follow my heels, Rugby. [Exit Caius and Rugby.]

Quick. You shall have An fool's-head of your own.

No, I know Anne's mind for that: never a woman in Windsor knows more of Anne's mind than I do, nor can do more than I do with her, I thank heaven.

Enter Fenton.

Fent. How now, good woman! how dost thou? Quick. The better, that it pleases your good worship to ask.

Fent. What news? how does pretty mistress Anne? Quick. In truth, sir, and she is pretty, and honest, and gentle; and one that is your friend, I can tell you that by the way; I praise heaven for it.

Fent. Shall I do any good, think'est thou? Shall I not lose my suit?

Quick. Troth, sir, all is in his hands above; but notwithstanding, master Fenton, I'll be sworn on a book, she loves you.—Have not your worship a wart above your eye?

Fent. Yes, marry, have I; what of that?

Quick. Well, whereby hangs a tale.—Good faith, it is such another Nan;—but, I detest, an honest maid as ever broke bread:—we had an hour's talk of that wart.—I shall never laugh but in that maid's company;—but, indeed, she is given too much to alliholly and musing. But for you—well, go to.

Fent. Well, I shall see her to-day. Hold, there's money for thee; let me have thy voice in my behalf: if thou seest her before me, commend me—

Quick. Will I! I' faith, that I' will; and I will tell your worship more of the wart, the next time we have confidence, and of other woes.

Fent. Well, farewell; I am in great haste now. [Exit.]

Quick. Farewell to your worship. —Truly, an honest gentleman; but Anne loves him not, for I know Anne's mind as well as another does.—Out upon 't! what have I forgot? [Exit.]
ACT II.

SCENE I.—Before Page’s House.

Enter Mistress Page, with a Letter.

Mrs. Page. What! have I ’scaped love-letters in the holy-day time of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them? Let me see. [Reads.]

"Ask me no reason why I love you; for though love use reason for his physician, he admits him not for his counsellor. You are not young, no more am I: go to then, there’s a sympathy. You are merry, so am I; ha! ha! then, there’s more sympathy: you love sack, and so do I; would you desire better sympathy? Let it suffice thee, mistress Page, (at least, if the love of soldier can suffice) that I love thee. I will not say, pity me, ’tis not a soldier-like phrase; but I say, love me.

Thine own true knight,
By day or night,
Or any kind of light,
With all his might,
For thee to fight.

John Falstaff."

What a Herold of Jewry is this!—O wicked, wicked, world!—one that is well nigh worn to pieces with age, to show himself a young gallant! What an unweighed behaviour hath this Flemish drunkard picked (with the devil’s name) out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner assay me? Why, he hath not been thrice in my company—What should I say to him?—I was then frugal of my mirth:—heaven forgive me!—Why, I’ll exhibit a bill in the parliament for the putting down of fat men. How shall I be revenged on him! for revenged I will be, as sure as his guts are made of puddings.

Enter Mistress Ford.

Mrs. Ford. Mistress Page! trust me, I was going to your house.

Mrs. Page. And, trust me, I was coming to you. You look very ill.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I’ll ne’er believe that: I have to show to the contrary.

Mrs. Page. Faith, but you do, in my mind.

Mrs. Ford. Well, I do then; yet, I say, I could show you to the contrary. O, mistress Page! give me some counsel.

Mrs. Page. What’s the matter, woman?

Mrs. Ford. O woman! if it were not for one trifling respect, I could come to such honour.

Mrs. Page. Hang the trifle, woman; take the honour. What is it?—dispense with trifles;—what is it?

Mrs. Ford. If I would but go to hell for an eternal moment or so, I could be knighted.

Mrs. Page. What?—thou liest. —Sir Alice Ford!—These knights will hack; and so, thou shouldst not alter the article of thy gentry.

Mrs. Ford. We burn day-light:—here, read, read; [giving a letter]—perceive how I might be knighted.

Mrs. Page. What read you?—I shall think the worse of fat men, as long as I have an eye to make difference of men’s liking: and yet he would not swear, praised women’s modesty, and gave such orderly and well-behaved reproof to all uncomeliness, that I would have sworn his disposition would have gone to the truth of his words; but they do no more adhere and keep place together, than the hundredth psalm to the tune of “Green Sleeves.” What tempest, I trow, threw this whale, with so many tun’s of oil in his belly, ashore at Windsor? How shall I be revenged on him? I think, the best way were to entertain him with hope, till the wicked fire of lust have melted him in his own grease.—Did you ever hear the like?

Mrs. Page. Letter for letter, but that the name of Page and Ford differs!—To thy great comfort in this mystery of ill opinions, here’s the twin-brother of thy letter: but let thine inherit first; for, I protest, mine never shall. I warrant, he hath a thousand of these letters, writh with blank space for different names, (sure more) and these are of the second edition. He will print them, out of doubt; for he cares not what he puts into the press, when he would put us two: I had rather be a giantess, and lie under mount Pelion. Well, I will find you twenty lascivious turtles, ere one chaste man.

Mrs. Ford. Why, this is the very same; the very hand, the very words. What doth he think of us?

Mrs. Page. Nay, I know not: it makes me almost ready to wrangle with mine own honesty. I’ll entertain myself like one that I am not acquainted withal; for, sure, unless he know some stain in me, that I know not myself, he would never have boarded me in this fury.

Mrs. Ford. Boarding call it you? I’ll be sure to keep him above deck.

Mrs. Page. So will I: if he come under my hatches, I’ll never to sea again. Let’s be revenged on him: let’s appoint him a meeting; give him a show of comfort in his suit, and lead him on with a fine-bated delay, till he hath pawned his horses to mine Host of the Garter.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I will consent to act any villany against him, that may not sully the chariness of our honesty. O, that my husband saw this letter! it would give eternal food to his jealousy.

Mrs. Page. Why, look, where he comes; and my good man too; he’s as far from jealousy, as I am from giving him cause; and that, I hope, is an unmeasurable distance.

Mrs. Ford. You are the happier woman.

Mrs. Page. Let’s consult together against this greedy knight. Come hither. [They retire.]

Enter Ford, Pistol, Page, and Nym.

Ford. Well, I hope, it be not so.

Pist. Hope is a curtail dog in some affairs;
Sir John affects thy wife.

Ford. Why, sir, my wife is not young.

Pist. He woos both high and low, both rich and poor,
Both young and old, one with another. Ford,
He loves the gally-mawfry: Ford, perpend.

Ford. Love my wife?

Pist. With liver burning hot: prevent, or go thou,
Like sir Actæon he, with Ring-wood at thy heels.

O! odious is the name.

Ford. What name, sir?

Pist. The horn, I say. Farewell:

Take heed; have open eye, for thieves do foot by night:
Take heed, ere summer comes, or cuckoo birds do sing.—
Away, sir corporal Nym.

Nym. Beloved, let Page, he speaks sense.4 [Exit Pist. Ford. I will be patient: I will find out this. Nym. And this is true; [to Page.] I like not the humour of lying. He hath wronged me in some luminous: I should have borne the humoured letter to her, but I have a sword, and it shall bite upon my necessity. He loves your wife; 'tis the short and the long. My name is corporal Nyn: I speak, and I avouch 'tis true:—my name is Nyn, and Falstaff loves your wife.—Adieu. I love not the humour of bread and cheese. Adieu. [Exit Nyn.

Page. The humour of it, quoth 'a! here's a fellow frights English out of his wits.
Ford. I will seek out Falstaff.
Page. I never heard such a drawling-affected rogue.
Ford. If I do find it, well.
Page. I will not believe such a Caitian, 1 though the priest of the town commended him for a true man.
Ford. 'Twas a good sensible fellow: well.
Page. How now, Meg!
Mrs. Page. Whither go you, George?—Hark you.
Mrs. Ford. How now, sweet Frank! Why art thou melancholy?
Ford. I melancholy! I am not melancholy.—Get you home, go.
Mrs. Ford. ' Faith, thou hast some crotchets in thy head now.—Will you go, mistress Page?
Mrs. Page. Have you with you.—You'll come to dinner,
George? [Aside to Mrs. Ford.] Look, who comes yonder:
sh'se shall be our messenger to this palty knight.
Enter Mrs. Quickly.
Mrs. Ford. Trust me, I thought on her: she'll fit it.
Mrs. Page. You are come to see my daughter Anne?
Quick. Ay, forsooth; and, I pray, how does good mistress Anne?
Mrs. Page. Go in with us, and see: we have an hour's talk with you.
[Exeunt Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford, and Mrs. Quickly.
Page. How now, master Ford?
Ford. You heard what this knave told me, did you not?
Page. Yes, and you heard what the other told me.
Ford. Do you think there is truth in them?
Page. Hang 'em, slaves; I do not think the knight would offer it: these that accuse him, in his intent towards our wives, are a yoke of his discarded men;
very rogues, now they be out of service.
Ford. Were they his men?
Page. Marry, were they.
Ford. I like it never the better for that.—Does he lie at the Garter?
Page. Ay, marry, does he. If he should intend this voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him;
and what he gets more of her than sharp words,
let it lie on my head.
Ford. I do not misdoubt my wife, but I would be loath to turn them together. A man may be too confident; I would have nothing lie on my head. I cannot be thus satisfied.
Page. Look, where my ranting Host of the Garter comes. There is either liquor in his pate, or money in his purse, when he looks so merry.—How, now, mine host!
[Enter Host.*
Host. How now, bully-rouk! thou'rt a gentleman.
Cavaliero-justice, I say.
[Enter Shallow.
Shal. I follow, mine host, I follow.—Good even, and with twenty, good master Page. Master Page, will you go with us? we have sport in hand.
Host. Tell him, cavaliero-justice; tell him, bullyrouk.
Shal. Sir, there is a fray to be fought between sir
Hugh, the Welsh priest, and Caius, the French doctor.
Ford. Good mine Host of the Garter, a word with you.
Host. What say'st thou, my bully-rouk?
[They go aside.
Shal. Will you [to Page] go with us to behold it?
My merry host hath had the measuring of their weapons, and, I think; hath appointed them contrary places; for, believe me, I hear, the parson is no jester. Hark, I will tell you what our sport shall be.
Host. Host thou no suit against my knight, my guest-cavalier?
Ford. None, I protest: but I'll give you a pot of burnt sack to give me recourse to him, and tell him, my name is Brook; only for a jest.
Host. My hand, bully: thou shalt have cressus and regress; said I well? and thy name shall be Brook.
It is a merry knight.—Will you go on here?
Shal. Have you with you, mine host.
Page. I have heard, the Frenchman hath good skill in his rapier.
Shal. Tut, sir! I could have told you more: in these times you stand on distance, your passes, stoccoades, and I know not what; 'tis the heart, master Page:—
'tis here, 'tis here. I have seen the time, with my long sword, I would have made you four fellow skippers like rats.
Host. Here, boys, here, here! shall we wag?
Page. Have with you.—I had rather hear them scold than see them fight.
[Exeunt Host, Shallow, and Page.
Ford. Though Page be a secure fool, and stands so firmly on his wife's fidelity, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily: she was in his company at Page's house, and what they made there, I know not. Well,
I will look farther into 't; and I have a device to sound Falstaff. If I find her honest, I lose not my livery; if she be otherwise, 'tis labour well bestowed.
[Exit.

SCENE II.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

[Enter Falstaff and Pistol.
Fal. I will not lend thee a penny.
Pist. Why, then the world's a mine oyster,
Which I with sword will open.—
Fal. Not a penny. I have been content, sir, you should lay my countenance to pawn: I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you and your couch-fellow, Nyn; or else you had looked through the grate, like a gemini of baboons. I am damned in hell for swearing to gentlemen, my friends, you were good soldiers, and tall fellows: and when mistress Bridget lost the handle of her fan, I took 't upon mine honour thon hadst it not.
Pist. Didst thou not share? hadst thou not fifteen pence?
Fal. Reason, you rogue, reason: think'st thou, I'll endanger my soul gratis? At a word, hang no more about me, I am no gibbet for you:—go.—A short knife and a thong:—to your manor of Pickt-hatch, 2 go.—
You'll not bear a letter for me, you rogue!—you stand upon your honour!—Why, thou unconfined baseness, it is as much as I can do, to keep the terms of my honour precise. f, f, I myself sometimes, leaving the fear of heaven on the left hand, and hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lunch; and yet, you rogue, will ensnare your rags, your cat-a-mountain looks, your red-lattice\(^1\) phrases, and your bold-beating\(^2\) oaths, under the shelter of your honour! You will not do it, you?

Pist. I do relent: what wouldst thou more of man?

Enter Robin.

Rod. Sir, here’s a woman would speak with you.

Fal. Let her approach.

Enter Mistress Quickly.

Quick. Give your worship good-morrow.

Fal. Good-morrow, good wife.

Quick. Not so, an’t please your worship.

Fal. Good maid, then.

Quick. I’ll be sworn; as my mother was, the first hour I was born.

Fal. I do believe the swearer. What with me?

Quick. Shall I vouchsafe your worship a word or two?

Fal. Two thousand, fair woman; and I’ll vouchsafe thee the hearing.

Quick. There is one mistress Ford, sir:—I pray, come a little nearer this ways.—I myself dwell with master doctor Cajus.

Fal. Well, on: Mistress Ford, you say,—

Quick. Your worship says very true;—I pray your worship, come a little nearer this ways.

Fal. I warrant thee, nobody hears:—mine own people, mine own people.

Quick. Are they so? Heaven bless them, and make them his servants!

Fal. Well: Mistress Ford;—what of her?

Quick. Why sir, she’s a good creature. Lord, lord! your worship’s a wanton: well, heaven forgive you, and all of us, I pray!

Fal. Mistress Ford;—come, mistress Ford.

Quick. Marry, this is the short and the long of it. You have brought her into such a canaries, as it is wonderful the best couriers of them all, when the court lay at Windsor, could never have brought her to such a canary; yet there has been knights, and lords, and gentlemen, with their coaches; I warrant you, coach after coach, letter after letter, gift after gift; smelling so sweetly, all musk, and so rushing, I warrant you, in silk and gold; and in such alligant terms; and in such wine and sugar of the best, and the fairest, that would have won any woman’s heart, and, I warrant you, they could never get an eye-wink of her.—I had myself twenty angels given me of a morning\(^3\); but I defy all angels, (in any such sort, as they say,) but in the way of honesty:—and, I warrant you, they could never get her so much as sip on a cup with the proudest of them all; and yet there has been carls, nay, which is more pensioners\(^4\); but, I warrant you, all is one with her.

Fal. But what says she to me? be brief, my good she Mercery.

Quick. Marry, she hath received your letter, for the which she thanks you a thousand times; and she gives you to notify, that her husband will be absence from his house between ten and eleven.

Fal. Ten and eleven?

Quick. Ay, forsooth; and then you may come and see the picture, she says, what you wot of; master Ford, her husband, will be from home. Alas! the sweet woman leads an ill life with him; he’s a very jealous man; she leads a very tramplold\(^5\) life with him, good heart.

Fal. Ten and eleven.—Woman, commend me to her; I will not fail her.

Quick. Why, you say well. But I have another messenger to your worship: mistress Page hath her hearty commendations to you too:—and let me tell you in your ear, she’s as furtious a civil modest wife, and one (I tell you) that will not miss you morning nor evening prayer, as any is in Windsor, who’er be the other: and she bade me tell your worship, that her husband is seldom from home, but she hopes there will come a time. I never knew a woman so dote upon a man; surely, I think you have charms, la; yes, in truth.

Fal. Not I, I assure thee: setting the attraction of my good parts aside, I have no other charms.

Quick. Blessing on your heart for’t!

Fal. But I pray thee, tell me this: has Ford’s wife, and Page’s wife, acquainted each other how they love me?

Quick. That were a jest, indeed!—they have not so little grace, I hope:—that were a trick, indeed! But mistress Page would desire you to send her your little page, of all loves;\(^6\) her husband has a marvellous infeention to the little page; and, truly, master Page is an honest man. Never a wife in Windsor leads a better life than she does: do what she will, say what she will, take all, pay all, go to her—Quick, she list, rise when she list, all is as she will; and truly, she deserves it, for if there be a kind woman in Windsor, she is one. You must send her your page; no remedy.

Fal. Why, I will.

Quick. Nay, but do so, then: and, look you, he may come and go between you both; and, in any case, have a hayword,\(^7\) that you may know one another’s mind, and the boy never need to understand any thing: for ’t is not good that children should know any wickedness; old folks, you know, have discretion, as they say, and know the world.

Fal. Fare thee well: commend me to them both.

There’s my purse: I am yet thy debtor.—Boy, go along with this woman.—This news distracts me.

Exit Mrs. Quickly and Robin.

Pist. This punk is one of Cupid’s carriers.—Clap on more sails; pursue, up with your fights.\(^8\) Give fire! She is my prize, or ocean whelm them all!

Exit Pistol.

Fal. Say’st thou so, old Jack? go thy ways; I’ll make more of thy old body than I have done. Will they yet look after thee? Wilt thou, after the expense of so much money, be now a gainer? Good body, I thank thee: let them say, ‘t is grossly done; so it be fairly done, no matter.

Enter Bardolph.

Bard. Sir John, there’s one master Brook below would fain speak with you, and be acquainted with you; and hath sent your worship a morning’s draught of sack.\(^9\)

Fal. Brook, is his name?

Bard. Ay, sir.

Fal. Call him in; [Exit Bardolph.] Such Brocks are welcome to me, that o’erflow such liquor. Ah! mistress Ford and mistress Page, have I encompassed you? go lo; via!—Re-enter Bardolph, with Ford disguised.

Ford. Bless you, sir.

Fal. And you, sir: would you speak with me?

Ford. I make bold, to press with so little preparation upon you.

Fal. You’re welcome. What’s your will?—Give us leave, drawer.

Exit Bardolph.

Ford. Sir, I am a gentleman that have spent much: my name is Brook.
Fal. Good master Brook, I desire more acquaintance of you.
Ford. Good sir John, I sue for yours: not to charge you, for I must let you understand, I think myself in better plight for the lender than you are: the which hath something embolden'd me to this unseasoned intrusion, for, they say, if money go before, all ways do lie open.
Fal. Money is a good soldier, sir, and will on.
Ford. Troth, and I have a bag of money here troubles me: if you will help to bear it sir John, take half, or all,1 for easing of the carriage.
Fal. Sir, I know not how I may deserve to be your porter.
Ford. I will tell you, sir, if you will give me the hearing.
Fal. Speak, good master Brook: I shall be glad to be your servant.
Ford. Sir, I hear you are a scholar,—I will be brief with you,—and you have been a man long known to me, though I had never so good means, as desire, to make myself acquainted with you. I shall discover a thing to you, wherein I must very much lay open mine own imperfection; but, good sir John, as you have one eye upon my follies, as you hear them unfolded, turn another into the register of your own, that I may pass with a reproof the easier, sth you yourself know, how easy it is to be such an offender.
Fal. Very well, sir; proceed.
Ford. There is a gentlewoman in this town, her husband's name is Ford.
Fal. Well, sir.
Ford. I have long loved her, and, I protest to you, bestowed much on her; followed her with a doting observance; engrossed opportunities to meet her; fee'd every slight occasion, that could but niggardly give me sight of her: not only bought many presents to give her, but have given largely to many, to know what she would have given. Briefly, I have pursued her, as love hath pursued me, which hath been on the wing of all occasions: but whatsoever I have merited, either in my mind, or in my means, mead, I am sure, I have received none, unless experience be a jewel; that I have been enchanted at an infinite rate, and that hath taught me to say this:
Love like a shadow flies, when substance love pursues;
Pursuing that that flies, and flying what pursues.
Fal. Have you received no promise of satisfaction at her hands?
Ford. Never.
Fal. Have you importuned her to such a purpose?
Ford. Never.
Fal. Of what quality was your love then?
Ford. Like a fair house, built upon another man's ground; so that I have lost my edifice, by mistaking the place where I erected it.
Fal. To what purpose have you unfolded this to me?
Ford. When I have told you that, I have told you all. Some say, that though she appear honest to me, yet in other places she enlargeth her mirth so far, that there is shrewd construction made of her. Now, sir John, here is the heart of my purpose: you are a gentleman of excellent breeding, admirable discourse, of great admittance, authentic in your place and person, generally allowed for your many war-like, court-like, and learned preparations.
Fal. O, sir!

Footnotes:
1 take all, or half; in f. e. 2 soul : m f e 3 Knowing himself one

Ford. Believe it, for you know it.—There is money; spend it, spend it: spend more; spend all I have, only give me so much of your time in exchange of it, as to lay an amiable siege to the honour of this Ford's wife: use your art of wooing, win her to consent to you; if any man may, you may as soon as any.
Fal. Would it apply well to the vehemency of your affection, that I should win what you would enjoy? Methinks, you prescribe to yourself very preposterously.
Ford. O! understand my drift. She dwells so securely on the excellency of her honour, that the folly of my suit2 dares not present itself: she is too bright to be looked against. Now, could I come to her with any detection in my hand, my desires had instance and argument to commend themselves; I could drive her, then, from the ward of her purity, her reputation, her marriage vow, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too strongly embattled against me. What say you to't, sir John?
Fal. Master Brook, I will first make bold with your money; next, give me your hand; and last, as I am a gentleman, you shall, if you will, enjoy Ford's wife.
Ford. O good sir!
Fal. I say you shall.
Ford. Want no money, sir John; you shall want none.
Fal. Want no mistress Ford, master Brook; you shall want none. I shall be with her (I may tell you) by her own appointment; even as you came in to me, her assistant, or go-between, parted from me: I say, I shall be with her between ten and eleven; for at that time the jealous rascally knave, her husband, will be forth. Come you to me at night; you shall know how I speed.
Ford. I am blest in your acquaintance. Do you know Ford, sir?
Fal. Hang him, poor cuckoldly knave! I know him not.—Yet I wrong him to call him poor: they say, the jealous wittol knave hath masses of money, for the which his wife seems to me well-favoured. I will use her as the key of the cuckoldry rogue's coffer, and there's my harvest-home.
Ford. I would you knew Ford, sir, that you might avoid him, if you saw him.
Fal. Hang him, mechanical salt-butter rogue! I will stare him out of his wits; I will awe him with my cudgel: it shall hang like a meteor o'er the cuckold's horns: master Brook, thou shalt know I will predominate over the peasant, and thou shalt lie with his wife. —Come to me soon at night.—Ford's a knave, and I will aggravate his style; thou, master Brook, shall know him for a knave and cuckold.—Come to me soon at night.

[Exit.

Ford. What a damned Epicurean rascal is this!—My heart is ready to crack with impatience.—Who says, this is improvident jealousy? my wife hath sent to him, the hour is fixed, the match is made. Would any man have thought this?—See the hell of having a false woman! my bed shall be abused, my coffers ransacked, my reputation gnawed at; and I shall not only receive this villainous wrong, but stand under the adoption of abominable terms, and by him that does me this wrong.

Terms of name!—Amaimon sounds well; Lucifer, well; Barbaras, well; yet they are devils' additions, the names of fiends: but cuckold! wittol cuckold! the devil himself hath not such a name. Page is an ass, a secure ass; he will trust his wife, he will not be jealous: I will rather trust a Fleming with my butter, parson Hugh the Welshman with my cheese, an Irishman with my aqua vitae bottle, or a thief to walk my ambling gelding, than my wife with herself: then she plots, then she runnites, then she devises; and what they think in their hearts they may effect, they will break their hearts but they will effect. Heaven be praised for my jealousy!—Eleven o’clock the hour: I will prevent this, detect my wife, be revenged on Falstaff, and laugh at Page. I will about it: better three hours too soon, than a minute too late. Fie, fie! cuckold! cuckold! cuckold! [Exit."

SCENE III.—Windsor Park.

Enter CAIUS and RUGBY.

Caius. Jack Rugby!

Rug. Sir.

Caius. Vais de clock, Jack?

Rug. 'Tis past the hour, sir, that sir Hugh promised to meet.

Caius. By gar, he has save his soul, dat he is no come: he has pray his Pible veal, dat he is no come. By gar, Jack Rugby, he is dead already, if he be come.

Rug. He is wise, sir; he knew your worship would kill him, if he came.

Caius. By gar, de herring is no dead, so as I will kill him. Take your rapier, Jack; I will tell you how I will kill him.

Rug. Alas, sir! I cannot fence. [Runs back afraid.]

Caius. Villainy, take your rapier.

Rug. Forsbear; here’s company.

Enter Host, SHALLOW, SLENDER, and PAGE.

Host. Bless thee, bully doctor.

Shal. Save you, master doctor Caius.

Page. Now, good master doctor.

Shal. Give you good-morrow, sir.

Caius. Vat be all you, one, two, tree, four, come for?

Host. To see thee fight; to see thee fain, to see thee traverse, to see thee here, to see thee there; to see thee pass thy panto, thy stock, thy reverse, thy distance, thy montant. Is he dead, my Ethiopian? is he dead, my Francesio? ha, bully! What says my Zesen-lapius? my Galen? my heart of elder? ha! is he dead, bully-stale? is he dead?

Caius. By gar, he is de coward Jack priest of the world; he is not show his face.

Host. Thou art a Castilian-king-Urinal. 3 Hector of Greece, my boy.

Caius. I pray you, bear witness that I have stay six or seven, two, three hours for him, and he is no come.

Shal. He is the wiser man, master doctor: he is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies; if you should fight, you go against the hair of your professions. Is it not true, master Page?

Page. Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace.

Shal. Bodykins, master Page, though I now be old, and of the peace, if I see a sword out, my finger itches to make one. Though we are justices, and doctors, and churchmen, master Page, we have some salt of our youth in us; we are the sons of women, master Page.

Page. ’Tis true, master Shallow.

Shal. It will be found so, master Page.—Master doctor Caius, I am come to fetch you home. I am sworn of the peace: you have showed yourself a wise physician, and sir Hugh hath shown himself a wise and patient churchman. You must go with me, master doctor.

Host. Pardon, guest-justice.—A word, Monsieur Mock-water.

Caius. Mock-water! vat is dat?

Host. Mock-water, in our English tongue, is valour, bully.

Caius. By gar, then, I have as much mock-water as de Englishman.—Seurvy jack-dog priest! by gar, me will cut his ears.

Host. That is, he will make thee amend.

Caius. By gar, me do look, he shall elappen-do-claw me; for, by gar, me will have it.

Host. And I will provoke him to’t, or let him wag.

Caius. Me tank you for dat.

Host. And moreover, bully.—But first, master guest, and master Page, and cde cavaliero Slenor; go you through the town to Frogmore. [Aside to them.]

Page. Sir Hugh is there, is he?

Host. He is there: see what humour he is in, and I will bring the doctor about by the fields. Will it do well?

Shal. We will do it.

Caius. By gar, me will kill de priest, for he speak for a jack-an-ape to Anne Page.

Host. Let him die. Sheathe thy impatience; throw cold water on thy choler. Go about the fields with me through Frogmore; I will bring thee where mistress Anne Page is, at a farm-house a feasting, and thou shall woo her. Curds and cream, I said I well?

Caius. By gar, me tank you for dat: by gar, I love you; and I shall procure-a you do good guest, de earl, de knight, de lords, de gentlemen, my patients.

Host. For the which I will be thy adversary toward Anne Page: said I well?

Caius. By gar, ’tis good; vell said.

Host. Let us wag then.

Caius. Come at my heels, Jack Rugby. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Field near Frogmore.

Enter Sir HUGH EVANS, with a book, and SIMPLE.

Eva. I pray you now, good master Slenor’s servingman, and friend Simple by your name, which way have you looked for master Caius, that calls himself Doctor of Physic?

Sim. Marry, sir, the pit-way, the park-way, 3 old Windsor way, and every way, but the town way.

Eva. I most vehemently desire you, you will also look that way.

Sim. I will, sir. [Retiring.

Eva. Pless my soul, how full of choler I am, and trembling of mind!—I shall be glad, if he have deceived me. How melancholy I am!—I will knog his urinals about his knave’s costard, when I have good opportunities for the ‘ork.—Pless my soul! [Sings.

1 This direction is not in f. c. 2 The elder has a soft pitch. 3 Knight reads, Castilian, King-Urinal. The Spaniards were, of course, in great disfavour with the English when this play was written. 4 cried game: in f. c. 5 the petty-ward, the park-ward, every way: in f. c.

To shallow—

Mercy on me! I have a great disposition to cry. [Sings.]—

Melodious birds sing madrigals;— When as I sat in Paphion, And a thousand vagrant posies.

To shallow—

Sim. [Coming forward.] Yonder he is coming, this way, sir Hugh.

Eva. He's welcome. [Sings.]

To shallow rivers, to whose falls—

Heaven prosper the right!—What weapons is he? Simon. No weapons, sir. There comes my master, master Shallow, and another gentleman, from Frogmore, over the stile, this way.

Eva. Pray you, give me my gown; or else keep it in your arms.

Enter PAGE, SHALLOW, and SLENDER. Shal. How now, master parson! Good-morrow, good sir Hugh. Keep a gamaster from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful. Slen. Ah, sweet Anne Page!

Page. Save you, good sir Hugh.

Eva. Piss you from his mercy sake, all of you! Shal. What! the sword and the word? do you study them both, master parson?

Page. And youthful still, in your doublet and hose, this raw rheumatic day?

Eva. There is reasons and causes for it.

Page. We are come to you to do a good office, master parson.

Eva. Fery well: what is it?

Page. Yonder is a most reverence gentleman, who, belike having received wrong by some person, is at most odds with his own gravity and patience that ever you saw.

Shal. I have lived fourscore years, and upward, I never heard a man of his place, gravity, and learning, so wide of his own respect.

Eva. What is he?

Page. Think you know him; master doctor Caius, the renowned French physician.

Eva. Got's will, and his passion of my heart! I had as lief you would tell me a mess of porridge.

Page. Why?

Eva. He has no more knowledge in Hibernocrates and Galen,—and he is a knave besides; a cowardly knave, as you would desire to be acquainted withal.

Page. I warrant you, he's the man should fight with him.

Slen. O, sweet Anne Page!

Shal. It appears so, by his weapons.—Keep them asunder.—Here comes master doctor Caius. [Enter Host, Caius, and REGENCY. Page. Nay, good master parson, keep in your weapon. Shal. So do you, good master doctor.

Host. Disarm them, and let them question: let them keep their limbs whole, and hack our English.

Caius. I pray you, let me speak a word vit your ear: veriefore will you not meet-a me?

Eva. Pray you, use your patience: in good time.

Caius. By gar, you are de coward, de Jack dog, John ape.

Eva. Pray you, let us not be laughing-stogs to other men's humours; I desire you in friendship, and I will one way or other make you amends.—I will knog your urinals about your knave's egscomb for missing your meetings and appointments.

Caius. Diable!—Enter Rugby.—mine Host de Jarretière, have I not stay for him, to kill him? have I not, at de place I did appoint?

Eva. As I am a Christian soul, now, look you, this is the place appointed. I'll be judgment by mine Host of the Garter.

Host. Peace, I say! Gallia and Guallia, French and Welsh; soul-eurer and body-eurer.

Caius. Ay, dat is very good: excellent.

Host. Peace, I say! I hear mine Host of the Garter. Am I polite? am I subtile? am I a Machiavel? Shall I lose my doctor? no; he gives me the potions, and the motions. Shall I lose my parson? my priest? my sir Hugh? no; he gives me the proverbs and the nonverbs.—Give me thy hands, celestial and terrestrial;—so—Boys of art, I have deceived you both; I have directed you to wrong places: your hearts are mighty, your skins are whole, and let burnt sack be the issue.

—Come, lay their swords to pawn.—Follow me, lad of peace: follow, follow, follow.

Shal. Trust me, a mad host.—Follow, gentlemen, follow.

Caius. Ha! do I perceive dat! have you make-a a do set of us? ha, ha, ha!

Host. This is well, he has made us his vulturing-stog.—I desire you, that we may be friends, and let us knog our prains together to be revenge on this same scall, scurry, cogging companion, the Host of the Garter.

Caius. By gar, vit all my heart. He promise to bring me vere is Anne Page: by gar, he deceive me too.

Eva. Well, I will smite his noddles.—Pray you, follow. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Street in Windsor.

Enter Mistress PAGE and ROBIN.

Mrs. Page. Nay, keep your way, little gallant: you were wont to be a follower; but now you are a leader. Whether had you rather, lead mine eyes, or eye your mistress heels?

Rob. I had rather, forsooth, go before you like a man, than follow him like a dwarf.

Mrs. Page. O! you are a flattering boy: now, I see, you will be a courtier.

Enter FORD.

Ford. Well met, mistress Page. Whither go you?

Mrs. Page. Truly, sir, to see your wife: is she at home?

Ford. Ay; and as idle as she may hang together, for want of your company. I think, if your husbands were dead, you two would marry.

Mrs. Page. Be sure of that,—two other husbands.

Ford. Where had you this pretty weathercock?

Mrs. Page. I cannot tell what the dicken's his name is my husband had him of.—What do you call your knight's name, sirrah?

Rob. Sir John Falstaff.

Ford. Sir John Falstaff! Mrs. Page. He, he; I can never hit on his name—There is such a league between my good man and him! Is your wife at home indeed?

Ford. Indeed, she is.

Mrs. Page. By your leave, sir: I am sick, till I see her. [Exeunt Mrs. Page and Robin.

1 A quotation from Marlowe's "Passionate Pilgrim." 2 Not in E. 3 The folios have: hands celestial, so. Malbone altered it to "Give me thy hand terrestrial, so; give me thy hand celestial, so." 4 Scalde-head.
Ford. Hath Page any brains! hath he any eyes? hath he any thinking? Sure, they sleep; he hath no use of them. Why, this boy will carry a letter twenty miles, as easy as a cannon will shoot point-blank twelve score. He pieces out his wife’s inclination; he gives her folly motion, and advantage: and now she’s going to my wife, and Falstaff’s boy with her. A man may hear this shower sing in the wind:— and Falstaff’s boy with her!—Good plots!—they are laid; and our revolting wives share damnation together. Well; I will take him; thou, torture my wife, pluck the borrowed veil of modesty from the so-scarring mistress Page, divulge Page himself for a secure and willful Acton; and to these violent proceedings all my neighbours shall cry aim. [Clock strikes ten.] The clock gives me my cue, and my assurance bids me search; there I shall find Falstaff. I shall be rather praised for this, than mocked; for it is as positive as the earth is firm, that Falstaff is there: I will go.

Enter Page, Shallow, Slender, Host, Sir Hugh Evans, Caicus, and Rugby.

Page. Shal. 5e. Well met, master Ford.
Ford. Trust me, a good knot. I have good cheer at home, and I pray you all go with me.
Shal. I must fancy myself, master Ford.
Slen. And so must I, sir:—we have appointed to dine with mistress Anne, and I would not break with her for more money than I’ll speak of.
Shal. We have lingered about a match between Anne Page and my cousin Slender, and this day we shall have our answer.
Slen. I hope, I have your good will, father Page.
Page. You have, master Slender; I stand wholly for you:—but my wife, master doctor, is for you altogether.
Caicus. Ay, by gar; and de maid is love-a me: my nursh-a quickly tell me so much.
Host. What say you to young master Fenton? he capers, he dances, he has eyes of youth, he writes verses, he speaks holyday, he smells April and May: he will carry #, he will carry *; # is in his buttons; he will carry *.
Page. Not by my consent, I promise you. The gentleman is of no having: he kept company with the wild Prince and Poins; he is of too high a region; he knows too much. No, he shall not knit a knot in his fortunes with the finger of my substance: if he take her, let him take her simply: the wealth I have waits on my consent, and my consent goes not that way.
Ford. I beseech you, heartily, some of you go-home with me to dinner: besides your cheer, you shall have sport; I will show you a monster.—Master doctor, you shall go:—so shall you, master Page;—and you, sir Hugh.
Shal. Well, fare you well.—We shall have the freer wounding at master Page’s.

[Exit Shallow and Slender.
Caicus. Go home, John Rugby; I come anon.

[Exit Rugby.
Host. Farewell, my hearts. I will to my honest knight Falstaff, and drink canary with him. [Exit Host. Ford. [Aside.] I think, I shall drink in pipe-wine first with him; I shall make him dance. Will you go, gentles?
All. Have with you, to see this monster. [Exit.

SCENE III.—A Room in Ford’s House.

Enter Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Ford. What, John! what, Robert!

Mrs. Page. Quickly, quickly. Is the buck-basket—
Mrs. Ford. I warrant.—What, Robin, I say!

Enter Servants with a large Basket.

Mrs. Page. Come, come, come.

Mrs. Ford. Here, set it down.

Mrs. Page. Give your men the charge: we must be brief.

Mrs. Ford. Marry, as I told you before, John, and Robert, be ready here hard by in the brew-house; and when I suddenly call you, come forth, and (without any pause or stopping) take this basket on your shoulders: that done, trudge with it in all haste, and carry it among the whistlers 4 in Datchet mead, and there empty it in the mudd’st ditch close by the Thames side.

Mrs. Page. You will do it?
Mrs. Ford. I have told them over and over; they lack no direction. Be gone, and come when you are called.

[Exeunt Servants.

Mrs. Page. Here comes little Robin.

Enter Robin.

Mrs. Ford. How now, my eyes-musket 5 what news with you?

Rob. Your master, sir John, is come in at your back-door, mistress Ford, and requests your company.

Mrs. Page. You little Jack-a-lent, have you been true to us?

Rob. Ay, I’ll be sworn: my master knows not of your being here: and hath threatened to put me into everlasting libery, if I tell you of it, for he swears he’ll turn me away.

Mrs. Page. Thou’rt a good boy; this secrecy of thine shall be a tailor to thee, and shall make thee a new doublet and hose. I’ll go hide me.

Mrs. Ford. Do so.—Go tell thy master, I am alone. Mistress Page, remember you your cue. [Exit Robin.

Mrs. Page. I warrant thee: if I do not act it, hiss me.

[Exit Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Ford. Go to, then: we’ll use this unworthy humility, this gross watery pummon;—we’ll teach him to know turtles from jays.

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Have I caught thee, my heavenly jewel? 6 Why, now let me die, for I have lived long enough: this is the period of my ambition. 0 this blessed hour!

Mrs. Ford. O, sweet sir John!

Fal. Mistress Ford, I cannot cog, I cannot prate, mistress Ford. Now shall I sin in my wish: I would thy husband were dead, I’ll speak it before the best lord, I would make thee my lady.

Mrs. Ford. I your lady, sir John? alas, I should be a pitiful lady.

Fal. Let the court of France show me such another. I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond: thou hast the right arch’d beauty of the brow, that becomes the ship-tire, the tire-valiant, or any tire of Venetian adornment.

Mrs. Ford. A plain kerchief, sir John: my brows become nothing else; nor that well neither.

Fal. By the Lord, thou art a tyrant to say so: thou wouldest make an absolute courtier; and the firm fixture of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait in a semi-circled farthingale. I see what thouwert, if fortune thy foot were not, 7 nature thy friend: come, thou canst not hide it.

Mrs. Ford. Believe me, there’s no such thing in me.

Fal. What made me love thee? let that persuade thee, there’s something extraordinary in thee. Come; I cannot cog, and say thou art this and that, like a

THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

SCENE III.

Mrs. Page. What! sir John Falstaff? Are these your letters, knight?

Fal. I love thee: help me away; let me creep in here; I’ll never—

[He gets into the basket, and falls over:—they cover him with foul linen.]

Mrs. Page. Help, cover your master, boy. Call your men, mistress Ford,—You dissembling knight!

Mrs. Ford. What, John! Robert! John! [Exit Robin. Re-enter Servants.] Go, take up these clothes here, quickly; where’s the cloth-staff? look, how you drumble: carry them to the laundress in Datchet mead; quickly, come.

Enter Ford, Page, Caius, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. Pray you, come near: if I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me, then let me be your jest; I deserve it.—How now! whither bear you this? Serve. To the laundress, forsooth.

Mrs. Ford. Why, what have you to do whither they bear it? you were best meddle with buck-washing.

Ford. Buck! I would I could wash myself of the buck! Buck, buck, buck! Ay, buck; I warrant you, buck, and of the season too, it shall appear. [Exit Servants with the basket.] Gentlemen, I have dreamed to-night: I'll tell you my dream. Here, here, here be my keys: ascend my chambers, search, seek, find out: I'll warrant, we'll unkennel the fox.—Let me stop this way first:—so, now uncape.

Page. Good master Ford, be contented: you wrong yourself too much.

Ford. True, master Page. — Up, gentlemen; you shall see sport anon: follow me, gentlemen. [Exit.]

Ev. This is very fantastical humour, and jealousies.

Caius. By gar, 'tis no de fashion of France: it is not jealous in France.

Page. Nay, follow him, gentlemen: see the issue of his search. [Exit Page, Evans, and Caius.]

Mrs. Page. Is there not a double excellency in this? Mrs. Ford. I know not which pleases me better, that my husband is deceived, or sir John.

Mrs. Page. What a taking was he in, when your husband asked who was in the basket! Mrs. Ford. I am half afraid he will have need of washing; so, throwing him into the water will do him a benefit.

Mrs. Page. Hang him, dishonest rascal! I would all of the same strain were in the same distress.

Mrs. Ford. I think, my husband hath some special suspicion of Falstaff’s being here, for I never saw him so gross in his jealousy till now.

Mrs. Page. I will lay a plot to try that; and we will yet have more tricks with Falstaff: his disolute disease will scarce obey this medicine.

Mrs. Ford. Shall we send that foolish carion, mistress Quickly, to him, and excise his throwing into the water; and give him another hope, to betray him to another punishment?

Mrs. Page. We’ll do it: let him be sent for to-morrow eight o’clock, to have amends.

Re-enter Ford, Page, Caius, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. I cannot find him: may be, the knave bragg’d of that he could not compass.

Mrs. Page. Heard you that?

Mrs. Ford. Heaven make you better than your thoughts!

Ford. Amen.

Mrs. Page. You do yourself mighty wrong, master

1 Herb. 2 Not in f. e. 3 A stick for two to carry a basket with two handles by. 4 Drene, loiter.
Ford. Ay, ay; I must bear it.

Eva. If there be any pody in the house, and in the chambers, and in the coffers, and in the presses, heaven forgive my sins at the day of judgment.

Caius. By gar, nor I too; dere is no bodies.

Page. Pie, fie, master Ford! are you not ashamed? What spirit, what devil suggests this imagination? I would not have your distemper in this kind for the wealth of Windsor Castle.

Ford. 'Tis my fault, master Page: I suffer for it.

Eva. You suffer for a pad conscience: your wife is as honest a woman as I will desires among five thousand, and five hundred too.

Caius. By gar, I see 't is an honest woman.

Ford. Well; I promised you a dinner.—Come, come, walk in the park: I pray you, pardon me; I will hereafter make known to you, why I have done this.—Come, wife;—come, mistress Page: I pray you pardon me; pray heartily, pardon me.

Page. Let's go in, gentlemen; but trust me, we'll mock him. I do invite you to-morrow morning to my house to breakfast; after, we'll a birding together: I have a fine hawk for the bush. Shall it be so?

Ford. Any thing.

Eva. If there is one, I shall make two in the company.

Caius. If there be one or two, I shall make a de rurd.

Eva. I pray you now, remembrance to-morrow on the lousy knave, mine Host.

Caius. Dat is good; by gar, vit all my heart.

Eva. A lousy knave! to have his gibes, and his mockeries.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Page's House.

Enter Fenton and Anne Page.

Fent. I see, I cannot get thy father's love; therefore, no more turn me to him, sweet Nan.

Anne. Alas! how then?

Fent. Why, thou must be thyself. He doth object, I am too great of birth.
And that my state being gall'd with my expense, I seek to heal it only by his wealth.
Beside these, other bars he lays before me,—
My riots past, my wild societies;
And tells me, 'tis a thing impossible
I should love thee, but as a property.

Anne. May be, he tells you true.

Fent. No, heaven so speed me in my time to come!
Albeit, I will confess, thy father's wealth
Was the first motive that I woo'd thee, Anne:
Yet, wooing thee, I found thee of more value
Than stamps in gold, or sums in sealed bags;
And 'tis the very riches of thyself
That now I aim at.

Anne. Gentle master Fenton,
Yet seek my father's love; still seek it, sir:
If opportunity and humblest suit
Cannot attain it, why then,—Hark you hither.

[They talk apart.]

Enter SHALLOW, SLENDER, and MRS. QUICKLY.

Shal. Break their talk, mistress Quickly, my kinsman shall speak for himself.

Slen. I'll make a shaft or a bolt on't. 'Slid, 'tis but yermauring.

Shal. Be not dismay'd.

Slen. No, she shall not dismay me: I care not for that,—but that I am afraid.

Quick. Hark ye; master Slender would speak a word with you.

1 Not in f. o.

Anne. I come to him.—This is my father's choice.
O, what a world of vile ill-favour'd faults
Looks handsome in three hundred pounds a year!

Quick. And how does good master Fenton? Pray you, a word with you.

Shal. She's coming; to her, coz. O boy! thou hast a father.

Slen. I had a father, mistress Anne: my uncle can tell you good jests of him.—Pray you, uncle, tell mistress Anne the jest, how my father stole two geese out of a pen, good uncle.

Shal. Mistress Anne, my cousin loves you.

Slen. Ay, that I do; as well as I love any woman in Gloucestershire.

Shal. He will maintain you like a gentlewoman.

Slen. Ay, that I will, come cut and long-tail, under the degree of a 'squire.

Shal. He will make you a hundred and fifty pounds jointure.

Anne. Good master Shallow, let him woo for himself.

Shal. Marry, I thank you for it; I thank you for that good comfort. She calls you, coz: I'll leave you.

[Sends back.

Anne. Now, master Slender.

Slen. Now, good mistress Anne.

Anne. What is your will?

Slen. My will? od's heartlings! that's a pretty jest, indeed. I ne'er made my will yet, I thank heaven; I am not such a sickly creature, I give heaven praise.

Anne. I mean, master Slender, what would you with me?

Slen. Truly, for mine own part, I would little or nothing with you. Your father, and my uncle, have made motions: if it be my luck, so; if not, happy man be his does. They can tell you how things go, better than I can: you may ask your father; here he comes.

Page. Now, master Slender!—Love him, daughter Anne.

Why, how now! what does master Fenton here?
You wrong me, sir, thus still to haunt my house:
I told you, sir, my daughter is disposed of.

Fent. Nay, master Page, be not impatient.

Mrs. Page. Good master Fenton, come not to my child.

Page. She is no match for you.

Fen. Sir, will you hear me?

Page. No, no, good master Fenton.

Come, master Shallow;—come, son Slender;—in—
Knowing my mind, you wrong me, master Fenton.

[Exeunt Page, Shallow, and Slender.

Quick. Speak to mistress Page.

Fent. Good mistress Page, for that I love your daughter
In such a righteous fashion as I do,
Perforce, against all cheeks, rebukes, and manners,
I must advance the colours of my love,
And not retire: let me have your good will.

Anne. Good mother, do not marry me to you! fool.

Mrs. Page. I mean it not; I seek you a better husband.

Quick. That's my master, master doctor.

Anne. Alas! I had rather be set quick i' the earth,
And bow'd to death with turnips.

Mrs. Page. Come, trouble not yourself. Good master Fenton,
I will not be your friend, nor enemy:
SCENE V.

THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

Exit.

My daughter will I question how she loves you, and as I find her, so am I affected.

"Till then, farewell, sir; she must needs go in; her father will be angry, [Exeunt Mrs. Page and Anne.]

Fent. Farewell, gentle mistress.—Farewell, Nan.

Quick. This is my doing, now.—Nay, said I, will you cast away your child on a fool, and a physician? look on, master Fenton.—This is my doing.

Fent. I thank thee; and I pray thee, once to-night give my sweet Nan this ring. There's for thy pains.

[Exit.]

Quick. Now, heaven send thee good fortune! A kind heart he hath: a woman would run through fire and water for such a kind heart. But yet I would my master had mistress Anne; or I would master Sir John had her; or, in sooth, I would master Fenton had her. I will do what I can for them all three; for so I have promised, and I will be as good as my word; but especially for master Fenton. Well, I must of another errand to sir John Falstaff from my two mistresses: what a beast am I to slack it.

[Exit.]

SCENE V.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Fal. Bardolph, I say!

Bard. Here, sir.

Fal. Go fetch me a quart of sack; put a toast in't. [Exit Bard.] Have I lived to be carried in a basket, like a barrow of butcher's offal, and to be thrown in the Thames? Well, if I be served such another trick, I'll have my brains ta'en out, and buttered, and give them to a dog for a new year's gift. The rogues slighted me into the river with as little remorse as they would have drowned a blind bitch's puppies, fifteen i't the litter; and you may know by my size, that I have a kind of alacrity in sinking: if the bottom were as deep as hell, I should drown. I had been drowned, but that the shore was shelvy and shallow; a death that I abhor, for the water swells a man, and what a thing should I have been, when I had been swallowed! I should have been a mountain of mummy.

Fal. Bardolph, with the sack.

Bard. Here's mistresse Quickly, sir, to speak with you.

Fal. Come, let me pour 'em in some to the Thames water; for my belly's so cold, as if I had swallowed snow-balls for pills to cool the reins. Call her in.

Bard. Come in, woman.

Enter Mrs. Quickly.

Quick. By your leave:—I cry you mercy: give your worship good-morrow.

Fal. Take away these chalices. Go, brew me a bottle of sack finely.

Bottle. With eggs, sir?

Fal. Simple of itself; I'll no pullet-sperm in my brewage. [Exit Bardoph.] How now?

Quick. Marry, sir: I come to your worship from mistresse Ford.

Fal. Mistresse Ford! I have had ford enough; I was thrown into the ford: I have my belly full of ford.

Quick. Alas the day! good heart, that was not her fault: she does so take on with her men; they mistook their ejection.

Fal. So did I mine, to build upon a foolish woman's promise.

Quick. Well, she laments, sir, for it, that it would yearn your heart to see it. Her husband goes this morning a birding: she desires you once more to come to her between eight and nine. I must carry her word quickly; she'll make you amends, I warrant you.

Fal. Well, I will visit her: tell her so; and bid her think, what a man is: let her consider his frailty, and then judge of her merit.

Quick. I will tell her.

Fal. Do so. Between nine and ten, say'st thou?

Quick. Eight and nine, sir.

Fal. Well, be gone: I will not miss her.

Quick. Peace be with you, sir.

Fal. I marvel, I hear not of master Brook: he sent me word to stay within. I like his money well. O! here he comes.

Enter Ford.

Ford. Bless you, sir.

Fal. Now, master Brook; you come to know what hath passed between me and Ford's wife?

Ford. That, indeed, sir John, is my business.

Fal. Master Brook, I will not lie to you. I was at her house the hour she appointed me.

Ford. And spet you, sir?

Fal. Very ill-favouredly, master Brook.

Ford. Howso, sir? Did she change her determination?

Fal. No, master Brook; but the peaking cornuto her husband, master Brook, dwelling in a continual larium of jealousy, comes me in the instant of our encounter, after we had embraced, kissed, protested, and, as it were, spoke the prologue of our comedy; and at his heels a rabble of his companions, thither provoked and instigated by his distemper, and, forsooth, to search his house for his wife's love.

Ford. What was where you were there?

Fal. While I was there.

Ford. And did he search for you, and could not find you?

Fal. You shall hear. As good luck would have it, comes in one mistresse Page; gives intelligence of Ford's approach: and by her invention, and Ford's wife's distraction, they conveyed me into a buck-basket.

Ford. A buck-basket!

Fal. By the Lord, a buck-basket; rammed me in with foul shirts and smocks, socks, foul stockings, and greasy napkins; that, master Brook; there was the rankest compound of villainous smell, that ever offended nostril.

Ford. And how long lay you there?

Fal. Nay, you shall hear, master Brook; what I have suffered, to bring this woman to evil for your good. Being thus crammed in the basket, a couple of Ford's knaves, his hinds, were called forth by their mistresses, to carry me in the name of foul clothes to Datchelanne: they took me on their shoulders; met the jealous knave, their master, in the door, who asked them once or twice what they had in their basket. I quaked for fear, lest the lunatic knave would have searched it; but fate, ordaining he should be a cuckold, held his hand. Well; on went he for a search, and away went I for foul clothes. But mark the sequel, master Brook: I suffered the pangs of three several deaths: first, an intolerable fright; to be detected with a jealous rotten devil-worship, next, to be compassed, like a good bilbo, in the circumference of a peck, hilt to point, heel to head: and then, to be stopped in, like a strong distillation, with stinking clothes that fretted in their own grease: think of that,—a man of my kidney,—think of that; that am as subject to heat, as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw: it was a miracle, to 'scape suffocation. And in the height of this bath, when I was more than half sweated in grease, like a Dutch dish, to be thrown into the Thames, and eooled, glowing hot, in that surge, like a horse shoe; think of that,—hissing hot,—think of that, master Brook.

Ford. In good sadness, sir, I am sorry that for my sake you have suffered all this. My suit, then, is desperate; you'll undertake her no more?
THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Street.

Enter Mrs. Page, Mrs. Quickly, and William.

Mrs. Page. Is he at master Ford's already, think'st thou?

Quick. Sure he is, by this, or will be presently; but truly, he is very courageous mad about his throwing into the water. Mistresses Ford desires you to come suddenly.

Mrs. Page. I'll be with her by and by: I'll but bring my young man here to school. Look, where his master comes: 'tis a playing day, I see.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans.

How now, sir Hugh! no school to-day?

Eva. No; master Slender is get1 the boys leave to play.

Quick. Blessing of his heart!

Mrs. Page. Sir Hugh, my husband says, my son profits nothing in the world at his book: I pray you, ask him some questions in his accidence.

Eva. Come hither, William: hold up your head; come.

Mrs. Page. Come on, sirrah: hold up your head; answer your master: be not afraid.

Eva. William, how many numbers is in nouns?

Will. Two.

Quick. Truly, I thought there had been one number more, because they say, 'od's nouns.

Eva. Peace your tattlings!—What is fair, William?

Will. Pulecher.

Quick. Pole-cats! there are fairer things than pole-cats, sure.

Eva. You are a very simplicity 'oman: I pray you, peace.—What is lapsis, William?

Will. A stone.

Eva. And what is a stone, William?

Will. A pebble.

Eva. No, it is lapsis: I pray you remember in your prain.

Will. Lapis.

Eva. That is good, William. What is he, William, that does lend articles?

Will. Articles are borrowed of the pronoun; and be thus declined, Singulariter, nominativo, hic, haec, hoc.

Eva. Nominativo, hig, hag, hog:—pray you, mark: genitivo, hujus. Well, what is your accusative case?

Will. Accusativo, hine.

Eva. I pray you eight have your remembrance, child; accusativo, hing, hang, hog.

Quick. Hang hog is Latin for bacon, I warrant you.

1 lot: in f. e. 2 Breeched, whipped. 3 Spry, quick.

do I sleep? Master Ford, awake! awake, master Ford! there's a hole made in your best coat, master Ford. This 'tis to be married; this 'tis to have linen, and buck-baskets.—Well, I will proclaim myself what I am: I will now take the leech; he is at my house: he cannot 'scape me; 'tis impossible he should: he cannot creep into a half-penny purse, nor into a pepper-box; but, lest the devil that guides him should aid him, I will search impossible places. Though what I am I cannot avoid, yet to be what I would not, shall not make me tame: if I have horns to make me mad, let the proverb go with me, I'll be horn mad.

Exit.

ACT IV.

Eva. Leave your prabbles, 'oman.—What is the vocative case, William?

Will. O—vocativo.—O.

Eva. Remember, William; vocativo is, caret.

Quick. And that's a good root.

Eva. 'Oman, forbear.

Mrs. Page. Peace!

Eva. What is your genitivo case plural, William?

Will. Genitivo case?

Eva. Ay.

Will. Genitivo.—horum, harum, horum.

Quick. Vengeance of Jenny's case! fie on her!—Never name her child, if she be a whore.

Eva. For shame, 'oman! Quick. You do ill to teach the child such words.—He teaches him to hick and to hack, which they'll do fast enough of themselves; and to call horum,—fie upon you!

Eva. 'Oman, art thou lunatics? hast thou no understandings for thy cases, and the numbers and the genders? Thou art as foolish Christian creatures as I would desires.

Mrs. Page. Pr'ythee hold thy peace.

Eva. Show me now, William, some declensions of your pronouns.

Will. Forsooth, I have forgot.

Eva. It is quis, qua, quod; if you forget your quis, your qua, and your quod, you must be preach3. Go your ways, and play; go.

Mrs. Page. He is a better scholar than I thought he was.

Eva. He is a good sprag2 memory. Farewell, mistresse Page.

Mrs. Page. Adieu, good sir Hugh. [Exit Sir Hugh.]

Get you home, boy.—Come, we stay too long.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in Ford's House.

Enter Falstaff and Mrs. Ford.

Fal. Mistress Ford, your sorrow hath eaten up my suuffrance. I see, you are obsequious in your love, and I profess requital to a hair's breadth; not only, Mrs. Ford, in the simple office of love, but in all the accoutrement, complement, and ceremony of it. But are you sure of your husband now?

Mrs. Ford. He's a birling, sweet sir John.

Mrs. Page. [Within.] What hoa! gossip Ford! what hoa!

Mrs. Ford. Step into the chamber, sir John.

[Exit Falstaff.
Enter Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Page. How now, sweet heart! who's at home besides yourself?

Mrs. Ford. Why, none but mine own people.

Mrs. Page. Indeed?

Mrs. Ford. No, certainly. — [Aside.] Speak louder.

Mrs. Page. Truly, I am so glad you have nobody here.

Mrs. Ford. Why?

Mrs. Page. Why, woman, your husband is in his old lunes again: he so takes on yonder with his husband; so rails against all married mankind; so curses all Eve's daughters, of what complexion soever; and so buffets him on the forehead, crying, "Peer-out, Peer-out!" that any madness I ever yet beheld seemed but tameness, civility, and patience, to this distemper he is in now. I am glad the fat knight is not here.

Mrs. Ford. Why, does he talk of him?

Mrs. Page. Of none but him; and swears, he was carried out, the last time he searched for him in a basket: protests to my husband he is now here, and hath drawn him and the rest of their company from their sport, to make another experiment of his suspicion. But I am glad the knight is not here; now he shall see his own folly.

Mrs. Ford. How near is he, mistress Page?

Mrs. Page. Hard by; at street end: he will be here anon.

Mrs. Ford. I am undone! the knight is here.

Mrs. Page. Why, then you are utterly shamed, and he's but a dead man. What a woman are you! — Away with him, away with him: better shame, than murder.

Mrs. Ford. Which way should he go? how should I bestow him? Shall I put him into the basket again?

Re-enter Falstaff in fright.

Fal. No, I'll come no more in the basket. May I not go out, ere he come?

Mrs. Page. Alas, three of master Ford's brothers watch the door with pistols, that none shall issue out; otherwise you might slip away ere he came. But what make you here?

Fal. What shall I do? — I'll creep up into the chimney.

Mrs. Ford. There they always use to discharge their birding-pieces. Creep into the kiln-hole.

Fal. Where is it?

Mrs. Ford. He will seek there, on my word. Neither press, coffer, chest, trunk, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places, and goes to them by his note; there is no hiding you in the house.

Fal. I'll go out, then.

Mrs. Page. If you go out in your own semblance, you die, sir John. Unless you go out disguised, Mrs. Ford. How might we disguise him?

Mrs. Page. Alas the day! I know not. There is no woman's gown big enough for him; otherwise, he might put on a hat, a muffle, and a kerchief, and so escape.

Fal. Good hearts, devise something: any extremity, rather than a mischief.

Mrs. Ford. My maid's aunt, the fat woman of Brentford, has a gown above.

Mrs. Page. On my word it will serve him; she's as big as he is: and there's her thrum'd hat, and her muffler too. — Run up, sir John.

Mrs. Ford. Go, go, sweet sir John: mistress Page and I will look some linen for your head.

Mrs. Page. Quick, quick: we'll come dress you straight; put on the gown the while. [Exit Falstaff.]

Mrs. Ford. I would my husband would meet him in this shape: he cannot abide the old woman of Brentford; he swears, she's a witch; forbade her my house, and hath threatened to beat her.

Mrs. Page. Heaven guide him to thy husband's cudgel, and the devil guide his cudgel afterwards!

Mrs. Ford. But is my husband coming?

Mrs. Page. Ay, in good sadness, is he; and talks of the basket too, howsoever he hath had intelligence.

Mrs. Ford. We'll try that; for I'll appoint my men to carry the basket again, to meet him at the door with it, as they did last time.

Mrs. Page. Nay, but he'll be here presently: let's go dress him like the witch of Brentford.

Mrs. Ford. I'll first direct my men, what they shall do with the basket. Go up, I'll bring linen for him straight. [Exit.]

Mrs. Page. Hang him, dishonest varlet! we cannot misuse him enough.

We'll leave a proof, by that which we will do, Wives may be merry, and yet honest too: We do not act, that often jest and laugh; 'Tis old but true, 'Still swine eat all the draft.' [Exit.]

Re-enter Mrs. Ford, with two Servants.

Mrs. Ford. Go, sirs, take the basket again on your shoulders: your master is hard at door; if he bid you set it down, obey him. Quickly; despatch. [Exit.]

1 Serv. Come, come, take it up.
2 Serv. Pray heaven, it be not full of knight again.
1 Serv. I hope not; I had as lief bear so much lead.

Enter Ford, Page, Shallow, Caius, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. Ay, but if it prove true, master Page, have you any way then to unfool me again? — Set down the basket, villains. — Somebody call my wife. — Youth in a basket! — O you Pandyer rascal! there's a knot, a ging, a pack, a conspiracy against me: now shall the devil be shamed. — What, wife, I say? Come, come forth: behold what honest clothes you send forth to bleaching.

Page. Why, this passes! Master Ford, you are not to go loose any longer; you must be pinioned.

Eva. Why, this is lunacies: this is mad as a mad dog.

Shal. Indeed, master Ford, this is not well; indeed.

Enter Mrs. Ford.

Ford. So say I too, sir. — Come hither, mistress Ford; mistress Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature; that hath the jealous fool to her husband. — I suspect without cause, mistress, do I?

Mrs. Ford. Heaven be my witness, you do, if you suspect me in any dishonesty.

Ford. Well said, brazen-face; hold it out. — Come forth, sirrah. — [Pulls the Clothes out, and throws them all over the stage.]

Page. This passes.

Mrs. Ford. Are you not ashamed? let the clothes alone.

Ford. I shall find you anon.

Eva. 'Tis unreasonable. Will you take up your wife's clothes? Come away.

Ford. Empty the basket, I say.

Mrs. Ford. Why, man, why,—

Ford. Master Page, as I am a man, there was one conveyed out of my house yesterday in this basket: why may not he be there again? In my house I am 1 in fright: not in f. e. 2 Gang. 3 The rest of the direction not in f. e.
THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

Act IV.

Scene III.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Host and Bardolph.

Host. Bard, the Germans desire to have three of your horses: the duke himself will be to-morrow at court, and they are going to meet him.

Host. What duke should that be, comes so secretly? I hear not of him in the court. Let me speak with the gentlewomen; they speak English?

Host. Ay, sir; I 'll call them to you. Host. They shall have my horses, but I 'll make them pay; I 'll sauce them: they have had my house a week at command; I have turned away my other guests: they must come off?; I 'll sauce them. Come. [Exit Host.

Scene IV.—A Room in Ford’s House.

Enter Page, Ford, Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Evil. ‘Tis one of the pest discretions of a woman as ever I did look upon.

Page. And did he send you both these letters at an instant?

Mrs. Page. Within a quarter of an hour.

Ford. Pardon me, wife. Henceforth do what thou wilt; I rather will suspect the sun with cold, Than that with wantonness; now doth thy honour stand, In him that was of late a heretic, As firm as faith.

Page. ‘Tis well, ‘tis well; no more. Be not as extreme in submission, As in offence;

But let our plot go forward: let our wives yet once again, to make us public sport, Appoint a meeting with this old fat fellow, Where we may take him, and disgrace him for it.

Ford. There is no better way than that they spoke of.

Page. What? to send him word they 'll meet him in the park at midnight? fie, fie! he 'll never come.

Evil. You see, he has been thrown into the rivers, and has been grievously peaten, as an old ’oman; methinks, there should be terrors in him, that he should not come: methinks, his flesh is punished, he shall have no desires.

Page. So think I too.

Mrs. Ford. Devise but how you 'll use him when he comes, And let us two devise to bring him thither.

Mrs. Page. There is an old tale goes, that Herne the hunter,

Sometime a keeper here in Windsor forest,

Doth all the winter time, at still midnight,

Walk round about an oak, with great ragg’d horns;

And there he blasts the trees, and takes the cattle; and makes meath-kine yield blood, and shakes a chain in a most hideous and dreadful manner.

You have heard of such a spirit; and well you know, The superstitious idle-headed old

Received, and did deliver to our age,

This tale of Herne the hunter for a truth.

1 Not in e. 2 Lover; also used for mistress. 3 Fr. rogue, for scurf. 4 come down. 5 say; in f. o. 4 possesses.
Sim. Marry, sir, I come to speak with sir John Falstaff from master Slender.

Host. There 's his chamber, his house, his castle, his standing-bed, and truckle-bed: it is painted about with the story of the prodigal, fresh and new. Go, knock and call; he 'll speak like an Anthropophaginian unto thee: knock, I say.

Sim. There 's an old woman, a fat woman, gone up into his chamber: I 'll be so bold as stay, sir, till she come down; I come to speak with her, indeed.

Host. Ha! a fat woman? the knight may be robbed: I 'll call.—Bully knight! Bully sir John! speak from thy lungs military; art thou there? it is thine host, thine Ephesian, calls.

Fal. [Aside.] How now, mine host?

Host. Here 's a Bohemian Tartar harries the coming down of thy fat woman. Let her descend, bully, let her descend: my chambers are honourable; fie! privacy! fie!

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. There was, mine host, an old fat woman even now with me, but she 's gone.

Sim. Pray you, sir, was 't not the wise woman of Brentford?

Fal. Ay, marry, was it, muscle-shell: what would you with her?

Sim. My master, sir, my master Slender, sent to her, seeing her go through the streets, to know, sir, whether one Nym, sir, that beguiled him of a chain, had the chain, or no.

Fal. I spake with the old woman about it.

Sim. And what says she, I pray, sir?

Fal. Marry, she says, that the very same man that beguiled master Slender of his chain, cozened him of it.

Sim. I would I could have spoken with the woman herself; I had other things to have spoken with her, too, from him.

Fal. What are they? let us know.

Host. Ay, come; quick.

Fal. You* may not conceal them, sir.

Host. Conceal them, and* thou diest.

Sim. Why, sir, they were nothing but about mistress Anne Page; to know, if it were my master 's fortune to have her, or no.

Fal. 'T is, 'tis his fortune.

Sim. What, sir?

Fal. To have her,—or no. Go; say, the woman told me so.

Sim. May I be bold to say so, sir?

Fal. Ay, sir, tike, who more bold?

Sim. I thank your worship. I shall make my master glad with these tidings. [Exit Simple.

Host. Thou art clerkly, thou art clerkly, sir John. Was there a wise woman with thee?

Fal. Ay, that there was; mine host; one, that hath taught me more wit than ever I learned before in my life: and I paid nothing for it neither, but was paid for my learning.

Enter Bardolph.

Bard. Out, alas, sir! cozenage; mere cozenage!

Host. Where be my horses? speak well of them, varletto.

Bard. Run away with by* the cozeners; for so soon as I came beyond Eton, they throw me off from behind one of them in a slough of mire; and set spurs, and away, like three German devils, three Doctor Faustuses.

Host. They are gone but to meet the duke, villain. Do not say, they be fled; Germans are honest men.

*NOT IN THE PLAY.
Enter Sir Hugh Evans.

Eva. Where is mine host?

Host. What is the matter, sir?

Eva. Have a care of your entertainments: there is a friend of mine come to town tells me, there is three cousin germans, that has cozened all the hosts of Readings, of Maidenhead, of Colebrook, of horses and money. I tell you for good will, look you: you are wise, and full of gibes and vitulating-stops, and 'tis not convenient you should be cozened. Fare you well.

Enter Doctor Caius.

Caius. Vere is mine Host de Jarrethire?

Host. Here, master doctor, in perplexity, and doubtful dilemma.

Caius. I cannot tell vat is dat; but it is tell-a me, dat you make grand preparation for a duke de Jarmany: by my trot, dere is no duke, dat de court is know to come. I tell you for good will: adieu.

Host. Hue and cry, villain! go.—Assist me, knight; I am undone.—Fly, run, hue and cry, villain! I am undone!

[Exeunt Host and Bardolph.]

Fal. I would all the world might be cozened, for I have been cozened and beaten too. If it should come to the ear of the court how I have been transformed, and how my transformation hath been washed and edged, they would melt me out of my fat, drop by drop, and liquor fishermen's boots with me: I warrant, they would whip me with their fine wits, till I were as crested-fallen as a dried pear. I never prospered since I for-swear myself at primero. Well, if my wind were but long enough, I would pray and repent.

Enter Mistress Quickly.

Now, whence come you?

Quick. From the two parties, forsooth.

Fal. The devil take one party, and his dam the other, and so they shall be both besiewed. I have suffered more for their sakes, more, than the villainous inconstancy of man's disposition is able to bear.

Quick. And have not they suffered? Yes, I warrant; speciously one of them: mistress Ford, good heart, is beaten black and blue, that you cannot see a white spot about her.

Fal. What tell'st thou me of black and blue? I was beaten myself into all the colours of the rainbow; and I was like to be apprehended for the witch of Brentford; but that my admirable dexterity of wit, my counterfeiting the action of an old woman, deliver'd me, the knave constable had set me in the stocks, in the common stocks, for a witch.

Quick. Sir, let me speak with you in your chamber: you shall hear how things go, and, I warrant, to your content. Here is a letter will say somewhat. Good hearts! what ado here is to bring you together. Sure, one of you does not serve heaven well, that you are so crossed.

Fal. Come up into my chamber. [Exeunt.]
Quick. I'll provide you a chain, and I'll do what I can to get you a pair of horns.

Ford. Away, I say; time wears; hold up your head, and mine,

Enter Ford.

How now, master Brook! Master Brook, the matter will be known to-night or never. Be you in the Park about midnight, at Herne's oak, and you shall see wonders.

Ford. Went you not to her yesterday, sir, as you told me you had appointed?

Fal. I went to her, master Brook, as you see, like a poor old man; but I came from her, master Brook, like a poor old woman. That same knave, Ford her husband, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him, master Brook, that ever governed frenzy. I will tell you.—He beat me grievously, in the shape of a woman; for in the shape of man, master Brook, I fear not Goliath with a weaver's beam, because I know also, life is a shuttle. I am in haste: go along with me; I'll tell you all, master Brook. Since I plucked geese, played truant, and whipped top, I know not what it was to be beaten, till lately. Follow me: I'll tell you strange things of this knave Ford, on whom to-night I will be revenged, and I will deliver his wife into your hand.—Follow strange things in hand, master Brook: follow.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Windsor Park.

Enter Page, Shallow, and Slender.

Page. Come, come: we'll couch in the castle-ditch, till we see the light of our fairies. —Remember, son Slender, that thou art daughter.

Slender. Ay, forsooth; I have spoken with her, and we have a nay-word, how to know one another. I come to her in white, and cry "mum!" she cries, "budget!" and by that we know one another.

Shal. That's good too; but what needs either your "mum," or her "budget"? the white will decipher her well enough. —It hath struck ten o'clock.

Page. The night is dark; light and spirits will become it well. Heaven prosper our sport! No man means evil but the devil, and we shall know him by his horns. Let's away; follow me.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Street in Windsor.

Enter Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford, and Dr. Caius.

Mrs. Page. Master Doctor, my daughter is green: when you see your time, take her by the hand, away with her to the deanery, and dispatch it quickly. Go before into the park: we two must go together.

Caius. I know val I have to do. Adieu.

Mrs. Page. Fare you well, sir. [Exit Caius.] My husband will not rejoice so much at the abuse of Falstaff, as he will chafe at the doctor's marrying my daughter: but 'tis no matter; better a little chiding, than a great deal of heart-break.

Mrs. Ford. Where is Nan now, and her troop of fairies? and the Welch devil, Evans?

Mrs. Page. They are all couch'd in a pit hard by Herne's oak, with obscured lights; which, at the very instant of Falstaff's and our meeting, they will at once display to the night.

Mrs. Ford. That cannot choose but amaze him.

Mrs. Page. If he be not amazed, he will be mocked; if he be amazed, he will every way be mocked.

Mrs. Ford. We'll betray him finely.

Mrs. Page. Against such Lewdsters, and their lecheries,

Those that betray them do no treachery.

Mrs. Ford. The hour draws on: to the oak, to the oak!

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Windsor Park.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans, and Fairies.

Evans. Trib, trib, fairies: come; and remember your parts. Bebold, I pray you; follow me into the pit, and when I give the watch-ords, do as I bid you. Come, come; trib, trib.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Park.

Enter Falstaff, disguised, with a Buck's Head on.

Falstaff. The Windsor bell hath struck twelve; the minute draws on. Now, the hot-blooded gods assist me!—remember, Jove, thou wast a bull for thy Europa; love set on thy horns.—O powerful love! that, in some respect, makes a beast a man, in some other, a man a beast.—You were also, Jupiter, a swan, for the love of Leda: O, omnipotent love! how near the god drew to the complexion of a goose!—A fault done first in the form of a beast;—O Jove, a beastly fault! and then another fault in the semblance of a fowl: think on't, Jove; a foul fault. When gods have hot backs, what shall poor men do? For me, I am here a Windsor stag; and the fatest, I think; 'tis the forest: send me a cool rut-time, Jove, or who can blame me to piss my tallow? Who comes here? my doe?

Enter Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Ford. Sir John? art thou there, my dear? my male deer?

Falstaff. My doe with the black reat?—Let the sky rain potatoes; let it thunder to the tune of "Green Sleeves;" hail kissing-comfits, and snow eringes; let there come a tempest of provocation, I will shelter me here.

[Embracing her.

Mrs. Ford. Mistress Page is come with me, sweet-heart.

Falstaff. Divide me like a bribe-buck, each a haunch: I will keep my sides to myself; my shoulders for the fellow of this walk, and my horns I bequeath your husbands. Am I a woodman? ha! Speak I like Herne the hunter?—Why, now is Cupid a child of conscience; he makes restitution. As I am a true spirit, welcome.

Mrs. Page. Is it thus? what noise?

Mrs. Ford. Heaven forgive our sins!

Falstaff. What should this be?

Mrs. Ford. [Exit.]

Mrs. Page. Away, away!

[They run off.

Falstaff. I think, the devil will not have me damned, lest the oil that is in me should set hell on fire; he would never else cross me thus.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans, like a Satyr; Mrs. Quickly, and Pistol; Anne Page, as the Fairy Queen, attended by her brother and others, dressed like fairies, with waxen tapers on their heads.

Queen. Fairies, black; grey, green, and white, You moonshine revellers, and shades of night, You orphan-heirs of fix'd destiny, Attend your office, and your quality. Crier. Hobgoblin, make the fairy o-yes.

Pist. Elves, list your names: silence, you airy toys! Cricket, to Windsor chimneys when thoulest; Whose fires thou find'st unrank'd, and hearths unswept, There pinch the maids as blest as bittershy: Our radiant queen hates sluts, and sluttrey.

Falstaff. They are fairies; he, that speaks to them, shall die:

[To himself.]
I’ll wink and couch. No man their works must eye.

[Enter PAGE, FORD, MRS. PAGE, AND MRS. FORD. They lay hold of him.]

Page. Nay, do not fly: I think, we have match’d you now.

Will none but Herny the hunter serve your turn?

Mrs. Page. I pray you come; hold up the jest no higher.—

Now, good Sir John, how like you Windsor wives?

See you these, husband? do not these fair yokes

Become the forest better than the town?

Ford. Now, sir, who’s a cuckold now!—Master Brook, Falstaff’s a knave, a cuckoldly knave; here are his horns, master Brook: and, master Brook, he hath enjoyed nothing of Ford’s but his buck-basket, his cudgel, and twenty pounds of money, which must be paid to master Brook: his horses are arrested for it, master Brook.

Mrs. Ford. Sir John, we have had ill-luck; we could never meet. I will never take you for my love again, but I will always count you my dear.

Fal. I do begin to perceive, that I am made an ass.

Ford. Ay, and an ox too; both the proofs are extant.

Fal. And these are not fairies! I was three or four times in the thought, they were not fairies; and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers, drove the grossness of the folly into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. See now, how wit may be made a Jack-a-lent, when ’tis upon ill employment! Eva. Sir John Falstaff, serve Got, and leave your desires, and fairies will not pine you.

Ford. Well said, fairy Hugh.

Eva. And leave you your jealousies too, I pray you. Ford. I will never mistrust my wife again, till thou art able to woo her in good English.

Fal. Have I laid my brain in the sun, and dried it, that it wants matter to prevent so gross o’er-reaching as this? Am I ridden with a Welch goat too? shall I have a coxcomb of frize? ’Tis time I were chocked with a piece of toasted cheese.

Eva. See toe is not good to give putter: your jelly is all putter.

Fal. See toe and putter! have I lived to stand at the taunt of one that makes fritters of English? This is enough to be the decay of lust, and late-walking, through the realm.

Mrs. Page. Who, Sir John, do you think, though we would have thrust virtue out of our hearts by the head and shoulders, and have given ourselves without scruple to hell, that ever the devil could have made you our delight?

Ford. What, a hog-pudding? a bag of flax?

Mrs. Page. A puffed man?

Page. Old, cold, withered, and of intolerable entrails?

Ford. And one that is as slanderous as Satan?

Page. And as poor as Job?

Ford. And as wicked as his wife?

Eva. And given to fornications, and to taverns, and sulk, and wine, and methegins, and to drinkings, and swearings, and starings, pipples and prables?

Fal. Well, I am your theme: you have the start of me; I am dejected; I am not able to answer the Welsh flannel. Ignorance itself is a plummet o’er me: use me as you will.

Ford. Marry, sir, we’ll bring you to Windsor, to one master Brook, that you have cozened of money, to whom you should have been a pander: over and above that you have suffered, I think, to repay that money will be a biting affliction.¹

Page. Yet be cheerful, knight: thou shalt eat a posset to-night at my house; where I will desire thee to laugh at my wife, that now laughs at thee. Tell her, master Slender hath married her daughter.

Mrs. Page. Doctors doubt that: if Anne Page be my daughter, she is, by this, doctor Caius' wife. [Aside.

Enter Slender, crying.

Slender. Whoa, ho! ho! father Page! Page. Son, how now! how now, son! have you despached?

Slender. Despatched! — I'll make the best in Glocestershire know on't; would I were hanged, la, else.

Page. Of what, son?

Slender. I came yonder at Eton to marry mistress Anne Page, and she's a great lubberly boy: if it had not been i' the church, I would have swung him, or he should have swung me. If I did not think it had been Anne Page, would I might never stir, and 'tis a post-master's boy.

Page. Upon my life, then, you took the wrong.

Slender. What need you tell me that? I think so, when I took a boy for a girl: if I had been married to him, for all he was in woman's apparel, I would not have had him.

Page. Why, this is your own folly. Did not I tell you, how you should know my daughter by her garments?

Slender. I went to her in white, and cried "mum," and she cried "budget," as Anne and I had appointed;
and yet it was not Anne, but a post-master's boy.

Mrs. Page. Good George, be not angry: I knew of your purpose; turned my daughter into green; and, indeed, she is now with the doctor at the deanery, and there married.

Enter Doctor Caius.

Caius. Vere is mistress Page? By gar, I am co-zoned; I ha' married un garçon, a boy; un paizan, by gar, a boy: it is not Anne Page; by gar, I am cozoned.

Mrs. Page. Why, did you take her in green?

Mrs. Ford. Nay, husband, let that go to make amends:
Forgive that sum and so we 'll all be friends.

Ford. Well, here 's my hand: all 's forgiven at last.

Fal. It hath cost me well: I have been well pinched and wash'd.

Lords, Gentlemen, Guards, Officers, and other Attendants.

SCENE, Vienna.

ACT I.

Enter Duke, Escalus, Lords, and Attendants.

Duke. Escalus!

Escal. My lord.

Duke. Of government the properties to unfold,
Would seem in me to affect speech and discourse;
Since I am apt to know, that your own science
Exceeds, in that, the list of all advice
My strength can give you: then, no more remains,
But add to your sufficiency your worth;
And let them work. The nature of our people,
Our city’s institutions, and the terms
For common justice, y’are as pregnant in
As art and practice hath enriched any
That we remember. There is our commission,

[Giving it.]

From which we would not have you warp.—Call hither,
I say, bid come before us Angelo.—[Exit an Attendant.

What figure of us think you he will bear?
For, you must know, we have with special soul
Elected him our absence to supply,
Lent him our terror, drest him with our love,
And given his deputation all the organs
Of our own power. What think you of it?

Escal. If any in Vienna be of worth
To undergo such ample grace and honour,
It is lord Angelo.

Enter Angelo.

Duke. Look, where he comes.

Ang. Always obedient to your grace’s will,
I come to know your pleasure.

Duke. Angelo,

There is a kind of character in thy life,
That, to th’observer, doth thy history
Fully unfold. Thyself and thy belongings
Are not thine own so proper, as to waste
Thyself upon thy virtues, them on thee.

1 put: in f. c.  2 that: in f. c.  3 as your worth is able: in f. c.  4 Not in f. c.  5 interest.  6 Not in f. c.
SCENE I.

I'll privily away: I love the people,
But do not like to stage me to their eyes.
Though it do well, I do not relish well
Their loud applause, and even vehement,
Nor do I think the man of safe discretion,
That does affect it. Once more, fare you well.
Ang. The heavens give safety to your purposes!

Lucio. Lead forth, and bring you back in happiness!

Duke. I thank you. Fare you well.

Lucio. I shall desire you, sir, to give me leave
To have free speech with you; and it concerns me
To look into the bottom of my place:
A power I have, but of what strength and nature
I am not yet instructed.

Ang. 'Tis so with me. Let us withdraw together;
And we may soon our satisfaction have Touching that point.

Lucio. I'll wait upon your honour. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Street.

Enter Lucio and two Gentlemen.

Lucio. If the duke, with the other dukes, come not to composition with the king of Hungary, why then,
all the dukes fall upon the king.

1 Gent. Heaven grant us its peace, but not the king of Hungary's!

2 Gent. Amen.

Lucio. Thou conclavest like the sanctimonious pirate, that went to sea with the ten commandments, but scraped one out of the table.

2 Gent. Thou shalt not steal?

Lucio. Ay, that he raved.

1 Gent. Why? 'Twas a commandment to command the captain and all the rest from their functions: they put forth to steal. There's not a soldier of us all, that, in the thanksgiving before meat, doth relish the petition well that prays for peace.

2 Gent. I never heard any soldier dislike it.

Lucio. I believe thee: for, I think, thou never wast where grace was said.

2 Gent. No? a dozen times at least.

1 Gent. What, in metre?

Lucio. In any proportion, or in any language.

1 Gent. I think, or in any religion.

Lucio. Ay: why not? Grace is grace, despite of all controversy: as for example; thou thyself art a wicked villain, despite of all grace.

1 Gent. Well, there went but a pair of sheers between us.

Lucio. I grant; as there may between the lists and the velvet: thou art the list.

1 Gent. And thou the velvet? thou art good velvet:
thou art a three-pil'd piece, I warrant thee. I had as lief be a list of an English kersey, as be pil'd, as thou art pil'd, for a French velvet. Do I speak feelingly now?

Lucio. I thing thou dost; and, indeed, with most painful feeling of thy speech: I will, out of thine own confession, learn to begin thy health: but, whilst I live, forget to drink after thee.

1 Gent. I think, I have done myself wrong, have I not?

2 Gent. Yes, that thou hast, whether thou art tainted, or free.

Lucio. Behold, behold, where madam Mitigation comes!

1 Gent. I have purchased as many diseases under her roof, as come to—

2 Gent. To what, I pray?

Lucio. Judge.

2 Gent. To three thousand dollars a-year.

1 Gent. Ay: and Lucio. A French crown more.

2 Gent. Thou art always figuring diseases in me;
but thou art full of error: I am sound.

Lucio. Nay, not as one would say, healthy; but so sound as things that are hollow: thy bones are hollow;
ipiety has made a feast of thee.

Enter Bawd.

1 Gent. How now? Which of your hips has the most profound scietian?

Bawd. Well, well; there's one yonder arrested, and carried to prison, was worth five thousand of you all.

2 Gent. Who's that, I pray thee?

Bawd. Marry, sir, that's Claudio; signior Claudio.

1 Gent. Claudio to prison! 'Tis not so.

Bawd. Nay, but I know, 'tis so; I saw him arrested; saw him carried away; and, which is more, within these three days his head is to be chopped off.

Lucio. But, after all this fooling, I would not have it so. Art thou sure of this?

Bawd. I am too sure of it; and it is for getting madam Julietta with child.

Lucio. Believe me, this may be: he promised to meet me two hours since, and he was ever precise in promise-keeping.

2 Gent. Besides, you know, it draws something near to the speech we had to such a purpose.

1 Gent. But most of all, agreeing with the proclamation.

Lucio. Away: let's go learn the truth of it.

[Exeunt Lucio and Gentlemen.

Bawd. Thus, what with the war, what with the sweat, what with the gallows, and what with poverty,
I am custom-shrunk. How now? what's the news with you?

Enter Clown.

Clo. Yonder man is carried to prison.

Bawd. Well: what has he done?

Clo. A woman.

Bawd. But what's his offence?

Clo. Grooping for trouble, a peculiar river.

Bawd. What is there a maid with child by him?

Clo. No; but there's a woman with maid by him.

You have not heard of the proclamation, have you?

Bawd. What proclamation, man?

Clo. All bawdy houses in the suburbs of Vienna must be pluck'd down.

Bawd. And what shall become of those in the city?

Clo. They shall stand for seed: they had gone down too, but that a wise burgisher put in for them.

Bawd. But shall all our houses of resort in the suburbs be pull'd down?

Clo. To the ground, mistress.

Bawd. What, here's a change, indeed, in the commonwealth! What shall become of me?

Clo. Come; fear not you: good counsellors lack no clients: though you change your place, you need not change your trade; I'll be your tapster still. Courage!
there will be pity taken on you; you that have worn your eyes almost out in the service: you will be considered.

Bawd. What's to do here, Thomas Tapster? Let's withdraw.

Clo. Here comes signior Claudio, led by the provost to prison; and there's madam Juliet. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same.

Enter Provost, Claudio, and Officers.

Claud. Fellow, why dost thou show me thus to thy world?

Bear me to prison, where I am committed.

Prov. I do it not in evil disposition,

But from lord Angelo by special charge.

Claud. Thus can the demi-god, authority,

Make us pay for our offences by weight.

The words of heaven;—on whom it will, it will;

On whom it will not, so: yet still 'tis just.

Enter Lucio and two Gentlemen.

Lucio. Why, how now, Claudio? whence comes this restraint?

Claud. From too much liberty, my Lucio, liberty:

As surfeit is the father of much fast,

So every scape by the immoderate use

Turns to restraint. Our natures do pursue,

Like rats that ravin' down their proper bane,

A thirsty evil, and when we drink, we die.

Lucio. If I could speak so wisely under an arrest, I would send for certain of my creditors. And yet to say the truth, I had as lief have the fragmentation of,

as the morality of imprisonment.

What's thy offence, Claudio?

Claud. What but to speak of would offend again?

Lucio. What is it? murder?

Claud. No.

Lucio. Letchery?

Claud. Call it so.

Prov. Away, sir! you must go.

Claud. One word, good friend.—Lucio, a word with you.

[Takes him aside.

Lucio. A hundred, if they'll do you any good.—Is lechery so look'd after?

Claud. Thus stands it with me:—Upon a true contract,

I got possession of Julietta's bed:

You know the lady; she is fast my wife,

Save that we do the pronunciation lack

Of outward order: this we came not to,

Only for procuration of a dower

Remaining in the coffer of her friends,

From whom we thought it meet to hide our love,

Till time had made them for us. But it chances,

The stealth of our most mutual entertainment

With character too gross is writ on Juliet.

Lucio. With child, perhaps?

Claud. Unhappily, even so.

And the new deputy now for the duke,—

Whether it be the fault and glimpse of newness,

Or whether that the body public be

A horse wherein the governor doth ride,

Who, newly in the seat, that it may know

He can command, lets it straight feel the spur;

Whether the tyranny be in his place,

Or in his eminence that fills it up,

I stagger in;—but this new governor

Awakes me all the enclosed penalties,

Which have, like unscour'd armour, hung by the wall

So long, that nineteen zodiacks have gone round,

And none of them been worn; and, for a name,

Notice us the drowzy and neglected act

Freshly on me,—it is surely, for a name.

Lucio. I warrant it is; and thy head stands so tickle on thy shoulders, that a milk-maid, if she be in love, may sigh it off. Send after the duke, and appeal to him.

Claud. I have done so, but he's not to be found.

I pr'ythee, Lucio, do me this kind service.

This day my sister should the cloister enter,

And there receive her approbation:

Acquaint her with the danger of my state;

Implore her, in my voice, that she make friends

To the strict deputy; bid herself essay him:

I have great hope in that; for in her youth

There is a prone and speechless diolket,

Such as moves men: beside, she hath prosperous art,

When she will play with reason and discourse,

And she can well persuade.

Lucio. I pray, she may: as well for the encouragement of the like, which else would stand under grievous imposition, as for the enjoying of thy life, who I would be sorry should be thus foolishly lost at a game of tick-tack.' I'll tell her.

Claud. I thank you, good friend Lucio.

Lucio. Within two hours.

Claud. Come, officer; away! [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—A Monastery.

Enter Duke, and Friar Thomas.

Duke. No, holy father; throw away that thought:

Believe not that the dribbling dart of love

Can pierce a complete bosom. Why I desire thee

To give me secret harbour hath a purpose

More grave and wrinkled, than the aims and ends

Of burning youth.

Fri. May your grace speak of it?

Duke. My holy sir, none better knows than you

How I have ever lov'd the life remov'd;

And held in idle price to haunt assemblies,

Where youth, and cost, and witless bravery keeps.

I have deliver'd to lord Angelo

(A man of stricture, and firm abstinence)

My absolute power and place here in Vienna,'

And he supposes me travell'd to Poland;

For so I have strew'd it in the common ear,

And so it is receiv'd. Now, pious sir,

You will demand of me, why I do this?

Fri. Gladly, my lord.

Duke. We have strict statutes, and most biting laws,

(To the needful bits and curbs to head-strong steeds)

Which for this fourteen years we have let sleep;

Even like an o'er-grown lion in a cave,

That goes not out to prey: now, as fond fathers,

Having bound up the threat'ning twigs of birch

Only to stick it in their children's sight,

For terror, not to use, in the rod; sith more mock'd than feared; so our most just decrees,

Dead to inflection, to themselves are dead,

And liberty plucks justice by the nose;

The baby beats the nurse, and quite athwart

Goes all decorum.

Fri. It rested in your grace

To unloose this tied-up justice, when you pleas'd;

And it in you more dreadful would have seem'd,

Than in lord Angelo.

Duke. I fear, too dreadful;

Sith 't was my fault to give the people scope,

'T would be my tyranny to strike and gall them

For what I bid them do: for we bid this be done,
SCENE V.—A Nunnery.

Enter Isabella and Francisca.

Isab. And have you nuns no farther privileges?

Fran. Are not these large enough?

Isab. Yes, truly: I speak not as desiring more, but rather wishing a more strict restraint

Upon the sisterhood, the votarists of saint Clare.

Lucio. [Within.] Ho! Peace be in this place!

Isab. Who's that which calls?

Fran. It is a man's voice. Gentle Isabella,

Turn you the key, and know his business of you:

You may, I may not; you are yet unsown.

When you have vow'd, you must not speak with men,

But in the presence of the prioresse:

Then, if you speak, you must not show your face;

Or, if you show your face, you must not speak.

He calls again: I pray you, answer him.

[Exit Francisca.

Lucio. Peace and prosperity! Who is that calls?

Isab. Peace and prosperity! Who is that calls?

Enter Lucio.

Lucio. Hail, virgin, if you be, as those cheek-roses

Proclaim you are no less, can you so steal me,

As bring me to the sight of Isabella,

A novice of this place, and the fair sister to her unhappy brother Claudio?

Isab. Why her unhappy brother? let me ask,

The rather, for I now must make you know

I am that Isabella, and his sister.

Lucio. Gentle and fair, your brother kindly greets you.

Not to be weary with you, he's in prison.

Isab. Woe me! for what?

Lucio. For that, which, if myself might be his judge,

He should receive his punishment in thanks.

He hath got his friend with child.

Isab. Sir, make me not your scorn.

Lucio. 'Tis true. I would not, though 'tis my familiar sin

With maids to seem the lapwing, and to jest,

Tongue far from heart, play with all virgins so:

I hold you as a thing enky'd, and sainted

By your renunciation, an immortal spirit,

And to be talk'd with in sincerity;

As with a saint.

Isab. You do blaspheme the good in mocking me.

Lucio. Do not believe it. Frowardness and truth, 'tis thus:

Your brother and his lover have embrac'd:

As those that feed grow full; as blossoming time,

That from the seed ing the bare fallow brings

To teeming foison, even her plentiful womb

Expresseth his full tilth and husbands.

Isab. Some one with child by him?—My cousin

Juliet?

Lucio. Is she your cousin?

Isab. Adoptedly; as school-maids change their names

By vain, though apt, affection.

Lucio. She it is.

Isab. O! let him marry her.

Lucio. This is the point.

The duke, who's very strangely gone from hence,

Bore many gentlemen, myself being one,

In hand, and hope of action; but we do learn,

By those that know the very nerves of state,

His givings out were of an infinite distance

From his true-meant design. Upon his place,

And with full line of his authority,

Governs lord Angelo; a man whose blood

Is very snow-broth; one who never feels

The wanton stings and motions of the sense,

But doth rebate and blunt his natural edge

With profits of the mind, study and fast.

He (to give fear to use and liberty,

Which have for long run by the hideous law,

As mice by lions,) hath pick'd out an act,

Under whose heavy sense your brother's life

Falls into forfeit: he arrests him on it,

And follows close the rigour of the statute,

To make him an example. All hope is gone,

Unless you have the grace by your fair prayer

To soften Angelo; and that's my pith

Of business 'twixt you and your poor brother.

Isab. Doth he so seek his life?

Lucio. Has censur'd him already; and, as I hear, the provost hath

A warrant for his execution.

Isab. Alas! what poor ability's in me

To do him good?

Lucio. Essay the power you have.

Isab. My power, alas! I doubt.

Lucio. Our doubts are traitors,

And make us lose the good we oft might win,

By fearing to attempt. Go to lord Angelo,

And let him learn to know, when maidens sue,

Men give like gods; but when they weep and kneel,

All their petitions are as freely theirs

As they themselves would owe them.

Isab. I'll see what I can do.

Lucio. But speedily.

Isab. I will about it straight,

No longer staying but to give the mother

Notice of my affair. I humbly thank you:

Commend me to my brother; soon at night

I'll send him certain word of my success.

Lucio. I take my leave of you.

Isab. Good sir, adieu. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Hall in Angelo's House.

Enter Angelo, Escalus, a Justice, Officers, and other Attendants.

Ang. We must not make a scare-crow of the law, Setting it up to fear the birds of prey, And let it keep one shape, till custom make it Their perch, and not their terror.

Escal. Ay, but yet Let us be keen, and rather cut a little, Than fall, and bruise to death: Alas! this gentleman, Whom I would save, had a most noble father. Let but your honour know, (Whom I believe to be most strait in virtue,) That, in the working of your own affections, Had time coher'd with place, or place with wishing, Or that the resolute acting of your blood Could have attain'd th' effect of your own purpose, Whether you had not, sometime in your life, Err'd in this point, which now you censure him, And pull'd the law upon you.

Ang. 'Tis one thing to be tempted, Escalus, Another thing to fall. I not deny, The jury, passing on a prisoner's life, May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two Guiltier than him they try: what's open made to justice, That justice seizes: what know the laws, That thieves do pass on thieves? 'Tis very pregnant, The jewel that we find, we stoope and take it, Because we see it; but what we do not see We tread upon, and never think of it. You may not so extenuate his offence, For I have had such faults: but rather tell me, When I, that censure him, do so offend, Let mine own judgment pattern out my death, And nothing come in partial. Sir, he must die. Escal. Be it as your wisdom will.

Ang. Where is the provost?

Enter Provost.

Prov. Here, if it like your honour.

Ang. See that Claudio Be executed by nine-to-morrow morning. Bring him his confessor, let him be prepar'd, For that's the utmost of his pilgrimage. [Exit Provost. Escal. Well, heaven forgive him, and forgive us all! Some rise by sin, and some by virtue fall: Some run from breaks* of ice, and answer none, And some condemned for a fault alone.

Enter Elbow, Froth, Clown, Officers, &c.

Elb. Come, bring them away. If these be good people in a common-weak, that do nothing but use their abuses in common houses, I know no law: bring them away.

Ang. How now, sir? What's your name, and what's the matter?

Elb. If it please your honour, I am the poor duke's constable, and my name is Elbow: I do not lean upon justice, sir; and do bring in here before your good honour two notorious benefactors.

Ang. Benefactors! Well; what benefactors are they! Are they not malactors?

Elb. If it please your honour, I know not well what they are; but precise villains they are, that I am sure of, and void of all profanation in the world, that good Christians ought to have.

1 fall. 2 brakes was altered to brakes by Steevens. Dyce would read brakes (instruments of torture) of vice.

Escal. This comes off well: here's a wise officer.

Ang. Go to: what quality are they of? Elbow is your name: why dost thou not speak, Elbow?

Clo. He cannot, sir: he's out at elbow.

Ang. What are you, sir?

Elb. He, sir? a tapster, sir; parcel-bawd; one that serves a bad woman, whose house, sir, was, as they say, pluck'd down in the suburbs; and now she professes a hot-house, which, I think, is a very ill house too.

Escal. How know you that?

Elb. My wife, sir, whom I detest before heaven and your honour,— Escal. How! thy wife?

Elb. Ay, sir; whom, I thank heaven, is an honest woman.—

Escal. Dost thou detest her therefore?

Elb. I say, sir, I will detest myself also, as well as she, that this house, if it be not a bawd's house, it is pity of her life, for it is a naughty house.

Escal. How dost thou know that, constable?

Elb. Marry sir, by my wife; who, if she had been a woman cardinaly given, might have been accused in fornication, adultery, and all uncleanness there.

Escal. By the woman's means?

Elb. Ay, sir, by mistress Over-done's means; but as she spit in his face, so she defiled him: Clo. Sir, if it please your honour, this is not so.

Elb. Prove it before these varlets here, thou honourable man; prove it.

Escal. [To Angelo.] Do you hear how he misplaces?

Clo. Sir, she came in great with child, and longing (saving your honour's reverence) for stew'd prunes: sir, we had but two in the house, which at that very distant time stood, as it were, in a fruit-dish, a dish of some three-pence: your honours have seen such dishes: they are not China dishes, but very good dishes.

Escal. Go to, go to: no matter for the dish, sir.

Clo. No, indeed, sir, not of a pin; you are therein in the right; but to the point. As I say, this mistress Elbow, as I say, with child, and being great belly'd, and longing, as I said, for prunes, and having but two in the dish, as I said, master Froth here, this very man, having eaten the rest, as I said, and, as I say, paying for them very honestly,—for, as you know, master Froth, I could not give you three-pence again.

Froth. No, indeed.

Clo. Very well: you being then, if you be remember'd, cracking the stones of the foresaid prunes.

Froth. Ay, so I did, indeed.

Clo. Why, very well; I telling you then, if you be remember'd, that such a one, and such a one, were past cure of the thing you wot of, unless they kept very good diet, as I told you.

Froth. All this is true.

Clo. Why, very well then.

Escal. Come; you are a tedious fool: to the purpose. —What was done to Elbow's wife, that he hath cause to complain of? Come me to what was done to her.

Clo. Sir, your honour cannot come to that yet.

Escal. No, sir, nor I mean it not.

Clo. Sir, but you shall come to it, by your honour's leave. And I beseech you, look unto master Froth here, sir; a man of fourscore pound a year, whose father died at Hallowmas. Was't not at Hallowmas, master Froth?
Froth. All-hallowd eve.

Clo. Why, very well; I hope here be truths. He, sir, sitting, as I say, in a lower chair, sir;—'t was in the Bunch of Grapes, where, indeed, you have a delight to sit, have you not?

Froth. I have so; because it is an open room, and good for windows.'

Clo. Why, very well then: I hope here be truths. Ang. This will last out a night in Russia.

Where are you last seen there? I’ll take my leave, And leave you to the hearing of the cause, Honing you’ll find good cause to whip them all.

Escal. I think no less. Good morrow to your lordship.

[Exit Angelo.

Now, sir, come on: what was done to Elbow's wife, once more?

Clo. Once, sir? there was nothing done to her once.

Elb. I beseech you, sir, ask him what this man did to my wife.

Clo. I beseech your honour, ask me.

Escal. Well, sir, what did this gentleman to her?

Clo. I beseech you, sir, look in this gentleman's face. —Good master Froth, look upon his honour; 't is for a good purpose. Doth your honour mark his face?

Escal. Ay, sir, very well.

Clo. Nay, I beseech you, mark it well.

Escal. Well, I do so.

Clo. Dost your honour see any harm in his face?

Escal. Why, no.

Clo. I'll be supposed upon a book, his face is the worst thing about him. Good then; if his face be the worst thing about him, how could master Froth do the constable's wife any harm? I would know that of your honour.

Escal. He’s in the right. Constable, what say you to it?

Elb. First, an it like you, the house is a respected house; next, this is a respected fellow, and his mistress is a respected woman.

Clo. By this hand, sir, his wife is a more respected person than any of us all.

Elb. Varlet, thou liest: thou liest, wicked varlet.

The time is yet to come that she was ever respected with man, woman, or child.

Clo. Sir, she was respected with him, before he married with her.

Escal. Which is the wiser here? Justice, or Iniquity.—Is this true?

Elb. O thou scoundrel! O thou varlet! O thou wicked Hannibal! I respected with her, before I was married to her?—If ever I was respected with her, or she with me, let not your worship think me the poor duke's officer.—Prove this, thou wicked Hannibal, or I’ll have mine action of battery on thee.

Escal. If he took you a box o' th' ear, you might have your action of slander too.

Elb. Marry, I thank your good worship for it. What is 't your worship's pleasure I shall do with this wicked scoundrel?

Escal. Truly, officer, because he hath some offences in him, that thou wouldest discover if thou couldst, let him continue in his courses, till thou know'st what they are.

Elb. Marry, I thank your worship for it.—Thou seest, thou wicked varlet now, what 's come upon thee: thou art to continue; now, thou varlet, thou art to continue.

Escal. Where were you born, friend?

Froth. Here in Vienna, sir.

Escal. Are you of fourscore pounds a year?

Froth. Yes, an't please you, sir.

Escal. So.—What trade are you of, sir?

Clo. A tapster; a poor widow's tapster.

Escal. Your mistress' name?

Clo. Mistress Over-done.

Escal. Hath she any more than one husband?

Clo. Nine, sir; Over-done by the last.

Escal. Ninth!—Come hither to me, master Froth.

Master Froth, I would not have you acquainted with tapsters; they will draw you, master Froth, and you will hang them: get you gone, and let me hear no more of you.

Froth. I thank your worship. For mine own part, I never come into any room in a taphouse, but I am drawn in.

Escal. Well; no more of it, master Froth; farewell.

[Exit Froth.].—Come you hither to me, master tapster. What's your name, master tapster?

Clo. Pompey.

Escal. What else?

Clo. Bum, sir.

Escal. Troth, and your bum is the greatest thing about you; so that, in the beastliest sense, you are Pompey the great. Pompey, you are partly a bawd, Pompey, howsoever you colour it in being a tapster. Are you not? come, tell me true: it shall be the better for you.

Clo. Truly, sir, I am a poor fellow that would live.

Escal. How would you live, Pompey? by being a bawd? What do you think of the trade, Pompey? Is it a lawful trade?

Clo. If the law would allow it, sir.

Escal. But the law will not allow it, Pompey; nor it shall not be allowed in Vienna.

Clo. Does your worship mean to geld and spay all the youth of this city?

Escal. No, Pompey.

Clo. Truly, sir, in my poor opinion, they will to't then. If your lordship will take order for the drabs and the knaves, you need not fear the bawds.

Escal. There are pretty orders beginning, I can tell you: it is but heading and hanging.

Clo. If you head and hang all that offend that way but for ten year together, you’ll be glad to give out a commission for more heads. If this law hold in Vienna ten year, I’ll rent the fairest house in it, after three pence a day. If you live to see this come to pass, say Pompey told you so.

Escal. Thank you, good Pompey; and in requital of your prophecy, harry you.—I advise you, let me not find you before me again upon any complaint whatsoever; no, not for dwelling where you do: if I do, Pompey, I shall beat you to your tent, and prove a shrewd Caesar to you. In plain dealing, Pompey, I shall have you whipt. So, for this time, Pompey, fare you well.

Clo. I thank your worship for your good counsel, but I shall follow it, as the flesh and fortune shall better determine.

Whip me? No, no; let carman whip his jade; The valiant heart's not whipt out of his trade. [Exit.

Escal. Come hither to me, master Elbow; come hither, master constable. How long have you been in this place of constable?

Elb. Seven year and a half, sir.

Escal. I thought by your readiness in the office, you had continued in it some time. You say, seven years together?
Elb. And a half, sir.

Escal. Alas! it hath been great pains to you. They do you wrong to put you so oft upon't. Are there not men in your ward sufficient to serve it?

Elb. Faith, sir, few of any wit in such matters. As they are chosen, they are glad to choose me for them: I do it for some piece of money, and go through with all.

Escal. Look you bring me in the names of some six or seven, the most sufficient of your parish.

Elb. To your worship's house, sir?

Escal. To my house. Fare you well. [Exit Elbow.

What's o'clock, think you?

Just. Eleven, sir.

Escal. I pray you home to dinner with me.

Just. I humbly thank you.

Escal. It grieves me for the death of Claudio;
But there's no remedy.

Just. Lord Angelo is severe.

Escal. It is but needful:
Mercy is not itself, that oft looks so;
Pardon is still the nurse of second woe.
But yet, poor Claudio!—There is no remedy.

Come, sir. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Another room in the Same.

Enter Provost, and a Servant.

Serv. He's hearing of a cause: he will come straight.
I'll tell him of you.

Prov. Pray you, do. [Exit Servant.] I'll know His pleasure; may be, he will relent. Alas!
He hath but as offended in a dream:
All seets, all ages smack of this vice, and he
To die for it!—

Enter Angelo.

Ang. Now, what's the matter, provost?

Prov. Is it your will Claudio shall die to-morrow?

Ang. Did I not tell thee, yea? hast thou not order?
Why dost thou ask again?

Prov. Lest I might be too rash.

Under your good correction, I have seen,
When, after execution, judgment hath
Repented o'er his doom.

Ang. Go to; let that be mine:
Do you your office, or give up your place,
And you shall well be spar'd.

Prov. I crave your honour's pardon.
What shall be done, sir, with the groaning Juliet?
She's very near her hour.

Ang. Dispose of her
To some more fitter place, and that with speed.

Re-enter Servant.

Serv. Here is the sister of the man condemn'd
Desires access to you.

Ang. Hath he a sister?

Prov. Ay, my good lord; a very virtuous maid,
And to be shortly of a sisterhood,
If not already.

Ang. Well, let her be admitted. [Exit Servant.

See you the fornicatrix be remov'd:
Let her have needful, but not lavish, means;
There shall be order for it.

Enter Lucio and ISABELLA.

Prov. Save your honour! [Offering to go.

Ang. Stay a little while. [To ISABEL] 'Y are welcome: what's your will?

1 Retiring: in f. e. 2 You are: in f. e. 3 Knight reads; if he had been as you.

And you as he, you would have slipp'd like him;
But he, &c.

Isab. I am a woeful suitor to your honour,
Please but your honour hear me.

Ang. Well; what's your suit?

Isab. There is a vice, that most I do abhor,
And most desire should meet the blow of justice,
For which I would not plead, but that I must;
For which I must not plead, but that I am
At war 'twixt will, and will not.

Ang. Well; the matter?

Isab. I have a brother is condemn'd to die:
I do beseech you, let it be his fault,
And not my brother.

Prov. [Aside.] Heaven give thee moving graces.

Ang. Condemn the fault, and not the actor of it?
Why, every fault's condemn'd ere it be done.
Mine were the very cipher of a function,
To fine the faults, whose fine stands in record,
And let go by the actor.

Isab. O just, but severe law!

I had a brother then.——Heaven keep your honour!

[Going.

Lucio. [To ISABEL.] Give 't not o'er so: to him again,
intreat him?

Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown;
You are too cold: if you should need a pin,
You could not with more tame a tongue desire it.
To him, I say.

Isab. Must he needs die?

Ang. Maiden, no remedy.

Isab. Yes; I do think that you might pardon him
And neither heaven, nor man, grieve at the mercy.

Ang. I will not do't.

Isab. But can you, if you would?

Ang. Look; what I will not, that I cannot do.

Isab. But might you do't, and do the world no wrong,
If so your heart were touch'd with that remorse
As mixes to him?

Ang. He's sentence'd: 't is too late.

Lucio. [To ISABEL.] Thou art too cold.

Isab. Too late? why, no; I, that do speak a word,
May call it back again: Well believe this,
No ceremony that to great ones 'longs,
Not the king's crown, nor the deputed sword,
The marshal's truncheon, nor the judge's robe,
Become them with one half so good a grace
As mercy does. If he had been as you, and you as he,
You would have slipt like him; but he, like you,
Would not have been so stern.

Ang. Pray you, begone. Isab. I would to heaven I had your potency,
And you were Isabel! should it then be thus?
No; I would tell what 't were to be a judge,
And what a prisoner.

Lucio. [Aside.] Ay, touch him; there's the vein.

Ang. Your brother is a forfeit of the law,
And you but waste your words.

Isab. Alas! alas!

Why, all the souls that were were forfeit once;
And he that might the vantage best have took,
Found out the remedy. How would you be,
If he, which is the God of judgment, should
But judge you as you are? O, think on that,
And mercy then will breathe within your lips,
Like man new made!

Ang. Be you content, fair maid.
SCENE III.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

It is the law, not I, condemns your brother:
Were he my kinsman, brother, or my son,
It should stand thus with him: he must die to-morrow.
Isab. To-morrow? O, that's sudden! Spare him, spare him!
He's not prepar'd for death. Even for our kitchens
We kill the fowl of season: shall we serve heaven
With less respect than we do minister
To our gross selves? Good, good my lord, bethink you?
Who is it that hath died for this offence?
There's many have committed it.
Lucio. [Aside.] Ay, well said.
Ang. The law hath not been dead, though it hath slept:
Those many had not dar'd to do that evil,
If the first one that did th' edict infringe,
Had answer'd for his deed: now, 't is awake;
Takes note of what is done, and, like a prophet,
Looks in a glass, that shows what future evils
Either new, or by remissness now-conceiv'd,
And so in progress to be hatch'd and born,
Are now to have no successive degrees,
But ere they live to end.
Isab. Yet show some pity.
Ang. I show it most of all, when I show justice;
For then I pity those I do not know,
Which a dismiss'd offence would after gall,
And do him right, that, answering one foul wrong,
Lives not to act another. Be satisfied:
Your brother dies to-morrow: be content.
Isab. So you must be the first that gives this sentence,
And he that suffers. O! it is excellent
To have a giant's strength; but tyrannous
To use it like a giant.
Lucio. [Aside.] That's well said.
Isab. Could great men mind thunder,
As Love himself does, love would ne'er be quiet,
For every pelting, petty officer
Would use his heaven for thunder;
Nothing but thunder. Merciful heaven!
Thou rather with thy sharp and sulphurous bolt
Split'st the unwedgeable and gnarled oak,
Than the soft myrtle; but man, proud man!
Drest in a little brief authority,
Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd,
His glassy essence, like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven,
As make the angels weep; who, with our spleens,
Would all themselves laugh mortal.
Lucio. [To Isab.] O, to him, to him, wench! He will relent;
He's coming; I perceive 't.
Prov. [Aside.] Pray heaven, she win him!
Isab. You cannot weigh our brother with yourself:
Great men may jest with saints; 't is wit in them,
But in the less soul profanation.
Lucio. [To Isab.] Thou 'rt in the right, girl: more o' that.
Isab. That in the captain's but a cholerie word,
Which in the soldier is flat blasphemy.
Lucio. [Aside.] Art wise'd o' that? more on 't.
Ang. Why do you put these sayings upon me?
Isab. Because authority, though it err like others,
Hath yet a kind of medicine in itself,
That skins the vice o' the top. Go to your bosom;
Knock there, and ask your heart, what it doth know
That 's like my brother's fault: if it confess
A natural guiltiness, such as is his,
Let it not sound a thought upon your tongue
Against my brother's life.
Ang. [Aside.] She speaks, and 't is Such sense, that my sense breeds with it. [To her.]
Fare you well.
Isab. Gentle my lord, turn back.
Ang. I will bethink me.—Come again to-morrow.
Isab. Hark, how I'll brieve you. Good my lord, turn back.
Ang. How! brieve me? [with you.
Lucio. [Aside. You had marr'd all else.
Ang. Not with fond circles of the tested gold,
Or stones, whose rates are either rich or poor
As fancy values them; but with true prayers,
That shall be up at heaven, and enter there
Ere sun-rise: prayers from preserved souls,
From fasting maids, whose minds are dedicated
To nothing temporal.
Ang. Well; come to me to-morrow.
Lucio. [To Isab.] Go to; 't is well: away!
Ang. [Aside.] Amen.
For I am that way going to temptation,
Where prayers cross.
Isab. At what hour to-morrow
Shall I attend your lordship?
Ang. At any time 'fore noon.
Isab. Save your honour!
[Exeunt Lucio, Isabella, and Provost.
Ang. From thee: even from thy virtue—!
What's this? what's this? Is this her fault or mine?
The tempter, or the tempted, who wins most? Ha!
Not she, nor doth she tempt; but it is I,
That lying by the violet in the sun,
Do, as the carrion does, not as the flower,
Corrupt with virtuous season. Can it be,
That modesty may more betray our sense
Than woman's lightness? Having waste ground enough,
Shall we desire to raze the sanctuary,
And pitch our offals there? O, fie, fie, fie!
What dost thou, or what art thou, Angelo?
Dost thou desire her foully for these things
That make her good? O, let her brother live!
Thieves for their robbery have authority,
When judges steal themselves. What! do I love her,
That I desire to hear her speak again,
And feast upon her eyes? What is 't I dream on?
O cunning enemy, that, to catch a saint,
With saints dost bait thy hook! Most dangerous
Is that temptation, that doth good us on
To sin in loving virtue. Never could the trumpet,
With all her double vigour, art and nature,
Once stir my temper; but this virtuous maid
Subdues me quite.—Even from youth till now,
When men were fond, I smil'd, and wonder'd how.
[Exit.

SCENE III.—A Room in a Prison.

Enter Duke, as a Friar, and Provost.

Duke. Hail to you, provost; so I think you are.
Prov. I am the provost. What's your will, good friar?
Duke. Bound by my charity, and my bless'd order,
I come to visit the afflicted spirits
Here in the prison: do me the common right
To let me see them, and to make me know
The nature of their crimes, that I may minister
To them accordingly.

Pro. I would do more than that, if more were needful.

Enter Juliet.

Look; here comes one: a gentlewoman of mine, Who, falling in the flames[1] of her own youth, Hath blister'd her report. She is with child, And he that got it, sentenced[2]—a young man More fit to do another such offence, Than die for this.

Duke. When must he die?

Pro. As I do think, to-morrow.—

[To Juliet.] I have provided for you: stay a while, And you shall be conducted.

Duke. Repent you, fair one, of the sin you carry?

Juliet. I do, and bear the shame most patiently.

Duke. I'll teach you how you shall arraign your conscience, And try your penitence, if it be sound, Or hollowly put on.

Juliet. I'll gladly learn.

Duke. Love you the man that wrong'd you?

Juliet. Yes, as I love the woman that wrong'd him.

Duke. So then, it seems, your most offensive act Was mutually committed?

Juliet. Mutually.

Duke. Then was your sin of heavier kind than his.

Juliet. I do confess it, and repent it, father.

Duke. 'Tis meet so, daughter: but least[3] you do repent,

As that the sin hath brought you to this shame;
Which sorrow is always toward ourselves, not heaven,
Shewing, we would not serve[4] heaven, as we love it,
But as we stand in fear.

Juliet. I do repent me, as it is an evil,

And take the shame with joy.

Duke. There rest.

Your partner, as I hear, must die to-morrow,
And I am going with instruction to him.

Grace go with you! Benedicite!

[Exit Juliet.

Pro. 'Tis pity of him. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Angelo's House.

Enter Angelo.

Ang. When I would pray and think, I think and pray

To several subjects: heaven hath my empty words,

Whilst my intention, hearing not my tongue,

Anchors on Isabel: heaven in my mouth,

As if I did but only chew his name, And in my heart the strong and swelling evil

Of my conception. The state, wherein I studied, Is like a good thing, being often read, grown sear and tedious; yea, my gravity,

Wherein (let no man hear me) I take pride,

Could I, with boot, change for an idle pleune,

Which the air heats for vain. O place! O form! How often dost thou with thy ease, thy habit,

Wrench awry from fools, and tie the wiser souls

To thy false seeming? Blood, thou art blood:

Let's write good angel on the devil's horn,

'Tis not the devil's crest.

Enter Servant.

How now! who's there?

Serv. One Isabel, a sister,

Desires access to you.

Ang. Teach her the way. [Exit Serv.

O heavens!

Why does my blood thus muster to my heart,

Making it both unable for itself,

And dispossessing all my other part

Of necessary fitness?

So play the foolish throngs with one that swoons;

Come all to help him, and so stop the air

By which he should revive: and even so

The general, subject to a well-wish'd king,

Quit their own path, and in obsequious fondness

Crowd to his presence, where their untaught love

Must needs appear offence.

Enter Isabella.

How now, fair maid?

Isab. I am come to know your pleasure.

Ang. That you might know it, would much better please me.

Than to demand what 'tis. Your brother cannot live.

Isab. Even so.—Heaven keep your honour!

Ang. Yet may he live a while; and, it may be, As long as you, or I: yet he must die.

Isab. Under your sentence?

Ang. Ye.

Isab. When, I beseech you? that in his reprieve, Longer or shorter, he may be so fitted, That his soul sicken not.

Ang. Ha! Fie, these filthy vies! It were as good To pardon him, that hath from nature stolen A man already made, as to remit,

Their saucy sweetness, that do coin heaven's image In stamps that are forbid: 'tis all as easy Falsely to take away a life true made, As to put metal in restrained means, To make a false one.

Isab. 'Tis set down so in heaven, but not in earth.

Ang. Say you so? then, I shall poze you quickly,

Which had you rather, that the most just law

Now took your brother's life; or to redeem him

Give up your body to such sweet uncleanness

As she that he hath stain'd?

Isab. Sir, believe this, I had rather give my body than my soul.

Ang. I talk not of your soul. Our compell'd sins Stand more for number than for accomp't.

Isab. How say you?

Ang. Nay, I'll not warrant that; for I can speak Against the thing I say. Answer to this:—

I, now the voice of the recorded law,

Pronounce a sentence on your brother's life:

Might there not be a charity in sin,

To save this brother's life?

Isab. Please you to do't.

I'll take it as a peril to my soul:

It is no sin at all, but charity.

Ang. Please'd you to do't, at peril of your soul, Were equal poize of sin and charity.

Isab. That I do beg his life, if it be sin, Heaven, let me bear it! you granting of my suit,

If that be sin, I'll make it my morn-prayer

To have it added to the faults of mine,

And nothing of your answer.

Ang. Nay, but hear me.

Your sense pursues not mine: either you are ignorant,

Or seem so, crafty; and that is not good.

Isab. Let me be ignorant, and in nothing good,

But graciously to know I am no better.

Ang. Thus wisdom wishes to appear most bright,

When it doth tax itself: as these black masks

SCENE 1. MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Proclaim an un-shield'd beauty ten times louder Than beauty could displayed.—But mark me: To be received plain, I'll speak more gross. Your brother is to die.

Isab. So.

Ang. And his offence is so, as it appears Accountant to the law upon that pain.

Isab. True.

Ang. Admit no other way to save his life, (As I subscribe not that, nor any other, But in the force of question) that you, his sister, Finding your self desir'd of such a person, Whose credit with the judge, or own great place, Could fetch your brother from the manacles Of the all-binding law; and that there were No earthly mean to save him, but that either You must lay down the treasures of your body To this suppose'd, or else to let him suffer, What would you do?

Isab. As much for my poor brother, as myself: That is, were I under the terms of death, Th' impression of keen whips I'd wear as rubies, And strip myself to death, as to a bed That longling I've been sick for, ere I'd yield My body up to shame.

Ang. Then must Your brother die.

Isab. And 't were the cheaper way.

Better it were, a brother died at once, Than that a sister, by redeeming him, Should die for ever.

Ang. Were not you, then, as cruel, as the sentence That you have slander'd so?

Isab. Ignomy in ransom, and free pardon, Are of two houses: lawful mercy is Nothing akin to foul redemption.

Ang. You seem'd of late to make the law a tyrant; And rather prov'd the sliding of your brother A merriment, than a vice.

Isab. O, pardon me, my lord! it oft falls out, To have we what would have, we speak not what we mean.

I something do excuse the thing I hate, For his advantage that I dearly love.

Ang. We are all frail.

Isab. Else let my brother die,
If not a heedary, but only he, Owe, and succeed this' weakness.

Ang. Nay, women are frail too.

Isab. Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves, Which are as easy broke as they make forms.

Women!—Help heaven! men their creation mar In profiting by them. Nay, call us ten times frail, For we are soft as our complexions are, And credulous to false prints.

Ang. I think it well;
And from this testimony of your own sex, (Since, I suppose, we are made to be no stronger,

Than faults may shake our frames,) let me be bold: I do arrest your words: be that you are, That is, a woman; if you be more, you're none; If you be one, (as you are well express'd By all external warrants,) show it now,
By putting on the destin'd livery.

Isab. I have no tongue but one: gentle my lord, Let me intreat you speak the former language.

Ang. Plainly, conceive I love you.

Isab. My brother did love Juliet; and you tell me, That he shall die for it.

Ang. He shall not, Isabel, if you give me love.

Isab. I know, your virtue hath a licence in't, Which seems a little fouler than it is, To pluck on others.

Ang. Believe me, on mine honour, My words express my purpose.

Isab. Ha! little honour to be much believ'd, And most pernicious purpose!—Seeming, seeming!— I will proclaim thee, Angelo; look for't.

Sign me a present pardon for my brother, Or with an outstretch'd threat I'll tell the world Aloud what man thou art.

Ang. Who will believe thee, Isabel? My unsoul'd name, the austereness of my life, May vouch against you, and my place if the state, Will so your accusation overweigh,
That you shall stifle in your own report, And smell of calumny. I have begun, And now I give my sensual race the rein:
Fit thy consent to my sharp appetite; Lay by all nicety, and prolixious blusses, That banish what they sue for; redeem thy brother By yielding up thy body to my will, Or else he must not only die the death, But thy unkindness shall his death draw out To lingering sufferance. Answer me to-morrow, Or, by the affection that now guides me most, I'll prove a tyrant to him. As for you, Say what you can, my false o'erweighs your true.

[Exit.

Isab. To whom should I complain? Did I tell this Who would believe me? O perilous mouths! That bear in them one and the self-same tongue, Either of condemnation or approb, Bidding the law make court'sy to their will, Hooking both right and wrong to th' appetite, To follow as it draws. I'll to my brother: Though he hath fallen by prompture of the blood, Yet hath he in him such a mind of honour, That had he twenty heads to tender down On twenty bloody blocks, he'd yield them up, Before his sister should her body stop To such abhor'd pollution.

Then, Isabel, live chaste, and, brother, die: More than our brother is our chastity
I'll tell him yet of Angelo's request, And fit his mind to death, for his soul's rest.

[Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Prison.

Enter Duke, as a Friar, Claudio, and Provost.

Duke. So then, you hope of pardon from lord Angelo?

Claud. The miserable have
No other medicine, but only hope.
I have hope to live, and am prepar'd to die.

Duke. Be absolute for death; either death, or life,
Shall thereby be the sweeter. Reason thus with life:—
If I do lose thee, I do lose a thing
That none but fools would keep: a breath thou art,
Serve to all the skyey influences,
That do this habitation, where thou keep'st,
Hourly afflict. Merely, thou art death's fool;
For him thou labour'st by thy flight to shun,
And yet run'st toward him still: thou art not noble;
For all th' accommodations that thou bear'st.
Are nurs'd by baseness: thou art by no means valiant;
For thou dost fear the soft and tender fork
Of a poor worm: thy best of rest is sleep,
And that thou oft provok'st, yet grossly fear'st
Thy death, which is no more. Thou art not thyself;
For thou exist'st on many a thousand grains
That issue out of dust: happy thou art not;
For what thou hast not, still thou striv'est to get,
And what thou hast forget'st. Thou art not certain;
For thy complication shifts to strange effects,
After the moon: if thou art rich, thou art poor;
For, like an ass, whose back with ingois bows,
Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,
And death unloads thee: friend hast thou none;
For thine own bowels, which do call thee sire,
The mere effusion of thy proper loins,
Do curse the gout, serpigo!, and the rheum,
For ending thee no sooner: thou hast nor youth, nor age,
But, as it were, an after-dinner's sleep,
Dreaming on both; for all thy boasted youth
Becomes as aged, and doth beg the alms
Of paisled old: and when thou art old and rich,
Thou hast neither heat, affection, limb, nor beauty,
To make thy riches pleasant. What's yet in this,
That bears the name of life? Yet in this life
Lie hid more thousand deaths, yet death we fear,
That makes these odds all even.

Claud. I humbly thank you.
To sue to live, I find, I seek to die,
And, seeking death, find life: let it come on.

Isab. [Without] What, ho! Peace here; grace and good company! [welcome.

Prov. Who's there? come in: the wish desires a Isabella. Enter Isabella.

Duke. Dear sir, ere long I'll visit you again.

Claud. Most holy sir, I thank you.

Isab. My business is a word or two with Claudio.

Prov. And very welcome. Look, signior; here's your sister.

Duke. Provost, a word with you.

Prov. As many as you please.

Duke. Bring me to hear them speak, where I may be conceald. [Exit Duke and Provost.

Claud. Now, sister, what's the comfort?

Isab. Why, as all

Comforts are; most good, most good, indeed.
Lord Angelo, having affairs to heaven,
Intends you for his swift ambassador,
Where you shall be an everlasting lieger: Therefore, your best appointment make with speed;
To-morrow you set on.

Claud. Is there no remedy?

Isab. None, but such remedy, as to save a head
To cleave a heart in twain?

Claud. But is there any?

Isab. Yes, brother, you may live:
There is a devilish mercy in the judge,
If you'll implore it, that will free your life,
But fetter till death.

* f. e. princely; Knight: precise

* f. e. : guards. * Knight suggests de-lighted, that is, removed from light.

Claud. Perpetual durance?

Isab. Ay, just; perpetual durance: a restraint,
Though all the world's vastidity you had,
To a determin'd scope.

Claud. But in what nature?

Isab. In such a one as, you consenting to it,
Would bark your honour from that trunk you bear,
And leave you naked.

Claud. Let me know the point.

Isab. O! I do fear thee, Claudio; and I quake,
Lest thou a feverous life wouldst entertain,
And six or seven winters more respect,
Than a perpetual honour. Darst thou die?
The sense of death is most in apprehension,
And the poor beetle, that we tread upon,
In corporal sufferance finds a pang, as great
As when a giant dies.

Claud. Why give you me this shame?

Think you I can a resolution fetch
From flowsy tenderness? If I must die,
I will encounter death as a bride,
And hug it in warm arms.

Isab. There speake my brother: there my father's grave

Did utter forth a voice. Yes, thou must die:

Thou art too noble to conserve a life

In base appliances. This outward-sainted deputy,
Whose settled visage and deliberate word
Nips youth i' the head, and follies doth entomb
As falcon doth the fowl, is yet a devil;
His filth within being cast, he would appear
A pond as deep as hell.

Claud. The priestly Angelo?

Isab. O, 'tis the cunning livery of hell,
The damned'st body to invest and cover
In priestly garb. 'Dost thou think, Claudio,
If I would yield him my virginity,
Thou might'st be freed.

Claud. O, heavens! it cannot be.

Isab. Yes, he would give 't thee from this rank offence,
So to offend him still. This night's the time
That I should do what I abhor to name,
Or else thou diest to-morrow.

Claud. Thou shalt not do 't.

Isab. O! were it but my life,
I'd throw it down for your deliverance
As frankly as a pin.

Claud. Thanks, dear Isabel.

Isab. Be ready. Claudio, for your death to-morrow.

Claud. Yes. Has he affections in him,
That thus can make him bite the law by the nose,
When he would force it? Sure, it is no sin;
Or of the deadly seven it is the least.

Isab. Which is the least?

Claud. If it were damnable, he being so wise,
Why would he for the momentary trick
Be perjurably find'd? — O Isabel!

Isab. What says my brother?

Claud. Death is a fearful thing

Isab. And shamed life a hateful.

Claud. Ay, but to die, and go we know not where;
To lie in cold obstruction, and to rot;
This sensible warm motion to become
A kneaded clot; and the delighted spirit
To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside
In thrilling region of thiek-ribbed ice;
To be imprison'd in the viewless winds,
And blown with restless violence round about
Isab. I am now going to resolve him. I had rather my brother die by the law, than my son should be unawfully born. But O, how much is the good duke deceived in Angelo! If ever he return, and I can speak to him, I will open my lips in vain, or discover him unprenounced.

Duke. That shall not be much amiss; yet, as the matter now stands, he will avoid your accusations: he made trial of you only.—Therefore, fasten your ear on my advisings: to the love I have in doing good a remedy presents itself. I do make myself believe, that you may most uprightly do a poor wronged lady a merited benefit, redeem your brother from the angry law, do no stain to your own gracious person, and much please the absent duke, if, peradventure, he shall ever return to have hearing of this business.

Isab. Let me hear you speak farther. I have spirit to do any thing that appears not foul in the truth of my spirit.

Duke. Virtue is bold, and goodness never fearful.

Isab. I have heard of the lady, and good words went with her name.

Duke. Her should this Angelo have married; he was affianced to her by oath, and the nuptial appointed: between which time of the contract, and limit of the solemnity, her brother Frederick was wrecked at sea, having in that perish’d vessel the dowry of his sister. But mark how heavily this befall to the poor gentlewoman: there she lost a noble and renowned brother, in his love toward her ever most kind and natural; with him the portion and sinew of her fortune, her marriage-dowry; with both, her combine husband, this well-seeing Angelo.

Isab. Can this be so? Did Angelo so leave her?

Duke. Left her in her tears, and dried not one of them with his comfort; swallowed his vows whole, pretending in her discoveries of dishonour: in few, bestowed her on her own lamentation, which she yet wears for his sake, and he, as marble to her tears, is washed with them, but relents not.

Isab. What a merit were it in death to take this poor maid from the world! What corruption in this life, that it will let this man live!—But how out of this case a Poor maid?

Duke. It is a rupture that you may easily heal; and the cure of it not only saves your brother, but keeps you from dishonour in doing it.

Isab. Show me how, good father.

Duke. This fore-named maid hath yet in her the continuance of her first affection: his unjust unkindness, that in all reason should have quenched her love, hath, like an impediment in the current, made it more violent and unruly. Go you to Angelo: answer his requiring with a plausible obedience: agree with his demands to the point; only refer yourself to this advantage,—first, that your stay with him may not be long, that the time may have all shadow and silence in it, and the place answer to convenience. This being granted in course, and now follows all: we shall advise this wronged maid to steady up your appointment, go in your place; if the encounter acknowledge itself hereafter, it may compel him to her recompense; and here by this is your brother saved, your honour untainted, the poor Mariana advantaged, and the corrupt deputy sealed. The maid will I frame, and make fit for his attempt. If you think well to carry this, as you may, the doubleness of the benefit defends the deceit from reproof. What think you of it?
Isab. The image of it gives me content already, and, I trust, it will grow to a most prosperous perfection.
Duke. It lies much in your holding up. Haste you speedily to Angelo: if for this night he entreat you to his bed, give him promise of satisfaction. I will presently to St. Luke's: there, at the moated grange, resides this dejected Mariana: at that place call upon me, and despatch with Angelo, that it may be quickly.
Isab. I thank you for this comfort. Fare you well, good father.

SCENE II.—The Street before the Prison.
Enter Duke, as a Friar; to him Elbow, Clown, and Officers.

Elb. Nay, if there be no remedy for it, but that you will needs buy and sell men and women like beasts, we shall have all the world drink brown and white bastard.¹

Duke. O, heavens! what stuff is here? ⁴
Clo. 'Twas never merry world, since, of two usancess,² the merriest was put down, and the worse allow'd by order of law a furr'd gown to keep him warm; and furr'd with fox and lamb-skins too, to signify that craft, being richer than innocency, stands for the facing.

Elb. Come your way, sir.—Bless you, good father friar.

Duke. And you, good brother father. What offence hath this man made you, sir?
Elb. Marry, sir, he hath offended the law: and, sir, we take him to be a thief too, sir; for we have found upon him, sir, a strange pick-lock, which we have sent to the deputy.

Duke. Fie, sirrah! a bawd, a wicked bawd! The evil that thou causest to be done,
That is thy means to live. Do thou but think
What 'tis to cram a maw, or clothe a back,
From such a filthy vice: say to thyself,
From their abominable and beastly touchings
I drink, I eat, array myself, and live.
Canst thou believe thy living is a life,
So stinkingly depending? Go mend, go mend.

Clo. Indeed, it does stink in some sort, sir; but yet, sir, I would prove—

Duke. Nay, if the devil have given thee proofs for sin,
Thou wilt prove his. Take him to prison, officer:
Correction and instruction must both work,
Ere this rude beast will profit.

Elb. He must before the deputy, sir; he has given him warning. The deputy cannot abide a whoresomaster; if he be a whoresomer, and comes before him, he were as good go a mile on his errand.

Duke. That we were all, as some would seem to be, From our faults, as faults from seeming, free!

Enter Lucio.

Elb. His neck will come to your waist, a cord, sir.
Clo. I spy comfort: I cry, bail. Here's a gentleman, and a friend of mine.

Lucio. How now, noble Pompey! What, at the wheels of Caesar? Art thou led in triumph? What, is there none of Pygmalion's images, newly made woman, to be had now, for putting the hand in the pocket and extracting it clutche'd? What reply? Ha! What say'st thou to this lune, matter, and method? Is't not drown'd i' the last rain? Ha! What say'st thou, troth? Is the world as it was, man? Which is the way? Is it sad, and few words, or how? The trick of it?

Duke. Still thus, and thus: still worse!
Lucio. How doth my dear morse, thy mistress? Procures she still? Ha!

Clo. Troth, sir, she hath eaten up all her beef, and she is herself in the tub.

Lucio. Why, 'tis good; it is the right of it; it must be so: ever your fresh whore, and your powder'd bawd: an unsham'd consequence; it must be so. Art going to prison, Pompey?

Clo. Yes, faith, sir.

Lucio. Why, 'tis not amiss, Pompey. Farewell, Go; say, I sent thee thither. For debt, Pompey, or how? Elb. For being a bawd, for being a bawd.

Lucio. Well. Then imprison him. If imprisonment be the due of a bawd, why, 'tis his right: bawd is he, doubtful, and of antiquity too; bawd-born. Farewell, good Pompey: commend me to the prison, Pompey. You will turn good husband now, Pompey; you will keep the house.

Clo. I hope, sir, your good worship will be my bail.

Lucio. No, indeed, will I not, Pompey; it is not the wear. I will pray, Pompey, to increase your bondage: if you take it not patiently, why, your mistress is the more. Adieu, trusty Pompey.—Bless you, friar.

Duke. And you.

Lucio. Does Bridget paint still, Pompey? Ha!

Elb. Come your ways, sir; come.

Clo. You will not bail me, then, sir?

Lucio. Then, Pompey, nor now.—What news abroad, friar? What news?

Elb. Come your ways, sir; come.

Lucio. Go; to kennel, Pompey, go. [Exeunt Clown, Elbow, and Officers.

What news, friar, of the duke?

Duke. I know none. Can you tell me of any?

Lucio. Some say, he is with the emperor of Russia; other some, he is in Rome: but where is he, think you?

Duke. I know not where; but whereasover, I wish him well.

Lucio. It was a mad fantastical trick of him, to steal from the state, and usurp the beggary he was never born to. Lord Angelo duked it well in his absence: he puts transgression to't.

Duke. He does well in't.

Lucio. A little more lenity to lechery would do no harm in him: something too crabb'd that way, friar.

Duke. It is too general a vice, and severity must cure it.

Lucio. Yes, in good sooth, the vice is of a great kindred: it is well allied; but it is impossible to extirp it quite, friar, till eating and drinking be put down. They say, this Angelo was not made by man and woman, after the downright way of creation: is it true, think you?

Duke. How should he be made then?

Lucio. Some report, a sea-maid spawn'd him: some, that he was begot between two stock-fishes; but it is certain, that when he makes water, his urine is congeal'd ice: that I know to be true; and he is a motion ingenenerative, that's infallible.

Duke. You are pleasant, sir, and speak apace.

Lucio. Why, what a ruthless thing is this in him, for the rebellion of a cod-piece to take away the life of a man? Would the duke that is absent have done this? Ere he would have hang'd a man for the getting a hundred bastards, he would have paid for the nursing a thousand. He had some feeling of the sport: he knew the service, and that instructed him to mercy.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Duke. I never heard the absent duke much detected for women: he was not inclined that way. Lucio. O, sir! you are deceived. Duke. It is not possible. Lucio. Who? not the duke? yes, your beggar of fifty; and his use was, to put a ducat in her clack-dish. The duke had crotches in him: he would be drunk too: that let me inform you. Duke. You do him wrong, surely. Lucio. Sir, I was an inward of his. A shy fellow was the duke; and, I believe, I know the cause of his withdrawing. Duke. What, I pr'ythee, might be the cause? Lucio. No,—pardon; —it is a secret must be lock'd within the teeth and the lips; but this I can let you understand,—the greater fills of the subject held the duke to be wise. Duke. Wise? why, no question but he was. Lucio. A very superfluous, ignorant, unweighing fellow. Duke. Either this is envy in you, folly, or mistaking: the very stream of his life, and the business he hath helmed, must, upon a warranted need, give him a better proclamation. Let him be but testi- monied in his own bringings forth, and he shall appear to the curious a scholar, a statesman, and a soldier. Therefore, you speak unskilfully; or, if your know- ledge be more, it is much dark'n in your malice. Lucio. Sir, I know him, and I love him. Duke. Love talks with better knowledge, and know- ledge with dearer love. Lucio. Come, sir, I know what I know. Duke. I can hardly believe that, since you know not what you speak. But, if ever the duke return, (as our prayers are he may,) let me desire you to make your answer before him: if it be honest you have spoke, you have courage to maintain it. I am bound to call upon you; and, I pray you, your name. Lucio. Sir, my name is Lucio, well known to the duke. Duke. He shall know you better, sir, if I may live to report you. Lucio. I fear you not. Duke. O! you hope the duke will return no more, or you imagine too unfruitful an opposite. But, indeed, I can do you little harm; you'll forswear this again. Lucio. I'll be hang'd first: thou art deceived in me, friar. But no more of this. Canst thou tell, if Claudio die to-morrow, or no? Duke. Why should he die, sir? Lucio. Why? for filling a bottle with a tun-fish. I would, the duke, we talk of, were return'd again: this ungenitur'd agent will unpeople the province with conti- nuity; sparrows must not build in his house-eaves, because they are lecherous. The duke yet would have dark deeds darkly answer'd; he would never bring them to light: would he were return'd! Marry, this Claudio is condemn'd for untrussing. Farewell, good friar; I pr'ythee, pray for me. The duke, I say to thee again, would eat mutton on Fridays. He's now past it; yet, and I say to thee, he would mouth with a beggar, though she smelt brown bread and garlic; say, that I said so. Farewell. [Exit. Duke. No might nor greatness in mortality Can censure 'scape: back-wounding calumny The whitest virtue strikes. What-kings so strong, Can tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue? But who comes here?

Enter Escalus, Provost, Bawd, and Officers. Escal. Duke: away with her to prison! Bawd. Good my lord, if your honour is accounted a merciful man: good my lord. Escal. Double and treble admonition, and still for- feit in the same kind? This would make mercy swear, and play the tyrant. Prov. A bawd of eleven years' continuance, may it please your honour. Bawd. My lord, this is one Lucio's information against me. Mistress Kate Keep-down was with child by him in the duke's time: he promised her marriage; his child is a year and a quarter old, come Philip and Jacob. I have kept it myself, and see how he goes about to dish me! Escal. That fellow is a fellow of much licence:—let him be called before us.—Away with her to prison! Go to; no more words. [Exit Bawd and Officers.] Provost, my brother Angelo will not be alter'd; Claudio must die to-morrow. Let him be furnished with divines, and have all charitable preparation: if my brother wrought by my pity, it should not be so with him. Prov. So please you, this friar hath been with him, and advised him for the entertainment of death. Escal. Good even, good father. Duke. Bliss and goodness on you. Escal. Of whence are you? Duke. Not of this country, though my chance is now To use it for my time: I am a brother Of gracious order, late come from the See, In special business from his holiness. Escal. What news abroad? the world? Duke. None, but that there is so great a fever on goodness, that the dissolution of it must cure it: novelty is only in request; and as it is as dangerous to be aged in any kind of course, as it is virtuous to be constant in any undertaking, there is scarce truth enough alive to make societies secure, but security enough to make fel lowships accurs'd. Much upon this riddle runs the wisdom of the world. This news is old enough, yet it is every day's news. I pray you, sir, of what disposition was the duke? Escal. One that, above all other strifes, contended especially to know himself. Duke. What pleasure was he given to? Escal. Rather rejoicing to see another merry, than merry at any thing which profess'd to make him re- joice: a gentleman of all temperance. But leave we him to his events, with a prayer they may prove prosperous, and let me desire to know how you find Claudio prepared. I am made to understand, that you have lent him visitation. Duke. He professes to have received no sinister measure from his judge, but most willingly humbles himself to the determination of justice; yet had he framed to himself, by the instruction of his frailty, many deceiving promises of life, which I, by my good leisure, have discredited to him, and now is he resolved to die. Escal. You have paid the heavens the due of your function, and the prisoner the very debt of your calling. I have labour'd for the poor gentleman to the extreme shore of my modesty; but my brother jus- tice have I found so severe, that he hath forced me to tell him, he is indeed—justice. Duke. If his own life answer the straitness of his proceeding, it shall become him well; wherein if he chance to fail, he hath sentenced himself. [well. Escal. I am going to visit the prisoner. Fare you Duke. Peace be with you!

[Exit Escalus and Provost.]

He, who the sword of heaven will bear,
Should be as holy as severe;
Pattern in himself to know,
Grace to stand, virtue to go;¹
More nor less to others paying,
Than by self offices weighting.
Shame to him, whose cruel striking
Kills for faults of his own liking!
Twice treble shame on Angelo,
To weed my vice, and let his grow!

O, what may man within him hide.
Though angel on the outward side!
How may likeness, made in crimes,
Masking² practice on the times,
Draw with idle spiders' strings
Most pond'rous and substantial things!
Craft against vice I must apply.
With Angelo to-night shall lie
His old betrothed, but despised:
So disguise shall, by the disguised,
Pay with falsehood false exacting,
And perform an old contracting.  [Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Room at the moated Grange.

MARIANA discovered sitting: a Boy singing.

song,

Take, O! take these lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn;
And those eyes, the break of day,
Lights that do mislead the morn:
But my kisses bring again,
Seals of love, but seal'd in vain.³

Mari. Break off thy song, and haste thee quick away:
Here comes a man of comfort, whose advice
Hath often still'd my brawling discontent.—
[Exit Boy.

Enter Duke.

I cry you mercy, sir; and well would wish
You had not found me here so musical:
Let me excuse me, and believe me so,
My mirth it much displeas'd, but pleas'd my woe.

Duke. 'Tis good: though music oft hath such a charm,
To make bad good, and good provoke to harm.
I pray you, tell me, hath any body inquired for me here to-day? much upon this time have I promis'd here to meet.

Mari. You have not been inquired after: I have sat here all day.

Enter ISABELLA.

Duke. I do constantly believe you.—The time is come, even now. I shall crave your forbearance a little: may be, I will call upon you anon, for some advantage to yourself.

Mari. I am always bound to you.  [Exit.

Duke. Very well met, and welcome.

What is the news from this good deputy? Isab. He hath a garden circummurs'd with brick, Whose western side is with a vineyard back'd; And to that vineyard is a planch'd gate, That makes his opening with this bigger key: This other doth command a little door, Which from the vineyard to the garden leads; There have I made my promise upon the heavy⁴ Middle of the night to call upon him.

Duke. But shall you on your knowledge find this way?

Isab. I have ta'en a due and wary note upon 't: With whispering and most guilty diligence, In action all of precept, he did show me The way twice o'er.

Duke. Are there no other tokens Between you 'greed, concerning her observance? Isab. No, none, but only a repair 't the dark; And that I have possess'd him my most stay Can be but brief: for I have made him know, I have a servant comes with me along, That stays upon me; whose persuasion is, I come about my brother.

Duke. 'Tis well borne up. I have not yet made known to Mariana A word of this.—What, ho! within! come forth.

Re-enter MARIANA.

I pray you, be acquainted with this maid: She comes to do you good.

Isab. I do desire the like.

Duke. Do you persuade yourself that I respect you?

Mari. Good friar, I know you do, and have found it.

Duke. Take then this your companion by the hand, Who hath a story ready for your ear.

I shall attend your leisure: but make haste;

The vaporous night approaches.

Mari. Will 't please you walk aside?  [Exit MARIANA and ISABELLA.

Duke. O place and greatness! millions of false eyes Are stuck upon thee. Volumes of report Run with base⁵ false and most contrarious quests Upon thy doings: thousand escapes of wit Make thee the father of their idle dreams, And rack thee in their fancies!

Re-enter MARIANA and ISABELLA.

Welcome! How agreed!

Isab. She'll take the enterprise upon her, father, If you advise it.

Duke. It is not my consent, But my entreaty too.

Isab. Little have you to say,

When you depart from him, but, soft and low, "Remember now my brother."³

Mari. Fear me not.

Duke. Nor, gentle daughter, fear you not at all.

Which thy frozen bosom bears,
On whose tops the pinks that grow

SCENE II.—A Room in the Prison.

Enter Provost and Clown.

Prov. Come hither, sirrah. Can you cut off a man's head?

Clo. If the man be a bachelor, sir, I can; but if he be a married man, he is his wife's head, and I can never cut off a woman's head.

Prov. Come, sir; leave me your snatches, and yield me a direct answer. To-morrow morning are to die Claudio and Barnardine: here is in our prison a common executioner, who in his office lacks a helper: if you will take it on you to assist him, it shall redeem you from your yokes; if not, you shall have your full time of imprisonment, and your deliverance with an unsatiated whipping, for you have been a notorious bawd.

Clo. Sir, I have been an unlawful bawd, time out of mind; but yet I will be content to be a lawful hangman. I would be glad to receive some instruction from my fellow partner.

Prov. What ho, Abhorson! Where's Abhorson, there?

[Enter Abhorson.]

Abhor. Do you call, sir?

Prov. Sirrah, here's a fellow will help you to-morrow in your execution. If you think it meet, compound with him by the year, and let him abide here with you; if not, use him for the present, and dismiss him. He cannot plead his estimation with you: he hath been a bawd.

Abhor. A bawd, sir? Fit upon him! he will discredit our mystery.

Prov. Go to, sir; you weigh equally: a feather will turn the scale. [Exit.]

Clo. Pray, sir, by your good favour, (for, surely, sir, a good favour you have, but that you have a hanging look,) do you call, sir, your occupation a mystery?

Abhor. Ay, sir; a mystery.

Clo. Painting, sir, I have heard say, is a mystery; and your whores, sir, being members of my occupation, used painting, do prove my occupation a mystery; but what mystery there should be in hanging, if I should be hang'd, I cannot imagine.

Abhor. Sir, it is a mystery.

Clo. Proof?

Abhor. Every true man's apparel fits your thief.

Clo. If it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough; if it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough: so, every true man's apparel fits your thief.

[Re-enter Provost.]

Prov. Are you agreed?

Clo. Sir, I will serve him; for I do find, your hangman is a more penitent trade than your bawd: he doth oftener ask forgiveness.

Prov. You, sirrah, provide your block and your axe to-morrow, four o'clock.

Abhor. Come on, bawd; I will instruct thee in my trade; follow.

Clo. I do desire to learn, sir; and, I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your own turn, you shall find me yare; for, truly, sir, for your kindness I owe you a good turn.

Prov. Call hither Barnardine and Claudio: [Exeunt Clown and Abhorson.

Th' one has my pitty; not a jot the other,
Being a murderer, though he were my brother.

[Enter Claudio.

Look, here's the warrant, Claudio, for thy death: 'Tis now dead midnight, and by eight to-morrow
Thou must be made immortal. Where's Barnardine?

Claud. As fast lock'd up in sleep, as guiltless labour,
When it lies starkly\(^2\) in the traveller's bones:
He will not awake.

Prov. Who can do good on him?

Well, go; prepare yourself. But hark! what noise? [Knocking within.]

Heaven give your spirits comfort!—By and by:—

[Exit Claudio. I hope it is some pardon, or reprieve,
For the most gentle Claudio.—Welcome, father.

[Enter Duke.]

Duke. The best and wholesomest spirits of the night
Envelop you, good provost! Who call'd here of late?

Prov. None, since the curfew rung.

Duke. Not so, not so: his life is parallel'd
Even with the stroke and line of his great justice.
He doth with holy abstinance subdue
That in himself, which he spurs on his power
To qualify in others: were he mead'd\(^4\) with that
Which he corrects, then were he tyrannous;

[Knocking within.]

But this being so, he's just.—Now are they come.—

[Exit Provost.]

This is a gentle provost: seldom, when
The steeled gaoler is the friend of men. [Knocking.]

How now? What noise? That spirit's possessed with haste,
That wounds the resisting\(^3\) postern with these strokes.

[Re-enter Provost.]

Prov. [Speaking to one at the door.] There he must stay, until the officer Arise to let him in: he is call'd up.

Duke. Have you no countermand for Claudio yet,
But he must die to-morrow?

Prov. None, sir, none.

Duke. As near the dawning, provost, as it is,
You shall hear more ere morning.

Prov. Happily,

You something know; yet, I believe, there comes
No countermand: no such example have we.

Besides, upon the very siege of justice,
Lord Angelo hath to the public ear
Profess'd the contrary.

[Enter a Messenger.]

Duke. This is his lordship's man.\(^6\)

Mes. And here comes Claudio's pardon.

Prov. My lord hath sent you this note; [giving a paper] and by me this further charge, that you swerve not from the smallest article of it, neither in time, matter, or other circumstance. Good morrow; for, as I take it, it is almost day.

Prov. I shall obey him. [Exit Messenger.]

Duke. This is his pardon; purchas'd by such sin,

For which the pardoner himself is in:
Hence hath offence his quick celerity,
When it is born in high authority.

\(^1\) tithe's: in f. e.  \(^2\) Stiffly.  \(^3\) Mingled.  \(^4\) unstaining: in f. e.  \(^6\) Knight gives this speech to the Provost, and the next to the Duke.
MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

When vice makes mercy, mercy's so extended,
That for the fault's love is th' offender friend'd.—
Now, sir, what news?

Prov. I told you: Lord Angelo, belike thinking me remiss in mine office, awakens me with this unwonted putting on; methinks strangely, for he hath not used it before.

Duke. Pray you, let's hear.

Prov. [Reads.] "Whatsoever you may hear to the contrary, let Claudio be executed by four of the clock; and, in the afternoon, Barnardine. For my better satisfaction, let me have Claudio's head sent me by five. Let this be duly perform'd; with a thought, that more depends on it than we must yet deliver. Thus fail not to do your office, as you will answer it at your peril."

What say you to this, sir?

Duke. What is that Barnardine, who is to be executed in the afternoon?

Prov. A Bohemian born; but here nursed up and bred: one that is a prisoner nine years old.

Duke. How came it, that the absent Duke had not either deliver'd him to his liberty, or executed him?
I have heard, it was ever his manner to do so.

Prov. His friends still wrote rejoinders for him: and, indeed, his fact, till now in the government of Lord Angelo, came not to an undoubted proof.

Duke. It is now apparent?

Prov. Most manifest, and not denied by himself.

Duke. Hath he borne himself penitently in prison?
How seems he to be touch'd?

Prov. A man that apprehends death no more dreadfully but as a drunken sleep; careless, reckless, and fearless of what's past, present, or to come: insensible of mortality, and desperately mortal.

Duke. He wants advice.

Prov. He will hear none. He hath evermore had the liberty of the prison: give him leave to escape hence, he would not: drunk many times a day, if not many days entirely drunk. We have very oft awaked him, as if to carry him to execution, and show'd him a seeming warrant for it: it hath not moved him at all.

Duke. More of him anon. There is written in your brow, provost, honesty and constancy: if I read it not truly, my ancient skill beguiles me; but in the boldness of my cunning I will lay myself in hazard.
Claudio, whom here you have warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the law, than Angelo who hath sentenced him. To make you understand this in a manifest effect, I crave but four days' respite, for the which you are to do me both a present and a dangerous courtesy.

Prov. Pray, sir, in what?

Duke. In the delaying death.

Prov. Alack! how may I do it, having the hour limited, and an express command, under penalty, to deliver his head in the view of Angelo? I may make my case as Claudio's, to cross this in the smallest.

Duke. By the vow of mine order, I warrant you: if my instructions may be your guide, let this Barnardine be this morning executed, and his head borne to Angelo.

Prov. Angelo hath seen them both, and will discover the favour.

Duke. O! death's a great disguiser, and you may add to it. Shave the head, and tie the beard; and say, it was the desire of the penitent to be so bared before his death: you know, the course is common. If any thing fall to you upon this, more than thanks and good fortune, by the saint whom I profess, I will plead against it with my life.

Prov. Pardon me, good father: it is against my oath.

Duke. Were you sworn to the Duke, or to the deputy?

Prov. To him, and to his substitutes.

Duke. You will think you have made no offence, if the Duke avouch the justice of your dealing.

Prov. But what likelihood is in that?

Duke. Not a resemblance, but a certainty. Yet since I see you fearful, that neither my coat, integrity, nor my persuasion, can with ease attempt you, I will go farther than I meant, to pluck all fears out of you. Look you, sir; here is the hand and seal of the Duke: you know the character, I doubt not, and the signet is not strange to you.

Prov. I know them both.

Duke. The contents of this is the return of the Duke: you shall anon over-read it at your pleasure, where you shall find, within these two days he will be here. This is a thing that Angelo knows not, for he the very day receives letters of strange tenor; perchance, of the Duke's death; perchance, entering into some monastery; but, by chance, nothing of what is writ. Look, the unfolding star calls up the shepherd. Put not yourself into amazement how these things should be: all difficulties are but easy when they are known. Call your executioner, and off with Barnardine's head: I will give him a present shift, and advise him for a better place. Yet you are amazed, but this shall absolutely resolve you. Come away; it is almost clear dawn.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Another Room in the Same.

Enter Clown.

Clo. I am as well acquainted here, as I was in our house of profession: one would think, it were mistress Over-done's own house, for here be many of her old customers. First, here's young Mr. Rash; he's in for a commodity of brown paper and old ginger,¹ nineounces and seventeen pounds, of which he made five marks, ready money; marry, then, ginger was not much in request, for the old women were all dead. Then is there here one Mr. Caper, at the suit of master Threepile the mercer, for some four suits of peach-colour'd satin, which now peaches him a beggar. Then have we here young Dey, and young Mr. Deep-vow, and Mr. Copper-spur, and Mr. Starvy-lackey, the rapier and dagger-man, and young Drop-heir that kill'd Lusty Pudding, and Mr. Fortlairght the tailor, and brave Mr. Shoe-tie the great traveller, and wild Half-can that stab'd Pots, and, and now in² for the Lord's sake.

Enter ABBHORSON.

Abhor. Sirrah, bring Barnardine hither.

Clo. Mr. Barnardine! you must rise and be hang'd, Mr. Barnardine.

Abhor. What, ho, Barnardine!

Barnar. [Within.] A pex, o' your throats! Who makes that noise there? What are you?

Clo. Your friends, sir; the hangman. You must be so good, sir, to rise and be put to death.

Barnar. [Within.] Away, you rogue, away! I am sleepy.

Abhor. Tell him; he must awake, and that quickly too.

Clo. Pray, master Barnardine, awake till you are executed, and sleep afterwards.

¹ It was a custom of usurers to compel borrowers to take part of the sum advanced to them in goods, often of little real value.
² Not in F. e.
Abhor. Go in to him, and fetch him out.
Clo. He is coming, sir; he is coming: I hear his straw rustle.

Enter Barnardine.
Abhor. Is the axe upon the block, sirrah?
Clo. Very ready, sir.

Barnar. How now, Abhorson? what's the news with Abhor. Truly, sir, I would desire you to clap into your prayers: for, look you, the warrant's come.

Abhor. You rogue, I have been drinking all night: I am not fitted for 't.
Clo. O! the better, sir; for he that drinks all night, and is hang'd betimes in the morning, may sleep the sounder all the next day.

Enter Duke.
Abhor. Look you, sir; here comes your ghostly father. Do we jest now, think you?
Duke. Sir, induced by my charity, and hearing how hastily you are to depart, I come to advise you, comfort you, and pray with you.

Barnar. Friar, not I: I have been drinking hard all night, and I will have more time to prepare me, or they shall beat out my brains with billets. I will not consent to die this day, that's certain.
Duke. O, sir, you must; and therefore, I beseech you, Look forward on the journey you shall go.
Barnar. I swear, I will not die to-day for any man's persuasion.

Duke. But hear you,—
Barnar. Not a word: if you have any thing to say to me, come to my ward; for thence will not I to-day.

[Exit Provost.
Duke. Unti to live, or die, 0, grovelling beast!—
After him, fellows: bring him to the block.

[Exeunt Abhorson and Clowns.

Prov. Now, sir; how do you find the prisoner?
Duke. A creature unprepared, unequal to death; And, to transport him in the mind he is, Were damnable.
Prov. Here in the prison, father,
There died this morning of a cruel fever
One Ragozine, a most notorious pirate,
A man of Claudio's years; his beard, and head,
Just of his colour. What if we do omit
This reprobate, till he were well inclin'd,
And satisfy the deputy with the visage
Of Ragozine, more like to Claudio?
Duke. O, 't is an accident that heaven provides!
Despatch it presently: the hour draws on Prefix'd by Angelo. See, this be done,
And sent according to command, whiles I
Persuade this rude wretch willingly to die.

Prov. This shall be done, good father, presently
But Barnardine must die this afternoon;
And how shall we continue Claudio,
To save me from the danger that might come,
If he were known alive?
Duke. Let this be done.—Put them in secret holds,
Both Barnardine and Claudio;
Ere twice the sun hath made his journal greeting
To yonder3 generation, you shall find
Your safety manifest.

Prov. I am your free dependant.
Duke. Quick, despatch, and send the head to Angelo.
[Exit Provost.

Now will I write letters to Angelo,
(See the provost, he shall bear them) whose contents
Shall witness to him, I am near at home,
And that by great injunctions I am bound
To enter publicly: him I'll desire
To meet me at the council and form,
A league below the city; and from thence,
By cold gradation and well-balanced form,
We shall proceed with Angelo.

Re-enter Provost.
Prov. Here is the head; I'll carry it myself.
Duke. Convenient is it. Make a swift return,
For I would commune with you of such things,
That want no ear but yours.

Prov. I'll make all speed. [Exit.

Isab. [Within.] Peace, ho, be here!
Duke. The tongue of Isabel.—She's come to know,
If yet her brother's pardon be come hither;
But I will keep her ignorant of her good,
To make her heavenly comforts of despair.
When it is least expected.

Enter Isabella.
Isab. Ho! by your leave.
Duke. Good morning to you, fair and gracious daughter.
Isab. The better, given me by so holy a man.
Hath yet the deputy sent my brother's pardon?
Duke. He hath released him, Isabel, from the world.
His head is off, and sent to Angelo.
Isab. Nay, but it is not so.
Duke. It is no other. [Catching her.
Show your wisdom, daughter, in your close patience.
Isab. O! I will to him, and pluck out his eyes.
Duke. You shall not be admitted to his sight.
Isab. Unhappy Claudio! Wretched Isabel! Perjuries^ world! Most damned Angelo!
Duke. This not hurts him, nor profits you a jot:
Forbear it therefore; give your cause to heaven.
Mark what I say to you,^ which you shall find
By every syllable a faithful verity.
The duke comes home to-morrow; nay, dry your eyes:
One of our convent, and his confessor,
Gives me this instance. Already he hath carried Notice to Escalus and Angelo,
Who do prepare to meet him at the gates,
There to give up their power. If you can, pace your wisdom.
In that good path that I would wish it go,
And you shall have your boon4 on this wretch,
Grace of the duke, revenges to your heart,
And general honour.
Isab. I am directed by you.
Duke. This letter, then, to friar Peter give:
'T is that he sent me of the duke's return:
Say, by this token, I desire his company
At Mariana's house to-night. Her cause, and yours
I'll perfect him withal, and he shall bring you
Before the duke; and to the head of Angelo
Accuse him home, and home. For my poor self,
I am confess'd by a sweared rover,
And shall be absent. Wendi you with this letter.
Command these fretting waters from your eyes
With a light heart: trust not my holy order,
If I pervert your course.—Who's here?

Enter Lucio.
Lucio. Good even.
Friar, where is the provost?
Duke. Not within, sir.
Lucio. O, pretty Isabella! I am pale at mine heart, to see thine eyes so red: thou must be patient. I am fain to dine and sup with water and bran; I dare not for my head fill my belly: one fruitful meal would set me to’t. But, they say, the duke will be here to-morrow. By my troth, Isabel, I loved thy brother; if the old fantastical duke of dark corners had been at home, he had lived. [Exit ISABELLA.

Duke. Sir, the duke is marvellous little beholding to thy reports; but the best is, he lives not in them.

Lucio. Friar, thou knowest not the duke so well as I do: he’s a better woodman than thou taketh him for.

Duke. Well, you’ll answer this one day. Fare ye well. [Going.

Lucio. Nay, tarry; I’ll go along with thee. I can tell thee pretty tales of the duke.

Duke. You have told me too many of him already, sir, if they be true; if not true, none were enough.

Lucio. I was once before him for getting a wench with child.

Duke. Did you such a thing?

Lucio. Yes, marry, did I; but I was fain to forswear it: they would else have married me to the rotten medlar.

Duke. Sir, your company is fairer than the honest. Rest you well. [Going.

Lucio. By my troth, I’ll go with thee to the lane’s end. If bawdy talk offend you, we’ll have very little of it. Nay, friar, I am a kind of burl; I shall stick.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Angelo’s House.

Enter ANGELO and ESCALUS.

Escal. Every letter he hath writ hath divvouch’d other.

Ang. In most uneven and distracted manner. His actions show much like madness: pray heaven, his wisdom be not tainted! And why meet him at the gates, and re-deliver Our authorities there?

Escal. I guess not.

Ang. And why should we Proclaim it an hour before his entering, That if any crave redress of injustice, They should exhibit their petitions In the street?

Escal. He shows his reason for that: to have a despatch of complaints, and to deliver us from devices hereafter, Which shall then have no power to stand against us.

Ang. Well, I beseech you, let it be proclaimed: Betimes i’ the morn, I’ll call you at your house. Give notice to such men of sort and suit, As are to meet him.

Escal. I shall, sir: fare you well. [Exit.

Ang. Good night.—This deed unshapes me quite, makes me unpregnant, And dull to all proceedings. A deflowered maid, And by an eminent body, that enforc’d The law against it!—But that her tender shame Will not proclaim against her maiden loss, How might she tongue me! Yet reason dares her: no;

For my authority bears such a credent bulk That no particular scandal once can touch, But it confines the breather. He should have liv’d, Save that his riotous youth, with dangerous sense, Might in the times to come have ta’en revenge, For so receiving a dishonour’d life With ransom of such shame. Would yet he had liv’d! Alack! when once our grace we have forgot, Nothing goes right: we would, and we would not. [Exit.

SCENE V.—Fields without the Town.

Enter DUKE, in his own habit, and FRIAR PETER.

Duke. These letters at fit time deliver me. [Giving them.

F. Peter. The provost knows our purpose, and our plot. The matter being afoot, keep your instruction, And hold you ever to our special drift. Though sometimes you do blench, from this to that, As cause doth minister. Go, call at Flavius’ house, And tell him where I stay: give the like notice Unto Valentius, Rowland, and to Crassus, And bid them bring the trumpets to the gate; But send me Flavius first.

F. Peter. It shall be speeded well. [Exit Peter.

Enter VARRIUS.

Duke. I thank thee, Varrius; thou hast made good haste.

Come, we will walk: there’s other of our friends Will greet us here anon, my gentle Varrius. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Street near the City Gate.

Enter ISABELLA and MARIANA.

Isab. To speak so indirectly, I am loath: I would say the truth; but to accuse him so, That is your part; yet I’m advis’d to do it, He says, to ’vaullful’ purpose.

Mari. Be rul’d by him.

Isab. Besides, he tells me, that if peradventure He speak against me on the adverse side, I should not think it strange; for ‘tis a physic, That ’s bitter to sweet end.

Mari. I would, friar Peter.—Isab.

O, peace! the friar is come. [Enter FRIAR PETER.

F. Peter. Come; I have found you out a stand most fit, Where you may have such vantage on the duke, He shall not pass you. Twice have the trumpets sounded: The generous and gravest citizens Have hent the gates, and very near upon The duke is en’t ring: therefore hence, away. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A public Place near the City Gate.

MARIANA, (veil’d) ISABELLA and PETER, at a distance. Enter at several doors, DUKE, VARRIUS, Lords; ANGELO, ESCALUS, LUCIO, Provost, Officers, and Citizens. Duke. My very worthy cousin, fairly met.—

Our old and faithful friend, we are glad to see you. Ang. and Escal. Happy return be to your royal For so grace! Duke. Many and hearty thankings to you both. We have made inquiry of you; and we hear Such goodness of your justice, that our soul

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

SCENE I.

CANNOT but yield you forth to public thanks, Forewarning more requital.

Ang. You make my bonds still greater.

Duke. O! your desert speaks loud; and I should wrong it, To lock it in the wards of covert bosom, When it deserves with characters of brass A forlorned residence 'gainst the tooth of time, And raze in oblivion. Give me your hand, And let the subject see, to make them know That outward courtesies would fain proclaim Favours that keep within them. Come, Escalus; You must walk by us on our other hand, And good supporters are you.

Friar Peter and Isabella come forward.

F. Peter. Now is your time. Speak loud, and kneel before him.

Isab. Justice, O royal duke! Vail your regard [Kneeling.]

Upon a wrong'd, I would fain have said, a maid! O worthy prince! dishonour not your eye By throwing it on any other object, Till you have heard me in my true complaint, And given me justice, justice, justice, justice!

Here is lord Angelo shall give you justice: Reveal yourself to him.

Isab. O, worthy duke! [Rising.]

You bid me seek redemption of the devil. Hear me yourself; for that which I must speak Must either punish me, not being believ'd, Or wring redress from you. Hear me, O, hear me, here! [Kneeling again.]

Ang. My lord, her wits, I fear me, are not firm: She hath been a suitor to me for her brother, Cut off by course of justice.

Isab. By course of justice! [Rising.]

Ang. And she will speak most bitterly, and strangely. Isab. Most strangely, yet most truly, will I speak. That Angelo's foreborn, is it not strange? That Angelo's a murderer, is't not strange? That Angelo is an adulterous thief, An hypocrite, a virgin-violator, Is it not strange, and strange? Duke. Nay, it is ten times strange.

Isab. It is not truer he is Angelo, Than this is all as true as it is strange: Nay, it is ten times true; for truth is truth To th' end of reckoning. [Kneeling.]

Duke. Away with her.—Poor soul! She speaks this in th' infirmity of sense.

Isab. O prince, I conjure thee, as thou believest There is another comfort than this world, That thou neglect me not, with that opinion That I am touch'd with madness: make not impossible That which but seems unlike. 'Tis not impossible, But one, the wickedest caitiff on the ground, May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute, As Angelo; even so may Angelo, In all his dressings, characters, titles, forms, Be an arch-villain. Believe it, royal prince: If he be less, he's nothing; but he's more, Had I more name for badness.

Duke. By mine honesty, If she be mad, as I believe no other. Her madness hath the oddest frame of sense, Such a dependency of thing on thing, As e'er I heard in madness.

Isab. O, gracious duke! Harp not on that; nor do not banish reason For incredulity'; but let your reason serve To make the truth appear, where it seems hid, And hide the false seems true.

Duke. Many that are not mad, Have, sure, more lack of reason.—What would you say? Isab. I am the sister of one Claudio, Condemn'd upon the act of fornication To lose his head; condemn'd by Angelo. I, in probation of a sisterhood, Was sent to by my brother; one Lucio As then the messenger.

Lucio. That's I, an't like your grace. I came to her from Claudio, and desire'd her To try her gracious fortune with lord Angelo, For her poor brother's pardon.

Isab. That's he, indeed. Duke. You were not bid to speak.

Lucio. I wish you now, then: Pray you, take note of it; and when you have A business for yourself, pray heaven, you then Be perfect. Isab. I warrant your honour. Duke. The warrant's for yourself; take heed to it. Isab. This gentleman told somewhat of my tale. Lucio. Right.

Duke. It may be right; but you are in the wrong To speak before your time.—Proceed.

Isab. I went To this pernicious, caitiff deputy. Duke. That's somewhat madly spoken.

Isab. Pardon it: The phrase is to the matter. Duke. Mended again: the matter?—Now proceed. Isab. In brief,—to set the needless process by, How I persuaded, how I pray'd, and kneel'd, How he refer'd me, and how I replied, (For this was of much length) the vile conclusion I now begin with grief and shame to utter. He would not, but by gift of my chaste body To his concepuable intemperate lust, Release my brother; and, after much debatement, My sisterly remorse confutes mine honour, And I did yield to him. But the next morn betimes, His purpose surfeiting, he sends a warrant For my poor brother's head.

Duke. This is most likely.

Isab. O, that it were as like, as it is true! Duke. By heaven, fond wretch! thou know'st not what thou speakest, Or else thou art suborn'd against his honour, In hateful practices. First, his integrity Stands without blemish: next, it imports no reason, That with such vehemency he should pursue Faults proper to himself: if he had so offended, He would have weigh'd thy brother by himself, And not have cut him off. Some one hath set you on: Confess the truth, and say by whose advice Thou cam'st here to complain. Isab. And is this all? Then, O! you blessed ministers above, Keep me in patience; and, with ripen'd time, Unfold the evil which is here wrapt up In countenance!—Heaven shield your grace from woe, As I, thus wrong'd, hence unbeloved go! Duke. I know, you'd fain be gone.—An officer!
To prison with her.—Shall we thus permit
A blasting and a scandalous breath to fall
On him so near us? This needs must be a practice.
Who knew of your intent, and coming hither?
Isab. One that I would have here, friar Lodowick.
Duke. A ghostly father, belike.—Who knows that Lodowick?
Lucio. My lord, I know him: 'tis a meddling friar:
I do not like the man: had he been lay, my lord,
For certain words he spake against your grace,
In your retirement, I had swung'd him soundly.
Duke. Words against me? This a good friar, belike.
And to set on this wretched woman here
Against our substitute!—Let this friar be found.
Lucio. But yesternight, my lord, she and that friar Saw them at the prison. A saucy friar,
A very scurrvy follow.
F. Peter. Blessed be your royal grace!
I have stood by, my lord, and I have heard
Your royal ear abused. First, hath this woman
Most wrongfully accuses'd your substitute,
Who is as free from touch or soil with her,
As she from one ungot.
Duke. We did believe no less.
Know you that friar Lodowick, that she speaks of?
F. Peter. I know him for a man divine and holy;
Not scurrvy, nor a temporary meddler,
As he's reported by this gentleman;
And, on my truth, a man that never yet
Did, as he vouches, misreport your grace.
Lucio. My lord, most villainously: believe it.
F. Peter. Well! he in time may come to clear himself
But at this instant he is sick, my lord,
Of a strange fever. Upon his mere request,
Being come to knowledge that there was complaint
Intended 'gainst lord Angelo, came I hither,
To speak, as from his mouth, what he doth know
Is true, and false; and what he with his oath,
And all probation, will make up full clear,
Whencesoever he's conceived. First, for this woman,
To justify this worthy nobleman,
So vulgarly and personally accus'd,
Her shall you hear disproved to her eyes,
Till she herself confess it.
Duke. Good friar, let's hear it.
Isabella is carried off guarded; and Marianna comes forward.
Do you not smile at this, lord Angelo?—
O heaven, the vanity of wretched fools!—
Give us some seats.—Come, cousin Angelo;
In this I'll be impartial: be you judge
Of your own cause.—Is this the witness, friar?
First, let her show her face, and after speak.
Mari. Pardon, my lord, I will not show my face,
Until my husband bid me.
Duke. What, are you married?
Mari. No, my lord.
Duke. Are you a maid?
Mari. No, my lord.
Duke. A widow, then?
Mari. Neither, my lord.
Duke. Why, you are nothing then: neither, maid, widow, nor wife?
Lucio. My lord, she may be a punk; for many of them are neither maid, widow, nor wife.
Duke. Silence that fellow: I would, he had some cause
To prattle for himself.

1 trust: in f. e 2 Im, that is, very partial; a common use of the prefix. 3 Summer-house. 4 Not in f. e. 5 Sensible.
To accuse this worthy man, but, in foul mouth,
And in the witness of his proper ear,
To call him villain? And then to glance from him
To the duke himself, to tax him with injustice? —
Take him hence; to the rack with him.—We'll touse you
Joint by joint, but we will know your purpose.
What! unjust?
Duke. Be not so hot; the duke dare
No more stretch this finger of mine, than he Dare rack his own; his subject am I not,
Nor here provincial. My business in this state
Made me a looker-on here in Vienna,
Where I have seen corruption boil and bubble,
Till it o'er-run the strew; laws for all faults,
But faults so countenance'd, that the strong statutes
Stand like the forfeits in a barber's shop,
As much in mock as mark.
Escal. Slander to the state! Away with him to prison.
Ang. What can you vouch against him, signior Lucio?
Is this the man that you did tell us of?
Lucio. 'Tis he, my lord.—Come hither, Goodman bald-pate; do you know me?
Duke. I remember you, sir, by the sound of your voice: I met you at the prison in the absence of the duke.
Lucio. O, did you so? And do you remember what you said of the duke?
Duke. Most notably, sir.
Lucio. Do you so, sir? And was the duke a flesh-monger, a fool, and a coward, as you then reported him to be?
Duke. You must, sir, change persons with me, ere you make that my report: you, indeed, spoke so of him: and much more, much worse.
Lucio. O, thou damnable fellow! Did not I pluck thee by the nose, for thy speeches?
Duke. I protest, I love the duke as I love myself.
Ang. Hark how the villain would groze now, after his tiresonable abuses.
Escal. Such a fellow is not to be talk'd withal:—
Away with him to prison.—Where is the provost?—
Away with him to prison. Lay bolts enough upon him, let him speak no more.—Away with these gigots too, and with the other confederate companion.
【The Provost lays hand on the Duke.】
Duke. Stay, sir; stay a while.
Lucio. Come, sir; come, sir; come, sir; Ioh! sir.
Why, you bald-pated, lying rascal! you must be hooded, must you? show your knave's visage, with a pos to you! show your sheep-biting face, and be hang'd an hour. Will't not off?
【Pulling off the Duke's disguise.】
Duke. Thou art the first knave, that e'er made a duke.
【All start and stand.】
First, provost, let me half these gentle three.—
Sneak not away, sir; [To Lucio.] for the friar and you Must have a word anon.—Lay hold on him.
Lucio. This may prove worse than hanging.
Duke. What you have spoke, I pardon; sit you down.
【To Escalus.】
We'll borrow place of him:—Sir, by your leave.
To Angelo.
Hast thou or word, or wit, or impudence,
That yet can do thee office? If thou hast,
Rely upon it till my tale be heard,
And hold no longer out.
Ang. O, my dread lord! I should be guiltier than my guiltiness, To think I can be indiscernible, When I perceive your grace, like power divine, Hath look'd upon my passess. Then, good prince, No longer session hold upon my shame, But let my trial be mine own confession: Immediate sentence then, and sequent death, Is all the grace I beg.

Duke. Come hither, Mariana.—Say, wast thou e'er contracted to this woman? Ang. I was, my lord.

Duke. Go take her hence, and marry her instantly.—Do you the office, friar; which consummate, Return him here again.—Go with him, provost.

[Exeunt Angelo, Mariana, Peter, and Provost. Escal. My lord, I am more amaz'd at his dishonour, Than at the strangeness of it.

Your friar is now your prince: as I was then Advertising and holy to your business, Not changing heart with habit, I am still Attorney'd at your service.

Isab. O, give me pardon, That I, your vassal, have employ'd and pain'd Your unknown sovereignty!

Duke. You are pardon'd, Isabel: And now, dear maid, be you as free to us. Your brother's death, I know, sits at your heart; And you may marvel, why I obscure'd myself, Labouring to save his life, and would not rather Make rash demonstration of my hidden powers, Than let him so be lost. O, most kind maid! It was the swift celerity of his death, Which I did think with slower foot came on, That brain'd my purpose: but all peace be with him! That life is better life, past fearing death, Than that which lives to fear. Make it your comfort, So happy is your brother.

Re-enter Angelo, Mariana, Peter, and Provost.

Isab. I do, my lord.

Duke. For this new-married man, approaching here, Whose salt imagination yet hath wrong'd Your well-defended honour, you must pardon For Mariana's sake. But, as he adjudg'd your brother, (Being criminal, in double violation. Of sacred chastity, and of promise-breaketh, Thereon dependent, for your brother's life,) The very mercy of the law cries out Most audible, even from his proper tongue, "An Angelo for Claudio, death for death!" Haste still pays haste, and leisure answers leisure, Like doth quitt like, and Measure still for Measure. Then, Angelo, thy fault's thus manifested, Which, though thou would'st deny, denies thee vantage. We do condemn thee to the very block Where Claudio stoop'd to death, and with like haste.—Away with him.

Mai. O, my most gracious lord! I hope you will not mock me with a husband.

Duke. It is your husband mock'd you with a husband.

Consenting to the safeguard of your honour, I thought your marriage fit; else imputation, For that he knew you, might reproach your life, And choke your good to come. For his possessions, Although by confiscation they are ours, We do instate and widow you withal, To buy you a better husband.

1 2 Not in f. e.
That apprehends no farther than this world,
And squar'st thy life according. Thou'rt condemned;
But, for those earthly faults, I quit them all,
And pray thee, take this mercy to provide
For better times to come.—Friar, advise him:
I leave him to your hand.—What muffled fellow's that?
Prov. This is another prisoner that I say'd,
That should have died when Claudio lost his head,
As like almost to Claudio as himself. [Unmuffles him.
Duke. If he be like your brother, [To Isabella] for his sake,
Claudio and Isabella embrace.]
Is he pardon'd; and for your lovely sake,
Give me your hand, and say you will be mine,
He is my brother too. But fitter time for that.
By this lord Angelo perceives he's safe:
Methinks, I see a quick'ning in his eye.—
Well, Angelo, your evil quits you well:
Look that you love your wife; her worth, worth yours.
I find an apt remission in myself,
And yet here's one in place I cannot pardon.—
You, sirrah, [To Lucio] that knew me for a fool, a coward,
One all of luxury, an ass, a madman:
Wherein have I so well deserv'd of you,
That you extol me thus?
Lucio. 'Faith, my lord, I spoke it but according to the trick. If you will hang me for it, you may; but I had rather it would please you, I might be whipp'd.
Duke. Whipp'd first, sir, and hang'd after.—
Proclaim it, provest, round about the city,
If any woman's wrong'd by this lowd fellow,

1 Not in f. e.
2 Exeunt: in f. e.

(As I have heard him swear himself there's one Whom he begot with child,) let her appear.
And he shall marry her: the nuptial finish'd,
Let him be whipp'd and hang'd.
Lucio. I beseech your highness, do not marry me to a whore! Your highness said even now I made you a duke: good my lord, do not recompense me in making me a cuckold.
Duke. Upon mine honour, thou shalt marry her.
Thy slanders I forgive; and therewithal
Hermits thy other forfeits.—Take him to prison,
And see our pleasure herein executed.
Lucio. Marrying a punk, my lord, is pressing to death, whipping, and hanging.
Duke. Slander a prince deserves it.—
She, Claudio, that you wrong'd, look you restore.—
Joy to you, Mariana!—love her, Angelo:
I have confess'd her, and I know her virtue.—
Thanks, good friend Escalus, for thy much goodness:
There's more behind that is more gratulate.
Thanks, provost, for thy care and secrecy;
We shall employ thee in a worthier place.—
Forgive him, Angelo, that brought you home
The head of Ragozine for Claudio's:
Th' offence pardon itself.—Dear Isabel,
I have a motion much imports your good;
Whereeto if you'll a willing ear incline,
What's mine is yours, and what is yours is mine.—
So, bring us to our palace; where we'll show
What's yet behind, that's meet you all should know.

SCENE: Ephesus.

ACT I.

Enter Solinus, Duke of Ephesus, Ægeon, a Merchant of Syracuse, Jailor, Officers, and other Attendants.

Æge. Proceed, Solinus, to procure my fall,
And by the doom of death end woes and all.
Duke. Merchant of Syracuse, plead no more.
I am not partial, to infringe our laws:
The cunniy and discord, which of late
Sprung from the rancorous outrage of your duke
To merchants, our well-dealing countrymen,—
Who, wanting gilders to redeem their lives,
Have seal'd his rigorous statutes with their bloods,—
Excludes all pity from our threatening looks.
For, since the mortal and intestine jars
"Twixt thy seditious countrymen and us,
It hath in solemn synods been decreed,
Both by the Syracusan and ourselves,
To admit no traffic to our adverse towns;
Nay, more, if any, born at Ephesus,
Be seen at Syracusan marts and fairs;
Again, if any Syracusan born
Come to the bay of Ephesus, he dies;
His goods confiscate to the duke's dispose,
Unless a thousand marks be levied,
To quit the penalty, and to ransom him.
Thy substance, valued at the highest rate,
Cannot amount unto a hundred marks;
Therefore, by law thou art condemn'd to die.
Æge. Yet this my comfort; when your words are done,
My woes end likewise with the evening sun.
Duke. Well, Syracusan; say, in brief, the cause
Why thou departedst from thy native home,
And for what cause thou came'st to Ephesus.
Æge. A heavier task could not have been impos'd,
Than to speak my griefs unspeakable;
Yet, that the world may witness, that my end
Was wrought by fortune, not by vile offence,
I'll utter what my sorrow gives me leave.

1 nature: in f. o.
2 Malone makes a separate line of the last three words.
3 gladly.
And left the ship, then sinking-ripe, to us. My wife, more careful for the latter-born, Had fasten'd him unto a small spare mast, Such as sea-faring men provide for storms; To him one of the other twins was bound, Whilst I had been like heedful of the other. The children thus dispos'd, my wife and I, Fixing our eyes on whom our care was fix'd, Fasten'd ourselves at either end the mast; And floating straight, obedient to the stream, Were carried towards Corinth, as we thought. At length the sun, gazing upon the earth, Dispers'd those vapours that offended us, And by the benefit of his wish'd light The seas wax'd calm, and we discovered Two ships from far making amain to us; Of Corinth that, of Epidaurus this: But ere they came,—O, let me say no more! Gather the sequel by that went before.

_Duke._ Nay, forward, old man; do not break off so, For we may pity, though not pardon thee. _Æge._ O, had the gods done so, I had not now Worthily term'd them merciless to us! For, ere the ships could meet by twice five leagues, We were encounter'd by a mighty rock, Which being violently borne upon, Our helpful ship was splitted in the midst; So that in this unjust divorce of us Fortune had left to both of us alike What to delight in, what to sorrow for. Her part, poor soul! seeming as burdened With lesser weight, but not with lesser woe, Was carried with more speed the wind, And in our sight they three were taken up By fishermen of Corinth, as we thought. At length another ship had seized on us; And knowing whom it was their hap to save, Gave healthful welcome to their shipwreck'd guests; And would have reft the fishers of their prey, Had not their bark been very slow of sail, And therefore homeward did they bend their course:— Thus have you heard me sever'd from my bliss, And by misfortune was my life prolong'd; To tell sad stories of my own mishaps.

_Duke._ And, for the sake of them thou sorrowest for, Do me the favour to dilate at full What hath happen'd of them, and thee, till now. _Æge._ My youngest boy, and yet my eldest care, At eighteen years became inquisitive After his brother; and importun'd me, That his attendant (so his case was like, Reft of his brother, but retain'd his name,) Might bear him company in the quest of him; Whom whilst he labour'd of all love to see, I hazarded the loss of whom I lov'd. Five summers have I spent in farthest Greece, Roaming clean through the bounds of Asia; And, coasting homeward, came to Ephesus, Hopeless to find, yet loth to leave unsought Or that, or any place that harbours men. But here must end the story of my life; And happy were I in my timely death, Could all my travels warrant me they live.

_Duke._ Helpless _Ægeon_, whom the fates have mark'd To bear the extremity of dire mishap! Now, trust me, were it not against our laws, Against my crown, my oath, my dignity, Which princes, would they, may not disannul, My soul should sue as advocate for thee. But though thou art adjudged to the death, And passed sentence may not be recall'd, But to our honour's great disparagement, Yet will I favour thee in what I can: Therefore, merchant, I'll limit thee this day, To seek thy hope by beneficial help. Try all the friends thou hast in Ephesus; Beg thou, or borrow, to make up the sum, And live; if no, then thou art doom'd to die.— Jailer, now' take him to thy custody.

_Jailor._ I will, my lord. _Æge._ Hopeless, and helpless, doth _Ægeon_ weend, But to procrastinate his lifeless end.

SCENE II.—A public Place.

_Enter Antipholus and Dromio of Syracuse, and a Merchant._

_Mer._ Therefore, give out you are of Epidamnum, Let that your goods too soon be confiscate. This very day, a Syracusan merchant Is apprehended for arrival here; And, not being able to buy out his life According to the statute of the town, Dies ere the weary sun set in the west. There is your money that I had to keep.

_Ant. S._ Go, bear it to the Centaur, where we host, And there, Dromio, till I come to thee. Within this hour it will be dinner-time: Till then, I'll view the manners of the town, Peruse the traders, gaze upon the buildings, And then return and sleep within mine inn, For with long travel I am still and weary. Get thee away.

_Dra. S._ Many a man would take you at your word, And go indeed, having so good a mean.

_Ant. S._ A trusty villain, sir; that very oft, When I am dull with care and melancholy, Lightens my humour with his merry jests. What, will you walk with me about the town, And then go to my inn, and dine with me? _Mer._ I am invited, sir, to certain merchants, Of whom I hope to make much benefit; I crave your pardon. Soon' at five o'clock, Please you, I'll meet with you upon the mart, And afterwards consort you till bed-time: My present business calls me from you now.

_Ant. S._ Farewell till then. I will go lose myself, And wander up and down to view the city.

_Mer._ Sir, I commend you to your own content.

_Ant. S._ He that commends me to mine own content, Commends me to the thing I cannot get, I to the world am like a drop of water, That in the ocean seeks another drop; Who, falling there to find his fellow forth, Unseen, inquisitive, confounds himself: So I, to find a mother, and a brother, In quest of them, unhappy, lose myself.

_Epistum. Ephes._ Here comes the almanack of my true date.—What now? How chance thou art return'd so soon? _Dra. E._ Return'd so soon! rather approach'd too late.

The capon burns, the pig falls from the spit, The clock hath stricken twelve upon the bell; My mistress made it one upon my cheek: She is so hot, because the meat is cold; The meat is cold, because you come not home;

---

1. _laboured of a_: in f. e. 2. _help: in f. e._ 3. _Not in f. e._ 4. _The rest of this direction is not in f. e._ 5. _About five o'clock._
You come not home, because you have no stomach;
You have no stomach, having broke your fast;
But we, that know what 'tis to fast and pray,
Are penitent\(^1\) for your default to-day.

Ant. Sir, in my wind, sir; Tell me this, I pray,
Where have you let the money that I gave you?

Dro. E. O! sixpence, that I had o' Wednesday last
To pay the saddler for my mistress' crupper.
The saddler had it, sir; I kept it not.

Ant. I am not in a sportive humour now.
Tell me, and daily not, where is the money?
We being strangers here, how dar'st thou trust
So great a charge from thine own custody?

Dro. E. I pray you, jest, sir, as you sit at dinner.
If I from my mistress come to you in post;
I if return, I shall be post\(^2\) indeed,
For she will score your fault upon my pate.\(^3\)

Methinks, your maw, like mine, should be your clock,
And strike you home without a messenger.

Ant. Come, Dromio, come; these jests are out of season:
Reserve them till a merrier hour than this.
Where is the gold I gave in charge to thee?

Dro. E. To me, sir? why you gave no gold to me.

Ant. S. Come on, sir kneave; have done your foolishness,
And tell me how thou hast dispos'd thy charge.

Dro. E. My charge was but to fetch you from the mart
Home to your house, the Phoenix, sir, to dinner.
My mistress, and her sister, stay for you.

Ant. S. Now, as I am a Christian, answer me,
In what safe place you have bestow'd my money,
Or I shall break that merry scence of yours,
That stands on tricks when I am undispos'd.
Where is the thousand marks thou hast of me?

Dro. E. I have some marks of yours upon my pate;
Some of my mistress' marks upon my shoulders,
But not a thousand marks between you both.
If I should pay your worship those again,
Perchance, you would not bear them patiently.

Ant. S. Thy mistress' marks! what mistress, slave, hast thou?

Dro. E. Your worship's wife, my mistress at the Phoenix;
She that doth fast till you come home to dinner.
And prays that you will hie you home to dinner.

Ant. S. What, wilt thou flout me thus unto my face,
Being forbid? There, take you that, sir kneave.

Strikes him.

Dro. E. What mean you, sir? for God's sake, hold your hands.

Nay, an you will not, sir, I'll take my heels.

Exit running.

Ant. S. Upon my life, by some device or other
The villain is o'er-raught\(^4\) of all my money.
They say, this town is full of cozenage;
As, nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Dark-working sorcerers that change the mind,
Soul-killing witches that deform the body,
Disguised cheats, prating mountebanks,
And many such like libertines of sin:
If it prove so, I will be gone the sooner.
I'll to the Centaur, to go seek this slave:
I greatly fear, my money is not safe.

Exit.

---

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A public Place.

Enter Adriana, wife to Antipholus of Ephesus, and Luciana, her sister.

Adr. Neither my husband, nor the slave return'd,
That in such haste I sent to seek his master?
Sure, Luciana, it is two o'clock.

Luc. Perhaps, some merchant hath invited him,
And from the mart he's somewhere gone to dinner.
Good sister, let us dine, and never fret.

A man is master of his liberty:
Time is their master; and, when they see time,
They'll go, or come: if so, be patient, sister.

Adr. Why should their liberty than ours be more?

Luc. Because their business still lies out o' door.

Adr. Look, when I serve him so, he takes it ill.

Luc. O! know he is the bridle of your will.

Adr. There's none but ass's will be bridled so.

Luc. Why, head-strong liberty is lash'd with woe.

There's nothing situate under heaven's eye,
But hath his bound, in earth, in sea, in sky:
The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls,
Are their males' subjects, and at their controls.
Men, more divine, the masters of all these,
Lords of the wide world, and wild wat'ry seas,
Indued with intellectual sense and souls,
Of more pre-eminence than fish and fowls,
Are masters to their females, and their lords:
Then, let your will attend on their accords.

---

1. Being penitent.
2. It was a custom to mark the score of a shop on a post.
3. Cook: in f. e.
4. Not in f. e.
5. Over-raught.
6. An allusion to the custom of soliciting the management of the estate of a fool.
7. Doubtfully.
Dro. E. Nay; he struck so plainly, I could too well feel his blows; and withal so doubly, that I could scarce understand them.

Aldr. But say, I pr’ythee, is he coming home?
It seems, he hath great care to please his wife.

Dro. E. Why, mistress, sure my master is horn-mad.
Aldr. Horn-mad, thou villain!
Dro. E. I mean not cuckold-mad;
But, sure, he is stark mad.

Why, I desir’d him to come home to dinner,
He ask’d me for a thousand marks in gold:
’Tis dinner-time, quoth I; my gold, quoth he:
Your meat doth burn, quoth I; my gold, quoth he:
Will you come, quoth I? my gold, quoth he:
Where is the thousand marks I gave thee, villain?
The pig, quoth I, is burn’d; my gold, quoth he:
My mistress, sir, quoth I; hang up thy mistress!
I know not thy mistress: out on thy mistress!

Luc. Quoth who?
Dro. E. Quoth my master:
I know, quoth he, no house; no wife, no mistress.
So that my errand; due unto my tongue,
I thank him, I bear home upon my shoulders;
For, in conclusion, he did beat me there.

Aldr. Go back again, thou slave, and fetch him home.
Dro. E. Go back again, and be new beaten home?
For God’s sake, send some other messenger.

Aldr. Back, slave, or I will break thy pate across.
Dro. E. And he will bless that cross with other beating.
Between you I shall have a holy head.

Aldr. Hence, prating peasant! fetch thy master home.

Dro. E. Am I so round with you, as you with me,
That like a foot-ball do you spurrn me thus?
You spurrn me hence, and he will spurrn me hither:
If I last in this service, you must case me in leather.

[Exit.]

Luc. Fie, how impatience lowreth in your face!

Aldr. His company must do his minions grace,
Whilst I at home starve for a merry look.

Hath homely age th’ alluring beauty took
From my poor cheek? then, he hath wasted it:
Are my discourses dull? barren my wit?
If voluble and sharp discourse be marry’d,
Unkindness blunts it, more than marble hard.
Do their gay vestments his affections bait?
That’s not my fault; he’s master of my state.
What ruins are in me, that can be found
By him not ruin’d? then, is he the ground
Of my defeatures. My decayed fair
A sunny look of his would soon repair;
But, too unruly deer, he breaks the pale,
And feeds from home: poor I am but his stale.

Luc. Self-harming jealousy!—gie! beat it hence.

Aldr. Unfeeling cox can with such wrongs dispense.
I know his eye doth homage other where,
Or else, what lets it but he would be here?
Sister, you know, he promis’d me a chain:
Would that alone, alone he would detain,
So he would keep fair quarter with his bed!
I see, the jewel best enamelled
Will lose his beauty: yet though gold ’bides still,
That others touch, and often touching will Wear gold; and no man, that hath a name,
But falseness and corruption doth him shame.
Since that my beauty cannot please his eye,
I’ll weep what’s left away, and weeping die.

Luc. How many fond sores serve mad jealousy! [Exeunt.]

UNCOMELINESS. T FAIRNESS. A Hiis pretend® wife—the stalking-horse, behind which sportsmen formerly shot, was so called. *This and the two following lines are struck out by the M.S. emendator of the folio of 1623—where the two succeeding lines of the text, in the first folio of 1629, are also omitted. * Scowce means a small fortification, as well as head; hence, insconce, to fortify.
Dro. S. Basting.
Ant. S. Well, sir, then 'twill be dry.
Dro. S. If it be, sir, I pray you eat none of it.
Ant. S. Your reason?
Dro. S. Lost it make you cholerick, and purchase me another dry basting.
Ant. S. Well, sir, learn to jest in good time: there's a time for all things.
Dro. S. I durst have denied that, before you were so cholerick.
Ant. S. By what rule, sir?
Dro. S. Marry, sir, by a rule as plain as the plain bald pate of father Time himself.
Ant. S. Let's hear it.
Dro. S. There's no time for a man to recover his hair that grows bald by nature.
Ant. S. May he not do it by fine and recovery?
Dro. S. Yes, to pay a fine for a periwig, and recover the lost hair of another man.
Ant. S. Why is Time such a niggard of hair, being,
as it is, so plentiful an excrement?
Dro. S. Because it is a blessing that he bestows on beasts; and what he hath scantled men in hair, he given them in wit.
Ant. S. Why, there's many a man hath more hair than wit.
Dro. S. Not a man of those, but he hath the wit to lose his hair.
Ant. S. Why, thou didst conclude hairy men plain dealers, without wit.
Dro. S. The plainest dealer, the sooner lost: yet he loseth it in a kind of jollity.
Ant. S. For what reason?
Dro. S. For two; and sound ones too.
Ant. S. Nay, not sound, I pray you.
Dro. S. Sure ones then.
Ant. S. Nay, not sure, in a thing falsing.
Dro. S. Certain ones then.
Ant. S. Name them.
Dro. S. The one, to save the money that he spends in trimming! the other, that at dinner they should not drop in his porridge.
Ant. S. You would all this time have proved, there is no time for all things.
Dro. S. Marry, and did, sir; namely, 'e'en no time to recover hair lost by nature.
Ant. S. But your reason was not substantial, why there is no time to recover.
Dro. S. Thus I mend it: Time himself is bald, and therefore, to the world's end, will have bald followers.
Ant. S. I knew, 'tis a bald conclusion.
But soft! who wafts us yonder?

Enter Adrian and Luciana.

Adr. Ay, ay, Antipholus, look strange, and frown:
Some other mistress hath thy sweet aspects,
I am not Adriana, nor thy wife.
The time was once, when thou unurged'st would vow
That never words were music to thine ear,
That never object pleasing in thine eye,
That never touch well welcome to thy hand,
That never meant sweet-savour'd in thy taste,
Unless I spake, or look'd, or touch'd, or carv'd.
How comes it now, my husband, O! how comes it,
That thou art thus estranged from thyself?
Thyself I call it, being strange to me,
That, undividable, incorporate,
Am better than thy dear self's better part.
Ah, do not tear away thyself from me;

For know, my love, as easy may'st thou fall
A drop of water in the breaking gulp,
And take unmingled thence that drop again,
Without addition or diminishing,
As take from me thyself, and not me too.
How dear-yest would it touch thee to the quick,
Shouldst thou but hear I were lencionte,
And that this body, consecrate to thee,
By ruffian lust should be contaminate!
Wouldst thou not spit at me, and spurn at me,
And hurl the name of husband in my face,
And tear the stain'd skin off my harlot-brow,
And from my false hand cut the wedding-ring,
And break it with a deep-divorcing vow?
I know thou canst; and therefore, thou do it.
I am possess'd with an adulterate blot;
My blood is mingled with the crime of lust:
For, if we two be one, and thou play false,
I do digest the poison of thy flesh,
Being strumpeted by thy contagion.
Keep then fair league and truce with thy true bed,
I live unstain'd, thou undishonoured.

Ant. S. Plead you to me, fair dame? I know you not.
In Ephesus I am but two hours old,
As strange unto your town, as to your talk;
Who, every word by all my wit being scanned,
Want wit in all one word to understand.

Luc. Fie, brother: how the world is chang'd with you!
When were you wont to use my sister thus?
She sent for you by Dromio home to dinner.

Ant. S. By Dromio?
Dro. S. By me?

Adr. By thee; and this thou didst return from him
That he did buffet thee, and, in his blows
Denied my house for his, me for his wife.

Ant. S. Did you converse, sir, with this gentlewoman?

What is the course and drift of your compact?

Dro. S. I, sir? I never saw her till this time.

Ant. S. Villain, thou liest; for even her very words
Didst thou deliver to me on the mart.

Dro. S. I never spoke with her in all my life.

Ant. S. How can she thus then call us by our names,
Unless it be by inspiration?

Adr. How ill agrees it with your gravity
To counterfeit thus grossly with your slave,
Abetting him to thwart me in my mood!
Do it my wrong, you are from me exempt,
But wrong not that wrong with a more contempt.
Come, I will fasten on this sleeve of thine;
Thou art an elm, my husband, I a vine,
Whose weakness, married to thy stronger state,
Makes me with thy strength to communicate:
If aught possess thee from me, it is dross,
Usurping ivy, brier, or idle moss;
Who, all for want of pruning, with intrusion
Infest thy sap, and live on thy confusion.

Ant. S. To me she speaks; she means* me for her theme!

What, was I married to her in my dream,
Or sleep I now, and think I hear all this?
What error draws*, our eyes and ears amiss?
Until I know this sure uncertainty,
I'll entertain the proffer'd fallacy.

Luc. Dromio, go bid the servants spread for dinner.

Dro. S. O, for my beads! I cross me for a sinner.

This is the fairy land: O, spite of spites!

---

* trying: in f. e. an alteration by Pope, of trying, in old ed.
* distracted: the emendation in the text was suggested by Warburton.
We talk with goblins, owls, and elves and sprites.\(^1\)
If we obey them not, this will ensue,
They'll suck our breath, or pinch us black and blue.
Luc. Why praw'st thou to thyself, and answer'st not?
Dromio, thou Dromio, thou small, thou slug, thou sot!
Dro. S. I am transformed, master, am I not?
Ant. S. I think thou art, in mind, and so am I.
Dro. S. Nay, master, both in mind and in my shape.
Ant. S. Thou hast thine own form.
Dro. S. No, I am an ape.
Luc. If thou art chang'd to aught, 'tis to an ass.
Dro. S. 'T is true; she rides me, and I long for grass.
'T is so, I am an ass; else it could never be,
But I should know her, as well as she knows me.
Adr. Come, come; no longer will I be a fool,
To put the finger in my eye and weep,

WHilst man and master laugh my woes to scorn.
Come, sir, to dinner.—Dromio, keep the gate.—
Husband, I'll dine above with you to-day,
And shrive you of a thousand idle pranks.—
Sirrah, if any ask you for your master,
Say, he dines forth, and let no creature enter.—
Come, Sister.—Dromio, play the porter well.
Ant. S. Am I in earth, in heaven, or in hell?
Sleeping or waking? mad, or well-advise'd?
Known unto these, and to myself disguis'd?
I'll say as they say, and persever so,
And in this mist, at all adventures, go.
Dro. S. Master, shall I be porter at the gate?
Adr. Ay, and let none enter, lest I break your pate.
Luc. Come, come, Antipholus; we dine too late.

[Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Same.
Enter Antipholus of Ephesus, Dromio of Ephesus,
Angelo, and Balthazar.

Ant. E. Good signior Angelo, you must excuse us;
My wife is shrewish, when I keep not hours,
Say, that I linger'd with you at your shop
To see the making of her carken,\(^2\)
And that to-morrow you will bring it home;
But here's a villain, that would face me down
He met me on the mart, and that I beat him,
And charg'd him with a thousand marks in gold;
And that I did deny my wife and house.—
Thou drunkard, thou, what did'st thou mean by this?
Dro. E. Say what you will, sir; but I know what I know.
That you beat me at the mart, I have a hand to show;
If my skin were parchment, and the blows you gave
Your own hand-writing would tell you for certain\(^4\)
what I think.
Ant. E. I think, thou art an ass.
Dro. E. Marry, so it doth appear,
By the wounds I suffer, and the blows I bear.
I should kick, being kick'd; and being at that pass,
You would keep from my heels, and beware of an ass.
Ant. E. You are sad, signior Balthazar: pray God,
Our cheer
May answer my good-will, and your good welcome here.
Bal. I hold your dainties cheap, sir, and your welcome dear.
Ant. E. O, signior Balthazar! either at flesh or fish,
A table-full of welcome makes scarce one dainty dish.
Bal. Good meat, sir, is common; that every churl affords.
Ant. E. And welcome more common, for that's nothing but words.
Bal. Small cheer and great welcome makes a merry feast.
Ant. E. Ay, to a niggardly host, and more sparing guest:
But though my cates be mean, take them in good part;
Better cheer may you have, but not with better heart.
But soft! my door is lock'd. Go bid them let us in.

1 elvish sprites: in i. e. 2 Necklace. 3 the: in i. e. 4 These two words not in i. e. 5 a patch of up, a pretender. 6 another: in i. e. 7 an ass: in i. e. 8 hope: in i. e.
Dro. E. So; come, help! well struck; there was A blow for blow.
Ant. E. Thou baggage, let me in.
Luc. Can you tell for whose sake?
Dro. E. Master, knock the door hard.
Luc. Let him knock till it ache.
Ant. E. You'll cry for this, minion, if I beat the door down.
Luc. What needs all that, and a pair of stocks in the town?
Adr. [Within.] Who is that at the door, that keeps all this noise?
Dro. S. By my troth, your town is troubled with unruly boys.
Ant. E. Are you there, wife? you might have come before.
Adr. Your wife, sir kneave? go, get you from the door.
Dro. E. If you went in pain, master, this kneave would go sore.
Ang. Here is neither cheer, sir, nor welcome: we would fain have either.
Bal. In debating which was best, we shall part 1 with neither.
Dro. E. They stand at the door, master: bid them welcome hither.
Ant. E. There is something in the wind, that we cannot get in.
Dro. E. You would say so, master, if your garments were thin.
Your cake here is warm within; you stand here in the cold:
It would make a man mad as a buck to be so bought and sold.2
Ant. E. Go, fetch me something: I'll break ope the gate.
Dro. S. Break any breaking here, and I'll break your kneave's pate.
Dro. E. A man may break a word with you, sir, and words are but wind;
Ay, and break it in your face, so he break it not behind.
Dro. S. It seems, thou want'st breaking. Out upon the hind!
Dro. E. Here's too much out upon thee! I pray thee, let me in.
Dro. S. Ay, when fowls have no feathers, and fish have no fin.
Ant. E. Well, I'll break in. Go, borrow me a crow.
Dro. E. A crow without feather? master, mean you so?
For a fish without a fin, there's a fowl without a feather.
If a crow help us in, sirrah, we'll pluck a crow together.
Ant. E. Go, get thee gone; fetch me an iron and flow.
Bal. Have patience, sir; O let it not be so:
Herein you war against your reputation,
And draw within the compass of suspect
Th' unviolated honour of your wife.
Once this,3—Your long experience of her wisdom,
Her sober virtue, years, and modesty,
Plead on her part some cause to you unknown;
And doubt not, sir, but she will well excuse
Why at this time the doors are made against you.
Be rul'd by me: depart in patience,
And let us to the Tiger all to dinner;
And about evening come yourself alone
To know the reason of this strange restraint.
If by strong hand you offer to break in,
Now in the stirring passage of the day,
A vulgar comment will be made of it;
And that supposed by the common route,
Against your yet ungauged estimation,
That may with foul intrusion enter in,
And dwell upon your grave when you are dead:
For slander lives upon succession,
For ever housed, where it gets possession.
Ant. E. You have prevail'd: I will depart in quiet,
And, in despite of mirth, mean to be merry.
I know a wench of excellent discourse,
Pretty and witty; wild, and yet too, gentle;
There will we dine. This woman that I mean,
My wife (but I protest, without desert,
Hath oftentimes upbraided me withal:
To her will we to dinner.—Get you home,
And fetch the chain; by this, I know, 'tis made:
Bring it, I pray you, to the Porcupine:4
For there's the house. That chain will I bestow
(Bo it for nothing but to spite my wife)
Upon mine hostess there. Good sir, make haste.
Since mine own doors refuse to entertain me,
I'll knock elsewhere, to see if they'll disman me.
Ang. I'll meet you at that place, some hour hence.
Ant. E. Do so. This jest shall cost me some expense.
[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same.
Enter Luciana, and Antipholus of Syracuse.
Luc. And may it be that you have quite forgot,
A husband's office? Shall unkind debate
Even in the spring of love, thy love-springs rot?
Shall love, in building, grow so ruinate?
If you did wed my sister for her wealth,
Then, for her wealth's sake use her with more kindness:
Or, if you like elsewhere, do it by stealth:
Muffle your false love with some show of blindness;
Let not my sister read it in your eye;
Be not thy tongue thy own shame's orator;
Look sweet, speak fair, become thy courtesy;
Apparel wise like virtue's harbinger:
Bear a fair presence, though your heart be tainted;
Teach sin the carriage of a holy saint:
Be secret-false; what need she be acquainted?
What simple thief brags of his own attain?
'T is double wrong to truant with your bed,
And let her read it in thy looks at board;
Shame hath a bastard fame, well managed;
Ill deeds are doubled with an evil word.
Alas, poor women! make us but believe,
Being compact of credit,4 that you love us;
Though others have the arm, show us the sleeve,
We in your motion turn, and you may move us.
Then, gentle brother, get you in again:
Comfort my sister, cheer her, call her wife.
'T is holy sport to be a little vain,
When the sweet breath of flattery conquers strife.
Ant. S. Sweet mistress, (what your name is else, I know not,
Nor by what wonder you do hit of mine,) Less in your knowledge, and your grace you show not,
Than our earth's wonder; more than earth divine.
Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak:

1 Depart. 2 In the same sense as our slang phrase, sold. 3 Once for all let me tell you this. 4 All the old eds. have Porpentne, which Lyce would retain, as a distinct form of the word used by many old writers. 5 E. A. have Antipholus, in place of the last two words. 6 Full of credulity.
Lay open to my earthy gross conceit,
Smother'd in errors, fickle, shallow, weak,
The folded meaning of your words' deceit.
Against my soul's pure truth, why labour you
To make it wander in an unknown field?
Are you a god? would you create me new?
Transform me then, and to your power I'll yield.
But if that I am I, then well I know,
Your weeping sister is no wife of mine,
Nor to her bed no homage do I owe:
Far more, far more, to you do I incline.\(^1\)
O, train me not, sweet mermaid, with thy note,
To drown me in thy sister's flood of tears.
Sing, syren, for thyself, and I will dote:
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hairs,
And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lie;
And, in that glorious supposition, think
He gains by death, that hath such means to die:
Let Love,\(^2\) being light, be drowned if she sink!
LUC. What! are you mad, that you do reason so?
ANT. S. Not mad, but mated?\(^3\) how, I do not know.
LUC. It is a fault, that springeth from your eye.
ANT. S. For gazing on your beams, fair sun, being by.
LUC. Go, where you should, and that will clear
Your sight.
ANT. S. As good to wink, sweet love, as look on night.
LUC. Why call you me love? call my sister so.
ANT. S. Thy sister's sister.
LUC. That's my sister.\(^4\)
ANT. S.
It is thyself, mine own self's better part;
Mine eye's clear eye, my dear heart's dearer heart;
My food, my fortune, and my sweet hope's aim,
My sole earth's heaven, and my heaven's claim.
LUC. All this my sister is, or else should be.
ANT. S. Call thyself sister, sweet, for I am thee.
These will I love, and with thee lead my life:
Thou hast no husband yet, nor I no wife.
Give me thy hand.
LUC. O, soft, sir! hold you still:
I'll fetch my sister, to get her good-will. [Exit.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse, running.]\(^5\)

ANT. S. Why, how now, Dromio! where run'st thou so fast?
DRO. S. Do you know me, sir? am I Dromio? am I your man? am I myself?
ANT. S. Thou art Dromio, thou art my man, thou art thyself.
DRO. S. I am an ass; I am a woman's man, and besides myself.
ANT. S. What woman's man? and how besides thyself?
DRO. S. Marry, sir, besides myself, I am due to a woman; one that claims me, one that haunts me, one that will have me.
ANT. S. What claim lays she to thee?
DRO. S. Marry, sir, such claim as you would lay to your horse; and she would have me as a beast: not that, I being a beast, she would have me; but that she, being a very beastly creature, lays claim to me.
ANT. S. What is she?
DRO. S. A very reverend body; ay, such a one as a man may not speak of, without he say, sir-reverence.\(^6\)
I have but lean luck in the match, and yet she is a wondrous fat marriage.
ANT. S. How dost thou mean a fat marriage?

SCENE I.—The Same.

Enter a Merchant, Angelo, and an Officer.

Mer. You know, since Pentecost the sun is due, And since I have not much importun'd you; Nor now I had not, but that I am bound To Persia, and want gilders for my voyage: Therefore, make present satisfaction, Or I'll attach you by this officer.

Ang. Even just the sum, that I do owe to you, Is growing to me by Antipholus; And, in the instant that I met with you, He had of me a chain: at five o'clock, I shall receive the money for the same. Pleaseth you walk with me down to his house, I will discharge my bond, and thank you too.

Enter Antipholus of Ephesus, and Dromio of Ephesus, from the Countess.'

Off. That labour may you save: see where he comes.

Ant. E. While I go to the goldsmith's house, go thou And buy a rope's end, that will bestow Among my wife and these* confederates, For locking me out of my doors by day.— But soft, I see the goldsmith.—Get thee gone; Buy thou a rope, and bring it home to me.

Ant. E. A man is well holp up that trusts to you: I promise'd me your presence, and the chain, But neither chain, nor goldsmith, came to me. Belike, you thought our love would last too long, If it were chain'd together, and therefore came not.

Ang. Saving your merry humour, here's the note How much your chain weighs to the utmost cæsæt, The fineness of the gold, and chargeful fashion, Which doth amount to three odd ducats more Than I stand debted to this gentleman: I pray you, see him presently charg'd, For he is bound to sea, and stays but for it.

Ant. E. I am not furnish'd with the present money; Besides, I have some business in the town. Good signor, take the stranger to my house, And with you take the chain, and bid my wife Disburse the sum on the receipt thereof: Penc'iance, I will be there as soon as you.

Ang. Then, you will bring the chain to her yourself?

Ant. E. No; bear it with you, lest I come not time enough.

Ang. Not once, nor twice, but twenty times you have. Go home with it, and please your wife withal; And soon at supper-time I'll visit you, And then receive my money for the chain.

Ant. S. I pray you, sir, receive the money now, For fear you never see chain, nor money, more.

Ang. You are a merry man, sir. Fare you well. [Exit.

Ant. S. What I should think of this, I cannot tell; But this I think, there's no man is so vain, That would refuse so fair an offer'd chain. I see, a man here needs not live by shifts, When in the streets he meets such golden gifts. I'll to the mart, and there for Dromio stay; If any ship put out, then straight away. [Exit.

ACT IV.
That stays but till her owner comes aboard,
And then, sir, she bears away. Our fraughting, sir,
I have convey'd aboard, and I have bought
The oil, the balsamum, and aqua-vite.
The ship is in her trim: the merry wind
Blows fair from land; they stay for nought at all,
But for their owner, master, and yourself.

Ant. E. How now? a madman! Why, thou peevish sheep!
What ship of Epidamnum stays for me?
Dro. S. A ship you sent me to, to hire waftage.
Ant. E. Thou drunken slave, I sent thee for a rope;
And told thee to what purpose, and what end.
Dro. S. You sent me for a rope's end as soon.
You sent me to the bay, sir, for a bark.
Ant. E. I will debate this matter at more leisure,
And teach your ears to list me with more heed.
To Adrianna, villain, his thee straight;
Give her this key, and tell her, in the desk
That's cover'd o'er with Turkish tapestry,
There is a purse of ducats: let her send it.
Tell her, I am arrested in the street,
And that shall ball me. Hie thee, slave, be gone.
On, officer, to prison-till it come.

[Exit Merchant, Angelo, Officer, and Ant. E.]

Dro. S. To Adrianna? that is where we din'd,
Where Downabel did claim me for her husband:
She is too big, I hope, for me to compass.
Thither I must, although against my will,
For servants must their masters' minds fulfill.
[Exit.

SCENE II.—The Same.

Enter Adrianna and Luciana.

Adr. Ah! Luciana, did he tempt thee so?
Might'st thou perceive austerely in his eye
That he did plead in earnest? yea or no?
Look'd he or red, or pale? or sad, or merry?
What observation mad'st thou in this case,
Of his heart's meteor tilting in his face?
Luc. First he denied you had in him right.
Adr. For meant, he did me none: the more my spite.
Luc. Then swore he, that he was a stranger here.
Adr. And true he swore, though yet forsworn he were.
Luc. Then pleaded I for you.
Adr. And what said he?
Luc. That love I begg'd for you, he begg'd of me.
Adr. With what persuasion did he tempt thy love?
Luc. With words, that in an honest suit might move.
First, he did praise my beauty; then, my speech.
Adr. Didst speak him fair?
Luc. Have patience, I beseech.
Adr. I cannot, nor will I not hold me still:
My tongue, though not my heart, shall have his will.
He is deform'd, crooked, old, and warre,
Ill-fac'd, worse bodied, shapeless everywhere;
Vicious, ungentle, foolish, blunt, unkind,
Stigmatiz'd in making, worse in mind.

Luc. Who would be jealous, then, of such a one?
No evil lost is wail'd when it is gone.
Adr. Ah! but I think him better than I say,
And yet would herein others' eyes were worse.
Far from her nest the hapwring cries away:
My heart prays for him, though my tongue do curse.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse, running.

Dro. S. Here, go: the desk! the purse! swift, now make haste.
Luc. How hast thou lost thy breath?
Dro. S. By running fast.

Adr. Where is thy master, Dromio? is he well?
Dro. S. No, he's in Tartar limbo, worse than hell:
A devil in an everlasting garment* hath him fell,
One whose heart is button'd up with steel;
Who knows no touch of mercry, cannot feel;
A fiend, a fury, pitiless and rough:
A wolf, may, worse, a fellow all in buff;
A back-friend, a shoulder-clapper, one that countermands
The passages and alleys, creeks and narrow lands:
A hound that runs counter,* and yet draws dry-foot well;*
One that, before the judgment, carrieth poor souls to hell.*

Adr. Why, man, what is the matter?
Dro. S. I do not know the matter: he is 'rested on the case.
Adr. What, is he arrested? tell me, at whose suit.
Dro. S. I am not at whose suit he is arrested well;
But he's in a suit of buff which 'rested him, that I can tell.
Will you send him, mistress, redemption? the money in his desk?
Adr. Go fetch it, sister.—This I wonder at:
[Exit Luciana.

That he, unknown to me, should be in debt:—
Tell me, was he arrested on a band?
Dro. S. Not on a band, but on a stronger thing;
A chain, a chain: do you not hear it ring?
Adr. What, the chain?
Dro. S. No, no, the bell. 'Tis time that I were gone:
It was two ere I left him, and now the clock strikes one.
Adr. The hours come back, that I did never hear.
Dro. S. O yes; if any hour meet a serjeant,* a turns back for very fear.
Adr. As if time were in debt! how fondly dost thou reason!
Dro. S. Time is a very bankrupt, and owes more than he's worth, to season.
Nay, he's a thief: have you not heard men say,
That time comes stealing on by night and day?
If he be in debt and theft, and a serjeant in the way,
Hath he not reason to turn back any hour in a day?

Re-enter Luciana.

Adr. Go, Dromio: there's the money, bear it straight,
And bring thy master home immediately.—
Come, sister; I am press'd down with conceit,
Conceit, my comfort, and my injury.
[Exit.

SCENE III.—The Same.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse, wearing the chain.

Ant. S. There's not a man I meet but doth salute me,
As if I were their well acquainted friend;
And every one doth call me by my name.
Some tender money to me, some invite me;
Some other give me thanks for kindnesses;
Some offer me commodities to buy:
Even now a tailor call'd me in his shop,
And shew'd me silks that he had bought for me,
And, therewithal, took measure of my body,
Sure, these are but imaginary wiles,
And Lapland sorcerers inhabit here.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

Dro. S. Master, here's the gold you sent me for. What have you got the picture of old Adam new apparel'd?
Ant. S. What gold is this? What Adam dost thou mean?
Dro. S. Not that Adam that kept the paradise, but that Adam that keeps the prison: he that goes in the calf's skin that was kill'd for the prodigal: he that came behind you, sir, like an evil angel, and bid you forsake your liberty.
Ant. S. I understand thee not.
Dro. S. No? why, 'tis a plain case: he that went, like a base-viol, in a case of leather: the man, sir, that, when gentlemen are tired, gives them a fob, and rests them: he, sir, that takes pity on decayed men, and gives them suits of durance; he that sets up his rest to do more exploits with his mace, than a morris-pike.
Ant. S. What, thou mean'st an officer?
Dro. S. Ay, sir, the serjeant of the band; he that brings any man to answer it, that breaks his band: one that thinks a man always going to bed, and says, 'God give you good rest.'
Ant. S. Well, sir, there rest in your foolery. Is there any ship puts forth to-night? may we be gone?
Dro. S. Why, sir, I brought you word an hour since, that the bark Expedition put forth to-night; and then were you hindered by the serjeant to tarry for the hoy Delay. Here are the angels that you sent for to deliver you.
Ant. S. The fellow is distract, and so am I, And here we wander in illusions. Some blessed power deliver us from hence! Enter a Courtezán.

Cour. Well met, well met, master Antipholus. I see, sir, you have found the goldsmith now: Is that the chain, you promised me to-day?
Ant. S. Satan, avoid! I charge thee, tempt me not!
Dro. S. Master, is this mistress Satan?
Ant. S. It is the devil.
Dro. S. Nay, she is worse, she is the devil's dam: and here she comes in the habit of a light wench: and thereof comes that the wenches say, 'God damn me,' that's as much as to say, 'God make me a light wench'? It is written, they appear to men like angels of light: light is an effect of fire, and fire will burn; ergo, light wenches will burn. Come not near her.
Cour. Your man and you are marvellous merry, sir. Will you go with me? we'll mend our dinner here.
Dro. S. Master, if you do expect spoon-meat, be-speak a long spoon.
Ant. S. Why, Dromio?
Dro. S. Marry, he must have a long spoon that must eat with the devil.
Ant. S. Avoid, thou fiend! what tell'st thou me of supping? Thou art, as you are all, a sorceress: I conjure thee to leave me, and be gone.
Cour. Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner, Or for my diamond the chain you promised, And I'll be gone, sir, and not trouble you.
Dro. S. Some devils ask but the parings of one's nail,
A rush, a hair, a drop of blood, a pin, a nut, a cherry-stone; But show me more covetous, would have a chain.
Master, be wise: an if you give it her, The devil will shake her chain, and fright us with it.

Cour. I pray you, sir, my ring, or else the chain. I hope you do not mean to cheat me so.
Ant. S. Avault, thou witch! Come, Dromio, let us go.
Dro. S. Fly pride, says the peacock: mistress, that you know. [Exit Ant. and Dro.
Cour. Now, out of doubt, Antipholus is mad, Else would he never so demean himself. A ring he hath of mine worth forty ducats, And for the same he promised me a chain: Both one and other he denies me now. The reason that I gather he is mad, Besides this present instance of his rage, Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner Of his own doors being shut against his entrance. Belike, his wife, acquainted with his fits, On purpose shuts the doors against his way. My way is now, to tye home to his house, And tell his wife, that, being luminac, He rush'd into my house, and took perfir For my ring away. This course I fittest choose, For forty ducats is too much to lose. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—The Same.

Enter Antipholus of Ephesus, and a Jailer.

Ant. E. Fear me not, man; I will not break away: I'll give thee, ere I leave thee, so much money, To warrant thee, as I am 'rested for. My wife is in a wayward mood to-day, And will not lightly trust the messenger: That I should be attach'd in Ephesus, I tell you, 'twill sound harshly in her ears. Enter Dromio of Ephesus with a rope's-end. Here comes my man: I think he brings the money.—How now, sir? have you that I sent you for?
Dro. E. Here's that, I warrant you, will pay them all.
Ant. E. But where's the money?
Dro. E. Why, sir, I gave the money for the rope. Ant. E. Five hundred ducats, villain, for a rope?
Dro. E. I'll serve you, sir, five hundred at the rate.
Ant. E. To what end did I bid thee hie thee home?
Dro. E. To a rope's end, sir; and to that end am I return'd.
Ant. E. And to that end, sir, I will welcome you. [Beating him.
Jail. Good sir, be patient.
Dro. E. Nay, 'tis for me to be patient; I am in adversity.
Jail. Good now, hold thy tongue.
Dro. E. Nay, rather persuade him to hold his hands. Ant. E. Thou whoreson, senseless villain!
Dro. E. I would I were senseless, sir; that I might not feel your blows.
Ant. E. Thou art sensible in nothing but blows, and so is an ass.

Dro. E. I am an ass, indeed: you may prove it by my long ears. I have serv'd him from the hour of my nativity to this instant, and have nothing at his hands for my service, but blows. When I am cold, he heats me with beating; when I am warm, he cools me with beating: I am wak'd with it, when I sleep; rais'd with it, when I sit; driven out of doors with it, when I go from home; welcomed home with it, when I return: nay, I bear it on my shoulders, as a beggar went her brat; and, I think, when he hath lamed me, I shall beg with it from door to door.
Ant. E. Come, go along: my wife is coming yonder.
Enter Adriana, Luciana, the Courtezane, and a Schoolmaster called Pinch.

Dro. E. Mistress, respire finem,⁴ respect your end: or rather the prophecy, like the parrot, "beware the rope's end."

Ant. E. Wilt thou still talk? [Beats him.]

Cour. How say you now? is not your husband mad?

Adr. His incivility confirms no less.—

Good doctor Pinch, you are a conjurer; Establish him in his true sense again,

And I will please you what you will demand.

Luc. Alas, how fiery and how sharp he looks!

Cour. Mark, how he trembles in his ecstasy!

Pinch. Give me your hand, and let me feel your pulse.

Ant. E. There is my hand, and let it feel your ear.

Pinch. I charge thee, Satan, hound's within this man,

To yield possession to my holy prayers,

And to thy state of darkness hie thee straight:

I conjure thee by all the saints in heaven.

Ant. E. Peace, doting wizard, peace! I am not mad.

Adr. O, that thou wert not, poor distracted soul!

Ant. E. You minion, you; are these your customers?

Did this companion with the saffron face

Revel and feast it at my house to-day,

Whilst upon me the guilty doors were shut,

And I desired to enter in my house?

Adr. O, husband, God doth know, you din'd at home;

Where 'twould you had remain'd until this time,

Free from these slanders, and this open shame!

Ant. E. Din'd at home? Thou villain, what say'st thou?

Dro. E. Sir, sooth to say, you did not dine at home.

Ant. E. Were not my doors lock'd up, and I shut out?

Dro. E. Perdy, your doors were lock'd, and you shut out.

Ant. E. And did not she herself revile me there?

Dro. E. Sans fable, she herself revil'd you there.

Ant. E. Did not her kitchen-maid rail, taunt, and scorn me?

Dro. E. Certes, she did; the kitchen-vestal scorn'd you.

Ant. E. And did not I in rage depart from thence?

Dro. E. In verity, you did:—my bones bear witness,

That since have felt the rigour⁵ of his rage.

Adr. Is 't good to soothe him in these contraries?

Pinch. It is no shame: the fellow finds his vein,

And, yielding to him, humour's well his frenzy.

Ant. E. Thou hast subord'n the goldsmith to arrest me.

Adr. Alas, I sent you money to redeem you,

By Dromio here, who came in haste for it.

Dro. E. Money by me! heart and good-will you import?

But, surely, master, not a rag of money.

Ant. E. Went'st not thou to her for a purse ofducats?

Adr. He came to me, and I deliver'd it.

Luc. And I am witness with her that she did.

Dro. E. God and the rope-maker now bear me witness,

That I was sent for nothing but a rope!

Pinch. Mistress, both man and master is possessed:

I know it by their pale and deadly looks.

They must be bound, and laid in some dark room.

Ant. E. Say, wherefore didst thou lock me forth to-day?

And why dost thou deny the bag of gold?

Adr. I did not, gentle husband, lock thee forth.

Dro. E. And, gentle master, I receiv'd no gold;

But I confess, sir, that we were lock'd out.

Adr. Dissembling villain! thou speakest false in both.

Ant. E. Dissembling harlot! thou art false in all,

And art confederate with a damned pack

To make a loathsome, abject scorn of me;

But with these nails I'll pluck out those false eyes,

That would behold in me this shameful sport.

Enter three or four, and bind Antipholus and Dromio.

Adr. O bind him, bind him! let him not come near me.

Pinch. More company!—the fiend is strong within him.

Luc. Ah me! poor man, how pale and wan he looks.

Ant. E. What, will you murder me? Thou jailor, thou,

I am thy prisoner: wilt thou suffer them

To make a rescue?

Jail. Masters, let him go:

He is my prisoner, and you shall not have him.

Pinch. Go, bind this man, for he is frantic too.

Adr. What wilt thou do, thou peevish officer?

Hast thou delight to see a wretched man

Do outrage and displeasure to himself?

Jail. He is my prisoner: if I let him go,

The debt he owes will be requir'd of me.

Adr. I will discharge thee, ere I go from thee.

Bear me forthwith unto his creditor,

And, knowing how the debt grows, I will pay it.

Good master doctor, see him safe convey'd

Home to my house.—O, most unhappy day!

Ant. E. O, most unhappy strumpet!

Dro. E. Master, I am here enter'd in bond for you.

Ant. E. Out on thee, villain! wherefore dost thou mad me?

Dro. E. Will you be bound for nothing? be mad, good master;

Cry, the devil.—

Luc. God help, poor souls! how idly do they talk.

Adr. Go bear him hence.—Sister, go you with me.—

[Exeunt Pinch and assistants with Ant. and Dro.]

Say now, whose suit is he arrested at?

Jail. One Angelo, a goldsmith; do you know him?

Adr. I know the man. What is the sum he owes?

Jail. Two hundred ducats.

Adr. Say, how grows it due?

Jail. Due for a chain your husband had of him.

Adr. He did bespeak a chain for me, but had it not.

Cour. When as your husband, all in rage, to-day

Came to my house, and took away my ring,

(The ring I saw upon his finger now)

Straight after did I meet him with a chain.

Adr. It may be so, but I did never see it.—

Come, jailor, bring me where the goldsmith is:

I long to know the truth hereof at large.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse, with his rapier drawn, and Dromio of Syracuse.

Luc. God, for thy mercy! they are loose again.

Adr. And come with naked swords. Let's call more help,

To have them bound again.

Jail. Away! they'll kill us.

[Exeunt Adriana, Luciana, and Jailor.

Ant. S. I see, these witches are afraid of swords.

Dro. S. She, that would be your wife, now ran from you.

1 In Upton Fulwood's First Part of the Eighth Liberal Science, 1579, these words occur, and are translated in a marginal note, "All's well that ends well." Shakespeare may have borrowed both a phrase and a title from this work.

2 vigour: in f. e. 3 Not in f. e.
Ant. S. Come to the Centaur; fetch our stuff from thence:
I long that we were safe and sound aboard.
Dro. S. Faith, stay here this night, they will surely do us no harm; you saw they spoke us fair, gave us gold, Methinks they are such a gentle nation, that but for the mountain of mad flesh that claims marriage of me, I could find in my heart to stay here still, and turn witch.
Ant. S. I will not stay to-night for all the town;
Therefore away, to get out stuff aboard. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Same. Before an Abbey.

Enter Merchant and Angelo.

Ang. I am sorry, sir, that I have hinder'd you;
But, I protest, he had the chain of me,
Though most dishonestly he doth deny it.
Mer. How is the man esteem'd here in the city?
Ang. Of very reverend reputation, sir;
Of credit infinite, highly belov'd,
Second to none that lives here in the city;
His word might bear my wealth at any time.
Mer. Speak softly; yonder, as I think, he walks.

Enter Antipholus and Dromio of Syracuse.

Ang. 'Tis so; and that self chain about his neck,
Which he forewore most monstrously to have.
Good sir, draw near with me, I'll speak to him.—
Signior Antipholus, I wonder much
That you would put me to this shame and trouble;
And not without some scandal to yourself,
With circumstance and oaths so to deny
This chain, which now you wear so openly:
Beside the charge, the shame, imprisonment,
You have done wrong to this my honest friend;
Who, but for staying on our controversy,
Had hoisted sail, and put to sea to-day.
This chain, you had of me; can you deny it?
Ant. S. I think, I had: I never did deny it.
Mer. Yes, that you did, sir; and forswore it too.
Ant. S. Who heard me to deny it, or forswear it?
Mer. These ears of mine, thou knowest, did hear thee.
Fie on thee, wretch! 'tis pity that thou liv'st
To walk where any honest men resort.
Ant. S. Thou art a villain to impeach me thus.
I'll prove my word and mine honesty
Against thee presently, if thou dost not stand.
Mer. I dare, and do defy thee for a villain. [They draw.

Enter Adriana, Luciana, Courtezan, and Others.

Adr. Hold! hurt him not, for God's sake! he is mad—
Some get within him; take his sword away,
Bind Dromio too, and bear them to my house.

Dro. S. Run, master, run; for God's sake take a house!
This is some priory:—in, or we are spoil'd.

[Exeunt Antipholus and Dromio to the Abbey.

Enter the Lady Abbess.

Abb. Be quiet, people. Wherefore throng you hither?
Adr. To fetch my poor distracted husband hence.
Let us come in, that we may find him fast,
And bear him home for his recovery.
Ang. I knew, he was not in his perfect wits.
Mer. I am sorry now, that I did draw on him.
Abb. How long hath this possessed him the man?
Adr. This week he hath been heavy, sour, sad;
And much different from the man he was;
But, till this afternoon, his passion
Ne'er brake into extremity of rage.
Abb. Hath he not lost much wealth by wreck of sea?

† Baggage.
‡ Close with him.
§ Not in f. o.
It is a branch and parcel of mine oath, A charitable duty of my order; Therefore depart, and leave him here with me.

_Adr._ I will not hence, and leave my husband here: And I will doth beseech your holiness, To separate the husband and the wife.

_Abb._ Be quiet, and depart: thou shalt not have him.

[Exit Abbess.]

_Luc._ Complain unto the duke of this indignity.

_Adr._ Come, go: I will fall prostrate at his feet, And never rise, until my tears and prayers Have won his grace to come in person hither, And take perforce my husband from the abbess.

_Mer._ By this, I think, the dial points at five: Anon, I'm sure, the duke himself in person

(Enter Duke attended; _Adr._ bare-headed; with the Headsman and other Officers.)

_Duke._ Yet once again proclaim it publicly, If any friend will pay the sum for him, He shall not die, so much we tender him.

_Adr._ Justice, most sacred duke, against the abbess!

_Duke._ She is a virtuous and a reverend lady: It cannot be, that she hath done thee wrong.

_Adr._ May it please your grace, Antipholus, my husband, Whom I made lord of me, and all I had, At your important letters, this ill day

A most outrageous fit of madness took him, That desperately he hurried through the street, (With him his bondman, all as mad as he) Doing displeasure to the citizens By rushing in their houses, bearing thence Rings, jewels, any thing his rage did like. Once did I get him bound, and sent him home, Whilst to take order for the wrongs I went, That here and there his fury had committed. Anon, I wot not by what strange escape, He broke from those that had the guard of him, And with unbridled rage pursued himself, Each one with ireful passion, with drawn swords, Met us again, and, madly bent on us, Chan'd us away; till, raising of more aid, We came again to bind them. Then they fled Into this abbey, whither we pursued them; And here the abbess shuts the gates on us, And will not suffer us to fetch him out, Nor send him forth, that we may bear him hence. Therefore, most gracious duke, with thy command, Let him be brought forth, and borne hence for help.

_Duke._ Long since thy husband serv'd me in my wars, And to me thou engag'd a prince's word, When thou didst make him master of thy bed, To do him all the grace and good I could.

Go, some of you, knock at the abbey gate, And bid the lady abbess come to me. I will determine this, before I stir.

_Enter a Servant._

_Serv._ O mistress, mistress! shift and save yourself.

My master and his man are both broke loose, Beaten the maids a-row, and bound the doctor, Whose beard they have sing'd off with brands of fire; And ever as it blazed they throw on him Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair. My master beareth patience to him, and the while His man with scissors nicks him like a fool; And, sure, unless you send some present help, Between them they will kill the conjurer.

_Adr._ Peace, fool! thy master and his man are here: And that is false, thou dost report to us.

_Serv._ Mistress, upon my life, I tell you true; I have not breath'd almost, since I did see it. He cries for you, and vows, if he can take you, To scourch your face, and to disfigure you.

_Hark, hark, I hear him, mistress: fly, be gone._

_Duke._ Come, stand by me; fear nothing. Guard with halberds!

_Adr._ Ah me, it is my husband! Witness you, That he is borne about invisible:

Even now we hou'sd him in the abbey here, And now he's there, past thought of human reason.

_Enter Antipholus and Dromio of Ephesus._

_Ant. E._ Justice, most gracious duke! O! grant me justice, Even for the service that long since I did thee, When I besrid thee in the wars and took Deep sears to save thy life; even for the blood That then I lost for thee, now grant me justice.

_Aege._ Unless the fear of death doth make me dote, I see my son Antipholus, and Dromio!

_Ant. E._ Justice, sweet prince, against that woman there!

She whom thou gav'st to me to be my wife, That hath abused and dishonour'd me,
Even in the strength and height of injury, Beyond imagination is the wrong, That she this day hath shameless thrown on me.

_Duke._ Discover how, and thou shalt find me just.

_Ant. E._ This day, great duke, she shut the doors upon me, While she with harlots feasted in my house.

_Duke._ A grievous fault. Say, woman, didst thou so?

_Adr._ No, my good lord: myself, he, and my sister, To-day did done together. So befal my soul, As this is false he burdens me within.

_Luc._ Ne'er may I look on day, nor sleep on night, But she tells to your highness simple truth.

_Ang._ O perjured woman! They are both forsworn:
In this the reprobate and justly chargeth them.

_Ant. E._ My liege, I am advised what I say; Neither disturb'd with the effect of wine, Nor heady rash provok'd with raging ire, Albeit my wrongs might make one wiser mad. This woman lock'd me out this day from dinner: That goldsmith there, were he not pack'd with her, Could witness it, for he was with me then; Who parted with me to go fetch a chain, Promising to bring it to the Pericopter, _Balthazar and I did dine together.

Our dinner done, and he not coming therewith, I went to seek him: in the street I met him, And in his company, that gentleman.

They did this perfur'd goldsmith swear me down, That this day of him receiv'd the chain, Which, God be knows, I saw not: for the which, He did arrest me with an officer.

I did obey, and sent my peasant home.

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

ACT V.

Ege. O! grief hath chang'd me, since you saw me last.
And careful hours, with time's deformed hand,
Have written strange defeatures in my face:
But tell me yet, dost thou not know my voice?
Ant. E. Neither.
Ege. Dromio, nor thou?
Dro. E. No, trust me, sir, nor I.
Ege. I am sure thou dost.
Dro. E. Ay, sir; but I am sure I do not; and whatsoever a man denies, you are now bound to believe him.

Ege. Not know my voice? O, time's extremity!
Hast thou so crack'd my voice, split? my poor tongue
In seven short years, that here my only son
Knows not my feeble key of untund' care?
Though now this grained face of mine be hid
In sap-consuming winter's drizzled snow,
And all the conduits of my blood froze up,
Yet hath my night of life some memory,
My wasting lamps some fading glimmer left,
My dull, deaf' ears a little use to hear:
All these old witnesses (I cannot err)
Tell me this child is not my son Antipholus.

Ant. E. I never saw my father in my life.
Ege. But seven years since, in Syracuse, boy,
Thou know'st we parted. But, perhaps, my son,
Thou shams't to acknowledge me in misery.
Ant. E. The duke, and all that know me in the city,
Can witness with me that it is not so.
I ne'er saw Syracuse in my life.
Duke. I tell thee, Syracusan, twenty years
Have I been patron to Antipholus,
During which time he ne'er saw Syracuse.
I see, thy age and dangers make thee dote.

Enter Abbess, with ANTIPOHULS of Syracuse and Dromio of Syracuse.
Abb. Most mighty duke, behold a man much wrong'd.

[All gather to see them.]

Adr. I see two husbands, or mine eyes deceive me!
Duke. One of these men is Genius to the other;
And so of these: which is the natural man,
And which the spirit? Who decipher them?
Dro. S. I, sir, am Dromio; command him away.
Dro. E. I, sir, am Dromio; pray let me stay.
Ant. S. Aegon, art thou not? or else his ghost?
Dro. S. O, my old master! who hath bound him here?
Abb. Whoever bound him, I will loose his bonds,
And gain a husband by his liberty. —
Speak, old Aegon, if thou be'st the man
That had a wife once call'd Emilia,
That bore thee at a burden two fair sons.
O! if thou be'st the same Aegon, speak,
And speak unto the same Emilia!

Ege. If I dream not, thou art Emilia.
If thou art she, tell me, where is that son
That floated with thee on the fatal raft?
Abb. By men of Epidamnum, he, and I,
And the twin Dromio, all were taken up;
But, by and by, rude fishermen of Corinth
By force took Dromio and my son from them,
And me they left with those of Epidamnum.
What then became of them, I cannot tell;
I, to this fortune, that you see me in.
Duke. Why, here begins his morning story right.

These two Antipholus, these two so like,
And these two Dromios, one in semblance,—

Besides his urging of his wreck at sea:—

These are the parents to these children,
Which accidentally are met together.
Antipholus, thou canst't from Corinth first.

Ant. S. No, sir, not I: I came from Syracuse.
Duke. Stay, stand apart: I know not which is which.
Ant. E. I came from Corinth, my most gracious lord.
Dro. E. And I with him.
Ant. E. Brought to this town by that most famous warrior,
Duke Menaphon, your most renowned uncle.

Adr. Which of you two did dine with me to-day?
Ant. S. I, gentle mistress.
Adr. And are not you my husband?
Ant. E. No; I say nay to that.
Ant. S. And so do I, yet did she call me so;
And this fair gentlewoman, her sister here,
Did call me brother.—What I told you then,
I hope, I shall have leisure to make good,
If this be not a dream I see, and hear.

Ang. That is the chain, sir, which you had of me.
Ant. S. I think it be, sir: I deny it not.
Ant. E. And you, sir, for this chain arrested me.
Ang. I think I did, sir: I deny it not.
Adr. I sent you money, sir, to be your bail,
By Dromio; but I think, he brought it not.

Dro. E. No, none by me.
Ant. S. This purse of ducats I received from you,
And Dromio, my man, did bring them me.
I see, we still did meet each other's man,
And I was ta'en for him, and he for me,
And thereupon these errors all arose.

Ant. E. These ducats pawn I for my father here.
Duke. It shall not need: thy father hath his life.
Cour. Sir, I must have that diamond from you.
Ant. E. There, take it; and much thanks for my good cheer.

Abb. Renowned duke, vouchsafe to take the pains
To go with us into the abbey here,
And hear at large discoursed all our fortunes;
And all that are assembled in this place,

That by this sympathized one day's error
Have suffered wrong, go, keep us company,
And we shall make full satisfaction.
Twenty-five years have I been gone in travail
Of you, my sons; and at this present hour
My heavy burdens are delivered.—
The duke, my husband, and my children both,
And you the calendars of their nativity,
Go to a gossip's feast, and go with me:
After so long grief such nativity!

Duke. With all my heart: I'll gossip at this feast.

[Exeunt Duke, Abbess, Egeon, Courtezan, Merchant, Angelo, and Attendants.

Dro. S. Master, shall I fetch your stuff from shipboard?
Ant. E. Dromio, what stuff of mine hast thou embarked?
Dro. S. Your goods, that lay at host, sir, in the Centaur.
Ant. S. He speaks to me.—I am your master, Dromio:
Come, go with us; we'll look to that anon.
Embrace thy brother there; rejoice with him.

[Exeunt Ant. S. and E., Adr., and Luc.

Dro. S. There is a fat friend at your master's house,
That kitchen'd me for you to-day at dinner:
She now shall be my sister, not my wife.

Dro. E. Methinks, you are my glass, and not my brother:
I see by you I am a sweet-faced youth.
Will you walk in to see their gossiping?
Dro. S. Not I, sir; you are my elder.
Dro. E. That's a question: how shall we try it?
Dro. S. We'll draw cuts for the senior: till then,
Let thou first.
Dro. E. Nay, then thus:
We came into the world, like brother and brother;
And now, let's go hand in hand, not one before another.

[Exeunt.

SCENE. Messina.

ACT I.

SCENE I. Before Leonato's House.

Enter Leonato, Hero, Beatrice, and others, with a Gentleman.

Leon. I learn in this letter, that Don Pedro of Arragon comes this night to Messina.

Gent. He is very near by this: he was not three leagues off when I left him.

Leon. How many gentlemen have you lost in this action?

Gent. But few of any sort, and none of name.

Leon. A victory is twice itself, when the achiever brings home full numbers. I find here, that Don Pedro hath bestowed much honour on a young Florentine, called Claudio.

Gent. Much deserved on his part, and equally remembered by Don Pedro: he hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age, doing in the figure of a lamb the feats of a lion: he hath, indeed, better bettered expectation, than you must expect of me to tell you how.

Leon. He hath an uncle, here in Messina, will be very much glad of it.

Gent. I have already delivered him letters, and there appears much joy in him; even so much, that joy could not show itself modest enough without a badge of bitterness.

Leon. Did he break out into tears?

Gent. In great measure.

Leon. A kind overflow of kindness. There are no faces truer than those that are so washed; how much better is it to weep at joy, than to joy at weeping?

Beat. I pray you, is signior Montanto returned from the wars, or no?

Gent. I know none of that name, lady: there was none such in the army of any sort.

1 Messenger: in f. d. 2 Throughout the Scene: Mess: in f. d. 3 A term of the fencing-school. 4 A long and light-feathered arrow, used for objects at a distance. 5 A short and thick arrow, for near sin. 6 Stood. 7 Chaucer uses the five wits for the five senses. A similar enumeration, referred to in the text, was made of the intellectual powers. 8 In heraldry, a distinction.
BEAT. O Lord! he will hang upon him like a disease: he is sooner caught than the pestilence, and the taker runs presently mad. God help the noble Claudio! if he have caught the Benedick, it will cost him a thousand pound ere he be cured.

GENT. I hold will friends with you, lady. BENEDICK. Do, good friend. LEON. You will never run mad, niece. BEAT. No, not till a hot January. GENT. Don Pedro is approached.

ENTER DON PEDRO, JOHN, CLAUDIO, BENEDICK, BAL-THAZAR, and others.

D. PEDRO. Good signior Leonato, are you come to meet your trouble? the fashion of the world is to avoid cost, and you encounter it.

LEON. Never came trouble to my house in the likeness of your grace; for trouble being gone, sorrow should remain, but when you depart from me, sorrow abides, and happiness takes his leave.

D. PEDRO. You embrace your charge too willingly. I think, this is your daughter.

LEON. Her mother hath many times told me so. BENE. Were you in doubt, sir, that you asked her?

LEON. Signior Benedick, no; for then were you a child. D. PEDRO. You have it full, Benedick: we may guess by this what you are, being a man.—Truly, the lady fathers herself.—Be happy, lady, for you are like an honourable father. BENE. If signior Leonato be her father, she would not have his head on her shoulders for all Messina, as like him as she is.

BENEDICK. I wonder that you will still be talking, signior Benedick: no body marks you.

BENE. What, my dear lady Disdain! are you yet living?

BENEDICK. Is it possible disdain should die, while she hath such meat to feed it, as signior Benedick? Courtesy itself must convert to disdain, if you come in her presence.

BENE. Then is courtesy a turn-coat. But it is certain, I am loved of all ladies, only you excepted; and I would I could find in my heart that I had not a hard heart, for, truly, I love none.

BENEDICK. A dear happiness to women: they would else have been troubled with a pernicious suit. I thank God, and my cold blood, I am of your humour for that: I had rather hear my dog bark at a crow, than a man swear he loves me.

BENEDICK. God keep your ladyship still in that mind: some gentleman or other shall escape a predestinate scratched face.

BENEDICK. Scratching could not make it worse, an't were such a face as yours.

BENE. Well, you are a rare parrot-teacher.

BENEDICK. A bird of my tongue is better than a beast of yours.

BENE. I would, my horse had the speed of your tongue, and so good a continuer. But keep your way o' God's name; I have done.

BEAT. You always end with a jade's trick: I know you of old.

D. PEDRO. That is the sum of all.—Leonato,—signior Claudio, and signior Benedick,—my dear friend Leonato hath invited you all. I tell him we shall stay here at the least a month, and he heartily prays some occasion may detain us longer: I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart.

LEON. If you swear, my lord, you shall not be forsworn.—Let me bid you welcome, my lord; being reconciled to the prince your brother, I owe you all duty. JOHN. I thank you: I am not of many words, but I thank you.

LEON. Please it your grace, lead on?

D. PEDRO. Your hand, Leonato: we will go together.

[Exeunt all but BENEDICK and CLAUDIO.]

CLAUDIO. Benedick, didst thou note the daughter of signior Leonato?

BENE. I noted her not; but I looked on her.

CLAUDIO. Is she not a modest young lady?

BENE. Do you question me, as an honest man should do, for my simple true judgment; or would you have me speak after my custom, as being a professed tyrant to their sex?

CLAUDIO. No; I pray thee, speak in sober judgment.

BENE. Why, 't faith, mothkens she's too low for a high praise, too brown for a fair praise; and too little for a great praise: only this commendation I can afford her: that were she other than she is, she were unhandsome, and being no other but as she is, I do not like her.

CLAUDIO. Thou think'st, I am in sport: I pray thee, tell me truly how thou lik'st her.

BENE. Would you buy her, that you inquire after her? CLAUDIO. Can the world buy such a jewel? BENE. Yea, and a case to put it into. But speak you this with a sad brow, or do you play the flouting Jack, to tell us Cupid is a good hare-finder, and Vulcan a rare carpenter? Come, in what key shall a man take you, to go in the song?

CLAUDIO. In mine eye she is the sweetest lady that ever I looked on. BENE. I can see yet without spectacles, and I see no such matter; there's her cousin, an she were not possessed with a fury, excesses her as much in beauty, as the first of May doth the last of December. But I hope, you have no intent to turn husband; have you?

CLAUDIO. I would scarce trust myself, though I had sworn the contrary, if Hero would be my wife.

BENE. Is 't come to this, i' faith? Hath not the world one man, but he will wear his cap with suspicion? Shall I never see a bachelor of threescore again? Go to, i' faith; an thou wilt needs thrust thy neck into a yoke, wear the print of it, and sigh away Sundays. Look, Don Pedro is returned to seek you.

D. PEDRO. Re-enter Don Pedro.

D. PEDRO. What secret hath held you here, that you followed not to Leonato's?

BENE. I would your grace would constrain me to tell.

D. PEDRO. I charge thee on thy allegiance. BENE. You hear, count Claudio: I can be secret as a dumb man, I would have you think so; but on my allegiance,—mark you this, on my allegiance.—He is in love. With whom?—now that is your grace's part,—Mark, how short the answer is:—with Hero, Leonato's short daughter.

CLAUDIO. If this were so, so were it uttered.

BENE. Like the old tale, my lord: it is not so, nor

---

1 This phrase is derived, says Knight, from books of credit. 2 Quarreler. 3 The old copies read: you are. 4 Old cop.: This. 5 Join.
"t was not so; but, indeed, God forbid it should be so.

Claud. If my passion change not shortly, God forbid it should be otherwise.

D. Pedro. Amen, if you love her; for the lady is very well worthy.

Claud. You speak this to fetch me in, my lord.

D. Pedro. By my troth, I speak my thought.

Claud. And in faith, my lord, I spoke mine. Bene. And by my two faiths and troths, my lord, I spoke mine.

Claud. That I love her, I feel.

D. Pedro. That she is worthy, I know.

Bene. That I neither feel how she should be loved, nor know how she should be worthy, is the opinion that I dare not melt out of me; I will die in it at the stake.

D. Pedro. Thou wast ever an obstinate heretic in the despite of beauty.

Claud. And never could maintain his part, but in the force of his will.

Bene. That a woman conceived me, I thank her: that brought me up, I likewise give her most humble thanks; but that I will have a reech3 winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an invisible baldric,4 all women shall pardon me. Because I will not do them the wrong to mistrust any, I will do myself the right to trust none; and the fine is, (for which I may go the finer) I will live a bachelor.

D. Pedro. I shall see thee ere I die, look pale with love.

Bene. With anger, with sickness, or with hunger, my lord; not with love: prove, that ever I lose more blood with love, than I will get again with drinking, pick out mine eyes with a ballad-maker’s pen, and hang me up at the door of a brothel-house for the sign of blind Cupid.

D. Pedro. Well, if ever thou dost fall from this faith, thou wilt prove a notable argument.

Bene. If I do, hang me in a bottle like a cat, and shoot at me; and he that first4 hits me, let him be clapped on the shoulder, and called Adam.5

D. Pedro. Well, as time shall try:

"In time the savage bull doth bear the yoke."

Bene. The savage bull may, but if ever the sensible Benedick bear it, pluck off the bull’s horns, and set them in my forehead; and let me be vilely painted, and in such great letters as they write, "Here is good horse to hire," let them signify under my sign,—"Here you may see Benedick the married man."7

Claud. If this should ever happen, thou wouldst be horn-mad.

D. Pedro. Nay, if Cupid have not spent all his quiver in Venice, thou wilt quake for this shortly.

Bene. I look for an earthquake too, then.

D. Pedro. Well, you will temporize with the hours. In the mean time, good signior Benedick, repair to Leonato’s: commend me to him, and tell him, I will not fail him at supper; for, indeed, he hath made great preparation.

Bene. I have almost matter enough in me for such an embassage; and so I commit you—

Claud. To the tuition of God: from my house, if I had it.

D. Pedro. The sixth of July: your loving friend Benedick.

Bene. Nay, mock not, mock not. The body of your discourse is sometime guarded7 with fragments, and the guards are but slightly baston on neither: ere you flout old ends8 any farther, examine your conscience, and so I leave you. [Exit Benedick.]

Claud. My liege, your highness now may do me good.

D. Pedro. My love is thine to teach: teach it but how.

And thou shalt see how apt it is to learn

Any hard lesson that may do thee good.

Claud. Hath Leonato any son, my lord?

D. Pedro. No child but Hero, she’s his only heir.

Dost thou affect her, Claudio?

Claud. O! my lord,

When you went onward on this ended action, I look’d upon her with a soldier’s eye, That like’d, but had a rougher task in hand, Than to drive liking to the name of love; But now I am return’d, and that war-thoughts Have left their places vacant, in their rooms Come thro’nging soft and delicate desires, All prompting me how fair young Hero is, Seyvil. I like’d her eyes I went to wars.”

D. Pedro. Thou wilt be like a lover presently, And tire the hearer with a book of words. If thou dost love fair Hero, cherish it, And I will break with her, and with her father, And thou shalt have her.18 Was’t not to this end, That thou began’st to twist so fine a story?

Claud. How sweetly do you minister to love, That know love’s grief by his complexion! But lest my liking might too sudden seem, I would have salv’d it with a longer treatise.

D. Pedro. What need the bridge much broader than the flood?

The fairest ground11 is the necessity. Look, what will serve is fit: ’t is no peace, thou lovest, And I will fit thee with the remedy. I know we shall have revelling to-night; I will assume thy part in some disguise, And tell fair Hero I am Claudio; And in her bosom I’ll unclasps my heart, And take her hearing prisoner with the force, And strong encounter of my amorous tale: Then, after, to her father will I break; And, the conclusion is, she shall be thine. In practice let us put it presently. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in Leonato’s House.

Enter Leonato and Antonio.

Leon. How now, brother? Where is my cousin, your son? Hath he provided this music?

Ant. He is very busy about it. But, brother, I can tell you strange news that you yet dreamt not of.

Leon. Are they good?

Ant. As the event stamps them; but they have a good cover; they show well outward. The prince and count Claudio, walking in a thick-pleached alley in my orchard, were thus12 much overheard by a man of mine: the prince discovered to Claudio that he loved my niece, your daughter, and meant to acknowledge it this night in a dance; and, if he found her accordant, he meant to take the present time by the top, and instantly break with you of it.

Leon. Hath the fellow any wit, that told you this?
SCENE I.—Another Room in Leonato's House.

Enter John and Conrad.

Con. What the good year, my lord! why are you thus out of measure sad?

John. There is no measure in the occasion that breeds it; therefore the sadness is without limit.

Con. You should hear reason.

John. And when I have heard it, what blessing brings it?

Con. If not a present remedy, at least a patient sufficiency.

John. I wonder, that thou being (as thou say'st thou art) born under Saturn, goest about to apply a moral medicine to a mortifying mischief. I cannot hide what I am: I must be sad when I have cause, and smile at no man's jests; eat when I have stomach, and wait for no man's leisure; sleep when I am drowsy, and tend on no man's business; laugh when I am merry, and claw no man in his humour.

Con. Yea; but you must not make the full show of this, till you may do it without controlment. You have, till of late, stood out against your brother, and he hath taken you newly into his grace; where it is impossible you should take true root, but by the fair weather that you make yourself: it is needful that you frame the season for your own harvest.

John. I had rather be a canker in a hedge, than a rose in his grace; and it better fits my blood to be disdained of all, than to fashion a carriage to rib love from any: in this, though I cannot be said to be a flattering honest man, it must not be denied but I am a plain-dealing villain. I am trusted with a muzzle, and enfranchised with a clog; therefore I have decreed, not to sing in my cage. If I had my mouth, I would bite; if I had my liberty, I would do my liking: in the mean time, let me be that I am, and seek not to alter me.

Con. Can you make no use of your discontent?

John. I make all use of it, for I use it only. Who comes here? What news, Borachio?

Enter Borachio.

Bora. I came yonder from a great supper: the prince, your brother, is royally entertained by Leonato, and I can give you intelligence of an intended marriage.

John. Will it serve for any model to build mischief on? What is he, for a fool, that betroths himself to unquietness?

Bora. Marry, it is your brother's right hand.

John. Who? The most exquisite Claudio?

Bora. Even he.

John. A proper squire! and who, and who? which way looks he?

Bora. Marry, on Hero, the daughter and heir of Leonato.

John. A very forward March-chick! How came you to this?

Bora. Being entertained for a perfumer, as I was smoking a musty-room, comes me the prince and Claudio, hand in hand, in sad conference: I whipt me behind the arras, and there heard it agreed upon, that the prince should woo Hero for himself, and having obtained her, give her to count Claudio.

John. Come, come; let us thither: this may prove food to my displeasure. That young start-up hath all the glory of my overthrown: if I can cross him any way, I bless myself every way. You are both sure, and will assist me?

Con. To the death, my lord.

John. Let us to the great supper: their cheer is the greater, that I am subdued. Would the cook were of my mind! Shall we go prove what's to be done?

Bora. We'll wait upon your lordship. [Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Hall in Leonato's House.

Enter Leonato, Antonio, Hero, Beatrice, and others.

Leon. Was not count John here at supper?

Ant. I saw him not.

Beat. How tardily that gentleman looks: I never can see him, but I am heart-burned an hour after.

Hero. He is of a very melancholy disposition.

Beat. He were an excellent man, that were made just in the mid-way between him and Benedick: the one is too like an image, and says nothing; and the other too like my lady's eldest son, evermore tattling.

Leon. Then, half-signior Benedick's tongue in count John's mouth, and half count John's melancholy in signior Benedick's face.

Beat. With a good leg, and a good foot, uncle, and money enough in his purse, such a man would win any woman in the world,—if a' could get her good will.

Leon. By my troth, niece, thou wilt never get thee a husband, if thou be so shrewd of thy tongue.

1 Not in f. e. 2 This word not in f. e. 3 Only in quarto.
Well, you know the devil meet me, like an old cuckold, with horns on his head, and say, 'Get you to heaven, Beatrice, get you to heaven; here's no place for you maid's!' so, deliver I up my ayes, and away to Saint Peter for the heavens; he show'd me where the bachelors sit, and there live we as merry as the day is long.

Ant. Well, niece, I trust, you will be ruled by your father.

Beat. Yes, faith; it is my cousin's duty to make courtesy, and say, 'Father, as it please you?' but yet for all that, cousin, let him be a handsome fellow, or else make another courtesy, and say, 'Father, as it please me?'

Leon. Well, niece, I hope to see you one day fitted with a husband.

Beat. Not till God make men of some other metal than earth. Would it not grieve a woman to be over-mastered with a piece of valiant dust? to make an account of her life to a clog of wayward marl? No, uncle, I'll none: Adam's sons are my brethren; and truly, I hold it a sin to match in my kindred.

Leon. Daughter, remember what I told you: if the prince do solicit you in that kind, you know your answer.

Beat. The fault will be in the music, cousin, if you be not well'd in good time: if the prince be too important, tell him, there is measure in every thing, and so dance out the answer: for, hear me, Hero; wooing, wedding, and repenting, is as a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cinque-pace: the first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch Jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding, mannerly, moderate, as a measure, full of state and anxiety; and then comes repentance, and with his bad legs falls into the cinque-pace faster and faster, till he sink a-pace to his grave.

Leon. Cousin, you apprehend passing shrewdly.

Beat. I have a good eye, uncle: I can see a church by day-light.

Leon. The revellers are entering, brother. Make good room!

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, Benedick, Balthazar; John, Borachio, Margaret, Ursula, and maskers.

Don Pedro. Lady, will you walk about with your friends?

Hero. So you walk softly, and look sweetly, and say nothing, I am yours for the walk; and, especially, when I walk away.

Don Pedro. With me in your company?

Hero. I may say so, when I please.

Don Pedro. And when please you to say so?

Hero. When I like your favour; for God defend, the lute should be like the case!

Don Pedro. My visor is Philemon's roof; within the house is Jove?

Hero. Why, then your visor should be thatched.

Don Pedro. Speak low, if you speak love.

[They laugh.]

Bene. Well, I would you did like me.

Marg. And God keep him out of my sight, when the dance is done!—Answer, clerk.

Bene. No more words: the clerk is answered.

Urs. I know you well enough: you are signior Antonio.

Ant. At a word, I am not.

Urs. I know you by the waggling of your head.

Ant. To tell you true, I counterfeit him.

Urs. You could never do him so ill-well, unless you were the very man. Here's his dry hand up and down: you are he, you are he.

Ant. At a word, I am not.

Urs. Come, come: do you think I do not know you by your excellent wit? Can virtue hide itself? Go to, mum, you are he: graces will appear, and there's an end.

Beat. Will you not tell me who told you so?

Bene. No, you shall pardon me.

Beat. Nor will you not tell me who you are?

Bene. Not now.

Beat. That I was disdainful, and that I had my good wit out of the "Hundred merry Tales."—Well, this was signior Benedick that said so.

Bene. What's he?

Beat. I am sure, you know him well enough.

Bene. Not I, believe me.

Beat. Did he never make you laugh?

Bene. I pray you, what is he?

Beat. Why, he is the prince's jester; a very droll fool, only his gift is in devising impossible slanders: none but libertines delight in him; and the commendation is not in his wit, but in his villainy, for he both pleases men, and angers them, and then they laugh at him, and hate him. I am sure, he is in the fleet; I would he had beard'd me!

Bene. When I know the gentleman, I'll tell him what you say.

Beat. Do, do: he'll but break a comparison or two on me: which, peradventure, not marked, or not laughed at, strikes him into melancholy; and then there's a partridge' wing saved, for the fool will eat no supper that night. [Music within.] We must follow the leaders.

Bene. In every good thing.

Beat. Nay, if they lead to any ill, I will leave them at the next turning.

[They dance.]

Bene. Then, exeunt all but John, Borachio, and Claudio.

John. Sure, my brother is amorous on Hero, and hath withdrawn her father to break with him about it. The ladies follow her, but one visor remains.

Bora. And that is Claudio: I know him by his bearing.

John. Are not you signior Benedick?

Claud. You know me well: I am he.

John. Signior, you are very near my brother in his love: he is enamoured on Hero. I pray you, dissuade him from her; she is no equal for his birth: you may do the part of an honest man in it.

Claud. How know you he loves her?

John. I heard him swear his affection.

Bora. So did I too; and he swore he would marry her to-night.

John. Come, let us to the banquet.

[Exeunt John and Borachio.

Claud. Thus answer I in name of Benedick, But hear these ill news with the ears of Claudio. 'Tis certain so:—the prince woos for himself.

1. Importantue. 2. This word not in F. c. 3. An allusion to the story of Baucis and Philemon, in Ovid. 4. A popular jest-book, of which only a fragment is extant. It was reprinted in 1535, after its discovery.
Friendship is constant in all other things,
Save in the office and affairs of love:
Therefore, all hearts in love use their own tongues;
Let every eye negotiate for itself,
And trust no agent, for beauty is a witch,
Against whose charms faith melteth into blood.
This is an accident of hourly proof,
Which I mistrusted not. Farewell, then! [Exit.

Re-enter Benedick.

Bene. Count Claudio?
Claud. Ye, the same.
Bene. Come, will you go with me?
Claud. Whither?
Bene. Even to the next willow, about your own business, county. What fashion will you wear the garland of? About your neck, like an usurer's chain, or under your arm, like a lieutenant's scarf? You must wear it one way; for the prince hath got your Hero.

Claud. I wish him joy of her.
Bene. Why, that's spoken like an honest draver: so they sell bullock. But did you think, the prince would have served you thus?
Claud. I pray you, leave me. [Angrily.
Bene. Ho! now you strike like the blind man: it was the boy that stole your meat, and you'll beat the post.
Claud. If it will not be, I'll leave you. [Exit.
Bene. Alas, poor hurt foul! Now will he creep into sedges. —But, that my lady Beatrice should know me, and not know me! The prince's fool! —Ha! it may be, I go under that title, because I am merry. —Yea; but so I am apt to do myself wrong: I am not so reputed: it is the base, though bitter disposition of Beatrice, that puts the world into her person, and so gives me out. Well, I'll be revenged as I may.

Re-enter Don Pedro.

D. Pedro. Now, signior, where's the count? Did you see him?
Bene. Truth, my lord, I have played the part of lady Fame. I found him here as melancholy as a lodge in a warren: I told him, and, I think, I told him true, that your grace had got the gold will of this young lady; and I offered him my company to a willow tree, either to make him a garland, as being forsaken, or to bind him up a rod, as being worthy to be whipped.

D. Pedro. To be whipped! What's his fault?
Bene. The flat transgression of a school-boy; who, being overjoy'd with finding a bird's nest, shows it his companion, and he steals it.

D. Pedro. Wilt thou make a trust a transgression? The transgression is in the stealer.
Bene. Yet it had not been amiss. The rod had been made, and the garland too; for the garland he might have worn himself, and the rod he might have bestowed on you, who, as I take it, have stolen his bird's nest.

D. Pedro. I will but teach them to sing, and restore them to the owner.
Bene. If their singing answer your saying, by my faith, you say honestly.

D. Pedro. The lady Beatrice hath a quarrel to you: the gentleman, that danced with her, told her she is much wrong'd by you.
Bene. O! she misjudged me past the endurance of a block; an oak, but with one green leaf on it, would have answered her; my very visor began to assume life, and seol with her. She told me, not thinking I had been myself, that I was the prince's jester; that I was duller than a great thaw; huddling jest upon jest, with such importable conveyance, upon me, that I stood like a man at a mark, with a whole army shooting at me. She speaks poigniards, and every word stabst: if her breath were as terrible as her terminations, there were no living near her; she would infect to the north star. I would marry her though she were endowed with all that Adam had lent him before he transgressed: she would have made Hercules have turned spit, yea, and have cleft his club to make the fire too. Come, talk not of her; you shall find her the infernal Ath in good apparel. I would to God, some scholar would conjure her; for, certainly, while she is here, a man may live as quiet in hell, as in a sanctuary; and people sin upon purpose, because they would go thither, so, indeed, all disquiet, horror, and perturbation follow her.

Enter Claudio, Beatrice, Hero, and Leonato.

D. Pedro. Look; here she comes.

Bene. Will your grace command me any service to the world's end? I will go on the slightest errand now to the Antipodes, that you can devise to send me on: I will fetch you a toothpicer now from the farthest inch of Asia; bring you the length of Prester John's foot; fetch you a hair of the great Cham's beard; do you any embassage to the Pigmies, rather than hold three words' conference with this harpy. Have you no employment for me?

D. Pedro. None, but to desire your good company.

Bene. O God, sir, here's a dish I love not: I cannot endure my lady Tongue.

[Exit.

D. Pedro. Come, lady, come; you have lost the heart of signior Benedick.

Beat. Indeed, my lord, he let it me awhile; and I gave him use for it, a double heart for his single one: marry, once before he won it of me with false die, therefore your grace may well say I have lost it.

D. Pedro. You have put him down, lady; you have put him down.

Beat. So I would not he should do me, my lord, lest I should prove the mother of fools. I have brought count Claudio, whom you sent me to seek.

D. Pedro. Why, how now, count? wherefore are you sad?
Claud. Not sad, my lord.

D. Pedro. How then? Sick?
Claud. Neither, my lord.

Beat. The count is neither sad, nor sick, nor merry, nor well; but civil, count, civil as an orange, and something of as jealous a complexion.

D. Pedro. F'faith, lady; I think your blazon to be true; though, I'll be sworn, if he be so, his conceit is false. Here, Claudio, I have woned in thy name, and fair Hero is won: I have broke with her father, and, his good will obtained, name the day of marriage, and God give thee joy!

Leon. Count, take of me my daughter, and with her fortunes: his grace hath made the match, and all grace say Amen to it!

Beat. Speak, count, 'tis your cue.

Claud. Silence is the perfectest herald of joy: I were but little happy, if I could say how much.—Lady, as you are mine, I am yours: I give away myself for you, and dote upon the exchange.

Beat. Speak, cousin; or, if you cannot, stop his mouth with a kiss, and let him not speak neither.

D. Pedro. In faith, lady, you have a merry heart.

Beat. Yes, my lord; I thank is, poor fool, it keeps on the windy side of care.—My cousin tells him in his ear, that he is in her heart.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

ACT II.

SCENE II.—Another Room in Leonato’s House.

Enter John and Borachio.

John. It is so: the count Claudio shall marry the daughter of Leonato.

Bora. Yea, my lord; but I can cross it.

John. Any bar, any cross, any impediment will be medicable to me: I am sick in displeasure to him, and whatsoever comes athwart his affection ranges evenly with mine. How canst thou cross this marriage?

Bora. Not honestly, my lord; but so covertly that no dishonesty shall appear in me.

John. Show me briefly how.

Bora. I think, I told your lordship, a year since, how much I am in the favor of Margaret, the waiting-gentlewoman to Hero.

John. I remember.

Bora. I can, at any unseasonable instant of the night, appoint her to look out at her lady’s chamber-window.

John. What life is in that, to be the death of this marriage?

Bora. The poison of that lies in you to temper. Go you to the prince, your brother: spare not to tell him, that he hath wronged his honour in marrying the renowned Claudio (whose estimation do you mightly hold up) to a contaminated state, such as one as Hero.

John. What proof shall I make of that?

Bora. Proof enough to misplease the prince, to vex Claudio, to undo Hero, and kill Leonato. Look you for any other issue?

John. Only to despite them I will endeavour any thing.

Bora. Go then; find me a meet hour to draw Don Pedro and the count Claudio, alone: tell them, that you know that Hero loves me; intend a kind of zeal both to the prince and Claudio, (as in love of your brother’s honour, who hath made this match, and his friend’s reputation, who is thus like to be cozened with the semblance of a maid,) that you have discovered thus.

They will sincerely believe this without trial: offer them instances, which shall bear no less likelihood than to see me at her chamber-window, hear me call Margaret Hero; hear Margaret term me Borachio; and bring them to see this the very night before the intended wedding: for in the mean time I will so fashion the matter, that Hero shall be absent, and there shall appear such seeming proofs of Hero’s disloyalty, that jealousy shall be called assurance, and all the preparation overthrown.

John. Grow this to what adverse issue it can, I will put it in practice. Be cunning in the working this, and thy fee is a thousand ducats.

Bora. Be you constant in the accusation, and my cunning shall not shame me.

John. I will presently go learn their day of marriage.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Leonato’s Garden.

Enter Benedick, a Boy following.

Bene. Boy!

Boy. Signior.

Bene. In my chamber-window lies a book; bring it hither to me in the orchard.

Boy. I am here already, sir.

Bene. I know that; [Exit Boy.] but I would have thee hence, and here again; do much wonder, that thou hast not observed me. How much another man is a fool when he dedicates his behaviours to love, will, after he hath laughed at such shallow follies in others, become the argument of his own scorn by falling in love: and such a man is Claudio. I have known, when there was no music with him, but the drum and the fife; and now had he rather hear the tabor and the pipe: I have known, when he would have walked ten mile afoot to see a good armour; and now will he lie ten nights awake, carving the fashion of a new doublet. He was wont to speak plain, and to the purpose, like an honest man, and a soldier; and now is he turn'd orthodoxographer: his words are a very fantastical banquet, just so many strange dishes. May I be so converted; and see with these eyes? I cannot tell: I think not: I will not be sworn, but love may transform me to an oyster; but I'll take my oath on it, till he have made an oyster of me, he shall never make me such a fool. One woman is fair; yet I am well: another is wise, yet I am well: another virtuous, yet I am well; but till all graces be in one woman, one woman shall not come in my grace. Rich she shall be, that's certain; wise, or I'll none; virtuous, or I'll never cheapen her; fair, or I'll never look on her; mild, or come not near me; noble, or not I for an angel; of good discourse, an excellent musician, and her hair shall be of what colour it please God. Ha! the prince and monsieur Love! I will hide me in the arbour. [Retires behind the trees.]

Enter Don Pedro, Leonato, and Claudio.

D. Pedro. Come, shall we hear this music?

Claud. Yes, my good lord. How still the evening is, as hush'd on purpose to grace harmony!

D. Pedro. See where Benedick hath hid himself?

Claud. O, very well, my lord: the music ended, We'll fit the hid fox with a penny-worth.

Enter Balthazar, with Musicians.

D. Pedro. Come, Balthazar, we'll hear that song again.

Balth. O! good my lord, tax not so bad a voice

To slander music any more than once.

D. Pedro. It is the witness still of excellency,

To put a strange face on his own perfection.—
I pray thee, sing, and let me woo no more.

Balth. Because you talk of wooing, I will sing:
Since many a wooer doth commence his suit
To her he thinks not worthy; yet he woos,
Yet will he swear, he loves.

D. Pedro. Nay, pray thee, come;
Or, if thou wilt hold longer argument,
Do it in notes.

Balth. Note this before my notes;
There's not a note of mine that's worth the noting.

D. Pedro. Why these are very crotchets that he speaks;
Note notes, forsooth, and nothing! [Music.

Bene. [Behind.] Now, divine air! now is his soul ravished!—Is it not strange, that sheeps' guts should hale souls out of men's bodies?—Well, a horn for my money; when all's done.

THE SONG.

Balth. Sigh no more, ladies, sigh no more,
Men were deceivers ever;
One foot in set, and one on shore;
To one thing constant never.

Then sigh not so,
But let them go,
And be you blithe and bonny,
Converting all your sounds of woe
Into, Hey nonny, nonny.

Sing no more ditties, sing no mo,
Or damps do dull and heavy;

The frauds of men were ever so,
Since summer first was heavy.

[Aside.]

D. Pedro. By my truth, a good song.

Balth. And an ill singer, my lord.

D. Pedro. Ha? no: no, faith, thou singst well enough for a shift.

Bene. [Behind.] An he had been a dog that should have howled thus, they would have hang'd him; and, I pray God, his bad voice bode no mischief! I had as lief have heard the night-raven, come what plague could have come after it.

D. Pedro. Yea, marry; dost thou hear, Balthazar? I pray thee, get us some excellent music, for to-morrow night we would have it at the lady Hero's chamber window.

Balth. The best I can, my lord.

D. Pedro. Do so: farewell. [Exeunt Balthazar and Musicians.] Come hither, Leonato: what was it you told me of to-day? that your niece Beatrice was in love with signior Benedick?

Claud. [Aside to Pedro.] O! say:—stalk on, stalk on;

the fowl sits. [Aloud.] I did never think that lady would have loved any man.

Leon. No, nor I neither; but most wonderful, that she should so dote on signior Benedick; whom she hath in all outward behaviours seemed ever to abhor.

Bene. [Behind.] Is't possible? Sits the wind in that corner?

Leon. By my troth, my lord, I cannot tell what to think of it, but that she loves him with an enragèd affection: it is past the infinite of thought.

D. Pedro. May be, she doth but counterfeit.

Claud. 'Faith, like enough.

Leon. O God! I counterfeit? There was never counterfeit of passion came so near the life of passion, as she discovers it.

D. Pedro. Why, what effects of passion shows she?

Claud. [Aside.] Bait the hook well: this fish will bite.

Leon. What effects, my lord? She will sit you,—you heard my daughter tell you how.

Claud. She did, indeed.

D. Pedro. How, how, I pray you! You amaze me: I thought his bountiful spirit had been invincible against all assaults of affection.

Leon. I would have sworn it had, my lord; especially against Benedick.

Bene. [Behind.] I should think this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow speaks it: knavery cannot, sure, hide himself in such reverence.

Claud. [Aside.] He hath ta'en the infection: hold it up.

D. Pedro. Hath she made her affection known to Benedick?

Leon. No, and swears she never will: that's her torment.

Claud. 'Tis true, indeed; so your daughter says: "Shall I," says she, "that have so oft encountered him with scorn, write to him that I love him?"

Leon. This says she, now, when she is beginning to write to him; for she'll be up twenty times a night, and there will she sit in her smock, till she have writ a sheet of paper full.14—My daughter tells us all.

Claud. Now you talk of a sheet of paper, I remember a pretty jest your daughter told us of.

Leon. O! when she had writ it, and was reading over it, she found Benedick and Beatrice between the sheets?—

Claud. That.
Leon. Nay, that's impossible: she may wear her heart out first.

D. Pedro. Well, we will hear further of it by your daughter; let it cool the while. I love Benedick well, and I could wish he would modestly examine himself, to see how much he is unworthy so good a lady.

Leon. My lord, will you walk? dinner is ready.

Claud. [Aside.] If he do not dote upon her upon this, I will never trust my expectation.

D. Pedro. [Aside.] Let there be some net spread for her: and that must your daughter and her gentlewomen carry. The sport will be, when they hold one an opinion of another's dotage, and no such matter: that is the scene that I would see, which will be more a dumb show. Let us send her to call him in to dinner.

[Enter Don Pedro, Claudia, and Leonato.]

Bene. [Advancing from the Arkour.] This can be no trick: the conference was sadly born. They have the truth of this from Hero. They seem to pity the lady: it seems, her affections have their full bent. Love me! why, it must be required. I hear how I am censured: they say I will bear myself proudly, if I perceive the love come from her: they say, too, that she will rather die than give any sign of affection. I did never think to marry. I must not seem proud. Happy are they that hear their detractions, and can put them to morning. They say, the lady is fair; 'tis a truth, I can bear them witness: and virtuous; 'tis so, I cannot reprofe it: and wise, but for loving me; by my troth, it is no addition to her wit, nor no great argument of her folly, for I will be hourly in love with her. I may chance to have some odd quirks and remnant of wit broken on me, because I have railed so long against marriage; but doth not the appetite alter? A man loves the meat in his age, that he cannot endure in his youth. Shall quips, and sentences, and these paper bullets of the brain, awe a man from the career of his humour? No; the world must be peopled. When I said I would die a bachelor, I did not think I should live till I were married.—Here comes Beatrice. By this day, she's a fair lady: I do spy some marks of love in her.

Enter Beatrice.

Beat. Against my will, I am sent to bid you come in to dinner.

Bene. Fair Beatrice, I thank you for your pains.

Beat. I took no more pains for those thanks, than you take pains to thank me: if it had been painful, I would not have come.

Bene. You take pleasure, then, in the message! Beat. Yea, just so much as you may take upon a knife's point, and not choke a daw withal.—You have no stomach, signior: fare you well. [Exit.

Bene. Ha! "Against my will I am sent to bid you come in to dinner?"—there's a double meaning in that. "I took no more pains for those thanks, than you took pains to thank me?"—that's as much as to say, any pains that I take that for you is as easy as thanks.—If I do not take pity of her, I am a villain: if I do not love her, I am a Jew. I will go get her picture. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Leonato's Garden.

Enter Hero, Margaret, and Ursula.

Hero. Good Margaret, run thee to the parlour; I will overtake thee at the gate.

Marg. I will, madam. [Exit Margaret.]

Hero. And you, Ursula, be sure now she is not gone; for I will see her present at the feast. I would not have her to lack any thing here, but I think, she is so engrossed in love, she will not take any notice of her absence.

Urs. Madam, she is too much taken up with love to think what's out of the way.

Hero. I am glad. If she be so taken up, I am sure she will not shun any thing, but what is for my declaring of my love. [Exit Ursula.]

Hero. Margaret, I would speak to thee in a manner that thou mayst understand.

Marg. I am ready, madam.

Hero. There, thou shalt find my cousin Beatrice proposing with the prince and Claudio: Whisper her ear, and tell her, I and Ursula walk in the orchard, and our whole discourse

[Exit with Margaret.]

There shall thou find my cousin Beatrice.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

SCENE II.

Much of not; but we signior he hear who. When our is forbid of. To make of this: Is sick in love with Beatrice: of this matter is little Cupid's crafty arrow made, That only wounds by hearsey. Now begin: Enter Beatrice, stealing in behind. For look where Beatrice, like a lapwing, runs Close by the ground, to hear our conference. URS. The pleasant'st angling is to see the fish Cut with her golden oars the silver stream, And greedily devour the treacherous bait: So angle we for Beatrice; who even now Is couched in the woodbine coverture. Fear you not my part of the dialogue. Hero. Then go we near her; that her ear lose nothing Of the false sweet bait that we lay for it. No, truly, Ursula, she is too disdainful; I know, her spirits are as coy and wild As haggards of the rock. URS. But are you sure That Benedick loves Beatrice so entirely? Hero. So says the prince, and my new-trothed lord. URS. And did they bid you tell her of it, madam? Hero. They did intreat me to acquaint her of it; But I persuaded them if they lov'd Benedick, To wish him wrestle with affection, And never to let Beatrice know of it. URS. Why did you so? Doth not the gentleman Deserve as full, as fortunate a bed As ever Beatrice shall empty? Hero. O God of love! I know, he doth deserve As much as may be yielded to a man; But nature never fram'd a woman's heart Of prouder stuff than that of Beatrice: Disdain and scorn ride sparkling in her eyes, Misprising what they look on; and her wit Values itself so highly, that to her All matter else seems weak. She cannot love, Nor take no shape nor project of affection, She is so self-endeared. URS. Sure, I think so; And, therefore, certainly, it were not good She knew his love, lest she make sport at it. Hero. Why, you speak truth. I never yet saw man How wise, how noble, young, how rarely feature'd, But she would speak him backward: if fair-face'd, She'd swear the gentleman should be her sister: If black, why, nature, drawing of an antick, Made a foul blot: if tall, a lance ill-headed; If low, an agate very vilenly cut: If speaking, why, a vane blown with all-winds; If silent, why, a block moved with none. So turns she every man the wrong side out, And never gives to truth and virtue that Which simpliceness and merit purchase. URS. Sure, sure, such earing is not commendable. Hero. Nay, that is not so; not be so cold, and from all fashions As Beatrice is, cannot be commendable. But who dare tell her so? If I should speak, She would mock me into air: O! she would laugh me Out of myself, press me to death with wit. Therefore, let Benedick, like cover'd fire, Consume away in sighs, waste inwardly: It were a better death than die with mocks, Which is as bad as die with tickling. URS. Yet tell her of it: hear what she will say. Hero. No; rather I will go to Benedick, And counsel him to fight against his passion. And, truly, I'll devise some honest standers To stamp my cousin with. One doth not know, How much an ill word may empoison liking. URS. O! do not do your cousin such a wrong. She cannot be so much without true judgment, (Having so swift and excellent a wit, As she is prized to have) as to refuse So rare a gentleman as signior Benedick. Hero. He is the only man of Italy, Always excepted my dear Claudio. URS. I pray you, be not angry with me, madam, Speaking my fancy: signior Benedick, For shape, for bearing, argument and valour, Goes foremost in report, through Italy. Hero. Indeed, he hath an excellent good name. URS. His excellency to earn it, ere he had it. When are you married, madam? Hero. Why, in a day*—to-morrow. Come, go in: I'll show thee some attire, and have thy counsel, Which is the best to furnish me to-morrow. URS. [Aside.] She's lim'd, I warrant you: we have caught her, madam. Hero. [Aside.] If it prove so, then loving goes by haps: Some Cupid kills with arrows, some with traps. [Exeunt Hero and Ursula.

Beat. [Advancing.] What fire is in mine ears? Can this be true? Stand I condemn'd for pride and scorn, so much? Compl't, farewell! and maiden pride, adieu! No glove doth fit me but in the lack of such. And, Benedick, love on: I will requite thee, Taming my wild heart to thy loving band. If thou dost love, my kindness shall incite thee To bind our loves up in a holy band; For others say thou dost deserve, and I Believe it better than reportingly. [Exit.

SCENE II.—A Room in Leonato's House. Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, Benedick, and Leonato.

D. Pedro. I do but stay till your marriage be consummated, and then go I toward Arragon. Claudio. I'll bring you thither, my lord, if you'll vouchsafe me. D. Pedro. Nay; that would be as great a soil in the new gloss of your marriage, as to show a child his new coat, and forbid him to wear it. I will only be bold with Benedick for his company; for from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot, he is all mirth: he hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bow-string, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him. He hath a heart as sound as a boll, and his tongue is the clapper; for what his heart thinks, his tongue speaks.

Bene. Gallants, I am not as I have been.
Leon. So say I: methinks you are sadder.

Claud. I hope I love in hope.

D. Pedro. Hang him, truant! there's no true drop of blood in him, to be truly touch'd with love. If he be sad he wants money.

Bene. I have the tooth-ache.

D. Pedro. Draw it.

Bene. Hang it!

Claud. You must hang it first, and draw it afterwards.

D. Pedro. What! sigh for the tooth-ache!

Leon. Where is but a humour, or a worm?

Bene. Well, every one can master a grief, but he that has it.

Claud. Yet say I, he is in love.

D. Pedro. There is no appearance of fancy in him, unless it be a fancy that he hath to strange disguises; as to be a Dutchman to-day, a Frenchman to-morrow, or in the shape of two countries at once; as a German from the waist downward, all slops, and a Spaniard from the hip upward, no doublets. Unless he have a fancy to this folly, as it appears he hath, he is no fool for fancy, as you would have it appear he is.

Claud. If he be not in love with some woman, there is no believing old signs: 'a brushes his hat or mornings; what should that bode?

D. Pedro. Hath any man seen him at the barber's?

Claud. No, but the barber's man hath been seen with him, and the old ornament of his cheek hath already stuff'd tennis-balls.

Leon. Indeed, he looks younger than he did, by the loss of a beard.

D. Pedro. Nay, 'a rubs himself with civet: can you smell him out by that?

Claud. That's as much as to say, the sweet youth's in love.

D. Pedro. The greatest note of it is his melancholy.

Claud. And when was he wont to wash his face?

D. Pedro. Yea, or to paint himself? for which, I hear what they say of him.

Claud. Nay, but his jesting spirit, which is now crept into a lustre-string, and now governed by stops.

D. Pedro. Indeed, that tells a heavy tale for him.

Conclude, conclude, he is in love.

Claud. Nay, but I know who loves him.

D. Pedro. That would I know too: I warrant, one that knows him not.

Claud. Yes, and his ill conditions; and in spite of all dies for him.

D. Pedro. She shall be buried with her face upwards.

Bene. Yet is this no charm for the tooth-ache.-Old signior, walk aside with me: I have studied eight or nine wise words to speak to you, which these hobby-horses must not hear.

[Exeunt Benedick and Leonato.

D. Pedro. For my life, to break with him about Beatrice.

Claud. 'Tis even so. Hero and Margaret have by this played their parts with Beatrice, and then the two bears will not bite one another when they meet.

Enter John.

John. My lord and brother, God save you.

D. Pedro. Good den, brother.

John. If your leisure served, I would speak with you.

D. Pedro. In private?

John. If it please you; yet count Claudio may hear, for what I would speak of concerns him.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

Well, for your favour, sir, why, give God thanks, and make no boast of it; and for your writing and reading, let that appear when there is no need of such vanity. You are thought here to be the most senseless and fit man for the constable of the watch; therefore, bear your kind offices in your charge. You shall comprehend all vagrom men: you are to bid any man stand, in the prince's name.

2 Watch. How, if a' will not stand?

Dogb. Why then, take no note of him, but let him go; and presently call the rest of the watch together, and thank God you are rid of a knave.

Verg. If he will not stand when he is bidden, he is none of the prince's subjects.

Dogb. True, and they are to meddle with none but the prince's subjects. — You shall also make no noise in the streets; for, for the watch to babble and talk is most tolerable, and not to be endured.

2 Watch. We will rather sleep than talk: we know what belongs to a watch.

Dogb. Why, you speak like an ancient and most quiet watchman, for I cannot see how sleeping should offend; only, have a care that your bills be not stolen. Well, you are to call at all the ale-houses, and bid those that are drunk get them to bed.

2 Watch. How, if they will not?

Dogb. Why then, let them alone till they are sober; if they make you not then the better answer, you may say, they are not the men you took them for.

2 Watch. Well, sir.

Dogb. If you meet a thief, you may suspect him, by virtue of your office, to be no true man; and, for such kind of men, the less you meddle or make with them, why, the more is for your honesty.

2 Watch. If we know him to be a thief, shall we not lay hands on him?

Dogb. Truly, by your office you may; but, I think, they that touch pinch will be defiled. The most peaceable way for you, if you do take a thief, is, to let him show himself what he is, and steal out of your company.

Verg. You have been always called a merciful man, partner.

Dogb. Truly, I would not hang a dog by my will; much more a man who hath any honesty in him.

Verg. If they hear a child cry in the night, you must call to the nurse, and bid her still it.

2 Watch. How; if the nurse be asleep, and will not hear it?

Dogb. Why then, depart in peace, and let the child wake her with crying; for the ewe that will not hear her lamb when it baa, will never answer a calf when he bleats.

Verg. 'T is very true.

Dogb. This is the end of the charge. You, constable, are to present the prince's own person: if you meet the prince in the night, you may stay him.

Verg. Nay, by' r lady, that, I think, a' cannot.

Dogb. Five shillings to one on't, with any man that knows the statutes, he may stay him: marry, not without the prince be willing; for, indeed, the watch ought to offend no man; and, it is an offense to stay a man against his will.

Verg. By' r lady, I think it be so.

Dogb. Ha, ha, ha! Well, masters, good night: an there be any matter of weighty chances, call up me. Keep your fellows' counsels and your own; and good night. Come, neighbour.

2 Watch. Well, masters, we hear your charge; let us go sit here upon the church-bench till two, and then all to bed.

Dogb. One word more, honest neighbours. I pray you, watch about signor Leonato's door: for the wed- ding being there to-morrow, there is a great coil to-night. Adieu; be vigilant, I beseech you.

[Exeunt Dogberry and Verges.]

Enter Borachio and Conrad.

Bora. What, Conrad!

Watch. [Behind and aside.] Peace! stir not.

Bora. Conrad, I say!

Con. Here, man; I am at thy elbow.

Bora. Mass, and my elbow itched; I thought, there would a scab follow.

Con. I will owe thee an answer for that; and now forward with thy tale.

Bora. Stand thee close, then, under this penthouse, for it drizzles rain, and I will, like a true drunkard, utter all to thee.

Watch. [Aside.] Some treason, masters; yet stand close.

Bora. Therefore know, I have earned of Don John a thousand ducats.

Con. Is it possible that any villainy should be so dear?

Bora. Thou shouldst rather ask, if it were possible any villainy should be so rich; for when rich villains have need of poor ones, poor ones may make what price they will.

Con. I wonder at it.

Bora. That shows thou art unconfounded. Thou knowest, that the fashion of a doublet, or a hat, or a cloak, is nothing to a man.

Con. Yet, it is apparel.

Bora. I mean, the fashion.

Con. Yes, the fashion is the fashion.

Bora. Tush! I may as well say, the fool's the fool. But seest thou not what a deformed thief this fashion is?

Watch. [Aside.] I know that Deformed; a' has been a vile thief this seven year: a' goes up and down like a gentleman. I remember his name.

Bora. Didst thou not hear somebody?

Con. No: 't was the vane on the house.

Bora. Seest thou not, I say, what a deformed thief this fashion is? how giddily a' turns about all the hot bloods between fourteen and five and thirty? some-time, fashioning them like Pharaoh's soldiers in the red sea; some-time, like god Balaam's priests in the old church window; some-time, like the shaven Heræus in the smirched worm-eaten tapestry, where his cod-piece seems as massey as his club?

Con. All this I see, and I see that the fashion wears out more apparel than the man. But art thou not thyself giddy with the fashion too, that thou hast shifted out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion?

Bora. Not so, neither; but know, that I have to-night woofed Margaret, the lady Hero's gentlewoman, by the name of Hero: she leans me out at her mistress' chamber-window, bids me a thousand times good night. — I tell this tale vilely: — I should first tell thee, how the prince, Claudio, and my master, planted, and placed, and possessed by my master Don John, saw afar off in the orchard this amiable encounter.

Con. And thought they not? Margaret was Hero?

Bora. Two of them did, the prince and Claudio; but the devil, my master, knew she was Margaret, and partly by his oaths, which first possessed them, partly by the dark night, which did deceive them, but chiefly... by my villainy, which did confirm any slander that Don John had made, away went Claudio enraged; swore he would meet her, as he was appointed, next morning at the temple, and there, before the whole congregation, shame her with what he saw over-night, and send her home again without a husband.

1 Watch. [Coming forward.] We charge you in the prince's name, stand.

2 Watch. Call up the right master constable. We have here recovered the most dangerous piece of lechery, that ever was known in the commonwealth.

1 Watch. And one Deformed is one of them: I know him; a' wears a lock.

Con. Masters, masters!

2 Watch. You'll be made bring Deformed forth, I warrant you.

Con. Masters,—

1 Watch. Never speak: we charge you, let us obey you to go with us.

Bona. We are like to prove a goodly commodity, being taken up of these men's bills.

Con. A commodity in question, I warrant you. Come, we'll obey you.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room in LEONATO'S House.

Enter HERO, MARGARET, and URSULA.

Hero. Good Ursula, wake my cousin Beatrice, and desire her to rise.

Urs. I will, lady.

Hero. And bid her come hither.

Urs. Well. [Exit URSULA.

Marg. Troth, I think; your other rabato were better.

Hero. No, pray thee, good Meg, I'll wear this.

Marg. By my troth, it's not so good; and I warrant, your cousin will say so.

Hero. My cousin's a fool, and thou art another.

I'll wear none but this.

Marg. I like the new tire within excellently, if the hair were a thought browner; and your gown's a most rare fashion; it hath faith. I saw the duchess of Milan's gown, that they praise so.

Hero. O! that exceeds, they say.

Marg. By my troth, it's but a night-gown in respect of yours: cloth o' gold, and cuts, and laced with silver, set with pearls down the sleeves, side sleeves, and skirts round, under-borne with a bluish tinsel; but for a fine, quaint, graceful, and excellent fashion, yours is worth ten on't.

Hero. God give me joy to wear it, for my heart is exceeding heavy!

Marg. 'Twill be heavier soon by the weight of a man.

Hero. Pie upon thee! art not ashamed?

Marg. Of what, lady? of speaking honourably? Is not marriage honourable in a beggar? Is not your lord honourable without marriage? I think, you would have me say; saving your reverence,—a husband: an bad thinking do not wrest true speaking, I'll offend no body. Is there any harm in it—the heavier for a husband? None, I think; an it be the right husband, and the right wife; otherwise 'tis light, and not heavy: ask my lady Beatrice else; here she comes.

Enter BEATRICE.

Beatrice. Good morning, coz.

Beat. Good morning; sweet Hero.

Hero. Why, how now? do you speak in the sick tone?

Beat. I am out of all other tune, methinks.

III. Not in f. 3 Long, full sleeves. 4 A popular old tune, mentioned also in Two Gentlemen of Verona. 4 Play upon the similarity of sound between H and ach. 5 Blessed thistle; "so worthily named," says Cogan's Haven of Health, 1599, "for the singular virtues that it hath."
as, God help, I would desire they were; but, in faith, honest as the skin between his brows.

Verg. Yes, I thank God, I am as honest as any man living, that is an old man, and no honester than I.

Dogb. Comparisons are odorous: palabras, neighbour Verges.

Leon. Neighbours, you are tedious.

Dogb. It pleases your worship to say so, but we are the souls of your lord's officers; but, truly, for mine own part, if I were as tedious as a king, I could find in my heart to bestow all of your worship.

Leon. All thy tediousness on me? ha!

Dogb. Yea, an 't were a thousand pound more than 'tis; for I hear as good exclamation on your worship, as of any man in the city, and though I be but a poor man, I am glad to hear it.

Verg. And so am I.

Leon. I would fain know what you have to say.

Verg. Marry, sir, our watch to-night, excepting your worship's presence, have taken a couple of arrant knaves as any in Messina.

Dogb. A good old man, sir; he will be talking: as they say, when the age is in, the wit is out. God help us! it is a world to see!—Well said, 't faith, neighbour Verges:—well, God's a good man; an two men ride of a horse, one must ride behind.—An honest soul, 't faith, sir: by my troth he is, as ever broke bread; but, God is to be worshipped: all men are not alike; alas, good neighbour!

Leon. Indeed, neighbour, he comes too short of you.

Dogb. Gifts, that God gives.

Leon. I must leave you.

Dogb. One word, sir. Our watch, sir, have, indeed, comprehended two suspicious persons, and we would have them this morning examined before your worship.

Leon. Take their examination yourself, and bring it me: I am now in great haste, as it may appear unto you.

Dogb. It shall be sufficiency.

Leon. Drink some wine ere you go. Fare you well. Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, they stay for you to give your daughter to her husband.

Leon. I'll wait upon them: I am ready.

[Exeunt Leonato and Messenger.

Dogb. Go, good partner, go; get you to Francis Seacoal; bid him bring his pen and inkhorn to the gaol; we are now to examination these men.

Verg. And we must do it wisely.

Dogb. We will spare for no wit, I warrant you; here's that shall drive some of them to a non com: only get the learned writer to set down our excommunication, and meet me at the gaol.

[Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The inside of a Church.

Enter Don Pedro, John, Leonato, Friar, Claudio, Benedick, Hero, Beatrice, &c.

Leon. Come, friar Francis, be brief: only to the plain form of marriage, and you shall recount their particular duties afterwards.

Friar. You come hither, my lord, to marry this lady?

Claud. No.

Leon. To be married to her; friar, you come to marry her.

Friar. Lady, you come hither to be married to this count?

Hero. I do.

Friar. If either of you know any inward impediment, why you should not be conjoined, I charge you on your souls to utter it.

Claud. Know you any, Hero?

Hero. None, my lord.

Friar. Know you any, count?

Leon. I dare make his answer: none.

Claud. Stand thee by, Friar.—Father, by your leave: Will you with free and unconstrained soul Give me this maid, your daughter?

Leon. As freely, son, as God did give her me.

Claud. And what have I to do you back, whose May counterpoise this rich and precious gift?

D. Pedro. Nothing, unless you render her again.

Claud. Sweet prince, you learn me noble thankful-ness.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

ACT IV.

D. Pedro. What should I speak?

I stand dishonour’d, that have gone about
To link my dear friend to a common state.

Leon. Are these things spoken, or do I but dream?

John. Sir, they are spoken, and these things are true.

Bene. This looks not like a jubal.

Hero. True? O God!

Claud. Leonato, stand I here?

Is this the prince? Is this the prince’s brother?

Is this face Hero’s? Are our eyes our own?

Leon. All this is so; but what of this, my lord?

Claud. Let me but move one question to your daughter,

And, by that fatherly and kindly power
That you have in her, bid her answer truly.

Leon. I charge thee do so, as thou art my child.

Hero. O God, defend me! how am I beset!—

What kind of catechising call you this?

Claud. To make you answer truly to your name.

Hero. Is it not Hero? Who can blot that name

With any just reproach?

Claud. Marry, that can Hero:

Hero itself can blot out Hero’s virtue.

What man was he talk’d with you yesternight
Out at your window, betwixt twelve and one?

Now, if you are a maid, answer to this.

Hero. I talk’d with no man at that hour, my lord.

D. Pedro. Why, then are you no maiden.—Leonato,

I am sorry you must hear: upon mine honour,

Myself, my brother, and this griev’d count,

Did see her, hear her, at that hour last night,

Talk with a ruffian at her chamber window;

Who hath, indeed, most like a liberal villain,

Confess’d the vile encounters they have had

A thousand times in secret.

John. Fie, fie! they are not to be nam’d, my lord,

Not to be spoke of:

There is not chastity enough in language,

Without offence to utter them. Thou pretty lady,

I am sorry for thy much misgovernment.

Claud. O Hero! what a Hero hadst thou been,

If half thy outward graces had been plac’d

About thy thoughts, and counsels of thy heart!

But, fare thee well, most foul, most fair! farewell,

Thou pure impety, and impious purity!

For thee I’ll lock up all the gates of love,

And on my eyelids shall conjecture hang,

To turn all beauty into thoughts of harm,

And never shall it more be gracious.

Leon. Hath no man’s dagger here a point for me?

Beat. Why, how now, cousin! wherefore sink you down?

John. Come, let us go. These things come thus to light,

Smother her spirits up.

[Exeunt Don Pedro, John, and Claudio.]

Bene. How doth the lady?

Beat. Dead, I think:—help, uncle!

Hero. Why, Hero!—Uncle!—Signior Benedick!—

friar!

Leon. O fate! take not away thy heavy hand:

Death is the fairest cover for her shame,

That may be wish’d for.

Beat. How now, cousin Hero?

Friar. Have comfort, lady.

Leon. Dost thou look up?

Friar. Yea; wherefore should she not?

Leon. Wherefore? Why, doth not every earthly thing

Cry shame upon her? Could she here deny

The story that is printed in her blood?—

Do not live, Hero; do not ope thine eyes;

For did I think thou wouldst not quickly die,

Thought I thy spirits were stronger than thy shame,

Myself would, on the hazard6 of reproaches,

Strike at thy life. Grief’d I, I had but one?

Chid I for that at frugal nature’s frown?6

O, one too much by thee! Why had I one?

Why ever wast thou lovely in my eyes?

Why had I not with charitable hand

Took up a beggar’s issue at my gates;

Who smirched thus, and mir’d with infamy,

I might have said, “No part of it is mine.

This shame derives itself from unknown Joins”6

But mine, and mine I lov’d, and mine I prais’d,

And mine that I was proud on; mine so much,

That I myself was to myself not mine,

Valuing of her: why, she—O! she is fallen

Into a pit of ink, that the wide sea

Hath drops too few to wash her clean again,

And salt too little, which may season give

To her soul-tainted flesh!—

Bene. Sir, sir, be patient.

For my part, I am so attir’d in wonder,

I know not what to say.

Beat. O, on my soul, my cousin is believ’d?

Bene. Lady, were you her bedfellow last night?

Beat. No, truly, not; although, until last night,

I have this twelvemonth been her bedfellow.

Leon. Confirm’d, confirm’d? O, that is stronger made,

Which was before barr’d up with ribs of iron!

Would the two princes lie? and Claudio lie,

Who lov’d her so, that, speaking of her foulness,

Wash’d it with tears? Hence! from her; let her die.

Friar. Hear me a little;

For I have only been silent so long,

And given way unto this cross* of fortune,

By noting of the lady: I have mark’d

A thousand blushing apparitions

To start into her face; a thousand innocent shames,

In angel whiteness, beat away those blushes;

And in her eye there hath appear’d a fire,

To burn the errors that these princes hold

Against her maiden truth.—Call me a fool;

Trust not my reading, nor my observation,

Which with experimental seal doth warrant

The tenour of my book; trust not my age,

My reverend calling, nor divinity,

If this sweet lady lie not guiltless here

Under some blighting’ error.

Leon. Friar, it cannot be.

Thou seest, that all the grace that she hath left,

Is, that she will not add to her damnation

A sin of perjury: she doth not deny it.

Why seek’st thou then to cover with excuse

That which appears in proper nakedness?

Friar. Lady, what man is he you are accus’d of?

Hero. They know, that do accuse me: I know none.

If I know more of any man alive,

Than that which maiden modesty doth warrant,

Let all my sins lack mercy!—O, my father!

Prove you that any man with me convers’d

At hours unmeet, or that I yesternight

---From the quarto. 2 rearward: in f. e. 3 frame: in f. e. 4 soul-tainted: in f. e. 5 course: in f. e. 6 reverence, calling: in f. e. 7 biting: in f. e.
Maintain’d the change of words with any creature,
Refuse me, hate me, torture me to death.

Frier. There is some strange misprision in the princes.

Bene. Two of them have the very bent of honour;
And if their wisdoms be misled in this,
The practice of it lives in John the bastard,
Whose spirits toil in fraud and villainies.

Leon. I know not. If they speak but truth of her,
These hands shall tear her: if they wrong her honour,
The proudest of them shall well hear of it.
Time hath not yet so dried this blood of mine,
Nor age so eat up my invention,
Nor fortune made such havoc of my means,
Nor my bad life rost me so much of friends,
But they shall find, awak’d in such a cause;
Both strength of limb, and policy of mind,
Ability in means, and choice of friends,
To quench it of them thoroughly.

Frier. Pause a while,
And let my counsel sway you in this case.
Your daughter, here, the princess left for dead;
Let her awhile be secretly kept in,
And publish it, that she is dead indeed:
Maintain a mourning ostentation:
And on your family’s old monument
Hang mournful epistles, and do all rites
That appertain unto a burial.
What shall become of this? What will this do?

Frier. Marry, this, well carried, shall on her behalf
Change slander to remorse; that is some good:
But not for that dream I on this strange course,
But on this travail look for greater birth.
She dying, as it must be so maintain’d,
Upon the instant that she was accus’d,
Shall be lamented, pitied and excuse’d
Of every hearer; for it so falls out,
That what we have prize not to the worth,
While we enjoy it, but being lost and lack’d,
Why, then we rack the value; then we find
The virtue, that possession would not show us,
While it was out:—So will it fare with Claudio:
When he shall hear she died upon his words,
The idea of her life shall swiftly creep
Into his study of imagination,
And every lovely organ of her life
Shall come apparell’d in more precious habit,
More moving, delicate, and full of life,
Into the eye and prospect of his soul,
Than when she liv’d indeed:—then shall he mourn  (If ever love had interest in his liver)
And wish he had not so accus’d her;
No, though he thought his accusation true.
Let this be so, and doubt not but success
Will ignition the event in better shape
Than I can lay it down in likelihood,
But if all aim but this be levell’d false,
The supposition of the lady’s death
Will quench the wonder of her infamy:
And, if it sort not well, you may conceal her
As best befits her wounded reputation,
In some recessive and religious life,
Out of all eyes, tongues, minds, and injuries.

Bene. Signior Leonato, let the friar advise you:
And though you know, my inwardness and love
Is very much unto the prince and Claudio,
Yet, by much honour, I will deal in this
As secretly and justly as your soul
Should with your body.

Leon. Being that I flow in grief,
The smallest twine may lead me.

Frier. ’Tis well consented: presently away,
For to strange sores strangely they strain the cure.—

Come, lady, die to live: this wedding day, Perhaps, is but prolong’d: have patience, and endure. [Exeunt Friar, Hero, and Leonato.

Bene. Lady Beatrice, have you wept all this while?
Beat. Yea, and I will weep a while longer.
Bene. I will not desire that.
Beat. You have no reason; I do it freely.
Bene. Surely, I do believe your fair cousin is wronged.

Beat. Ah, how much might the man deserve of me that would right her!
Bene. Is there any way to show such friendship?
Beat. A very even way, but no such friend.
Bene. May a man do it?
Beat. It is a man’s office, but not yours.
Bene. I do love nothing in the world so well as you.
Is not that strange?
Beat. As strange as the thing I know not. It were so possible for me to say, I loved nothing so well as you;
but believe me not, and yet I lie not: I confess nothing, nor I deny nothing.—I am sorry for your cousin.
Bene. By my sword, Beatrice, thou lov’st me.
Beat. Do not swear by it, and eat it.
Bene. I will swear by it, that you love me; and I will make him eat it, that says I love not you.
Beat. Will you not eat your word?
Bene. With no sauce that can be devised to it. I protest, I love thee.

Beat. Why, then, God forgive me!
Bene. What offence, sweet Beatrice?
Beat. You have stayed me in a happy hour: I was about to protest, I loved you.
Bene. And do it with all thy heart.
Beat. I love you with so much of my heart, that one is left to protest.
Bene. Come, bid me do any thing for thee.
Beat. Kill Claudio.
Bene. He is not in the wide world.
Beat. You kill me to deny it. Farewell.
Bene. Tarry, sweet Beatrice.
Beat. I am gone, though I am here:—there is no love in you.—Nay, I pray you, let me go.
Bene. Beatrice.
Beat. In faith, I will go.
Bene. We ’ll be friends first.
Beat. You dare easier be friends with me, than fight with mine enemy.

Bene. Is Claudio thine enemy.
Beat. Is he not approved in the height a villain, that hath slandered, scorned, dishonoured my kinswoman?—
O, that I were a man!—What! bear her in hand until thee come embrace hands, and then with public accusation, uncovered slander, unmitigated rancour.—O God, that I were a man! I would eat his heart in the market-place.

Bene. Hear me, Beatrice—
Beat. Talk with a man out at a window!—a proper saying.

Bene. Nay, but Beatrice—
Beat. Sweet Hero!—she is wronged, she is slandered, she is undone.

Bene. Beat—
Beat. Princes, and counties! Surely, a princely testimony, a godly count, count confess; a sweet gallant, surely! O, that I were a man for his sake! or that I had any friend would be a man for my sake! But manhood is melted into courtesy; valour into compliment, and men are only turned into tongues, and trimones too: he is now as valiant as Hercules, that only tells a lie, and swears it. —I cannot be a man with wishing, therefore I will die a woman with grieving.

Bene. Tarry, good Beatrice. By this hand, I love thee.

Beat. Use it for my love some other way than swearing by it.

Bene. Think you in your soul the count Claudio hath wronged Hero?

Beat. Yea, as sure as I have a thought, or a soul.

Bene. Enough! I am engaged, I will challenge him. I will kiss your hand, and so I leave you. By this hand, Claudio shall render me a dear account. As you hear of me, so think of me. Go, comfort your cousin: I must say she is dead; and so, farewell. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Prison.

Enter Dogberry, Verges, and Sexton, in gowns; and the Watch, with Conrade and Borachio.

Dogb. Is our whole dissembly appeared?

Verg. O! a stool and a cushion for the sexton.

Sexton. Which be the malefactores?

Dogb. Marry, that am I and my partner.

Verg. Nay, that's certain; we have the exhibition to examine.

Conrad. But which are the offenders that are to be examined? let them come before master constable.

Dogb. Yea, marry, let them come before me.—What is your name, friend?

Bora. Borachio.

Dogb. Pray write down Borachio.—Yours, sirrah?

Con. I am a gentleman, sir, and my name is Conrade.

Dogb. Write down master gentilman Conrade.—Masters, do you serve God?

Con. Bor. Yes, sir, we hope.

Dogb. Write down—that they hope they serve God:—and write God first: for God defend but God should go before such villains!—Masters, it is proved already that you are little better than false knaves, and it will go near to be thought so shortly. How answer you for yourselves?

Con. Marry, sir, we say we are none.

Dogb. A marvellous witty fellow, I assure you; but I will go about with him.—Come you hither, sirrah: a word in your ear, sir: I say to you, it is thought you are false knaves.

Bora. Sir, I say to you, we are none.

Dogb. Well, stand aside.—Fore God, they are both in a tale. Have you writ down, that they are none?

Sexton. Master constable, you go not the way to examine: you must call forth the watch that are their accusers.

Dogb. Yea, marry, that's the eldest way.—Let the watch come forth.—Masters, I charge you, in the prince's name, accuse these men.

1 Watch. This man said, sir, that Don John, the prince's brother, was a villain.

Dogb. Write down—prince John a villain.—Why, this is flat perjury, to call a prince's brother villain.

Bora. Master constable,—

Dogb. Pray thee, fellow; peace: I do not like thy look; I promise thee.

Sexton. What heard you him say else?

2 Watch. Marry, that he had received a thousand ducats of Don John, for accusing the lady Hero wrongfully.

Dogb. Flat burglary as ever was committed.

Verg. Yea, by the mass, that it is.

Sexton. What else, fellow?

1 Watch. And that count Claudio did mean, upon his words, to disgrace Hero before the whole assembly, and not marry her.

Dogb. O villain! thou wilt be condemned into everlasting redemption for this.

Sexton. What else?

2 Watch. This is all.

Sexton. And this is more, masters, than you can deny. Prince John is this morning secretly stolen away: Hero was in this manner accused, in this very manner refused, and, upon the grief of this, suddenly died. Master constable, let these men be bound, and brought to Leonato's: I will go before, and show him their examination. [Exit.

Dogb. Come, let them be opinioned.

Verg. Let them be bound.

Bora. Hands off, coxcomb! 1

Dogb. God's my life! where's the sexton? Let him write down the prince's officer, coxcomb.—Come, bind them.—Thou naughty varlet.

Con. Away! you are an ass; you are an ass.

Dogb. Dost thou not suspect my place? Dost thou not suspect my years?—O, that he were here to write me down an ass!—but, masters, remember, that I am an ass; though it be not written down, yet forget not that I am an ass.—No, thou villain, thou art full of piety, as shall be proved upon thee by good witness. I am a wise fellow; and, which is more, an officer; and, which is more, a householder; and, which is more, as pretty a piece of flesh as any in Messina; and one that knows the law, go to; and a rich fellow enough, go to; and a fellow that hath had leases; and one that hath two gowns, and every thing handsome about him. Bring him away. O, that I had been writ down an ass!

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Before Leonato's House.

Enter Leonato and Antonio.

Ant. If you go on thus, you will kill yourself;
And it is not wisdom thus to second grief
Against yourself.

Leon. I pray thee, cease thy counsel,
Which falls into mine ears as profitless
As water in a sieve. Give not me counsel;

1 This speech, and half of the one following, to the word "Masters," is from the quarto. 2 Readiest: in f. e. 3 In f. e. Verg. Let them be in the hands—Con. Off! coxcomb! 4 losses: in f. e. 5 The words "to me" in f. e. not in f. e.

Nor let no comforter delight mine ear,
But such a one whose wrongs do suit with mine:
Bring me a father that so lov'd his child,
Whose joy of her is overwhelm'd like mine,
And bid him speak to me of patience;
Measure his woe the length and breadth of mine,
And let it answer every strain for strain;
As thus for thus, and such a grief for such,
In every lineament, branch, shape, and form:
If such a one will smile, and stroke his beard;
Call sorrow joy; cry him, when he should groan;
Patch grief with proverb; make misfortune drunk
With candle-wasters; bring him you to me,
And I of him will gather patience.

But there is no such man; for, brother, men
Can counsel, and speak comfort to that grief
Which they themselves not feel; but tasting it,
Their counsel turns to passion, which before
Would give preceptual medicine to rage.

Better strong madness in a silken thread,
Charm ache with air, and agony with words.
No, no; 'tis all men's office to speak patience
To those that wring under the load of sorrow,
But no man's virtue, nor sufficiency,
To be so moral when he shall endure
The like himself. Therefore give me no counsel:
My griefs cry louder than advertisement.

Ant. Therein do men from children nothing differ.
Leon. I pray thee, peace! I will be flesh and blood;
For there was never yet philosopher
That could endure that patiently, however they have write the style of gods,
And made a push at chance and sufferance.
Ant. Yet bend not all the harm upon yourself;
Make those that do offend you suffer too.

Leon. There thou speak'st reason: nay, I will do so.

My soul doth tell me Hero is belied,
And that shall Claudio know; so shall the prince,
And all of them, that thus dishonour her.

Enter Don Pedro and Claudio.

Ant. Here comes the prince, and Claudio hastily.

D. Pedro. Good den, good den.

Claudio. Good day to both of you.

Leon. Hear you, my lords,

D. Pedro. We have some haste, Leonato.

Leon. Some haste, my lord!—well, fare you well, my lord.

Are you so hasty now?—well, all is one.

D. Pedro. Nay, do not quarrel with us, good old man.

Ant. If he could right himself with quarrelling,
Some of us would lie low.

Claud. Who wrongs him?

Leon. Marry, thou dost wrong me; thou, dissembler, thou—
Nay, never lay thy hand upon thy sword,
I fear thee not.

Claud. Marry, desISMATCH my hand,
If it should give your age such cause of fear,
In faith, my hand meant nothing to my sword.

Leon. Tush, tush, man! never fear and jest at me:
I speak not like a dotard, nor a fool;
As, under privilege of age, to brag
What I have done being young, or what would do,
Were I not old. Know, Claudio, to thy head,
Thou hast so wrong'd mine innocent child and me
That I am forc'd to lay my reverence by,
And with grey hairs, and braise of many days,
Do challenge thee to trial of a man.
I say, thou hast belied mine innocence, boy:
Thou slander hast gone through and through her heart,
And she lies buried with her ancestors,
O! in a tomb where never scandal slept,
Save this of hers, fram'd by thy villainy.

Claud. My villainy?

Leon. Thine, Claudio; thine, I say.

D. Pedro. You say not right, old man.

Leon. My lord, my lord,
I'll prove it on his body, if he dare;
Despite his nice fence, and his active practice,
His May of youth, and bloom of lustyhood.

Claud. Away! I will not have to do with you.

Leon. Canst thou so daff me? Thou hastkill'd my child:
If thou kill'st me, boy, thou shalt kill a man.

Ant. He shall kill two of us, and men indeed:
But that's no matter; let him kill one first:
—Win me and wear me,—let him answer me.—
Come, follow me, boy! come, sir boy, come, follow me.
Sir boy, I'll whip you from your joining fence;
Nay, as I am a gentleman, I will.

Leon. Brother—

Ant. Content yourself. God knows, I lov'd my niece;
And she is dead; slander'd to death by villains,
That dare as well answer a man, indeed,
As I dare take a serpent by the tongue.
Boys, apes, braggart, Jacks, milksops!—

Leon. Brother Antony—

Ant. Hold you content. What, man! I know them; yea,
And what they weigh, even to the utmost scrupule;
Scambling, out-facing, fashion-mong'ring boys,
That lie, and clog, and flout, deprave and slander,
Go antickly, and show an outward hideousness,
And speak off half a dozen dangerous words,
How they might hurt their enemies, if they durst,
And this is all!

Leon. But, brother Antony—

Ant. Come, 'tis no matter:
Do not you meddle, let me deal in this.

D. Pedro. Gentlemen both, we will not wake your patience.
My heart is sorry for your daughter's death;
But, on my honour, she was charg'd with nothing
But what was true, and very full of proof.

Leon. My lord, my lord!—

D. Pedro. I will not hear you.

Leon. No?

Come, brother away.—I will be heard.—

Ant. And shall, or some of us will smart for it.

[Execute Leonato and Antonio.

Enter Benedick.

D. Pedro. See, see! here comes the man we went to seek.

Claud. Now, signior, what news?

Bene. Good day, my lord.

D. Pedro. Welcome, signior: you are almost come to part almost a fray.

Claud. We had like to have had our two noses snapped off with two old men without teeth.

D. Pedro. Leonato and his brother. What think'st thou? Had we fought, I doubt, we should have been too young for them.

Bene. In a false quarrel there is no true valour. I came to seek you both.

Claud. We have been up and down to seek thee; for we are high-proof melancholy, and would fain have it beaten away. Wilt thou use thy wit?

Bene. It is in my scabbard; shall I draw it?

D. Pedro. Dost thou wear thy wit by thy side?

Claud. Never any did so, though very many have been beside their wit.—I will bid thee draw, as we do the minstrels; draw to pleasure us.
D. Pedro. As I am an honest man, he looks pale.—
Art thou sick, or angry?

Claud. What! courage, man! What though care killed a cat, thou hast mettle enough in thee to kill care.

Bene. Sir, I shall meet your wit in the career, an you charge it against me.—I pray you, choose another subject.

Claud. Nay then, give him another staff: this last was broke cross.

D. Pedro. By this light, he changes more and more.
I think he be angry indeed.

Claud. If he be so, he knows how to turn his girdle.¹

Bene. Shall I speak a word in your ear?

Claud. God bless me from a challenge! ²

Bene. You are a villain.—I jest not:—I will make it good how you dare, with what you dare, and when you dare.—Do me right, or I will protest your cowardise. You have killed a sweet lady, and her death shall fall heavy on you. Let me hear from you.

Claud. Well, I will meet you, so I may have good cheer.

D. Pedro. What, a feast? a feast?

Claud. I' faith, I thank him; he hath bid me to a calf's-head and capers,³ the which if I do not carve most curiously, say my knife's naught.—Shall I not find a woodcock too? ⁴

Bene. Sir, your wit ambles well: it goes easily.

D. Pedro. I'll tell thee how Beatrice praised thy wit the other day. I said, thou hadst a fine wit: "True," said she, "a fine little one!" No,² I, "a great wit:" "Right," says she, "a great gross one." Nay,² said I, "a good wit:" "Just,"² said she, "it hurts nobody."² "Nay," said I, "the gentleman is wise!" Certain," said she, "a wise gentleman."² "Nay,"² said I, "he hath the tongues:" "That I believe," said she,² for he swore a thing to me on Monday night, which he forswore on Tuesday morning; there's a double tongue; there's two tongues." Thus did she, an hour together, trans-shape thy particular virtues; yet at last she concluded with a sigh, thou wast the prosterne man in Italy.

Claud. For the which she, wert heartily, and said she cared not.

D. Pedro. Yea, that she did; but yet, for all that, an if she did not hate him deadly, she would love him deeply. Old man's daughter told us all.

All, all; and moreover, who saw him when he was hid in the garden.

D. Pedro. But when shall we set the savage bull's horns on the sensible Benedick's head? ⁵

Claud. Yea, and text underneath.⁶ "Here dwells Benedick the married man!"

Bene. Fare you well, boy: you know my mind. I will leave you now to your gossip-like humour: you break jests as braggers do their blades, which, God be thanked, hurt not.—My lord, for your many courtesies
I thank you: I must discontinue your company. Your brother, the bastard, is fled from Messina: you have, among you, killed a sweet and innocent lady. For my lord Lordship heard, there he and I shall meet: and till then, peace be with him. ⁷

[Exit Benedick.

D. Pedro. He is in earnest.

Claud. In most profound earnest; and, I'll warrant you, for the love of Beatrice.

D. Pedro. And hath challenged thee?

Claud. Most sincerely.

D. Pedro. What a pretty thing man is, when he goes in his doublet and hose, and leaves off his wit!

Claud. He is then a giant to an ape; but then is an ape a doctor to such a man.

D. Pedro. But, soft you; let me be: pluck up, my heart, and be sad. Did he not say, my brother was bled?

Enter Dogberry, Verges, and the Watch, with Conrade and Borachio.

Dogb. Come, you, sir: if justice cannot tame you,
she shall ne'er weigh more reasons in her balance.
Nay, an you be a cursing hypocrite once, you must be looked to.

D. Pedro. How now! two of my brother's men bound?
Borachio, one?

Claud. Hearken after their offence, my lord.

D. Pedro. Officers, what offence have these men done?

Dogb. Marry, sir, they have committed false report;
moreover, they have spoken untruths; secondarily,
they are slanders; sixth and lastly, they have belied a lady; thirdly, they have verified unjust things: and,
to conclude, they are lying knaves.

D. Pedro. First, I ask thee what they have done?
thirdly, I ask thee, what's their offence? sixth and lastly, why they are committed? and, to conclude, what you lay to their charge?

Claud. Rightly reasoned, and in his own division;
and, by my troth, there's one meaning well suited.

D. Pedro. Whom have you offended, masters, that you are thus bound to your answer? this learned constable is too cunning to be understood. What's your offence?

Bora. Sweet prince, let me go no farther to mine answer: do you hear me, and let this count kill me.
I have deceived even your very eyes: what your wisdoms could not discover, these shallow fools have brought to light; who, in the night, overheard me confessing to this man, how Don John your brother, incensed me to slander the lady Hero; how you were brought into the orchard, and saw me court Margaret in Hero's garments; how you disgraced her, when you should marry her. My villainy they have upon record, which I had rather seal with my death, than repeat over to my shame. The lady is dead upon mine and my master's false accusation; and, briefly, I desire nothing but the reward of a villain.

D. Pedro. Runs not this speech like iron through your blood?

Claud. I have drunk poison whiles he utter'd it.

D. Pedro. But did my brother set thee on to this?
Bora. Yea; and paid me richly for the practice of it.

D. Pedro. He is compos'd and fram'd of treachery.—
And fled he is upon this villainy.

Claud. Sweet Hero! now thine image doth appear in the rare semblance that I loved it first.

Dogb. Come; bring away the plaintiff: by this time our sexton hath reformed signior Leonato of the mater. And masters, do not forget to specify, when time and place shall serve, that I am an ass.

Verg. Here, here comes master signior Leonato, and the sexton too.

Re-enter Leonato, Antonio, and the Sexton.

Leon. Which is the villain? Let me see his eyes,
That when I note another man like him,
I may avoid him. Which of these is he?

Bora. If you would know your wronger, look on me.

¹ Large belts were worn with the girdle before, but for wrestling, the buckle was turned behind, to give the adversary a fairer grasp at the girdle. The action was therefore a challenge. ² A capon: i.e. ³ An allusion to a popular belief that a woodcock had no brains. ⁴ God—with a period at the end of the speech: in i.e.
Leon. Art thou the slave, that with thy breath hast killed him, and I—

Bora. Yea, even I alone.

Leon. No, not so, villain; thouliesthyself: Here stand a pair of honourable men, A third is fled, that had a hand in it.— I thank you, princes, for my daughter's death: Record it with your high and worthy deeds. 'Twas bravely done, if you bethink you of it.

Claud. I know not how to pray your patience, Yet I must speak. Choose your revenge yourself; Impose me to what penance your invention Can lay upon my sin; yet sinn'd I not, But in mistaking.

D. Pedro. By my soul, nor I; And yet, to satisfy this good old man, I would bend under any heavy weight That he shall enjoin me to.

Leon. I cannot bid you cause my daughter live; That were impossible; but, I pray you both, Possess the people in Messina, here, How innocent she died: and, if your love Can labour sought in sad invention, Hang her an epitaph upon her tomb, And sing it to her bones: sing it to-night.— To-morrow morning come you to my house, And since you could not be my son-in-law, Be yet my nephew. My brother hath a daughter, Almost the copy of my child that's dead, And she alone is heir to both of us: Give her the right you should have given her cousin, And so dies my revenge.

Claud. O noble sir! Your over-kindness doth wring tears from me. I do embrace your offer, and dispose For henceforth of poor Claudius.

Leon. To-morrow, then, I will expect your coming: To-night I take my leave.—This naughty man Shall face to face be brought to Margaret, Who, I believe, was past* in all this wrong, Hid't to it by your brother.

Bora. No, by my soul, she was not; Nor knew not what she did, when she spoke to me; But always hath been just and virtuous, In any thing that I do know by her.

Dog. Moreover, sir, which, indeed, is not under white and black, this plaintiff here, the offender, did call me ass: I beseech you, let it be remembered in his punishment. And also, the watch heard them talk of one Deformed: they say, he wears a key in his ear, and a lock hanging by it, and borrows money in God's name; the which he hath used so long, and never paid, that now men grow hard-hearted, and will lend nothing for God's sake. Pray you, examine him upon that point.

Leon. I thank thee for thy care and honest pains.

Dog. Your worship speaks like a most thankful and reverence youth, and I praise God for you.

Leon. There's for thy pains.

Dog. God save the foundation!

Leon. I discharge thee of thy prisoner, and I thank thee.

Dog. I leave an arrant knave with your worship; which, I beseech your worship, to correct yourself for the example of others. God keep your worship: I wish your worship well: God restore you to health. I humbly give you leave to depart, and if a merry meeting may be wished, God prohibit it.—Come, neighbour.

[Exeunt Dogberry, Verges, and Watch.

Leon. Until to-morrow morning, lords, farewell.

Ant. Farewell, my lords: we look for you to-morrow.

D. Pedro. We will not fail.

Claud. To-night I'll mourn with Hero.

[Exeunt Don Pedro and Claudio.

Leon. Bring you these fellows on. We'll talk with Margaret, How her acquaintance grew with this lewd* fellow.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Leonato's Garden.

Enter Benedick and Margaret; meeting.

Bene. Pray thee, sweet mistress Margaret, deservest well at my hands by helping me to the speech of Beatrice.

Marg. Will you, then, write me a sonnet in praise of my beauty?

Bene. In so high a style, Margaret, that no man living shall come over it; for, in most comely truth, thou deservest it.

Marg. To have no man come over me? why shall I always keep below stairs?

Bene. Thy wit is as quick as the greyhound's mouth; it catches.

Marg. And your's as blunt as the fencer's foils, which hit, but hurt not.

Bene. A most manly wit, Margaret; it will not hurt a woman: and so, I pray thee, call Beatrice. I give thee the bucklers.

Marg. Give us the swords, we have bucklers of our own.

Bene. If you use them, Margaret, you must put in the pikes with a vice; and they are dangerous weapons for maids.

Marg. Well, I will call Beatrice to you, who, I think, hath legs.

[Exit Margaret.

Bene. And therefore will come.

The god of love,
That sits above,
And knows me, and knows me,
How pitiful I deserve.—

I mean, in singing; but in loving, Leander the good swimmer, Troilus the first employer of panders, and a whole book full of these quondam carpet-mongers, whose names yet run smoothly in the even road of a blank verse, why, they were never so truly turned over and over, as my poor self, in love. Marin, I cannot show it in rhyme; I have tried: I can find out no rhyme to "lady" but "baby," an innocent rhyme; for "scorn," "horn," a hard rhyme; for "school," "fool," a babbling rhyme—very ominous endings. No, I was not born under a rhyming planet, nor I cannot woo in festival terms.—

Enter Beatrice.

Sweet Beatrice, wouldst thou come when I called thee?

Beat. Yea, signior; and depart when you bid me.

Bene. O! stay but till then.

Beat. "Then" is spoken; fare you well now:—and yet, o'er I go, let me go with that I came for; which is, with knowing what hath passed between you and Claudio.

Bene. Only foul words; and thereupon I will kiss thee.

Beat. Foul words is but foul wind, and foul wind is but foul breath, and foul breath is noise; therefore I will depart unkissed.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

ACT V.

Claud. Thou hast frighted the word out of thy right sense, so forcible is thy wit. But, I must tell thee plainly, Claudio undergoes my challenge, and either I must shortly hear from him, or I will subscribe him a coward. And, I pray thee now, tell me, for which of my bad parts didst thou first fall in love with me?

Beat. For them all together; which maintained so politic a state of evil, that they will not admit any good part to intermixing with them. But for which of my good parts did you first suffer love for me?

Bene. Suffer love! a good epithet. I do suffer love, indeed, for I love thee against my will.

Beat. In spite of your heart, I think. Alas, poor heart! If you spit it for my sake, I will spit it for yours; for I will never love that which my friend hates.

Bene. Thou and I are too wise to woo peaceably.

Beat. It appears not in this confession: there's not one wise man among twenty that will praise himself.

Bene. An old, an old instance, Beatrice, that lived in the time of good neighbours. If a man do not erect, in this age, his own tomb ere he dies; he shall live no longer in monument, than the bell-rings, and the widow weeps.

Beat. And how long is that, think you?

Bene. Question:—why an hour in clamour, and a quarter, in rheme: therefore is it, most expeditious for the wise, (if Don Wurm, his conscience, find no impediment to the contrary,) to be the trumpet of his own virtues, as I am to myself. So much for praising myself, who, I myself will bear witness, is praiseworthy.

And now tell me, how doth your cousin?

Beat. Very ill.

Bene. And how do you?

Beat. Very ill too.

Bene. Serve God, love me, and mend. There will I leave you too, for here comes one in haste.

Enter Ursula.

Urs. Madam, you must come to your uncle. Yonder's old' coil at home: it is proved, my lady Hero hath been falsely accused, the prince and Claudio mightily abused; and Don John is the author of all, who is fled and gone. Will you come presently?

Beat. Will you go hear this news, signior?

Bene. I will live in thy heart, die in thy lap, and be buried in thy eyes; and, moreover, I will go with thee to thy uncle's.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Inside of a Church.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, and Attendants, with music and tapers.

Claud. Is this the monument of Leonato?

Att. It is, my lord.

Claud. [Reads.]

EPITAPH.

Done to death by slanderous tongues
Was the Hero that here lies:
Death, in guerdon of her wrongs,
Gives her fame which never dies.
So the life, that died with shame,
Lives in death with glorious fame.
Hang thou there upon the tomb,
Praising her when I am dumb.—

Now, music, sound, and sing your solemn hymn.

Pardon, goddess of the night,
Those that slew thy virgin bright;
For the which, with songs of woe,
Round about her tomb we go.

Midnight, assist our moan;
Help us to sigh and groan,
Heavily, heavily:
Graves, yawn, and yield your dead,
Till death be uttered,^* heavily, heavily.

Claud. Now, unto thy bones good night! Yearly will I do this rite.

D. Pedro. Good morrow, masters: put your torches out.

The wolves have prey'd; and look, the gentle day,
Before the wheels of Phoebus, round about
Dapples the drowsy east with spots of grey.
Thanks to you all, and leave us: fare you well.

Claud. Good morrow, masters: each his way can tell.4

[Exeunt Torch-bearers.

D. Pedro. Come, let us hence, and put on other weed; And then to Leonato's we will go.

Claud. And Hymen now with luckier issue spread, Than this, for whom we render'd up this woe!

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Leonato's House.

Enter Leonato, Antonio, Benedick, Beatrice, Ursula, Friar, and Hero.

Friar. Did I not tell you she was innocent?

Leon. So are the prince and Claudio, who accus'd her

Upon the error that you heard debated:
But Margaret was in some fault for this,
Although against her will, as it appears
In the true course of all the question.

Ant. Well, I am glad that all things sort so well.

Bene. And so am I, being else by faith enforce'd

To call young Claudio to a reckoning for it.

Leon. Well, daughter, and you gentlewomen all,
Withdraw into a chamber by yourselves,
And, when I send for you, come hither mask'd.

The prince and Claudio promis'd by this hour
To visit me.—You know your office, brother;
You must be father to your brother's daughter,
And give her to young Claudio.

[Exeunt Ladies.

Ant. Which I will do with confirm'd countenance.

Bene. Friar, I must entreat your pains, I think.

Friar. To do what, signior?

Bene. To bind me, or undo me; one of them.—

Signior Leonato, truth it is, good signior,
Your niece regards me with an eye of favour.

Leon. That eye my daughter lent her: it is most true.

Bene. And I do with an eye of love requite her.

Leon. The sight whereof, I think, you had from me,
From Claudio, and the prince. But what's your will?

Bene. Your answer, sir, is enigmatical:
But, for my will, my will is, your good will
May stand with ours, this day to be conjoin'd

In the state of honourable marriage:—

In which, good friar, I shall desire your help.

Leon. My heart is with your liking.

Friar. And my help.

Here come the prince, and Claudio.3

[Enter Don Pedro and Claudio, with Attendants.

D. Pedro. Good morrow to this fair assembly.

Leon. Good morrow, prince; good morrow, Claudio: We here attend you. Are you yet determin'd

To-day to marry with my brother's daughter?

Claud. I'll hold my mind, were she an Ethiop.

Leon. Call her forth, brother: here's the friar ready.

[Exeunt Antonio.

D. Pedro. Good morrow, Benedick. Why, what's the matter, That you have such a February face, So full of frost, of storm, and cloudiness? Claud. I think, he thinks upon the savage bull.— Tush! fear not, man, we'll tip thy horns with gold, And all Europe shall rejoice at thee, As once Europa did at lusty Jove, When he would play the noble beast in love. Bene. Bull Jove, sir, had an amiable low; And some such strange bull leap'd your father's cow, And got a calf in that same noble feat, Much like to you, for you have just his bleeet. Re-enter Antonio, with the Ladies masked. Claud. For this I owe you: here come other reckonings. Which is the lady I must seize upon? Leon. This same is she, and I do give you her. Claud. Why; then she's mine.—Sweet, let me see your face. Leon. No, that you shall not, till you take her hand Before this friar, and swear to marry her. Claud. Give me your hand before this holy friar: I am your husband, if you like of me. Hero. And when I liv'd, I was your other wife: [Unmasking. And when you lov'd, you were my other husband. Claud. Another Hero? Hero. Nothing certain. One Hero died belied; but I do live, And, surely as I live, I am a maid. D. Pedro. The former Hero! Hero that is dead! Leon. She died, my lord, but whiles she slander liv'd. Friar. All this amazement can I qualify; When after that the holy rites are ended, I'll tell you largely of fair Hero's death: Mean time, let wonder seem familiar, And to the chapel let us presently. Bene. Soft and fair, friar.—Which is Beatrice? Beat. I answer to that name. [Unmasking.] What is your will? Bene. Do not you love me? Beat. Why, no more than reason. Bene. Why, then, your uncle, and the prince, and Claudio, Have been deceived, for they swore you did. Beat. Do not you love me? Bene. Troth, no more than reason. Beat. Why, then, my cousin, Margaret, and Ursula, Are much deceived; for they swore, you did. Bene. They swore that you were almost sick for me. Beat. They swore that you were well-nigh dead for me.

SCENE, Navarre.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Navarre. A Park, with a Palace in it.

Enter the King, Biron, Longaville, and Dumaine.

King. Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives, Live register'd upon our brazen tombs; And then grace us in the disgrace of death; When, spite of coromart devouring time, Th' endeavour of this present breath may buy That honour, which shall bate his seythe's keen edge, And make us heirs of all eternity. Therefore, brave conquerors!—for so you are, That war against your own affections, And the huge army of the world's desires,— Our late edict shall strongly stand in force.

Navarre shall be the wonder of the world: Our court shall be a little Academe, Still and contemplative in living art. You three, Biron, Dumaine, and Longville, Have sworn for three years' term to live with me, My fellow-scholars, and to keep these statutes, That are recorded in this schedule here: [Shewing it.] Your oaths are past, and now subscribe your names, That his own hand may strike his honour down, That violates the smallest branch herein. If you are arm'd to do, as sworn to do, Subscribe to your deep oaths, and keep them too.

Long. I am resolv'd: 'tis but a three years' fast.

The mind shall banquet, though the body pine: Fat paunches have lean pates; and dainty bits Make rich the ribs, but bankrupt quite the wits.

Dum. My loving lord, Dumaine is mortified.

The grosser manner of this world's delights He throws upon the gross world's baser slaves: To love, to wealth, to pomp, I pine and die, With all these living in philosophy.

Biron. I can but say their protestation over; So much, dear liege, I have already sworn, That is, to live and study here three years.

But there are other strict observances;

As, not to see a woman in that term,

Which, I hope well, is not enrolled there:

And, one day in a week to touch no food,

And but one meal on every day beside,

The which, I hope, is not enrolled there:

And then, to sleep but three hours in the night,

And not be seen to wink of all the day,

When I was wont to think no harm all night,

And make a dark night, too, of half the day,

Which, I hope well, is not enrolled there.

O! these are barren tasks, too hard to keep,

Not to see ladies, study, fast, not sleep.

King. Your oath is pass'd to pass away from these.

Biron. Let me say no, my liege, an if you please.

I only swore to study with your grace,

And stay here in your court for three years' space.

Long. You swore to that, Biron, and to the rest.

Biron. By yea, and nay, sir, then I swore in jest.

What is the end of study, let me know?

King. Why, that to know which else we should not know.

Biron. Things hid and barr'd, you mean, from common sense?

King. Ay, that is study's god-like recompense.

Biron. Come on, then: I will swear to study so,

To know the thing I am forbid to know;

As thus,—to study where I well may dine,

When I to feast expressly am forbid;

Or study where to meet some mistress fine,

When mistresses from common sense are hid;

Or, having sworn too hard-a-keeping oath,

Study to break it, and not break my troth.

If study's gain be this, and this be so,

Study knows that which yet it doth not know.

Swear me to this, and I will ne'er say no.

King. These, Be the steps that hinder study quite,

And train our intellects to vain delight.

1 Not in f. e. 2 From the quarto, 1598.
HOLIFERNES, SIR NATHANIEL, DULL, COSTARD, JAQUENETTA.

Love's Labor Lost, Act IV, Scene 3
Biron. Why, all delights are vain; 'tis what most vain, Which, with pain purchase'd, doth infect pain:
As painfully to pore upon a book,
To seek the light of truth; while truth the while Doth falsely blind the eyesight of his look:
Light, seeking light, doth light of light beguile.
So, ere you find where light in darkness lies,
Your light grows dark by losing of your eyes,
Study me how to please the eye indeed,
By fixing it upon a fairer eye;
Who dazzling so, that eye shall be his heed,
And give him light that it was blinded by.
Study is like the heaven's glorious sun,
That will not be deep-search'd with saucy looks:
Small have continual plunders ever won,
Save base authority from others' books.
These earthly godfathers of heaven's lights,
That give a name to every fixed star,
Have no more profits of their shining nights,
Than those that walk, and wot not what they are.
Too much to know is to know nought but fame;
And every godfather can give a name.

King. How well he's read, to reason against reading!

Dum. Proceed well, to stop all good proceeding!

Long. He weeds the corn, and still lets grow the weeding.

Biron. The spring is near, when green geese are a breeding.

Dum. How follows that?

Biron. Fit in his place and time.

Dum. In reason nothing.

Biron. Nothing, then, in rhyme.

King. Biron is like an envious snapping frost,
That bites the first-born infants of the spring.

Biron. Well, say I am: why should proud summer boast,
Before the birds have any cause to sing?
Why should I joy in any abortive birth?
At Christmas I no more desire a rose,
Than wish a snow in May's new-fangled shows;
But like of each thing that in season grows.
So you, by study now it is too late,
Climb o'er the house-top to unlock the gate.6

King. Well, set you out: go home, Biron: adieu!

Biron. No, my good lord; I have sworn to stay with you:
And, though I have for barbarism spoke more,
Than for that angel knowledge you can say,
Yet confident I'll keep to what I swore:4
And bide the pence of each three years' day.
Give me the paper: let me read the same;
And to the strictest decrees I'll write my name.

King. How well this yielding rescues thee from shame!

Biron. [Reads.] Item, "That no woman shall come within a mile of my court."—Hath this been proclaimed?7

Long. Four days ago.

Biron. Let's see the penalty. [Reads.] "On pain of losing her tongue."—Who devis'd this penalty?

Long. Marry, that did I.

Biron. Sweet lord, and why? Long. To fright them hence with that dread penalty.

Biron. A dangerous law against garrulity.8

[Reads.] Item, "If any man be seen to talk with a woman within the term of three years, he shall endure such public shame as the rest of the court can possibly devise."9

This article, my liege, yourself must break;
For, well you know, here comes in embassy
The French king's daughter with yourself to speak,—
A maid of grace, and complete majesty,—
About surrender up of Aquitain
To her decrepit, sick, and bed-rid father:
Therefore, this article is made in vain,
Or vainly comes th' admired princess rather.

King. What say you, lords? why, this was quite forgot.

Biron. So study evermore is overshot:
While it doth study to have what it would,
It doth forget to do the thing it should;
And when it hath the thing it hunteth most,
'Tis won, as towns with fire; so won, so lost.

King. We must of force dispense with this decree:
She must lie here on mere necessity.

Biron. Necessity will make us all forsworn
Three thousand times within this three years' space;
For every man with his affects is born,
Not by might master'd, but by special grace.
If I break faith, this word shall plead4 for me,
I am forsworn on mere necessity.—
So to the laws at large I write my name; [Subscribes.] And he, that breaks them in the least degree, Stands in attainer of eternal shame.

'Suggestions' are to others, as to me;
But, I believe, although I seem so loth,
I am the last that will last keep his oath.
But is there no quiet recreation granted?

King. Ay, that there is. Our court, you know, is haunted
With a refined traveller of Spain;
A man in all the world's new-fashions flaunted,9
That hath a mint of phrases in his brain:
One, whom the music of his own vain tongue
Doth ravish like enchanting harmony;
A man of complements, whom right and wrong
Have chose as umpire of their mutiny:
This child of fancy, that Armado hight,
For interim to our studies, shall relate
In high-born words the worth of many a knight.
From tawny Spain, lost in the world's debate.
Now you delight, my lords, I know not, I,
But I protest, I love to hear him lie.
And I will use him for my minstrelsy.6

Biron. Armado is a most illustrious wight,
A man of fire-new words, fashion's own knight.

Long. Costard, the swain, and he shall be our sport;
And so to study three years is but short.

Enter Dull, with a letter, and Costard.

Dull. Which is the duke's own person?

Biron. This, fellow. What wouldst?

Dull. I myself reprehend his own person, for I am his grace's tharborough10; but I would see his own person in flesh and blood.

Biron. This is he.

Dull. Signior Arm—Arm—commends you. There's villainy abroad: this letter will tell you more.

Cost. Sir, the contempes thereof are as touching me.

Biron. A letter from the magnificent Armado11.

Biron. How low soever the matter, I hope in God for high words.

Long. A high hope for a low hearing:11 God grant us patience!

Biron. To hear, or forbear hearing.
Long. To hear meekly, sir, and to laugh moderately; or to forbear both.
Biron. Well, sir, be it as the style shall give us cause to chime in in the merriness.
Cost. The matter is to me, sir, as concerning Jaquenetta. The manner of it is, I was taken with the manner.²
Biron. In what manner?
Cost. In manner and form following, sir; all those three: I was seen with her in the manor house, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park; which, put together, is, in manner and form following. Now, sir, for the manner.—it is the manner of a man to speak to a woman; for the form,—in some form.
Biron. For the following, sir?
Cost. As it shall follow in my correction; and God defend the right!
King. Will you hear this letter with attention?
Biron. As we would hear an oracle.
Cost. Such is the simplicity of man to hearken after the flesh.
King. [Reads.] "Great deputy, the wellkin's vicegerent, and sole dominator of Navarre, my soul's earth's God, and body's fostering patron."³ Cost. Not a word of Costard yet.
King. "So it is,—"³
Cost. It may be so; but if he say it is so, he is, in telling true, but so,— King. Peace!
Cost. —be to me, and every man that dares not fight.
King. No words.
Cost. —of other men's secrets, I beseech you.
King. "So it is, besieged with sable-coloured melancholy, I did commend the black-oppressing humour to the most wholesome physic of thy health-loving air; and, as I am a gentleman, betook myself to walk. The time when? About the sixth hour; when beasts most graze, birds best peck, and men sit down to that nourishment which is called supper. So much for the time when. Now for the ground which; which, I mean, I walked upon: it is yeleped thy park. Then for the place where; where, I mean, I did encounter that obscure and most preposterous event, that draweth from my snow-white pen the ebon-coloured ink, which there thou viewest, beholdest, surveyest, and seest. But to the place, where:—it standeth north-north-east and by east from the west corner of thy curious-knotted garden: there did I see that low-spirited swain, that base minnow of thy mirth,"³
Cost. Me.
King. "—that unletter'd small-knowing soul."
Cost. Me.
King. "—that shallow vessel,"³
Cost. Still me.
King. "—which, as I remember, hight Costard,"³
Cost. O! me.
King. "—sorted and consorted, contrary to thy established proclaimed edict and continent canon, with,—with,—O! with—but with this I passion to say wherewith?"
Cost. With a wench.
King. "—with a child of our grandmother Eve, a female; or, for thy more sweet understanding, a woman. Him I (as my ever-esteem'd duty pricks me) have sent to thee, to receive the meed of punishment, by thy sweet grace's officer, Antony Dull, a man of good repute, carriage, bearing, and estimation."³ Dull. Me, an't shall please you: I am Antony Dull.
King. "For Jaquenetta, (so in the weaker vessel called) which I apprehended with the aforesaid swain, I keep her as a vessel of thy law's fury; and shall, at the least of thy sweet notice, bring her to trial. Thine, in all complements of devoted and heart-burning heat of duty,"³
"Don Adriano de Armado?"
Biron. This is not so well as I looked for, but the best that ever I heard.
King. Ay, the best for the worst.—But, sirrah, what say you to this?
Cost. Sir, I confess the wench.
King. Did you hear the proclamation?
Cost. I do confess much of the hearing it, but little of the marking of it.
King. It was proclaimed a year's imprisonment to be taken with a wench.
Cost. I was taken with none, sir: I was taken with a damsel.
King. Well, it was proclaimed damsel.
Cost. This was no damsel neither, sir: she was a virgin.
King. It is so varied, too, for it was proclaimed virgin.
Cost. If it were, I deny her virginity: I was taken with a maid.
King. This maid will not serve your turn, sir.
Cost. This maid will serve my turn, sir.
King. Sir, I will prononce your sentence: you shall fast a week with bran and water.
Cost. I had rather pray a month with mutton and porridge.
King. And Don Armado shall be your keeper.—My lord Biron, see him deliver'd o'er:
And go we, lords, to put in practice that Which each to other hath so strongly sworn.
[Exeunt King, Longaville, and Dumein.
Biron. I'll lay my head to any good man's hat, These oaths and laws will prove an idle scorn.
Dull. Sirrah, come on.³
Cost. I suffer for the truth, sir: for true it is, I was taken with Jaquenetta; and Jaquenetta is a true girl; and therefore, welcome the sour cup of prosperity! Affliction may one day smile again, and till then, set thee down, sorrow! [Exeunt."

SCENE II.—Armado's House in the Park.
Enter Armado and Moth, his page.
Arm. Boy, what sign is it, when a man of great spirit grows melancholy?
Moth. A great sign, sir, that he will look sad.
Arm. Why? sadness is one and the self-same thing, dear imp.
Moth. No, no; O lord! sir, no.
Arm. How canst thou part sadness and melancholy, my tender juvenal?
Moth. By a familiar demonstration of the working, my tough senior.
Arm. Why tough senior? why tough senior?
Moth. Why tender juvenal? why tender juvenal?
Arm. I spoke it, tender juvenal, as a congruent epitheton appertaining to thy young days, which we may nominate tender.
Moth. And I, tough senior, as an appertinent title to your old time, which we may name tough.
Arm. Pretty, and apt.
SCENE II.

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

127

Moth. How mean you, sir? I pretty, and my saying apt; or I apt, and my saying pretty?
Arm. Thou pretty, because little.
Moth. Little pretty, because little. Wherefore apt?
Arm. And therefore apt, because quick.
Moth. Speak you this in my praise, master?
Arm. In thy condign praise.
Moth. I will praise an oel with the same praise.
Arm. What, that an oel is ingenious?
Arm. That an oel is quick.
Arm. I do say, thou art quick in answers. Thou heatest my blood.
Moth. I answered, sir.
Arm. I love not to be crossed.
Moth. [Aside.] He speaks the mere contrary:
crosses' love not him?
Arm. I have promised to study three years with the duke.
Moth. You may do it in an hour, sir.
Arm. Impossible.
Moth. How many is one thrice told?
Arm. I am ill at reckoning; it fitteth the spirit of a master.
Moth. You are a gentleman, and a gamester, sir.
Arm. I confess both; they are both the varnish of a complete man.
Moth. Then, I am sure, you know how much the gross sum of duece-ace amounts to.
Arm. It doth amount to one more than two.
Moth. Which the base vulgar do call three.
Arm. True.
Moth. Why, sir, is this such a piece of study?
Now, here is three studied ere you'll thrice wink:
and how easy it is to put years to the word three,
and study three years in two words, the dancing horse? will tell you;
Arm. A most fine figure!
Moth. [Aside.] To prove you a cypher.
Arm. I will hereupon confess I am in love; and, as it is base for a soldier to love, so am I in love with a base wench. If drawing my sword against the humour of affection would deliver me from the reprobat thought of it, I would take desire prisoner, and ransom him to any French courtier for a new devised courtesy.
I think scorn to sigh: methinks, I should out-swear Cupid. Comfort me, boy. What great men have been in love?
Moth. Hercules, master.
Arm. Most sweet Hercules!—More authority, dear boy, name more; and, sweet my child, let them be men of good repute and carriage.
Moth. Samson, master: he was a man of good carriage, great carriage; for he carried the town-gates on his back, like a porter, and he was in love.
Arm. O well-knit Samson! strong-jointed Samson!
I do excel thee in my sporting, as much as thou didst me in carrying gates. I am in love too. Who was Samson's love, my dear Moth?
Moth. A woman, master.
Arm. Of what complexion?
Moth. Of all the four, or the three, or the two,
or one of the four.
Arm. Tell me precisely of what complexion.
Moth. Of the sea-water green, sir.
Arm. Is that one of the four complexions?
Moth. As I have read, sir; and the best of them too.
Arm. Green, indeed, is the colour of lovers; but to have a love of that colour, methinks, Samson had small reason for it. He, surely, affected her for her wit.
Moth. It was so, sir, for she had a green wit.
Arm. My love is most immaclate white and red.
Moth. Most immaclate thoughts; master, are masked under such colours.
Arm. Define, define, well-educated infant.
Moth. By my father's wit, and my mother's tongue, assist me!
Arm. Sweet invocation of a child; most pretty, and poetical!
Moth. If she be made of white and red,
Her faults will ne'er be known;
For blushing cheeks by faults are bred,
And fears by pale white shown:
Then, if she fear, or be to blame,
By this you shall not know;
For still her cheeks possess the same,
Which native she doth owe.
A dangerous rhyme, master, against the reason of white and red.
Arm. Where is there not a ballad, boy, of the King and the Beggar?
Moth. The world was very guilty of such a ballad some three ages since, but, I think, now 'tis not to be found; or, if it were, it would neither serve for the writing, nor the tune.
Arm. I will have that subject newly writ o'er, that I may example my digression by some mighty precedent.
Boy, I do love that country girl, that I took in the park with the rational Costard: she deserves well.
Moth. [Aside.] To be whipped; and yet a better love than my master.
Arm. Sing, boy: my spirit grows heavy in love.
Moth. And that's great marvel, loving a light wench.
Arm. I say, sing.
Moth. Forbear, till this company be past.
[Enter Dull, Costard, and Jaquenetta.
Dull. Sir, the duke's pleasure is, that you keep Costard safe: and you must let him take no delight, nor no penance; but a must fast three days a week. For this damsel, I must keep her at the park; she is allowed for the day—woman. Fare you well.
Arm. I do betray myself with blushing.—Maid.
Jaq. Man.
Arm. I will visit thee at the lodge.
Jaq. That's hereby.
Arm. I know where it is situate.
Jaq. Lord, how wise you are!
Arm. I will tell thee wonders.
Jaq. With that face?
Arm. I love thee.
Jaq. So I heard you say.
Arm. And so farewell.
Jaq. Fair weather after you.
Dull. Come, Jaquenetta, away.
[Exit Dull and Jaquenetta.
Arm. Villain, thou shalt fast for thy offences, ere thou be pardoned.
Cost. Well, sir, I hope, when I do it, I shall do it on a full stomach.
Arm. Thou shalt be heavily punished.
Cost. I am more bound to you than your fellows, for they are but lightly rewarded.
Arm. Take away this villain: shut him up.
Moth. Come, you transgressing slave: away!
Cost. Let me not be pent up, sir: I will fast, being loose.

Moth. No, sir; that were fast and loose: thou shalt to prison.

Cost. Well, if ever I do see the merry days of desolation that I have seen, some shall see—

Moth. What shall some see?

Cost. Nay nothing, master Moth, but what they look upon. It is not for prisoners to be too silent in their words; and therefore I will say nothing: I thank God I have as little patience as another man, and therefore I can be quiet.

[Exit Moth and Costard.]
Than seek a dispensation for his oath,
To let you enter his unpainted house.

Here comes Navarre.

[The ladies mask.

Enter KING, LONGAVILLE, DOUMAINE, BIRON, and Attendants.

King. Fair princess, welcome to the court of Navarre.

Prin. Fair, I give you back again; and welcome I have not yet: the roof of this court is too high to be yours, and welcome to the wide fields too base to be mine.

King. You shall be welcome, madam, to my court.
Prin. I will be welcome then. Conduct me thither.
King. Hear me, dear lady! I have sworn an oath.
Prin. Our lady help my lord! he'll be forsworn.
King. Not for the world, fair madam, by my will.
Prin. Why, will she break it; will, and nothing else.
King. Your ladyship is ignorant what it is.
Prin. Were my lord so, his ignorance was wise,
Where now his knowledge must prove ignorance.
I hear your grace hath sworn out house-keeping:
'T is deadly sin to keep that oath, my lord,
And sin to break it.
But pardon me, I am too sudden-bold:
To teach a teacher ill beseech me.
Vouchsafe to read the purpose of my coming,
And suddenly resolve me in my suit. [Gives a paper.

King. Madam, I will, if suddenly I may. [Reads:
Prin. You will the sooner that I were away,
For you 'l prove perjur'd, if you make me stay.
Biron. Did not I dance with you in Brabant once?
Ros. Did not I dance with you in Brabant once?
Biron. I know you did.
Ros. How needless was it, then,
To ask the question?
Biron. 'T is long of you, that spur me with such questions.
Biron. Your wit's too hot, it speeds too fast, 't will tire.
Ros. Not till it leave the rider in the mire.
Biron. What time o' day?
Ros. The hour that fools should ask.
Biron. Now fair beul your mask!
Ros. Fair fall the face it covers!
Biron. And many lovers!
Ros. Amen, so you be none.
Biron. Nay, then will I begone.
King. Madam, your father here doth intimate
The payment of a hundred thousand crowns;
Being but the one half of an entire sum,
Disowned by my father in his wars.
But say, that he, or we, (as neither have)
Receiv'd that sum, yet there remains unpaid
A hundred thousand more; in surety of the which,
One part of Aquitain is bound to us,
Although not valued to the money's worth.
If, then, the king your father will restore
But that one half which is unsatisfied,
We will give up our right in Aquitain,
And hold fair friendship with his majesty.
But that, it seems, he little purposeth,
For here he doth demand to have repaid
An hundred thousand crowns; and not demands,
On payment of a hundred thousand crowns,
To have his title live in Aquitain;
Which we much rather had depart'd withal,
And have the money by our father lent,

1 Some mod. eds. read: wild. 2 Not in f. e. 3 Part and depart were used indifferently. 4 So the quarto: the folio: in f. e. 5 fair: in.

Tham Aquitain, so gelled as it is.
Dear princess, were not his requests so far
From reason's yielding, your fair self should make
A yielding, against some reason in my breast,
And go well satisfied to France again.
Prin. You do the king my father too much wrong,
And wrong the reputation of your name,
In so unseeing to confess receipt
Of that which hath so faithfully been paid.
King. I do protest I never heard of it;
And, if you prove it, I'll repay it back,
Or yield up Aquitain.

Prin. We arrest your word.
Boyet, you can produce acquittances
For such a sum from special officers
Of Charles his father.

King. Satisfy me so.
Boyet. So please your grace, the packet is not come,
Where that and other specialties are bound:
To-morrow you shall have a sight of them.
King. It shall suffice me: at which interview,
All liberal reason I will yield unto.
Mean time, receive such welcome at my hand,
As honour, without breach of honour, may
Make tender of to thy true worthiness.
You may not come, fair princess, within my gates;
But here without you shall be so receiv'd,
As you shall deem yourself lodg'd in my heart,
Though so denied fresh harbour in my house.
Your own good thoughts excuse me, and farewell:
To-morrow shall we visit you again.

Prin. Sweet health and fair desires consort your grace!

King. Thy own wish wish I thee in every place!
[Exeunt King and his train.

Biron. Lady, I will commend you to mine own heart.
Ros. Pray you, do my commendations; I would be glad to see it.

Biron. I would, you heard it groan.
Ros. Is the fool sick?
Biron. Sick at the heart.
Ros. Alack! let it blood.
Biron. Would that it do good?
Ros. My physic says, ay.
Biron. Will you prick't with your eye?
Ros. No prick't, with my knife.
Biron. Now, God save thy life.
Ros. And yours from long living.
Biron. I cannot stay Thanksgiving. [Stands back.
Dunn. Sir, I pray you, a word. What lady is that same? [Coming forward.
Boyet. The heir of Alençon, Rosaline her name.
Dunn. A gallant lady. Monsieur, fare you well.
[Exit.

Long. I beseech you a word. What is she in the white? [Coming forward.
Boyet. A woman sometimes, an you saw her in the light.
Long. Porchance, light in the light. I desire her name.
Boyet. She hath but one for herself; to desire that,
were a shame.

Long. Pray you, sir, whose daughter?
Boyet. Her mother's, I have heard.
Long. God's blessing on your beard!
Boyet. Good sir, be not offended.
She is an heir of Falconbridge.

Long. Nay, my choler is ended.
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Another part of the Same.

Enter Armado and Moth.

Song. See, my love.

Arm. Warble, child: make passionate my sense of hearing.

Moth. Concolinel!—(Amato bene.)

Arm. Sweet air!—Go, tenderness of years: take this key, give enlargement to the swain, bring him festinately hither; I must employ him in a letter to my love.

Moth. Master, will you win your love with a French brawl? 4

Arm. How meanest thou? brawling in French?

Moth. No, my complete master; but to jog off a tune at the tongue's end, canary 5 to it with your feet, humour it with turning up your eyelids; sigh a note, and sing a note; sometime through the throat, as if you swallowed love with singing love; sometime through the nose; as if you sniffed up love by smelling love; with your hat-pouseth-like, o'er the shop of your eyes; with your arms crossed on your thin belly's doublet, let a rabbit on a spit; or your hands in your pocket, like a man after the old painting; and keep not too long in one tune, but a skip and away. These are compliments, these are honours; these betray nice wench[s, that would be betrayed without these, and make them men of note, (do you note, men?) that most are affected to these.

Arm. How hast thou purchased this experience?

Moth. By my pain 8 of observation.

Arm. But O.—but O,—

Moth. The hobby-horse is forgot.

Arm. Callest thou my love hobby-horse?

Moth. No, master; the hobby-horse is but a colt, and your love, perhaps, a hackney. But have you forgot your love?

Arm. Almost I had.

Moth. Negligent student! learn her by heart.

Arm. By heart, and in heart, boy.

Moth. And out of heart, master: all those three I will prove.

Arm. What wilt thou prove?

Moth. A man, if I live: and this, by, in, and without, upon the instant: by heart you love her, because your heart cannot come by her; in heart you love her, because your heart is in love with her; and out of heart you love her, being out of heart that you cannot enjoy her.

Arm. I am all these three.

1 Not in f. e. 2 A play upon the legal meaning of the words common, unenclosed land; and several, that which is private property. Scrojjelly, is said by Dr. James, to have in Warwickshire, the local meaning of belittled to a few proprietors in common. 4 So the quarto, the folio has: whence. 4 Not in f. e. 6 Fr. Branie; a dance in which the parties joined hands and danced around a couple, who kissed in turn all of the opposite sex to themselves, then took their places in the circle, and were succeeded by a second couple, and so on, till all had had their share. 7 The name of a lively, grotesque dance. 8 Fr. penny. The original word of the folio is penne.
SCENE I.

Moth. And three times as much more, and yet nothing at all.
Arm. Fetch hither the swain: he must carry me a letter.

Moth. A messenger well sympathised: a horse to be ambassador for an ass.
Arm. Ha, ha! what sayest thou?
Moth. Marry, sir, you must send the ass upon the horse, for he is very slow-gaited: but I go.
Arm. The way is but short. Away!

Moth. As swift as lead, sir.
Arm. Thy meaning, pretty ingenious? Is not lead a metal heavy, dull, and slow?
Moth. Mine, honest master; or rather, master, no.
Arm. I say, lead is slow.

Moth. You are too swift, sir, to say so:
Is that lead slow which is fir'd from a gun?
Arm. Sweet smoke of rhetoric! He reproves me a cannon; and the bullet, that's he—I shoot thee at the swain.

Moth. Thump then, and I flee. [Exit.

Arm. A most acute juvenal; valuable and fair2 of grace!

By thy favour, sweet wellkin, I must sigh in thy face: Moist-eyed1 melancholy, valour gives thee place.
My herald is return'd.

Enter MOTH with COSTARD.

Moth. A wonder, master! here's a Costard3 broken in a shin.

Arm. Some enigma, some riddle: come,—thy Penvoy;—begin.

Cost. No egma, no riddle, no Penvoy! no salve in them all,4 sir: O, sir, plantain, a plain plantain! no Penvoy, no Penvoy: no salve, sir, but a plantain.
Arm. By virtue, thou enforces laughter; thy silly thought, my spleen; the heaving of my lungs provokes me to ridiculous smiling, O, pardon me, my stars! Doth the incommodate talke salve for Penvoy, and the word Penvoy for a salve?

Moth. Do the wise think them other? is not Penvoy a salve?5

Arm. No page: it is an epilogue, or discourse, to make plain
Some obscure precedency that hath toforbe been said.
I will example it:
The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,
Were still at odds, being but three.
There's the moral: now the Penvoy.

Moth. I will add the Penvoy. Say the moral again.

Arm. The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,
Were still at odds, being but three.

Moth. Until the goose came out of door,
And say'd the odds by making' four.
Now will I begin your moral, and do you follow with my Penvoy.
The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,
Were still at odds, being but three.

Arm. Until the goose came out of door,
Staying the odds by making four.

A good Penvoy.6

Moth. Ending in the goose; would you desire more?

Cost. The boy hath sold him a bargain,7 a goose, that's flat.—Sir, your pennyworth is good; so your goose be fat.—

To sell a bargain well is as cunning as fast and loose.8
Let me see, a fat Penvoy; ay, that's a fat goose.

Arm. Come hither, come hither. How did this argument begin?

Moth. By saying that a Costard was broken in a shin.

Cost. True, and I for a plantain: thus came your argument in;
Then the boy's fat Penvoy, the goose that you bought,
And he ended the market.9

Arm. But tell me; how was there a Costard broken in a shin?

Moth. I will tell you sensibly.

Cost. Thou hast no feeling of it, Moth! I will speak that Penvoy.

I, Costard, running out, that was safely within,
Fell over the threshold, and broke my shin.
Arm. We will talk no more of this matter.

Cost. Till there be more matter in the shin.

Arm. Sirrah Costard, marry,10 I will enfranchise thee.

Cost. O! marry me to one Frances?—I smell some Penvoy, some goose, in this.

Arm. By my sweet soul, I mean, setting thee at liberty, enfreeing thy person: thou wilt immersed, captivated, bound.

Cost. True, and now you will be my purgation, and let me be loosed.

Arm. I give thee thy liberty, set thee free11 from durance; and, in lieu thereof, impose on thee nothing but this: bear this significant [Giving a letter].12 to the country maid Jaquenetta. There is remuneration; for the best ward of mine honour is rewarding my dependents. Moth, follow.

[Exit.

Moth. Like the sequel, I.—Signior Costard, adieu.

[Exit.

Cost. My sweet ounce of man's flesh! my ineony13 Jew14!—

Now will I look to his remuneration. Remuneration! O! that's the Latin word for three farthings: three farthings, remuneration.—What's the price of this inkle15? A penny.—No, I'll give you a remuneration: why, it carries it.—Remuneration!—why, it is a fairer name than French crown. I will never buy and sell out of this word.

Enter Biron.

Biron. O, my good knave Costard! exceedingly well met.

Cost. Pray you, sir, how much carnation ribbon may a man buy for a remuneration?

Biron. What is a remuneration?

Cost. Marry, sir, half-penny farthing. [Showing it.16

Biron. O! why then, three-farthings-worth of silk.

Cost. I thank your worship. God be wi' you.

Biron. O, why, slave! I must employ thee:
As thou wilt win my favour, good my knave,
Do one thing for me that I shall entertain.

Cost. When would you have it done, sir?

Biron. O! this afternoon.

Cost. Well, I will do it, sir. Fare you well.

Biron. O! thou knowest not what it is.

Cost. I shall know, sir, when I have done it.

Biron. Why, villain, thou must know first.

Cost. I will come to your worship to-morrow morning.

1 message: in f. e. 2 free: in f. e. 3 most rude: in f. e. 4 Head. 5 the male: in f. e. Tywhitt, also suggested the word in the text. 6 A play on the Latin salutation, salve. 7 adding: in f. e. 8 f. e. give this line as well as the next to Moth. 9 Selling a bargain, says Capel, consisted in drawing a person in, by some stratagem, to proclaim himself a fool by his own lips.—Knight. A classification, played with a stick and a belt or string, so arranged that a spectator would think he could make the latter first by placing a stick on its intricate fronds, whereas the operator could detach it at once.—Halliwell's Dictionary. 11 An allusion to a proverb—"Three women and a goose make a market." 12 13 14 Not in f. e. 15 Sweet, pretty. 16 Used as a term of endearment; also in Mid. Sun. Nis. Dream, where Thistle calls Pyramus, "most lovely Jew." 17 A species of tape. 18 Not in f. e.
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Another part of the same.

Enter the Princess, Rosaline, Maria, Katharine, Boyet, Lords, Attendants, and a Forester.

Prin. Was that the king, that spurreth his horse so hard
Against the steep uprising of the hill?

Boyet. I know not; but, I think; it was not he.

Prin. Whoe'er a' was, a' show'd a mounting mind.

Well, lords, to-day we shall have our despatch;

On Saturday we will return to France——

Then forester, my friend, where is the bush,

That we must stand and play the murderer in?

For. Hereby, upon the edge of yonder coppice;

A stand where you may make the fairest shoot.

Prin. I thank my beauty, I am fair that shoot,

And thereupon thou speakest the fairest shoot.

For. Pardon me, madam, for I meant not so.

Prin. What, what? first praise me, and again say, no?

O, short-liv'd pride! Not fair? alack for wo!

For. Yes, madam, fair.

Prin. Nay, never paint me now:

Where fair is not, praise cannot mend the brow.

Here, good my glass, take this for telling true.

| Giving him money |

Fair payment for soul words is more than due.

For. Nothing but fair is that which you inherit.

Prin. See, see! my beauty will be sav'd by merit.

O harsely in faith, fit for these days!

A giving hand, though foul, shall have fair praise.—

But come, the bow:—now mercy goes to kill,

And shooting well is then accounted ill.

Thus will I save my credit in the shoot:

Not wounding, pity would not let me do't;

If wounding, then it was to show my skill,

That more for praise than purpose meant to kill.

And, out of question, so it is sometimes:

Glory grows guilty of detested crimes,

Liege of all loiterers and malcontents,

Dread prince of placers, king of cool-pieces,

Solo imperator, and great general

Of trotting parities. (O my little heart!)

And I to be a corporal of his field,

And wear his colours like a tumber's hoop!

What? I love! I sue! I seek a wife!

A woman, that is like a German clock,

Still a repairing, ever out of frame,

And never going right; being a watch,

But being watch'd that it may still go right?

Nay, to be perjur'd, which is worst of all;

And, among three, to love the worst of all;

A witty* wanton with a velvet brow,

With two pitch balls stuck in her face for eyes;

Ay, and, by heaven, one that will do the deed,

Though Argus were her curmudgeon and guard:

And I to sigh for her! to watch for her!

To pray for her! Go to; it is a plague

That Cupid will impose for my neglect!

Of his almighty dreadful little might.

Well, I will love, write, sigh, pray, sue, and groan:

Some men must love my lady, and some Joan. [Exit.

When, for fame's sake, for praise, an outward part,

We bend to that the working of the heart;

As I for praise alone now seek to spill

The poor deer's blood, that my heart means no ill.

Boyet. Do not curst wives hold that self-sovereignty

Only for praise' sake, when they strive to be

Lords o'er their lords?

Prin. Only for praise; and praise we may afford

To any lady that subdues a lord.

Enter Costard.

Prin. Here comes a member of the commonswealth.

Cost. God dig-you-den* all. Pray you, which is the head lady?

Prin. Thou shalt know her, fellow, by the rest that have no heads.

Cost. Which is the greatest lady, the highest?

Prin. The thickest, and the tallest.

Cost. The thickest, and the tallest? it is so; truth is true.

An your waist, mistress, were as slender as my wit.

One o' these maid's girdles for your waist should be fit.

Are not you the chief woman? you are the thickest here.

Prin. What's your will, sir? what's your will?

Cost. I have a letter, from monsieur Biron to one lady Rosaline. [Giving it.]

Prin. O, thy letter, thy letter! he's a good friend of mine.

Stand aside, good bearer.—Boyet, you can carve;

Break up* this capon. [Handing it to him.]

Boyet. I am bound to serve.

This letter is mistook; it importeth none here: It is writ to Jaquenetta.

Prin. We will read it, I swear.

Break the neck of the wax, and every one give ear.

Boyet. [Reads.] By heaven, that thou art fair, is most infallible; true, that thou art beauteous; truth itself, that thou art lovely. More fairer than fair, beautiful than beauteous, truer than truth itself, have commissionary on thy heroic vessel! The magnanimous and most illustrious king Cophetua set eye upon the pernicious and indubitable beggar Penelophon;
and he it was that might rightuly say, veni, vidi, vici;
which to anatomi of the vulgar, [O base and obscure vulgar! ] vidiect, he came, saw, and overcame; he came, one; saw, two; overcame, three. Who came? the king; Why did he come? to see; Why did he see? to overcome; To whom came he? to the beggar? What saw he? the beggar; Whom overcame he? the beggar. The conclusion is victory: on whose side? the king's: the captive is enriched: on whose side? the beggar's. The catastrophe is a nuptial: on whose side? the king's,—no, on both in one, or one in both. I am the king, for so stands the comparison; though the beggar, for so witnessed thy lowliness. Shall I command thy love? I may. Shall I enforce thy love? I could. Shall I entreat thy love? I will. What shalt thou exchange for rags? robes; for tittles?
titles; for thyself? me. Thus, expecting thy reply, I profane my lips on thy foot, my eyes on thy picture, and my heart on thy every part.

"Thine, in the dearest design of industry,
" DON ADRIANO DE ARMADO."

"Thus dost thou hear the Nemean lion roar
Gaitest thee, thou lamb, that standest as his prey;
Submissive fall his princely feet before,
And he from forage will incline to play:
But if thou strive, poor soul, what art thou then?
Food for his rage, repasture for his den."

Prin. What plume of feathers is he that indicted this letter?
What vane? what weather-cock? did you ever hear better?

Boyet. I am much deceive'd, but I remember the style.
Prin. Else your memory is bad, going o'er it erewhile.

Boyet. This Armado is a Spaniard, that keeps here in court;
A phantasm, a Monarcho, and one that makes sport
To the prince, and his book-mates.

Prin. Thou, fellow, a word.
Who gave thee this letter?

Cost. I told you; my lord.
Prin. To whom shouldst thou give it?

Cost. From my lord to my lady.
Prin. From which lord, to which lady?

Cost. From my lord Biron, a good master of mine,
To a lady of France, that he cal'd Rosaline.

Prin. Thou hast mistaken his letter.—Come, lords, away.

Here, sweet, put up this: 't will be thine another day.
[Exit Princess and Train.

Boyet. Who is the suitor? who is the suitor?
Rosaline. Shall I teach you to know?

Boyet. Ay, my continent of beauty.

Rosaline. Why, she that bears the bow.

Finely put off!

Boyet. My lady goes to kill horses; but if thou marry,
Hang me by the neck, if horses that year miscarry.

Finely put on!

Boyet. Well then, I am the shooter.

Rosaline. And who is your deer?

Boyet. Ros. If we choose by the horns, yourself: come not near.

Finely put on, indeed!—

Mar. You still wrangle with her, Boyet, and she strikes at the brow.

Boyet. But she herself is hit lower. Have I hit her now?

Rosaline. Shall I come upon thee with an old saying, that was a man when king Pepin of France was a little boy, as touching the hit it?

Boyet. So I may answer thee with one as old, that was a woman when queen Guinever of Britain was a little wench, as touching the hit it.

Rosaline. Thou canst not hit it, hit it, hit it.

Boyet. An I cannot, cannot, cannot.

Rosaline. An I cannot, another can.

[Exit Rosaline and Kath.

Cost. By thy troth, most pleasant: how both did fit it!

Mar. A mark marvellous well shot, for they both did hit it.

Boyet. A mark! O! mark but that mark: a mark, says my lady.

Let the mark have a prick in't, to mete at, if it may be.

Mar. Wide o' the bow hand: if faith, your hand is out.

Cost. Indeed, a' must shoot nearer, or he'll never hit the clout.

Boyet. An if my hand be out, then belike your hand is in.

Cost. Then will she get the upshot by cleaving the pin.

Mar. Come, come, you talk greasily; your lips grow foul.

Cost. She's too hard for you at pricks, sir: challenge her to bowl.

Boyet. I fear too much rubbing. Good night, my good owl.

[Exit Boyet and Maria.

Cost. By my soul, a swain! a most simple clown!
Lord, lord! how the ladies and I have put him down!
O my troth, most sweet jests! most incoy vulgar wit!
When it comes so smoothly off, so obsequiously, as it may be, so fit.

Armado o' the one side,—O, a most dainty man!
To see him walk before a lady, and to bear her fan!
To see him kiss his hand! and how most sweetly a'
will swear;
Looking babies in her eyes, his passion to declare.
And his page o' the other side, that handful of small' wit!
Ah, heavens, it is a most pathetical nit!
Sola, sola!

[Shout within.

[Exit Costard.

SCENE II.—The Same.

Enter Holofernes, Sir Nathaniel, and Dull.

Nath. Very reverend sport, truly; and done in the testimony of a good conscience.

Hol. The deer was, as you know, sanguis,—in blood; ripe as the pomeower, who now hangeth like a jewel in the ear of calo,—the sky, the wicket, the heaven; and anon falleth like a crab, on the face of terra,—the soil, the land, the earth.

Nath. Truly, master Holofernes, the epitaphs are sweetly varied, like a scholar at the least: but, sir,
I assure ye, it was a buck of the first head.

Hol. Sir Nathaniel, haud credo.

Dull. 'T was not a haud credo, 't was a pricket.

1 These verses are usually given to Boyet, as his own, instead of being an appendage to Armado's epistle. 2 An Englishman, who, according to Nash, (Have with you to Saffron Walden, 1596.) "quite remounted his natural Englishe accents and gestures, and wrought himself wholly to the Italian pontilios." He asserted himself to be sovereign of the world, and from this "phantastick humor" obtained the title of Monarcho. 3 A play upon shoot and caterer, showing that the pronunciation of the two was similar. 4 Cateret and gan, terms in archery; the elout or pin, held up the mark aimed at. 5 This line is not in e. 6 Not in e. 7 A kind of apple. 8 A stag five years old. 9 A stag two years old.
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

ACT IV.

Hol. Most barbarous intimation! yet a kind of insinuation, as it were, in via, in way of explication; facere, as it were, replication, or, rather, ostentare, to show, as it were, his inclination,—after his undressed, unpolished, undone, unpruned, untrained, or rather unlettered, or, ratherest, unconfirmed fashion,—to insert again my haud credo for a deer.

Dull. I said, the deer was not a haud credo: 'twas a pricket.

Hol. Twice sod simplicity, bis cockus!—

O, thou monster ignorance, how deformed dost thou look!

Nath. Sir, he hath never fed of the dainties that are bred in a book;

He hath not eat paper, as it were; he hath not drunk ink: His intellect is not replenished; he is only an animal not to think;¹

Only sensible in the dullest parts; and such barren plants

Are set before us, that we thankful should be
Which we, having taste and feeling, are for those parts that do frustrate in us more than he:

For as it would ill become me to be vain, indiscreet, or a fool,

So, were there a patch set on learning, to set him in a school;

But, omne bene, say I; being of an old father's mind,

Man can brook the weather, that love not the wind.

Dull. You two are book men: can you tell by your wit,

What was a month old at Cain's birth, that's not five weeks old as yet?

Hol. Doctissim,'* good man Dull; Dietyyna, good man Dull.

Dull. What is Dietyyna?

Nath. A title to Phæbe, to Luna, to the moon.

Hol. The moon was a month old when Adam was no more;

And raught¹¹ not to five weeks, when he came to five-score.

The allusion holds in the exchange.

Dull. 'Tis true indeed: the collusion holds in the exchange.

Hol. God comfort thy capacity! I say, the allusion holds in the exchange.

Dull. And I say the pollution holds in the exchange, for the moon is never but a month old; and I say beside, that 'twas a pricket that the princess kill'd.

Hol. Sir Nathaniel, will you hear an external epitaph on the death of the deer? and, to humour the ignorant, I have call'd the deer the princess kill'd, a pricket.

Nath. Perge, good master Holofernes, perge; so it shall please you to abrogate securily.

Hol. I will something affect the letter, for it argues facility.

Reads.
The pretty princess pier'd and prick'd a pretty pleasing pricket;

Some say, a sore; but not a sore, till now made sore with shooting.
The dogs did yell; put I to sore, then sorel jumps from thicket;

Of pricket sore, or else sorel; the people fall a howling.

If sore be sore, then I to sore make fifty sore; O sore! Of one sore I am hundred make, by adding but one more I.

Nath. A rare talent!

Dull. If a talent be a claw,* look how he claws him with a talent.

Aside.

Hol. This is a gift that I have, simple, simple; a foolish extravagant spirit, full of forms, figures, shapes, objects, ideas, apprehensions, motions, revolutions: these are beget in the ventricles of memory, nourished in the womb of gia mater, and delivered up upon the mellowing of occasion. But the gift is good in those in whom it is acute, and I am thankful for it.

Nath. Sir, I praise the Lord for you, and so may my parishioners; for their sons are well tutored by you, and their daughters profit very greatly under you: you are a good member of the commonwealth.

Hol. Mehercle! if their sons be ingenuous, they shall wander in arms: if their daughters be capable, I will put it to them; but, sir says, qui pauca loquitur. A soul feminine saluteth us.

Enter Jaquesetta and Costard.

Jaq. God give you good mortarmaster person;²

Hol. Master person,—quasi pers-on. An if one should be pierced, which is the one?

Cost. Marrry, master schoolmaster, he is that is likest to a hogshead.

Hol. Of piercing a hogshead! a good lustre of conceit in a turf of earth; fire enough for a flint, pearl enough for a swine: 'tis pretty; it is well.

Jaq. Good master parson, be so good as read me this letter: it was given me by Costard, and sent me from Don Armado: I beseech you, read it.

Hol. Fauste, precor gelidum quando pocus omen sub umbra

Ruminat,—and so forth. Ah, good old Mantuan!* I may speak of thee as the traveller doth of Venice:

—Venecia, Venegia,

Chi non te vede, non te pregia.¹²

Old Mantuan! old Mantuan! Who understandeth thee not, loves thee not.—Ut, re, sol, la, mi, fa.—

Under pardon, sir, what are the contents? or, rather, as Horace says in his—What, my soul, verses?

Nath. Ay, sir, and very learned.

Hol. Let me hear a staff, a stanza, a verse: lege, domine

Nath. If love make me foresworn, how shall I swear to love?

Ah, never faith could hold, if not to beauty vowed!

Though to myself foresworn, to thee I'll faithful prove;

Those thoughts to me were oaks, to thee like osiers bowed.

Study his bias leaves, and makes his book thin eyes, Where all those pleasures live, that art would comprehend:

If knowledge be the mark, to know thee shall suffice.

Well learned is that tongue, that well can thee commend;

All ignorant that soul, that sees thee without wonder;

Which is to me some praise, that I thy parts admire.

Thy eye love's lightning beare, thy voice his dreadful thunder.

Which, not to anger bent, is music, and sweet fire. Celestial, as thou art, O! pardon, love, this wrong, That sings heaven's praise with such an earthly tongue!

Hol. You find not the apostrophes, and so miss the accent: let me supervise the canzonet. Here are only numbers ratified; but for the elegance, facility, and golden cadence of poesy, care. Ovidius Naso was the man: and why, indeed, Naso, but for smoothing out the odorous flowers of fancy, the jeers of invention? Imitating! it's nothing: so doth the hound his master,

² The whole of this passage, commencing with "O, thou monster." &c., is printed as prose in f. e. of: In f. e. * Dietyyna: in f. e. * Reached. * Talea was often written talus. * Naus is in e. * Persson was sometimes called person.
² He is called person, person, because by his person the church, which is an invisible body, is represented.—Blackstone. * John Baptist Mantuanus; his eclogues were translated by George Turerville, 1567.
the ape his keeper, the trained horse his rider. But damosella, virgin, was this directed to you?

Jaq. Ay, sir, from one Monsieur Biron, one of the strange queen's lords.

Hol. I will overtake the superscript. "To the snow-white hand of the most beauteous Lady Rosaline." I will look again on the intellect of the letter, for the nomination of the party writing to the person written unto: "You did tell me of a certain father's employment, Biron." Sir Nathaniel, this Biron is one of the votaries with the king; and here he hath framed a letter to a sequent of the stranger queen's, which, accidentally, or by the way of progression, hath miscarried.—Trip and go, my sweet; deliver this paper into the royal hand of the king; it may concern much. Stay not, thy compliment; I forgive thy duty; adieu.

Jaq. Good Costard, go with me.—Sir, God save your life!

Cost. Have with thee, my girl.

[Exit Cost and Jaq.]

Nath. Sir, you have done this in the fear of God, very religiously, and, as a certain father saith—

Hol. Sir, tell me not of the father; I do fear colourable causes. But, to return to the verses: did they please you, sir Nathaniel?

Nath. Marvellous well for the pen.

Hol. I do dine to-day at the father's of a certain pupil of mine; where, if before repeat it shall please you to gratify the table with a grace, I will, on my privilege I have with the parents of the aforesaid child or pupil, undertake your ben venuto; where I will prove those verses to be very unlearned, neither savouring of poetry, wit, nor invention. I beseech your society.

Nath. And thank you too; for society (saith the text) is the happiness of life.

Hol. And, cortes, the text most infallibly concludes it.—Sir, [To DULL.] I do invite you too; you shall not say me nay: pauca verba. Away! the gentles are at their game, and we will to our recreation.

[Exeunt.]
More sheets to the mill! O heavens! I have my wish:
Dumaine transform'd? four woodcocks in a dish.
Dum. O most divine Kate!
Biron. [Aside.] O most profane coxcomb!
Dum. By heaven, the wonder of a mortal eye!
Biron. [Aside.] By earth, she is most corporal; there you lie.
Dum. Her amber hairs for soul have amber quoted.
Biron. [Aside.] An amber-colour'd raven was well noted.
Dum. As upright as the cedar.
Biron. [Aside.] Stoops; I say:
Her shoulder is with child.
Dum. As fair as day.
Biron. [Aside.] Ay, as some days; but then no sun must shine.
Dum. O, that I had my wish!
Long. [Aside.] And I had mine!
King. [Aside.] And I mine too, good lord!
Biron. [Aside.] Amen, so I had mine. Is not that a good word?
Dum. I would forget her; but a fever she Reigns in my blood, and will remember'd be.
Biron. [Aside.] A fever in your blood? why, then incision
Would let her out in saucers: sweet misprision!
Dum. Once more I'll read the ode that I have writ.
Biron. [Aside.] Once more I'll mark how love can vary wit.
Dum. On a day, alack the day!
Love, whose month is ever May,
Spied a blossom, passing fair,
Playing in the watery air:
Through the violet leaves the wind,
All unseen, 'gan passage find;
That the lover, sick to death,
Wish'd himself the heaven's breath.
Air, quoth he, thy cheeks may blow,
Air, would 'midst triumph so!
But alack! my hand is sworn,
Ne'er to pluck thee from thy thorn:
Vow, alack! for youth unmeet,
Youth so apt to pluck a sweet.
Do not call it sin in me;
That I am forsworn for thee;
Thou for whom great Jove would swear:
Juno but an Ethipian were;
And deny himself for Jove,
Turning mortal for thy love.
This will I send, and something else more plain,
That shall express my true love's lasting pain.
O, would the King, Biron, and Longaville,
Were lovers too! ill, to example ill,
Would from my forehead wipe a perjur'd note;
For none offend, where all alike do dote.
Long. [Advancing.] Dumaine, thy love is far from charity,
That in love's grief desirest society:
You may look pale, but I should blush, I know,
To be o'erheard, and taken napping so.
King. [Advancing.] Come, sir, blush you: as his your case is such;
You chide at him, offending twice as much:
You do not love Maria; Longaville
Did never somet for her sake compile,
Nor never lay his wreathed arms athwart
His loving bosom, to keep down his heart.
I have been closely shrouded in this bush,
And mark'd you both, and for you both did blush.
I heard your guilty rhymes, observed your fashion,
Some sighs seek from you, noted well your passion:
Ay me! says one; O love! the other cries;
One, her hairs were gold, crystal the other's eyes:
You would for paradise break faith and truth;
[To Long.]
And Jove for your love would infringe an oath.
[To Dumaine.]
What will Biron say, when that he shall hear
Faith infringed, with such zeal did swear?
How will he scorn! how will he spend his wit!
How will he triumph, leap, and laugh at it!
For all the wealth that ever I did see,
I would not have him know so much by me.
Biron. Now step I forth to whisp hypocrisy.—
[Coming down from the tree.]
Ah, good my liege, I pray thee pardon me.
Good heart! what grace hast thou, thus to reprope
These worms for loving, that art most in love?
Your eyes do make no coaches; in your tears
There is no certain princess that appears:
You'll not be perjur'd, 'tis a hateful thing;
Tush! none but ministrles like of somninge.
But are you not ashamed? nay, are you not,
All three of you, to be thus much o'ershot?
You found his mote; the king your mote did see;
But I a beam do find in each of three.
O! what a scene of foolery have I seen,
Of sighs, of groans, of sorrow, and of pain!
O me! with what strict patience have I sat,
To see a king transformed to a gnat!
To see great Hercules whipping a gig,
And profound Solomon to tune a jig,
And Nestor play at push-pin with the boys,
And erite Timon laugh at idle toys!
Where lies thy grief? O! tell me, good Dumaine:
And, gentle Longaville, where lies thy pain?
And where my liege's? all about the breast:—
A caule, ho!
King. Too bitter is thy jest.
Are we betray'd thus to thy over-view?
Biron. Not you by me, but I betray'd to you:
I, that am honest; I, that hold it sin
To break the vow I am engaged in:
I am betray'd, by keeping company
With men, like men of strange inconstancy.
When shall you see me write a thing in rhyme?
Or groan for love? or spend a minute's time
In pruning me? When shall you hear that I will raise a hand, a foot, a face, an eye,
A gait, a state, a brow, a breast, a waist,
A leg, a limb?—
[Going.]
King. Soft! Whither away so fast?
A true man, or a thief, that gallops so?
Biron. I post from love; good lover, let me go.
Enter JACQUENETTA and COSTARD.
Jaq. God bless the king!
King. What, peasant! hast thou there?
Cost. Some certain treason.
King. What makes treason here?
Cost. Nay, it makes nothing, sir.
King. If it be nothing neither,
The treason and you go in peace away together.
Jaq. I beseech your grace, let this letter be read:
Our parson misdoubts it; 'tis was treason, he said.
King. Biron, read it over. [Biron reads the letter.]
Where hast thou it?
The hue of dungeons, and the shade\(^2\) of night;
And beauty's beauty becomes the heavens well.

Biron. Devils soonest tempt, resembling spirits of light.
O! if in black my lady's brows be deck'd,
It mourns, that painting, and usurping hair,
Should ravish dotters with a false aspect;
And therefore, is she been of a blach fair.
Her favour turns the fashion of these days:
For native blood is counted painting now,
And therefore red, that would avoid deprisise,
Paints itself black, to imitate her brow.

Dum. To look like her are chimney-sweepers black.

Long. And since her time are colliers counted bright.

King. And Ethiops of their sweet complexion crack.

Dum. Dark needs no candles now, for dark is light.

Biron. Your mistresses dare never come in rain.
For their colours should be wash'd away.
King. 'T were good, yours did; for, sir, to tell you plain,
I'll find a fairer face not wash'd to-day.

Biron. O! if the streets were paved with thine eyes,
Her feet were much too dainty for such tread.

Dum. O vile! then, as she goes, what upward lies
The street should see, as she walk'd over head.

King. But what of this? Are we not all in love?
Biron. O! nothing so sure; and thereby all forsworn.

King. Then leave this chat: and, good Biron, now prove
Our loving lawful, and our faith not torn.

Dum. Ay, marry, there; some flattery for this evil.

Long. Of some authority how to proceed;
Some tricks, some quillets, how to cheat the devil.

Dum. Some salve for perjury,

Biron. O! 't is more than need.—
Have at you, then, affection's men at arms.—
Consider, what you first did swear unto;—
To fast,—to study,—and to see no woman:
Flat treason 'gainst the kingly state of youth.
Say, can you fast? your stomachs are too young,
And abstinence engenders maladies.
And where that you have vow'd to study, lords,
In that each of you hath forsworn his book,
Can you still dream, and pore, and thereon look?
For when would you, my lord, or you, or you,
Have found the ground of study's excellence,
Without the beauty of a woman's face?
From women's eyes this doctrine I derive:
They are the ground, the books, the Academies,
From whence doth spring the true Promethean fire.
Why, universal plodging prisons up
The nimble spirits in the arteries,
As motion, and long-during action, tires
The sinewy vigour of the traveller.
Now, for not looking on a woman's face,
You have in that forsworn the use of eyes,
And study, too, the causer of your vow;
For where is any author in the world,
Teaches such learning\(^4\) as a woman's eye?
Learning is but an adjunct to ourself;
And where we are, our learning likewise is:
Then, when ourselves we see in ladies' eyes,\(^3\)
Do we not likewise see our learning there?

1 Not in f. e.
2 soowel: in f. e.
3 From quadrilètes.
4 beauty: in f. e.
Between this and the next line, f. e. insert: With ourseale.

---

Dum. It is Biron's writing, and here is his name.

Biron. Ah, you whoreson loggerhead! To Costard, you were born to do me shame.—

Guilty, my lord, guilty! I confess, I confess.

King. What?

Biron. That you three fools lack'd me, fool, to make up the mess.

He, he, and you; and you my liege, and I,
Are pick-purses in love, and we desire to die.

O! dismiss this audience, and I shall tell you more.

Dum. Now the number is even.

Biron. True, true; we are four.

Will these turtles be gone?

King. Hence, sirs; away!

Cost. Walk aside the true folk, and let the traitors stay.

[Exeunt Costard and Jaquenetta.]

Biron. Sweet lords, sweet lovers. O! let us embrace!
As true we are, as flesh and blood can be:
The sea will ebb and flow, heaven show his face;
Young blood doth yet obey an old decree:
We cannot cross the cause why we were born;
Therefore, of all hands must we be forsworn.

King. What, did these rent lines show some love of thine?

Biron. Did they? quoth you. Who sees the heavenly Rosaline,
That, like a rude and savage man of Inde,
At the first opening of the generous east,
Bows his vastal head; and, stricken blind,
Kisses the base ground with obedient breast?
What peremptory, eagle-sighted eye
Dares look upon the heaven of her brow.
That is not blinded by her majesty?

King. What zeal, what fury hath inspir'd thee now?

My love, her mispriz, is a gracious moon,
She, an attending star, scarce seen a light.

Biron. My eyes are then no eyes, nor I Biron.

O! but for my love, day would turn to night.
Of all complexions the cull'd sovereignty
Do meet, as at a fair, in her fair cheek;
Where several worthies make one dignity,
Where nothing wants that want itself doth seek.
Lend me the flourish of all gentle tongues,—

Fie, painted rhetoric! O! she needs it not:
To things of sale a seller's praise belongs;
She passes praise; then praise too short doth blot.
A wither'd hermit, five-score winters worn,
Might shake off silly, looking in her eye:
Beauty doth varnish age, as if new-born,
And gives the crutch the cradle's infancy.
O! it is the sun, that maketh all things shine!

King. By heaven, thy love is black as ebony.
Biron. Is ebony like her? O wood divine!
A wife of such wood were felicity.
O! who can give an oath? where is a book?
That I may swear beauty doth beauty lack,
If she that learn not of her eye to look:
No face is fair, that is not full so black.

King. O paradox! Black is the badge of hell,
O! we have made a vow to study, lords,
And in that vow we have forsworn our books:
For when would you, my liege, or you, or you,
In leaden contemplation have found out
Such fiery numbers, as the prompting eyes
Of beauty's tutors have enrich'd you with?
Other slow arts entirely keep the brain,
And therefore, finding barren practisers,
Scarce show a harvest of their heavy toil;
But love, first learned in a lady's eyes,
Lives not alone immersed in the brain,
But with the motion of all elements
Courses as swift as thought in every power,
And gives to every power a double power,
Above their functions and their offices.
It adds a precious seeing to the eye;
A lover's eyes will gaze an eagle blind;
A lover's ear will hear the lowest sound,
When the suspicious head of theft is stopp'd:
Love's feeling is more soft, and sensible,
Than are the tender horns of coxked snails;
Love's tongue proves dainty Bacchus gross in taste.
For valour is not love a Hercules,
Still climbing trees in the Hesperides?
Subtle as sphinx; as sweet, and musical,
As bright Apollo's lute, strung with his hair;
And, when love speaks, the voice of all the gods
Makes heaven drowse with the harmony.
Never durst poet touch a pen to write,
Until his ink were temper'd with love's sighs;
O! then his lines would ravish savage cars,
And plant in tyrants mild humanity.¹
From women's eyes this doctrine I derive:
They sparkle still the right Prometheus fire;
They are the books, the arts, the Academes,
That show, contain, and nourish all the world,
Else none at all in aught proves excellent.
Then, fools you were these women to forswear,
Or, keeping what is sworn, you will prove fools
For wisdom's sake, a word that all men love,
Or for love's sake, a word that loves all men,
Or for men's sake, the authors of these women,
Or women's sake, by whom we men are men,
Let us once lose our oaths, to find ourselves,
Or else we lose ourselves to keep our oaths.
It is religion to be thus forsworn;
For charity itself fulfils the law,
And who can sever love from charity?

King. Saint Cupid, then! and, soldiers, to the field!
Biron. Advance your standards, and upon them, lords!
Pell-mell, down with them! but be first advis'd,
In conflict that you get the sun of them.

Long. Now to plain-dealing; lay these glozes by.
Shall we resolve to woo these girls of France?

King. And win them too: therefore, let us devise
Some entertainment for them in their tents.

Biron. First, from the park let us conduct them thither;
Then, homeward, every man attach the hand
Of his fair mistress. In the afternoon
We will with some strange pastime solace them,
Such as the shortness of the time can shape;
Pompeian revels, dances, masks, and merry hours,
Pompeian fair! Love, strewing her way with flowers.

King. Away, away! no time shall be omitted,
That will be time, and may by us be fitted.

Biron. Allons! allons!—Sow'd cockle reap'd no corn;
And justice always whirls in equal measure:
Light wenches may prove plagues to men forsworn
If so, our copper buys no better treasure. [Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Another part of the Same.

Enter Holofernes, Sir Nathaniel, and Dull.

Hol. Satis quoq sufficit.

Nath. I praise God for you, sir: your reasons at dinner have been sharp and sententious; pleasant without security, witty without affectation; and pleasant without impudence, learned without opinion, and strange without heresy. I did converse this quondam day with a companion of the king's, who is intituled, nominated, or called, Don Adriano de Armado.

Hol. Novi hominem tangam te: his humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his tongue filed, his eye ambitious, his gait majestic, and his general behaviour vain, ridiculous, and thraesonal². He is too picked, too spruce, too affected, too odd, as it were, too peregrinate, as I may call it.

Nath. A most singular and choice epithet.

Hol. He draweth out the thread of his verbosity finer than the staple of his argument. I abhor such fanatical phantasms, such insociable and point-devisè companions; such rackers of orthography, as to speak dought, fine, when he should say, doubt; det, when he should pronounce, debt—d, e, b, t, not d, e, t: he elepheth a calf, a cat; half, haut; neighbour vocatur.¹

nebhour; neigh abbreviated ne. This is abominable, (which he would call abominable,) it insinuateth one of insinuate: ne intelligis, domine? to make frantic, lunatic.

Nath. Leus Deo; bone intelligo.

Hol. Bone? — bone, for bene: Priscian a little scratch'd: It will serve.

Enter Armado, Moth, and Costard.

Nath. Videans quis venit?

Hol. Videre, et gaudeo.

Arm. Chirrah!

[Moth. Hol. Quare Chirrah, not sirrah?

Arm. Men of peace, well encounter'd.

Hol. Most military sir, salutation.

Moth. They have been at a great feast of languages, and stolen the scraps.

Cost. O! they have lived long on the alms-basket of words. I marvel thy master hath not eaten thee for a word; for thou art not so long by the head as honorificabilitudinitatibus: thou art easier swallowed than a flap-dragon³.

Moth. Peace! the meal begins.

Arm. Monsieur, [To Hol.] are you not letter'd?

Moth. Yes, yes: he teaches boys the horn-book.

What is a, b, spelt backward with the horn on his head.

Hol. Ba, pueritiæ, with a horn added.

---

¹ humility: in f. e. ² Affectation. ³ On the style of Terence's Thraso. ⁴ Nice to excess. ⁵ It insinuateth one of Insinuate: in f. e. ⁶ Taylor, the Water Poet, says Knight, used this word with still another syllable, honorificabilitudinitatibus: a small substance, floating on a glass of liquor, which it was a feat for a toper to swallow ignited.
SCENE II.

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

Moth. Ba! most silly sheep, with a horn.—You hear his learning.

Hol. Quis, quis, thou consonant?

Moth. The third of the five vowels, if you repeat them; or the fifth, if I.

Hol. I will repeat them, a, e, i.—

Moth. The sheep; the other two concludes it; o, u.

Arm. Now, for the salt wave of the Mediterranean, a sweet touch, a quick venus of wit! snap, snap, quick and home: it rejoiceth my intellect; true wit!

Moth. Offer'd by a child to an old man; which is wit-old.

Hol. What is the figure? what is the figure?

Moth. Horns.

Hol. Thou disputest like an infant: go, whip thy gig.

Moth. Lend me your horn to make one, and I will whip about your infamy circum circlo. A gig of a cuckold's horn!

Cost. An I had but one penny in the world, thou shouldn't have it to buy gingerbread: hold, there is the very remuneration I had of thy master; thou half-penny purse of wit, thou pinch-egg of discretion. O! an the heavens were so pleased, that thou wert but my bastard, what a joyful father wouldst thou make me. Go to; thou hast it ad dunghill, at the fingers' ends, as they say.

Hol. O! I smell false Latin; dunghill for sanguine.

Arm. Arts-man, praemunira: we will be singled from the barbarous. Do you not educate youth at the large house* on the top of the mountain?

Hol. Or mons, the hill.

Arm. At your sweet pleasure for the mountain.

Hol. I do, sans question.

Arm. Sir, it is the king's most sweet pleasure and affection, to congratulate the princess at her pavilion in the posterior of this day; which the rude multitude call the afternoon.

Hol. The posterior of the day, most generous sir, is liable, congruent, and measurable for the afternoon: the word is well cull'd, chose; sweet and apt, I do assure you, sir; I do assure.

Arm. Sir, the king is a noble gentleman, and my familiar, I do assure you, my very good friend.—For what is in ward between us, let it pass.—I do beseech thee, remember thy courtesy;—I beseech thee, apparel thy head;—and among other important and most serious designs,—and of great import indeed, too,—but let that pass:—for I must tell thee, it will please his grace (by the world) sometime to lean upon my poor shoulder, and with his royal finger, thus dally with my excrement, with my mustache: but, sweet heart, let that pass. By the world, I recount no fable: some certain special honours it pleaseth his greatness to impart to Armado, a soldier, a man of travel, that hath seen the world; but let that pass.—The very all of all is,—but, sweet heart, I do implore secrecy,—that the king would have me present the princess, sweet chuck, with some delightful ostentation, or show, or pageant, or antick, or fire-work. Now, understanding that the curious and your sweet self are good at such eruptions, and sudden breaking out of mirth, as it were, I have acquainted you therewith, to the end to crave your assistance.

Hol. Sir, you shall present before her the nine Worthies.* Sir, Nathaniel, as concerning some entertain-ment of time, some show in the posterior of this day, to be rendered by our assistance,—the king's command, and this most gallant, illustrate, and learned gentleman,—before the princess, I say, none so fit as to present the nine Worthies.

Nath. Where will you find men worthy enough to present them?

Hol. Jesu! yourself; myself, or this gallant gentleman, Judas Maccabaeus; this swain, (because of his great limb or joint,) shall pass for Pompey the great; the rest, Hercules.

Arm. Pardon, sir; error: he is not quantity enough for that worthy's thumb; he is not so big as the end of his club.

Hol. Shall I have audience? he shall present Hercules in minority; his enter and exit shall be straining a snake; and I will have an apology for that purpose.

Moth. An excellent device! so, if any of the audience, you may err, * Well done, Hercules! now thou crushest the snake!* that is the way to make an offence gracious, though few have the grace to do it.

Arm. For the rest of the Worthies,—

Hol. I will play three myself.

Moth. Thrice-worthy gentleman.

Arm. Shall I tell you a thing?

Hol. We attend.

Arm. We will have, if this fadge2 not, an antick I beseech you, to follow.

Hol. Via!—Goodman Dull, thou hast spoken no word all this while.

Dull. Nor understood none neither, sir.

Hol. Alons! we will employ thee.

Dull. I'll make one in a dance, or so; or I will play on the tabor to the Worthies, and let them dance the lay.

Hol. Most dull, honest Dull. To our sport, away! [Exit.

SCENE II.—Another part of the Same. Before the Princess's Pavilion.

Enter the Princess, Katharine, Rosaline, and Maria, with presents.*

Prin. Sweet hearts, we shall be rich ere we depart, if fairings come thus plentifully in:

A lady wall'd about with diamonds!—

Look you, what I have from the loving king.

Ros. Madam, came nothing else along with that?

Prin. Nothing but this? yes: as much love in rhyme, as would be cramm'd up in a sheet of paper, Writ on both sides the leaf, margin and all, That he was fain to seal on Cupid's name.

Ros. That was the way to make his god-head wax;* For he hath been five thousand years a boy.

Kath. Ay, and a shrewd unhappy gallowa too.

Ros. You'll never be friends with him: a' kill'd your sister.

Kath. He made her melancholy, sad, and heavy; And so she died: had she been light, like you, Of such a merry, nimble, stirring spirit, She might a' been a grandam ere she died; And so may you, for a light heart lives long.

Ros. What's your dark meaning, mouse, of this light word?

Kath. A light condition in a beauty dark.

Ros. We need more light to find your meaning out.

Kath. You'll mar the light by taking it in snuff; Therefore, I'll darkly end the argument.

Ros. Look, what you do, you do it still if the dark.

Kath. No, you do not you, for you are a light wench.

Ros. Indeed, I weigh not you, and therefore light.

Kath. You weigh me not?—O! that's a care not for me.

Ros. Great reason; for, past cure is still past care.

Prin. Well bandied both; a set of wit well play'd.
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

ACT V.

When, lo! to interrupt my purpose's rest,
Toward that shade I might behold address
The king and his companions: warily
I stole into a neighbour thicket by;
And overheard what you shall overhear;
That by and by disguis'd they will be here.
Their herald is a pretty knavish page,
That well by heart hath conn'd his embassage:
Action, and accent, did they teach him there;
"Thus must thou speak, and thus thy body bear!"
And ever and anon they made a doubt
Presence majestic would put him out;
"For," quoth the king, "an angel shall thou see;
Yet fear not thou, but speak audaciously!"
The boy replied, "An angel is not evil;
I should have feared her, had she been a devil."
With all that laugh'd, and clipp'd him on the shoulder,
Making the bold wag by their praises holder,
One rupp'd his elbow thus, and deerd and swore
A better speech was never spoke before:
Another, with his finger and his thumb,
Cry'd "Via! we will do, come what will come!"
The third he caper'd, and cried, "All goes well!"
The fourth turn'd on the toe, and down he fell.
With that, they all did tumble on the ground,
With such a zealous laughter, so profound,
That in this spleen ridiculous appears,
To check their folly, passion's sudden tears.

Prin. But what, but what, come they to visit us?
Boyet. They do, they do; and are apparel'd thus,— Like Muscovites, or Russians: as I guess,
Their purpose is, to parle, to court, and dance;
And every one his love-suit? will advance
Unto his several mistress; which they'll know
By favours several which they did bestow.

Prin. And will they so? the gallants shall be task'd;
For, ladies, we will every one be mask'd,
And not a man of them shall have the grace,
Despite of suit, to see a lady's face.—
Hold Rosaline; this favour thou shalt wear,
And then the king will court thee for his dear;
Hold, take thou this, my sweet, and give me thine,
So shall Biron take me for Rosaline.—
And change you favours, too; so shall your loves
Who contrary pleasure's fingers removes.

Ros. Come on then: wear the favours most in sight.
Kath. But in this changing what is your intent?

Prin. The effect of my intent is, to cross theirs:
They do it but in merrckery, merriment;
And mock for mock is only my intent.
Their several counsels they unbosom shall
To loves mistook; and so be mock'd withal,
Upon the next occasion that we meet,
With visages display'd, to talk, and greet.

Ros. But shall we dance, if they desire us to 't?

Prin. No; to the death, we will not move a foot:
Nor to their penn'd speech render we no grace;
But, while it's spoke, each turn away his face.

Boyet. Why, that contempt will kill the speaker's heart.
And quite divorce his memory from his part.

Prin. Therefore I do it: and, I make no doubt,
The rest will ne'er come in, if he be out.
There's no such sport, as sport by sport o'erthrown;
To make theirs ours, and ours none but our own:
So shall we stay, mocking intended game;
And they, well mock'd, depart away with shame.

[Trumpets sound within.]
King. Will you not dance? How come you thus estranged?
Ros. You took the moon at full, but now she’s changed.
King. Yet still she is the moon, and I the man.
The music plays: vouchsafe some motion to it.
Ros. Our ears vouchsafe it.
King. But your legs should do it.
Ros. Since you are strangers, and come here by chance,
We’ll not be nice. Take hands—we will not dance.
King. Why take we hands then?
Ros. Only to part friends.
Courtsey, sweet hearts; and so the measure ends.
King. More measure of this measure: be not nice.
Ros. We can afford no more at such a price.
King. Prize you yourselves? What buys your company?
Ros. Your absence only.
King. That can never be.
Ros. Then cannot we be bought; and so adieu.
Twice to your visor, and half once to you!
King. If you deny to dance, let’s hold more chat.
Ros. In private, then.
King. I am best pleas’d with that. [They converse apart.
Biron. White-handed mistress, one sweet word with thee.
Prim. Honey, and milk, and sugar: there are three.
Biron. Nay, then, two treys. (an if you grow so nice)
Metheglin, wort, and malmsey.—Well run, dice!
There’s half a dozen sweets.
Prim. Seventh sweet, adieu.
Since you can cog!, I’ll play no more with you.
Biron. One word in secret.
Prim. Let it not be sweet.
Biron. Thou griev’st my gall.
Biron. Therefore meet. [They converse apart.
Dum. Will you vouchsafe with me to change a word?
Mar. Name it.
Dum. Fair lady,—
Mar. Say you so? Fair lord.—
Take that for your fair lady.
Dum. Please it you,
As much in private, and I’ll bid adieu.
[They converse apart.
Kath. What, was your visor made without a tongue?
Long. I know the reason, lady, why you ask.
Kath: O, for your reason! quickly, sir; I long.
Long. You have a double tongue within your mask,
And would afford my speechless visor half.
Kath. Veal, quoth the Dutchman,—Is not veal a calf?
Long. A calf, fair lady?
Kath. No, a fair lord calf.
Long. Let’s part the word.
Kath. No; I’ll not be your half:
Take all, and wean it: it may prove an ox.
Long. Look, how you butt yourself in these sharp mocs.
Will you give horns, chaste lady? do not so.
Kath. Then die a calf, before your horns do grow.
Long. One word in private with you, ere I die.
Kath. Bleat softly then: the butcher hears you cry.
[They converse apart.
Boyet. The tongues of mocking wenches are as keen
As is the razor’s edge invisible,
Cutting a smaller hair than may be seen;
Above the sense of sense, so sensible
Senceth their conference; their conceits have wings,
Fleeter than arrows, bullets, wind, thought, swifter things.

Ros. Not one word more, my maids: break off, break off.

Biron. By heaven, all dry-beaten with pure secoff!

King. Farewell, mad wenches: you have simple wits.

[Exit King, Lords, Montf, Music, and Attendants.]

Are these the breed of wits so wonder'd at?

Boyet. Tapers they are, with your sweet breaths puff'd out.

Ros. Well-liking wits they have; gross, gross; fat, fat.

Prin. O, poverty in wit, kill'd by pure flout!

Will they not, think you, hang themselves to-night?

Or ever, but in visors, show their faces?

This pert Biron was out of countenance quite.

Ros. O! they were all in lamentable cases!

The king was weeping-ripe for a good word.

Prin. Biron did swear himself out of all suit.

Mar. Damaine was at my service; and his sword:

No point, I: my servant straight was mute.

Kath. Lord Longaville said, I came o'er his heart;

And trow you, what he call'd me?

Prin. Qualm, perhaps.

Kath. Yes, in good faith.

Prin. Go, sickness as thou art!

Ros. Well, better wits have worn plain statute-caps,

But will you hear? the king is my love sworn.

Prin. And quick Biron hath pledged faith to me.

Kath. And Longaville was for my service born.

Mar. Dunamine is mine, as sure as bark on tree.

Boyet. Madam, and pretty mistresses, give ear.

Immediately they will again be here

In their own shapes: for it can never be,

They will digest this harsh indignity.

Prin. Will they return?

Boyet. They will, they will, God knows;

And leap for joy, though they are lame with blows:

Therefore, change favours; and, when they repair,

Blow like sweet roses in this summer air.

Boyet. Fair ladies, mask'd, are roses in their bud;

Dismask'd, their damask sweetconnixtneshow,

Are angels vailing clouds, or roses blown.

Prin. Avault, perplexity! What shall we do,
If they return in their own shapes to woo?

Ros. Good madam, if by me you'll be advised,

Let's mock them still, as well, known; as disguis'd.

Let us complain to them what fools were here,

Disguis'd like Muscovits, in shapeless gear;

And wonder, what they were, and to what end.

Their shallow shows, and prolong wicked pen'd;

And their rough carriage so ridiculous,

Should be presented at our tent to us.

Boyet. Ladies, withdraw: the gallants are at hand.

Prin. Whip to our tents, as roses run over land.

[Exeunt Princess, Ros., Kath., and Maria.]

Enter the King, Biron, Longaville, and Damaine, in their proper habits.

King. Fair sir, God save you! Where is the princess?

Boyet. Gone to her tent: please it your majesty,

Command me any service to her thither?

King. That she vouchsafe me audience for one word.

Boyet. I will; and so will she, I know my lord.

[Exit.

Biron. This fellow pecks up wit, as pigeons peal,

And utters it again when God doth please.

He is wit's pedler, and retails his wares

At wakes, and wassals, meetings, markets, fairs;

And we that sell by gross, the Lord doth know,

Have not the grace to grace it with such show.

This gallant pins the wenches on his sleeve:

Had he been Adam, he had tempt'd Eve.

At' can carve too, and lisp: why, this is he,

That kiss'd his hand away in courtesy:

This is the ape of form, monsieur the nice,

That, when he plays at tables, chides the dice

In honourable terms: nay, he can ring

A mean most meanly; and, in uhering,

Mend him who can: the ladies call him, sweet;

The stairs, as he treads on them, kiss his feet.

This is the flower that smiles on every one,

To show his teeth as white as whales bones;

And consciences, that will not die in debt,

Pay him the due of honey-tongued Boyet.

King. A blister on his sweet tongue, with my heart,

That put Amanado's page out of his part!

Enter the Princesses, met with Boyet; Rosaline,

Maria, Katharine, and Attendants.

Biron. See where he comes!—Behaviour, what art thou,

Till this man show'd thee? and what art thou now?

King. All hail, sweet madam, and fair time of day!

Prin. Fair, in all hail, is soul, as I conceive.

King. Construe my speeches better, if you may.

Prin. Then wish me better: I will give you leave.

King. We come to visit you, and purpose now

To lead you to our court: voucesafe it, then.

Prin. This field shall hold me, and so hold your vow:

Nor God, nor I, delight in perjur'd men.

King. Rebuke will not for that which you provoke;

The virtue of your eye must break my oath.

Prin. You nick-name virtue; vice you should have spoke,

For virtue's office never breaks men's throat.

Now, by my maiden honour, yet as pure

As the unsullied lily, I protest,

A world of torments though I should endure,

I would not yield to your house's guest;

So much I hate a breaking cause to be

Of heavenly oaths, vow'd with integrity.

King. O! you have liv'd in desolation here,

Unseen, unvisited; much to our shame.

Prin. Not so, my lord; it is not so, I swear:

We have had pastimes here, and pleasant game.

A mess of Russians left us but of late.

King. How, madam! Russians?

Prin. Ay, in truth, my lord;

Trim gallants, full of courtship, and of state.

Ros. Madam, speak true.—It is not so, my lord:

My lady (to the manner of these days)

In courtesy gives undeserving praise.

We four, indeed, confronted were with four

In Russian habit: here they stay'd an hour,

And talk'd apace; and in that hour, my lord,

They did not bless us with one happy word.

I dare not call them fools; but this I think,

When they are thirsty, fools would fain have drink.

Biron. This jest is dry to me.—Fair, gentle sweet,

Your wit makes wise things foolish: when we greet,

With eyes best seeing, heaven's fiery eye,

By light we lose light: your capacity.

1 kingly—poor flout: in f. e. 2 By act of Parliament of 1571, all persons not noble, were ordered to wear woollen caps. 3 Lowering the clouds which hid them. 4 So the quartos; the folio: Love. 5 The tooth of the weasel, formerly called the whale. 6 The old eds have madman; which Dyce would retain.
SCENE II.

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

143

Is of that nature, that to your huge store
Wise things seem foolish, and rich things but poor.
Ros. This proves you wise and rich, for in my eye,—

Biron. I am a fool, and full of poverty.
Ros. But that you take what doth to you belong,
It were a fault to snatch words from my tongue.
Biron. O! I am yours, and all that I possess.
Ros. All the fool mine?
Biron. I cannot give you less.
Ros. Which of the visors was it, that you wore?
you this?
Ros. There, then, that visor; that superfluous case,
That hid the worse, and show'd the better face.
King. We are descried: they'll mock us now downright.
Dem. Let us confess, and turn it to a jest.
Prin. Amaz'd, my lord? Why looks your highness sad?
Ros. Help! hold his brows! he'll swoon. Why look you pale?—

Sea-sick, I think, coming from Muscovy.
Biron. Thus pour the stars down plagues for perjury.
Can any face of brass hold longer out?—
Here stand I, lady; dart thy skill at me;
Bruise me with scorn, confound me with a flout;
Thrust thy sharp wit quite through my ignorance;
Cut me to pieces with thy keen conceit;
And I will wish thee never more to dance,
Nor never more in Russian habit wait.
O! never will I trust to speeches penn'd,
Nor to the motion of a school-boy's tongue;
Nor never come in visor to my friend;
Nor woo in rhyme, like a blind harper's song;
Taffeta phrases, silken terms precise,
Three-pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical; these summer flies
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation.
I do forswear them; and I here protest
By this white glove, (how white the hand, God knows,) Henceforth my wooing mind shall be express'd
In russet yea, and honest kersey noes:
And, to begin,—wench, so God help me, ha!
My love to thee is sound, sans crack or flaw.
Ros. Sans sans, I pray you.
Biron. Yet I have a trick
Of the old rags:—bear with me, I am sick;
I'll leave it by degrees. Soft! let us see:—
Write 'Lord have mercy on us'!11 on those three;
They are infected, in their hearts it lies;
They have the plague, and caught it of your eyes:
These lords are visited; you are not free,
For the Lord's tokens on you I do see.
Prin. No, they are free that gave these tokens to us.
Biron. Our states are forfeit: seek not to undo us.
Ros. It is not so; for how can this be true,
That you stand forfeit, being those that sue?
Biron. Peace! for I will not have to do with you.
Ros. Nor shall not, if I do as I intend.
Biron. Speak for yourselves: my wit is at an end.
King. Teach us, sweet madam, for our rude transgression
Some fair excuse.
Prin. The fairest is confession.
Were you not here, but even now, disguis'd?

1 The inscription, written on houses infected with the plague.
2 Hesitate; an old use of the word.
3 Squirt.
4 Beg to have the custody of us as lunatics.

King. Madam, I was.
Prin. And were you well advis'd?
King. I was, fair madam.
Prin. When you then were here,
What did you whisper in your lady's ear?
King. That more than all the world I did respect her.
Prin. When she shall challenge this, you will reject her.
King. Upon mine honour, no.
Prin. Peace! peace! forbear:
Your oath once broke, you force2 not to forswear.
King. Despair me, when I break this oath of mine.
Prin. I will; and therefore keep it.—Rosaline,
What did the Russian whisper in your ear?
Ros. Madam, he swore, that he did hold me dear
As precious eye-sight, and did value me
Above this world; adding thereto, moreover,
That he would wed me, or else die my lover.
Prin. God give thee joy of him! the noble lord
Most honourably doth uphold his word.
King. What mean you, madam? by my life, my troth,
I never swore this lady such an oath.
Ros. By heaven, you did; and to confirm it plain,
You gave me this: but take it, sir, again.
King. My faith, and this, the princess I did give:
I knew her by this jewel on her sleeve.
Prin. Pardon me, sir, this jewel did she wear;
And lord Biron, I thank him, is my dear.—
What! will you have me; or your pearl again?
Biron. Neither of either; I remit both twain.—
I see the trick on 't:—here was a consent,
Knowing aforehand of our merriment,
To dash it like a Christmas comedy.
Some carry-tale, some please-man, some slight zany,
Some mumble-news, some trencher-knight, some Dick,
That smiles his cheek in years, and knows the trick
To make my lady laugh when she's dispose'd,
Told our intents before; which once disclos'd,
The Ladies did change favours, and then we,
Following the signs, woo'd but the sign of she.
Now, to our perjury to add more terror,
We are again forsworn—in will, and error.
Much upon this it is:—and might not you
To Boyet. Forestal our sport, to make us thus untrue?
Do not you know my lady's foot by the squire?
And laugh upon the apple of her eye?
And stand between her back; sir, and the fire,
Holding a trencher, jesting merrily?
You put our page out: go, you are allow'd,
Die when you will, a smock shall be your shroud.
You leer upon me, do you? there's an eye,
Wounds like a leaden sword.

Boyet. Full merrily
Hath this brave manage, this career, been run.
Biron. Lo! he is tilting straight. Peace! I have done.

Enter Costard.
Welcome, pure wit! thou partest a fair fray.
Cost. O Lord, sir, they would know,
Whether the three Worthies shall come in, or no.
Biron. What, are there but three?
Cost. No, sir; but it is vera fine,
For every one pursents three.
Biron. And three times three is nine.
Cost. Not so, sir; under correction, sir, I hope, it You cannot beg4 us, sir, I can assure you, sir; we know what we know:

I hope, sir, three times thrice, sir,— Biron.

Cost. Under correction, sir, we know whereunto it doth amount.

Biron. By Jove, I always took three threes for nine.
Cost. O Lord! sir, it were pity you should get your living by reckoning, sir.
Biron. How much is it?

Cost. O Lord! sir, the parties themselves, the actors, sir, will show whereunto it doth amount: for mine own part, I am, as they say, but to pursue one man,—c'en one your man—Pompiion the great, sir.

Biron. Art thou one of the Worthy?

Cost. It pleased them, to think me worthy of Pompiion the great: for mine own part, I know not the degree of the Worthy, but I am to stand for him.
Biron. Go, bid them prepare.
Cost. We will turn it finely off, sir: we will take some care. [Exit Costard.

King. Biron, they will shame us; let them not approach.

Biron. We are shame-proof, my lord; and 'tis some policy
To have one show worse than the king's and his company.

King. I say, they shall not come.

Prin. Nay, my good lord, let me c'erre-rule you now.
That sport best pleases, that doth least know how:
Where zeal strives to content, and the contents
Die in the zeal of which it presents,
Their form confounded makes most form in mirth;
When great things labouring perish in their birth.
Biron. A right description of our sport, my lord.

Enter Armado.

Arm. Anointed, I implore so much expense of thy royal sweet breath, as will utter a brace of words.

[Armado converses with the King, and delivers a paper to him.

Prin. Doth this man serve God?
Biron. Why ask you?

Prin. A's speaks not like a man of God's making.
Arm. That's all one, my fair, sweet, honey monarch; for, I protest, the school-master is exceeding fantastical; too, too vain; too, too vain: but we will put it, as they say, to fortuna della guerra. I wish you the peace of mind, most royal couplement! [Exit Armado.

King. Here is like to be a good presence of Worthies. He presents Hector of Troy; the swain, Pompey the great; the parish curate, Alexander; Armado's page, Hercules; the pedant, Judas Maccabeus.
And if these four Worthies in their first show thrive, These four will change habits, and present the other five.

Biron. There is five in the first show.
King. You are deceived; 'tis not so.

Biron. The pedant, the braggart, the hedge-priest, the fool, and the boy—
Abate throw at novum, and the whole world again
Cannot pick out five such, take each one in his vein.

King. The ship is under sail, and here she comes again.

Enter Costard armed, for Pompey.

Cost. "I Pompey am,—"

Boyet. You lie, you are not he.

Cost. "I Pompey am,—"

Boyet. With libbard's head on knee.

Biron. Well said, old mockers: I must needs be friends with thee.
Hol. What mean you, sir?
Boyet. To make Judas hang himself.

Biron. Well follow'd: Judas was hang'd on an elder.\(^1\)
Hol. I will not be put out of countenance.
Biron. Because thou hast no face.
Hol. What is this?
Boyet. A citizen\(^2\) head.
Dum. The head of a bodkin.
Biron. A death's face in a ring.
Long. The face of an old Roman coin, scarce seen.
Boyet. The pommel of Caesar's buckle.
Dum. The ear'd-bone face on a flask.\(^3\)
Biron. St. George's half-cheek in a brooch.
Dum. Ay, and in a brooch of lead.
Biron. Ay, and worn in the cap of a tooth-drawer.

And now forward, for we have put thee in countenance.
Hol. You have put me out of countenance.
Biron. False: we have given thee faces.
Hol. But you have out-fac'd them all.
Biron. An thou wert a lion, we would do so.
Boyet. Therefore, as he is an ass, let him go.
And so, an ass, sweet Jude! why dost thou stay?
Dum. For the latter end of his name.
Biron. For the ass to the Jude? give it him—
Jude, away.

Hol. This is not generous, not gentle, not humble.
Boyet. A light for monsiour Judas! it grows dark,
he may stumble.

Prin. Alas, poor Maccabeus, how hath he been baited!

Enter Armado, armed, for Hector.

Biron. Hide thy head, Achilles: here comes Hector in arms.

Dum. Though my mocks come home by me, I will,
now I am to hunt my side compound.

King. Hector was but a Trojan in respect of this.
Boyet. But is this Hector?
Bing. I think Hector was not so clean-limber'd.
Long. His leg is too big for Hector's.
Mars. More e'en, certain.
Boyet. No; he is best indued in the small.
Biron. This cannot be Hector,
Dum. He's a god or a painter; for he makes faces.
Arm. "The armipotent Mars of lances the almighty, Gave Hector a gift,—"

Biron. A lemon.
Long. Stuck with cloves.
Dum. No, cloven.
Arm. Peace!"The armipotent Mars of lances the almighty,
Gave Hector a gift, the hier of Ilion:
A man so breath'd, that certain he would fight, yea,
From morn till night, out of his pavilion.
I am that flower,—"

Dum. That mint.

Long. That columbine.
Arm. Sweet lord Longaville, rein thy tongue.
Long. I must rather give it the rein, for it runs against Hector.

Dum. Ay, and Hector is a greyhound.
Arm. The sweet war-man is dead and rotten: sweet chuck's, that's the bones of the buried: when he breathed, he was a man.—But I will forward with my device. Sweet royalty, bestow on me the sense of hearing.\(^4\)

Prin. Speak, brave Hector: we are much delighted.
Arm. I do adore thy sweet grace's slipp'r.
Boyet. Loves her by the foot.
Dum. He may not by the yard.
Arm. "This Hector far surmounted Hannibal,"—
Re-enter Costard, in haste, unarm'd.\(^5\)
Cost. The party is gone: follow Hector; she is gone;
she is two months on her way.
Arm. What meanest thou?
Cost. Faith, unless you play the honest Trojan, the poor wench is cast away: she's quick; the child brags in her belly already: 'tis yours.
Arm. Dest thou infamize me among potentes?
Thou shalt die.
Cost. Then shall Hector be whipp'd: for Jaquenetta that is quick by him, and hang'd for Pompey that is dead by him.

Dum. Most rare Pompey!
Boyet. Renowned Pompey!
Biron. Greater than great, great, great, great Pompey! Pompey the huge!
Dum. Hector trembles.
Biron. Pompey is moved.—More Ates, more Ates!
sir them on! stir them on!
Dum. Hector will challenge him.
Biron. Ay, if 'a have no more man's blood in 'is belly than will sup a flea.
Arm. By the north pole, I do challenge thee.
Cost. I will not fight with a pole, like a northern man: I'll slash; I'll do it by the sword.—I pray you, let me borrow my arms again.

Dum. Room for the incensed Worthies!
Cost. I'll do it in my shirt.

Dum. Most resolute Pompey!
Moth. Master, let me take you a button-hole lower.
Do you not Pompey, in unmasking for the combat?
What mean you? you will lose your reputation.
Arm. Gentlemen, and soldiers, pardon me; I will not combat in my shirt.

Dum. You may not deny it: Pompey hath made the challenge.
Arm. Sweet bloods, I both may and will.
Biron. What reason have you for 't?
Arm. The naked, truth of it is, I have no shirt. I go woolward\(^6\) for penance.

Boyet. True, and it was enjoin'd him in Rome for want of linen; since when, I'll be sworn, he worn none, but a dish-elout of Jaquenetta's, and that 'a wears next his heart for a favour.

Enter Monsieur Mercade, a Messenger.

Mer. God save you, madam.
Prin. Welcome, Mercade,
But that thou interrupt'st ourerrickment.
Mer. I am sorry, madam, for the news I bring
Is heavy in my tongue. The king your father—
Prin. Dead, for my life!
Mer. Even so: my tale is told.
Biron. Worthies, away! The scene begins to cloud.
Arm. For mine own part, I breathe free breath. I have seen the day of wrong through the little hole of discretion, and I will right myself like a soldier.

[Exeunt Worthies.]

King. How fares your majesty?
Prin. Boyet, prepare: I will away to-night.
King. Madam, not so; I do beseech you, stay.
Prin. Prepare, I say.—I thank you, gracious lords,
For all your fair endeavours; and entertain,
Out of a new-sad soul, that you vouchsafe
In your rich wisdom to excuse, or hide,
The liberal opposition of our spirits:
If we boldly we have been to ourselves
In the exercise of breath, your gentleness
Was guilty of it. Farewell, worthy lord!
A heavy heart bears not a nimble tongue.
Excuse me so, coming too short of thanks
For my great suit so easily obtain’d.

King. The extreme parting time expressly forms
All causes to the purpose of his speed;
And often, at his very loose, decides
That which long process could not arbitrate:
And though the mournful brow of progeny
Forbid the smiling courtesy of love
The holy suit which fain it would convince;
Yet, since love’s argument was first on foot,
Let not the cloud of sorrow jest it
From what it purpos’d; since, to wilt friends lost
Is not by much so wholesome, profitable,
As to rejoice at friends but newly found.

Prin. I understand you not: my griefs are dull.

Biron. Honest plain words best pierce the ear of grief;
And by these badges understand the king.
For your fair sakes have we neglected time,
Play’d foul play with our oaths: your beauty, ladies,
Hath much deform’d us, fashioning our humour.
Even to the opposed ends of our intents;
And what in us hath seem’d ridiculous,—
As love is full of unbecoming strangeness;
All wanton as a child, skipping, and vain:
Form’d by the eye, and, therefore, like the eye,
Full of strange shapes, of habits, and of forms,
Varying in subjects, as the eye doth roll
To every varied object in his glance:
Which party-coated presence of loose love
Put on by us, if, in your heavenly eyes,
Have miscarry our oaths and gravities,
Those heavenly eyes, that look into these faults,
Suggested us to make. Therefore, ladies,
Our love being yours, the error that love makes
Is likewise yours: we to ourselves prove false,
By being once false for ever to be true
To those that make us both,—fair ladies, you:
And even that falsehood, in itself so base,
Thus purifies itself, and turns to grace.
Prin. We have receiv’d your letters, full of love;
Your favours, the ambassadors of love;
And, in our maiden council, rated them
At courtship, pleasant jest, and courtesy,
As bombast, and as lining to the time.
But more devout than this, in our respects
Have we not been; and therefore met your loves
In their own fashion, like a merriment.

Dum. Our letters, madam, show’d much more than jest.

Long. So did our looks.

Ros. We did not quote them so.

King. Now, at the latest minute of the hour,
Grant us your loves.

Prin. A time, methinks, too short
To make a world-without-end bargain in.
No, no, my lord, your grace is perjur’d much,
Full of dear guiltiness; and therefore this—
If for my love (as there is no such cause)
You will do aught, this shall you do for me:
Your oath I will not trust; but go with speed
To some forlorn and naked hermitage,
Remote from all the pleasures of the world;
There stay, until the twelve celestial signs
Have brought about their annual reckoning.
If this hither life should be
Change not your offer made in heat of blood;
If frosts, and fasts, hard lodging, and thin weeds,
Nip not the gaudy blossoms of your love,
But that it bear this trial, and last love;
Then, at the expiration of the year,
Come challenge me, challenge by these deserts,
And by this virgin palm, now kissing thine,
I will be thine; and, till that instant, shut
My woful self up in a mourning house,
Raining the tears of lamentation,
For the remembrance of my father’s death.
If this thou do deny, let our hands part,
Neither intitled in the other’s heart.

King. If this, or more than this, I would deny,
To flatter up these powers of mine with rest,
The sudden hand of death close up mine eye.
Hence ever then my heart is in thy breast.

Biron. And what to me, my love? and what to me?

Ros. You must be purged too, your sins are rank:
You are attaint with faults and perjury;
Therefore, if you my favour mean to get,
A twelvemonth shall you spend, and never rest,
But seek the weary beds of people sick.

Dum. But what to me, my love? but what to me?

Kath. A wife!—A beard, fair health, and honesty;
With three-fold love I wish you all these three.

Dum. O! shall I say, I thank you, gentle wife?

Kath. Not so, my lord. A twelvemonth and a day
I’ll mark no words that smooth-fac’id woosers say:
Come when the king doth to my lady come,
Then, if I have much love, I’ll give you some.

Dum. I’ll serve thee true and faithfully till then.

Kath. Yet swear not, lest you be forsworn again.

Long. What says Maria?

Mar. At the twelvemonth’s end,
I’ll change my black gown for a faithful friend.

Long. I’ll stay with patience; but the time is long.

Mar. The liker you: few taller are so young.

Biron. Studies my lady? mistress look on me:
Behold the window of my heart, mine eye,
What humble suit attends thy answer there;
Impose some service on me for thy love.

Ros. Oft had I heard of you, my lord Biron,
Before I saw you, and the world’s large tongue
Proclaims you for a man replete with mocks;
Full of comparisons and winding flouts,
Which you on all estates will exercise,
That lie within the mercy of your wit:
To weed this wormwood from your fruitful brain,
And, therewithal, to win me, if you please,
Without the which I am not to be won,
You shall this twelvemonth term, from day to day,
Visit the speechless sick, and still converse
With groaning wretches; and your task shall be,
With all the fierce endeavour of your wit,
To enforce the most impotent to smile.

Biron. To move wild laughter in the throat of death?
It cannot be; it is impossible:
Mirth cannot move a soul in agony.

Ros. Why, that’s the way to choke a gibing spirit,
Whose influence is begot of that loose grace,
Which shall laughing hearers give to fools.

1 humble: in f. e. 2 parts of time extremely form: in f. e. 3 The technical term for the missing of an arrow. 4 double: in f. e. 5 stray: in f. e. 6 stray: in f. e. 7 a sin: in f. e. 8 cotton wool, used for stuffing dresses. 9 has me: in f. e. 10 instances: in f. e. 11 Knight and Coleidge think that this speech of Rosaline’s should be omitted. It is found in all the old eds. 12 execute: in f. e.
A jest's prosperity lies in the ear
Of him that hears it, never in the tongue
Of him that makes it: then, if sickly ears,
Deaf'd with the clamours of their own dire groans,
Will hear your idle sounds, continue them. And I will have you, and that fault withal; But, if they will not, throw away that spirit, And I shall find you empty of that fault,
Right joyful of your reformation.

Biron. A twelvemonth? well, befall what will befal, I'll jest a twelvemonth in a hospital.

Prin. Ay, sweet my lord; and so I take my leave.

To the King.

King. No, madam; we will bring you on your way.

Biron. Our wooing doth not end like an old play; Jack hath not Jill: these ladies' courtesy Might well have made our sport a comedy.

King. Come, sir, it wants a twelvemonth and a day, And then 'twill end.

Biron. That's too long for a play.

Enter Armado.

Arm. Sweet majesty, vouchsafe me.—

Prin. Was not that Hector?

Dum. The worthy knight of Troy.

Arm. I will kiss thy royal finger, and take leave. I am a votary: I have vowed to Jaquenetta to hold the plough for her sweet love three years. But, most esteemed greatness, will you hear the dialogue that the two learned men have compiled in praise of the owl and the cuckoo? it should have followed in the end of our show.

King. Call them forth quickly; we will do so.

Arm. Holla! approach.

Enter Holofernes, Nathaniel, Moth, Costard, and others.

This side is Hiems, winter; this Ver, the spring; the one maintained by the owl, the other by the cuckoo. Ver, begin.

Song.

Spring. When daisies pied, and violets blue,
And lady-smocks all silver-white;

And cuckoo-buds of yellow hue
Do paint the meadows with delight,
The cuckoo then, on every tree,
Mocks married men, for thus sings he; Cuckoo,
Cuckoo, cuckoo,—O word of fear!
Unpleasing to a married ear.

II.

When shepherds pipe on oaten straws,
And merry larks are ploughmen's clocks,
When turtles tread, and rooks, and daws,
And maidens bleach their summer smocks,
The cuckoo then, on every tree,
Mocks married men, for thus sings he; Cuckoo,
Cuckoo, cuckoo,—O word of fear!
Unpleasing to a married ear.

III.

Winter. When icicles hang by the wall,
And Dick the shepherd blows his nail,
And Tom bears logs into the hall,
And milk comes frozen home in pail,
When blood is nipp'd, and ways be foul,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,
Tu-whit, to-who,
Tu-whit, to-who, a merry note,
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

IV.

When all aloud the wind doth blow,
And coughing draws the parson's saw,
And birds sit brooding in the snow,
And Marian's nose looks red and raw;
When roasted crabs hiss in the bowl,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,
Tu-whit, to-who,
Tu-whit, to-who, a merry note,
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

Arm. The words of Mercury are harsh after the songs of Apollo. You, that way: we, this way. [Exeunt.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Athens. A Room in the Palace of Theseus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Philostrate, and Attendants.

The. Now, fair Hippolyta, our nuptial hour Draws on apace: four happy days bring in Another moon; but, oh, methinks, how slow This old moon wanes! she lingers my desires, Like to a step-dame, or a dowager, Long withering out a young man's revenue.

Hip. Four days will quickly steep themselves in nights: Four nights will quickly dream away the time; And then the moon, like to a silver bow New^1^ bent in heaven, shall behold the night Of our solemnities.

The. Go, Philostrate, Stir up the Athenian youth to merriments; Awake the pert and nimble spirit of mirth: Turn melancholy forth to funerals, The pale companion is not for our pomp.—

[Exit Philostrate.]

Hippolyta, I woor the with my sword, And won thy love doing thee injuries; But I will wed thee in another key, With pomp, with triumph, and with revelry.*

Enter Egeus, with his daughter Hermia, Lysander, and Demetrius.

Ege. Happy be Theseus, our renowned duke! The. Thanks, good Egeus? what's the news with thee? Ege. Full of vexation come I; with complaint Against my child, my daughter Hermia.—

OBERON AND TITANIA.

Midsummer's Night Dream, Act IV Scene I
The. Rather, your eyes must with his judgment look
Her. I do entreat your grace to pardon me,
I know not by what power I am made bold,
Nor how it may concern my modesty,
In such a presence here, to plead my thoughts;
But I beseech your grace, that I may know
The worst that may befall me in this case,
If I refuse to wed Demetrius.

Thee. Either to die the death, or to abjure
For ever the society of men.
Therefore, fair Hermia, question your desires;
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether, if you yield not to your father's choice,
You can endure the livery of a nun,
For awe to be in shady cloister me'd,
To live a barren sister all your life,
Chanting faint hymns to the cold fruitless moon.
Thrice blessed they, that master so their blood,
To undergo such maiden pilgrimage;
But earthly*^1 happier is the rose distill'd,
Than that which, withering on the virgin thorn,
Grows, lives, and dies, in single blessedness.

Her. So will I grow, so live, so die, my lord,
Ere I will yield my virgin patup
Unto his lordship, to whose unwish'd yoke
My soul consents not to give sovereignty.

The. Take time to pause: and by the next new
The sealing-day betwixt my love and me
For everlasting bond of fellowship,
Upon that day either prepare to die
For disobedience to your father's will,
Or else to wed Demetrius, as he would;
Or on Diana's altar to protest,
For aye, austerity and single life.

Dem. Relent, sweet Hermia:—and, Lysander, yield
Thy crazed title to my certain right.

Lys. You have her father's love, Demetrius;
Let me have Hermia's: do you marry him.

Ege. Scornful Lysander! true, he hath my love,
And what is mine my love shall render him;
And she is mine, and all my right of her
I do estate unto Demetrius.

Lys. I am, my lord, as well deriv'd as he,
As well possess'd; my love is more than his;
My fortunes every way as fairly rank'd,
(If not with vantage,) as Demetrius;
And, which is more than all these boasts can be,
I am belov'd of beauteous Hermia.
Why should not I then prosecute my right?
Demetrius, I'll avouch it to his head,
Made love to Nedar's daughter, Helena,
And won her soul; and she, sweet lady, dotes,
Devoutly dotes, dotes in idolatry,
Upon this spotted and inconsistent man.

Thee. I must confess, that I have heard so much,
And with Demetrius thought to have spoke thereof;
But, being over-full of self-affairs,
My mind did lose it.—But, Demetrius, come;
And come, Egeus: you shall go with me,
I have some private schooling for you both.
For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself
To fit your fancies to your father's will,
Or else the law of Athens yields you up
(Which by no means we may extenuate)
To death, or to a vow of single life.

Come, my Hippolyta: what cheer, my love?

Demetrius, and Egeus, go along:
I must employ you in some business
Against our nuptial, and confer with you
Of something nearly that concerns yourselves.

Ege. With duty, and desire, we follow you.

Lys. How now, my love? Why is your cheek so pale?
How chance the roses there do fade so fast?

Her. Belike, for want of rain, which I could well
Betempest them from the tempest of mine eyes.

Lys. Ah me! for aught that I could ever read,
Could ever hear by tale or history,
The course of true love never did run smooth;
But, either it was different in blood.

Her. O cross! too high to be enthrall'd to low*4
Lys. Or else misgoverned, in respect of years:

Her. O spite! too old to be engag'd to young!
Lys. Or else it stood upon the choice of men*:

Her. O hell! to choose love by another's eyes!

Lys. Or, if there were a sympathy in choice,
War, death, or sickness did lay siege to it,
Making it momentary* as a sound,
Swift as a shadow, short as any dream;
Brief as the lightning in the coll'ed night,
That, in a spic'en, unfolds both heaven and earth,
And ere a man hath power to say,—behold!
The jaws of darkness do put it up:
So quick bright things come to confusion.

Her. If, then, true lovers have been ever cross'd,
It stands as an edict in destiny:
Then, let us teach our trial patience,
Because it is a customary cross,
As due to love as thoughts, and dreams, and sighs,
Wishes, and tears, poor fancy's followers.

Lys. A good persuasion: therefore, hear me, Hermia.
I have a widow aunt, a dowager
Of great revenue, and she hath no child:
From Athens is her house remote* seven leagues;
And she respects me as her only son.
There, gentle Hermia, may I marry thee,
And to that place the sharp Athenian law
Cannot pursue me. If thou listst me, then,
Steal forth thy father's house to-morrow night,
And in the wood, a league without the town,
(Where I did meet thee once with Helena,
To do observance to a morn of May)
There will I stay for thee.

Her. My good Lysander!
I swear to thee by Cupid's strongest bow,
By his best arrow with the golden head,
By the simplicity of Venus' doves,
By that which knits teeth souls, and prosper loves,
And by that fire which burn'd the Carthage queen,
When the false Trojan under sail was seen;
By all the vows that ever men have broke;
In number more than ever women spoke;
In that same place thou hast appointed me,
To-morrow truly will I meet with thee.

Enter Helena.

Her. God speed fair Helena! Whither away?

Hel. Call you me fair? that fair again unsay.
Demetrius loves your fair*9: O happy fair!
Your eyes are lode-stars, and your tongue's sweet air
More tuneable than lark to shepherd's ear,
When wheat is green, when hawthorn buds appear.

Sickness is catching; O, were favour so! -
Your words I'd catch, fair Hermia; ere I go,
My ear should catch your voice, and in my eye,
My tongue should catch your tongue's sweet melody,
Were the world mine, Demetrius being bated,
The rest I'll give to be you translated.
O! teach me how you look, and with what art
You sway the motion of Demetrius' heart.

Her. I frown upon him, yet he loves me still.
Hel. O, that your frowns would teach my smiles such skill!

Her. I give him curses, yet he gives me love.
Hel. O, that my prayers could such affection move!
Her. The more I hate, the more he follows me.
Hel. The more I love, the more he hateth me.
Her. His fault, fault, Helena, is none of mine. [mine!
Hel. None, but your beauty: would that fault were
Her. Take comfort: he no more shall see my face:
Lysander and myself will fly this place.—
Before the time I did Lysander see,
Seem'd Athens as a paradise to me:
O then, what graces in my love must dwell,
That he hath turn'd a heaven into hell!

Lys. Helen, to you our minds we will unfold.
To-morrow night when Phebe doth behold
Her silver visage in the wat'ry glass,
Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grass,
(A time that lovers' flights doth still conceal.)
Through thee, sweet playfellow; pray thou for us,
And good luck grant thee thy Demetrius! —
Keep word, Lysander: we must starve our sight
From lovers' food, till morrow deep midnight.

[Exit Lys.]

Lys. I will, my Hermia,—Helena, adieu:
As you on him, Demetrius doth on you! [Exit Lys.

Hel. How happy some, or other some can be!
Through Athens I am thought as fair as she;
But what of that? Demetrius thinks not so;
He will not know what all but he do know;
And as he errs, doting on Hermia's eyes,
So I, admiring of his qualities.
Things base and vile, holding no quantity,
Love can transpose to form and dignity.
Love looks not with the eyes, but with the mind,
And therefore is wing'd Cupid painted blind;
Nor hath love's mind of any judgment taste;
Wings, and no eyes, figure unheedly haste:
And therefore is love said to be a child,
Because he chooseth not the dainty hue
As wagish boys in game themselves forswear,
So the boy love is perjur'd every where;
For ere Demetrius look'd on Hermia's eye,
He hail'd down oaths that he was only mine;
And when this hail some heat from Hermia felt,
So he dissolve'd, and showers of oaths did melt.
I will go tell him of fair Hermia's flight;
Then to the wood will he, to-morrow night,
Pursue her; and for this intelligence
If I have thanks, it is dear recompense:
But herein mean I to enrich my pain,
To bring my sight thither, and back again.

[Exit.]
Quin. Why, what you will.

Bot. I will discharge it in either your straw-colour beard, your orange-tawny beard, your purple-in-grain beard, or your French-crown-colour beard, your perfect yellow.

Quin. Some of your French crowns have no hair at all, and then you will play bare-faced.—But masters, here are your parts; and I am to entreat you, request you, and desire you, to con these by to-morrow night, and meet me in the palace wood, a mile without the town, by moon-light: there will we rehearse; for if we meet in the city, we shall be dog'd with company, and our devices known. In the meantime I will draw a bill of properties, such as our play wants. I pray you, fail me not.

Bot. We will meet; and there we may rehearse more obscenely, and courageously.

Quin. Take pains; be perfect; adieu. At the duke's oak we meet.

Bot. Enough, hold, or cut bow-strings. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

Misleads night-wanderers, laughing at their harm?
Those that Hobgoblin call you, and sweet Puck,
You do their work, and they shall have good luck.
Are not you he?

Puck. Fairy\(^1\), thou speak'st aright;
I am that merry wanderer of the night.
I jest to Oberon, and make him smile,
When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile,
Nothing of wiser look, or less a fool;
And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab;
And, when she drinks, against her lips I bob,
And on her wither'd dew-lap pour the ale.
The wisest aunt telling the saddest tale,
Some time for three-foot stool mistaketh me;
Then slip I from her, down topples she,
And "tailor" cries, and falls into a couch;
And then the whole quire hold their hips, and laugh,
And waxen in their mirth, and néeze, and swear
A merrier hour was never wasted there.—
But room, Fairy: here comes Oberon.

Fat. And here my mistress.—Would that he were gone!

Enter Oberon, from one side, with his train, and TITANIA, from the other, with hers.

Obe. Ill met by moon-light, proud Titania.
Tit. What, jealous Oberon! Fairies\(^2\), skip hence:
I have forsworn his bed and company.

Obe. Tarry, rash wanton. Am not I thy lord?
Tit. Then, I must be thy lady; but I know
When thou hast stol'n away from fairy land,
And in the shape of Corin sat all day,
Playing on pipes of corn, and versing love
To amorous Phillida. Why art thou here,
Come from the farthest steep of India,
But that, forsooth, the bounteous Amazon,
Your baison'd mistress and your warior love,
To Theseus must be wedded? and you come
To give their bed joy and prosperity.

Obe. How canst thou thus, for shame, Titania,
Glance at my credit with Hippolyta,

\(^1\) In f.e. this half of the speech is given to Bottom.  \(^2\) A popular proverbial phrase.  \(^3\) The green circles known as fairy-rings.  \(^4\) tall: in f.e.  \(^5\) goats; in f.e.  \(^6\) Lubber.  \(^7\) Quarrel.  \(^8\) Hand-mill.  \(^9\) yeast.  \(^10\) Not in f.e.  \(^11\) Fairy: in f.e.
Knowing I know thy love to Theseus?
Didst thou not lead him through the glimmering night?
From Perigenia, whom he ravished?
And take him with fair |e do break his faith,
With Ariadne, and Antipoe?

Tita. These are the forgeries of jealousy:
And never, since the middle summer's spring,
Met we on hill, in dale, forest, or mead,
By paved fountain, or by rusky brook,
Or on the beached margin of the sea,
To dance our ringlets to the whistling wind,
But with thy brawls thou hast disturb'd our sport.
Therefore the winds, piping to us in vain,
As in revenge, have suck'd up from the sea
Contagious logs; which falling in the land,
Have every peirting river made so proud,
That they have over-run all their continents:
The ox hath therefore stretch'd his yoke in vain,
The ploughman lost his sweat — and the green corn
Hath rotted, ere his youth attained a beard:
The fold stands empty in the drowned field,
And crows are fatted with the murrain flock:
The nine men's morris is fill'd up with mud;
And the quaint mazes on the wanton green,
For lack of tread are undistinguishable.
The human mortals want their winter here:
No night is now with hymn or carol blest;
Therefore the moon, the governor of floods,
Pale in her anger, washes all the air,
That watch not do abound;
And thorough this distemper we see
The seasons alter: hoary-headed frosts
Fall in the fresh lap of the crimson rose;
And on old Hyem's chin, and icy crown,
An odorous chaplet of sweet summer buds
Is, as in mockery, set.
The spring, the summer,
The chiding autumn, angry winter, change
Their wonted liversies; and the 'mazed world,
By their increase, now knows not which is which.
And this same progeny of evils comes
From our debate, from our dissension:
We are their parents and original.

Obe. Do you amend it then; it lies in you.
Why should Titania cross her Oberon?

I do but beg a little changeling boy,
To be my henchman.

Tita. Set your art at rest:
Thy fair land buys not the child of me.
His mother was a votress of my order:
And, in the spiced Indian air, by night,
Full often hath she gossip'd by my side,
And sat with me on Neptune's yellow sands,
Marking th' embarkerd traders on the flood;
When we have laugh'd to see the sails conceive,
And grow big-bellied, with the wanton wind;
Which she, with pretties and with swimming gait
Following, (her womb, then ripe) with my young squire
Would imbibe, and sail upon the land,
To fetch me triles, and return again.
As from a voyage, rich with merchandise.
But she, being mortal, of that boy did die;
And for her sake I do rear up her boy,
And for her sake I will not part with him.

Obe. How long within this wood intend you stay?
Tita. Perchance, till after Theseus' wedding-day.
If you will patientely dance in our round,
And see our moonlight revels, go with us;
If not, shun me, and I will spare your haunt.

Obe. Give me that boy, and I will go with thee.

Tita. Not for thy fairy kingdom — Fairies, away!
We shall chide downright, if lower stay.

[Exit Titania, with her train.

Obe. Well, go thy way: thou shalt not from this grove,
Till I torment thee for this injury. —
My gentle Puck, come hither: thou remember'st
Since once I sat upon a promontory,
And heard a mermaid on a dolphin's back
Uttering such ducet and harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew civil at her song,
And certain stars shot madly from their spheres,
To hear the sea-maid's music.

Puck. I remember.

Obe. That very time I saw (but thou couldst not),
Flying between the cold moon and the earth,
Cupid all arm'd: a certain aim he took
At a fair vestal166! throned by the west,
And loos'd his love-shaft smartly from his bow,
As it should pierce a hundred thousand hearts;
But I might see young Cupid's fiery shaft
Quenched in the chaste beams of the watery moon,
And the imperial votoress passed on,
In maiden meditation, fancy-free.
Yet mark'd I where the bolt of Cupid fell:
It fell upon a little western flower,
Before milk-white, now purple with love's wound,
And maidens call it love's living bleeding.
Fetch me that flower, the herb I sh'd the once:
The juice of it on sleeping eyelids laid,
Will make or man or woman madly dote
Upon the next live creature that is seen;
Fetch me this herb; and be thou here again,
Ere the leviathan can swim a league.

Puck. I'd12 put a girdle round about the earth
In forty minutes.

[Exit Puck.

Obe. Having once this juice,
I'll watch Titania when she is asleep,
And drop the liquor of it in her eyes:
The next thing then she waking looks upon,
(Or he on lion, bear, or wolf, or bull,
On meddling monkey or on passion bird.)
She shall pursue it with the soul of love;
And ere I take this charm off from her sight,
(As I can take it with another herb)
I'll make her render up her page to me.
But who comes here? I am invisible,
And I will overhear their conference.

[Retiring.

Enter Demetrius, Helena following him.

Dem. I love thee not, therefore pursue me not.
Where is Lysander, and fair Hermia?

The one I'll slay, the other slayeth me.
Thou told'st me they were strown into this wood,
And here am I; and wood16 within this wood,
Because I cannot meet my Hermia.
Hence! get thee hence, and follow me no more.

Hel. You draw me, you hard-hearted adamant;
But yet you draw not iron, for my heart
Is true as steel: leave you your power to draw,
And I shall have no power to follow you.

Dem. Do I entice you? Do I speak you fair?
Or, rather, do I not in plainest truth
Tell you I do not, nor I cannot love you?

Hel. And even for that do I love you the more.
I am your spaniel; and, Demetrius,
The more you beat me, I will fawn on you:
Use me but as your slave, spurn me, strike me,
Neglect me, lose me; only give me leave,
Unworthy as I am, to follow you.
What worse place can I beg in your love,
(And yet a place of high respect with me,)
Than to be used as you use your dog?
Dem. Tempt not too much the hatred of my spirit,
For I am sick when I do look on you.
Hel. And I am sick, too, when I look not on you.
Dem. You do impeach your modesty too much,
To leave the city, and commit yourself
Into the hands of one that loves you not;
To trust the opportunity of night,
And the ill counsel of a desert place,
With the rich worth of your virginity.
Hel. Your virtue is my privilege for that.
It is not night, when I do see your face,
Therefore I think I am not in the night;
Nor doth this wood lack worlds of company,
For you, in your respect, are all the world.
Then how can it be said, I am alone,
When all the world is here to look on sex?
Dem. I'll run from thee, and hide me in the brakes,
And leave thee to the mercy of wild beasts.
Hel. The wildest hath not such a heart as you.
Run when you will, the story shall be changed;
Apollo flies, and Daphne holds the chase:
The dove pursues the griffin; the mild hind
Makes speed to catch the tiger.
Bootless speed!
When cowardice pursues, and valour flies.
Dem. I will not stay thy questions: let me go;
Or, if thou follow me, do not believe
But I shall do thee mischief in the wood.
Hel. Ay, in the temple, in the town, the field,
You do me mischief.
Fie, Demetrius!
Your wrongs do set a scandal on my sex:
We cannot fight for love, as men may do;
We should be wo'd, and were not made to woo.
I'll follow thee, and make a heaven of hell,
To die upon the hand I love so well.
[Exit Dem. and Hel.
Obe. Fare thee well, nymph: o'er he do leave this grove,
Thou shalt fly him, and he shall seek thy love.—
Re-enter Puck.
Hast thou the flower there? Welcome, wanderer.
Puck. Ay, there it is.
Obe.
I pray thee, give it me.
I know a bank where the wild thyme blows,
Where ox-lips, and the nodding violet grows;
Quite over-canopied with luscious woodbine,
With sweet musk-roses, and with eglantine:
There sleeps Titania, some time of the night,
Lull'd in these bowers with dances and delight;
And there the snake throws her enamell'd skin,
Weed wide enough to wrap a fairy in:
And with the juice of this I'll streak her eyes,
And make her full of hateful fantasies.
Take thou some of it, and seek through this grove:
A sweet Athenian lady is in love
With a disdainful youth: anoint his eyes;
But do it, when the next thing he espies
May be the lady.
Thou shalt know the man
By the Athenian heath:
Effect it with some care, that he may prove
More fond on her, than she upon her love.
And look thou meet me ere the first cock crow.
Puck. Fear not, my lord: your servant shall do so.
[Exit.

SCENE II.—Another Part of the Wood.
Enter Titania, with her train.
Tita. Come, now a roundel, and a fairy song;
Then, for the third part of a minute, hence:
Some, to kill cankers in the musk-rose buds;
Some war with ear-nice for their feathered wings;
To make my small elves' coats; and some keep back
The clamorous owl, that nightly hoots, and wonders
At our quaint spirits.
Sing me now asleep;
Then to your offices, and let me rest.
Fairy's Song.
1 Fai. You spotted snakes, with double tongue,
Thorny hedge-hogs, be not seen,
Newts, and blind-worms, do no wrong;
Come not near our fairy queen:
Chorus.
Philtomel, with melody,
Sing now your^ sweet lullaby;
Lull, lulla, lullaby; lulla, lulla, lullaby:
Never harm,
Nor spell nor charm,
Come our lovely lady nigh;
So, good night, with lullaby.

II.
2 Fai. Weaving spiders, come not here;
Hence, you long-legged spinners, hence;
Beetles black, approach not near;
Worm, nor snail, do no offence.
Chorus.
Philtomel, with melody, sc.
2 Fai. Hence, away! now all is well.
One, aloof, stand sentinel.
[Exeunt Fairies.
Titania sleeps.
Enter Oberon.
Obe. What thou seest, when thou dost wake,
[Announcing Titania's eye-lids.
Do it for thy true love take;
Love, and languish for his sake:
Be it ounce, or cat, or bear,
Pard, or boar with bristled hair,
In thy eye that shall appear
When thou wak'st, it is thy dear.
Wake when some vile thing is near.
[Exit.
Enter Lysander and Hermia.
Lys. Fair love, you faint with wandering in the wood;
And, to speak truth, I have forgot our way:
We'll rest us, Hermia, if you think it good,
And tarry for the comfort of the day.
Her. Be it so, Lysander; find you out a bed,
For I upon this bank will rest my head.
Lys. One turf shall serve as pillow for us both:
One heart, one bed, two bosoms, and one troth.
Her. Nay, good Lysander; for my sake, my dear,
Lie further off yet: do not lie so near.
Lys. O, take the sense, sweet, of my innocence;
Love takes the meaning in love's confidence.
I mean, that my heart unto yours is knit,
So that but one heart we can make of it:
Two bosoms interchanged with an oath;
So then, two bosoms, and a single troth.
Then, by your side no bed-room me deny.
For, lying so, Hermia, I do not lie.
Her. Lysander riddles very prettily.
Now much behest my meaners and my pride.
If Hermia meant to say Lysander lied,
But, gentle friend, for love and courtesy
Lie further off; in human modesty
Such separation as may well be said
SCENE I.—The same. TITANIA lying asleep.

Enter QUINCE, SNEE, BOTTOM, FLUTE, SOWT, and STARVELING.

Bot. Are we all met?

Quin. Pat, pat; and here’s a marvellous convenient place for our rehearsal. This green plot shall be our stage, this hawthorn brake our ’tiring-house; and we will do it in action, as we do it before the duke.

Bot. Peter Quince,

Quin. What say’st thou, bully Bottom?

Bot. There are things in this comedy of “Pyramus and Thisby,” that will never please. First, Pyramus must draw a sword to kill himself, which the ladies cannot abide. How answer you that?

Snout. By ’rashin’, a parlous fear.

Star. I believe we must leave the killing out, when all is done.

Bot. Not a whit: I have a device to make all well.

Bot. Where is Demetrius? O, how fit a word
Is that vile name to perish on my sword!

Hel. Do not say so, Lysander; say not so.

What though he love your Hermia? Lord! what though?

Yet Hermia loves thee: then, be content.

Lys. Content with Hermia? No: I do repent
The tedious minutes I with her have spent.

Not Hermia, but Helena I love.

Who will not change a raven for a dove?

The will of man is by his reason swayed,

And reason says you are the worthier maid.

Things growing are not ripe until their season;

So I, being young, till now ripe not to reason;

And touching now the point of human skill.

Reason becomes the marshal to my will,

And leads me to your eyes; where I o’erlook

Love’s stories, written in love’s richest book.

Hel. Wherefore was I to this keen mockery born?

When, at your hands, did I deserve this scorn?

Isn’t not enough, is’t not enough, young man,

That I did never, no, nor never can,

Deserve a sweet look from Demetrius’ eye,

But you must flout my insufficiency?

Good truth, you do me wrong; good sooth, you do,

In such disdainful manner me to woo.

But fare you well: perforce I must confess,

I thought you lord of more true gentleness.

O, that a lady; of one man refus’d,

Should, of another, therefore, be abus’d!

Lys. She sees not Hermia.—Hermia, sleep thou there;

And never mayst thou commerce with her ear;

For, as a surfeit of the sweetest things,

The deepest loathing to the stomach brings;

Or, as the heresies, that men do leave,

Are hated most of those they did receive;

So thou, my surfeit, and my heresy,

Of all be hated, but the most of me;

And all my powers address their love and might,

To honour Helen, and to be her knight.

Hel. Help me, Lysander, help me! do thy best,

To pluck this crawling serpent from my breast.

Ah, me, for pity!—what a dream was here!

Lysander, look, how I do quake with fear.

Methought a serpent ate my heart away,

And you were smiling at his cruel prey.

Lysander! what, remov’d? Lysander! lord!

What, out of hearing? gone? no sound, no word?

Alack! where are you? speak, an if you hear;

Speak, of all loves! I swoon almost with fear.

No?—then I will perceive you are not nigh:

Either death, or you, I’ll find immediately.

[Exit.

ACT III.
Write me a prologue; and let the prologue seem to say, we will do no harm with our swords, and that Pyramus is not killed indeed: and, for the more better assurance, tell them, that I, Pyramus, am not Pyramus, but Bottom the weaver. This will put them out of fear.

Quin. Well, we will have such a prologue, and it shall be written in eight and six.¹

Bot. Nay, make it two more: let it be written in eight and eight.

Snout. Will not the ladies be afraid of the lion?

Star. I fear it, I promise you.

Bot. Masters, you ought to consider with yourselves: to bring in, God shield us! a lion among ladies, is a most dreadful thing; for there is not a more fearful wildfowl than your lion living, and we ought to look to it.

Snout. Therefore, another prologue must tell he is not a lion.

Bot. Nay, you must name his name, and half his face must be seen through the lion's neck; and he himself must speak, through saying thus, or to the same effect: — "Ladies, or fair ladies, I wish you, or, I would request you, or, I would entreat you, not to fear, not to trouble: my life for yours. If you think I come hither as a lion, it was pity of my life: no, I am no such thing: I am a man as other men are." and there, indeed, let him name his name, and tell them plainly he is Snug, the joiner.

Quin. Well, it shall be so. But there is two hard things: that is, to bring the moonlight into a chamber; for you know, Pyramus and Thisby meet by moonlight.

Snug. Both the moon shine that night we play our play?

Bot. A calendar, a calendar! look in the almanack; find out moonshine, find out moonshine.

Quin. Yes, it doth shine that night.

Bot. Why, then you may leave a casement of the great chamber window, where we play, open; and the moon may shine in at the casement.

Quin. Ay; or else one must come in with a bush of thorns and a laurel, and say, he comes to disfigure, or to present, the person of moonshine. Then, there is another thing: we must have a wall in the great chamber; for Pyramus and Thisby (says the story,) did talk through the chink of a wall.

Snug. You can never bring in a wall. — What say you, Bottom?

Bot. Some man or other must present wall; and let him have some plaster, or some lime, or some roughcast about him, to signify wall: and let him hold his fingers thus, and through that cranly shall Pyramus and Thisby whisper.

Quin. If that may be, then all is well. Come, sit down, every mother's son, and rehearse your parts. Pyramus, you begin. When you have spoken your speech, enter into that brake; and so every one according to his cue.

Enter Puck behind.

Puck. What hempen home-spuns have we swaggering here.

So near the cradle of the fairy queen? What, a play toward? I'll be an auditor;

An actor, if perhaps, if I see some.

Pyr. "Thisby, the flowers have odious savours sweet." —

Quin. Odours, odours.

Pyr. — "Odours savours sweet; —

So hath thy breath, my dearest Thisby, dear,—

But, hark, a voice! stay thou but here a while,

And by and by I will to thee appear." —

[Exit.

Puck. A stranger Pyramus than e'er play'd here.

[Exit.

This. Must I speak now?

Quin. Ay, marry, must you; for you must understand, he goes but to see a noise that he heard, and is to come again.

This. "Most radiant Pyramus, most lily-white of hue,

Of colour like the red rose on triumphant brier,

Most briskly juvenal, and eke most lovely Jew,

As true as truest horse, that yet would never tire,

I'll meet thee, Pyramus, at Ninny's tomb." —

Quin. Ninus' tomb, man. Why must you not speak that yet; that you answer to Pyramus. You speak all your part at once, cues and all. — Pyramus, enter: your cue is past; it is; "never tire."

Re-enter Puck, and Bottom with an ass's head on.

This. O! — "As true as truest horse, that yet would never tire."

Pyr. "If I were, fair Thisby, I were only thine."

Quin. O monstrous! O strange! we are haunted.

Pray, masters! fly, masters! help!

[Exeunt Clowns, in confusion.

Puck. I'll follow you, I'll lead you about a round,

Through bog, through bush, through brake, through brier:

Sometime a horse I'll be, sometime a hound,

A hog, a headless bear, sometime a fire;

And neigh, and bark, and grunt, and roar, and burn,

Like horse, hound, hog, bear, fire, at every turn. [Exit.

Bot. Why do they run away? this is a knavery of them, to make me afeard.

Re-enter Snout.

Bot. What do you see? you see an ass's head of your own, do you?

Re-enter Quince.

Quin. Bless thee, Bottom! bless thee! thou art translated. [Exit, frightened.

Bot. I see their knavery. This is to make an ass of me, to fright me, if they could; but I will not stir from this place, do what they can. I will walk up and down here; and I will sing, that they shall hear I am not afraid. [Sings.

The oselock, so black of hue,

With orange-tawny bill,

The throat white with his note so true,

The wren with little quill.

Tita. What angel wakes me from my flowerly bed? [Waking.

Bot. The finch, the sparrow, and the lark,

The plain-song cuckoo gray,

Whose note full many a man doth mark,

And dares not answer, nay; for, indeed, who would set his wit to so foolish a bird? who would give a bird the lie, though he cry "cuckoo" never so?

Tita. I pray thee, gentle mortal, sing again:

Mine ear is much enamour'd of thy note,

So is mine eye enthralled to thy shape;

And thy fair virtue's force doth move me.

On the first view, to say, to swear, I love thee.

Bot. Methinks, mistress, you should have little reason for that: and yet, to say the truth, reason and love keep little company together now-a-days. The more the pity, that some honest neighbours will not make them friends. Nay, I can gleeck upon occasion.

Tit. Thou art as wise as thou art beautiful.

Bot. Not so, neither; but if I had wit enough to get out of this wood. I have enough to serve mine own turn.

Tit. Out of this wood do not desire to go:
Thou shalt remain here, whether thou wilt or no.
I am a spirit of no common rate;
The summer still doth tend upon my state,
And I do love thee: therefore, go with me;
I'll give thee fairies to attend on thee;
And they shall fetch thee jewels from the deep,
And sing while thou on pressed flowers dost sleep:
And I will purge thy mortal grossness so,
That thou shalt like an airy spirit go.—

Peas-blossom! Cobweb! Moth! and Mustard-seed.

Enter four Fairies.

1 Fri. Ready.
2 Fri. And I.
3 Fri. And I.
4 Fri. Where shall we go?

Tit. Be kind and courteous to this gentleman:
Hop in his walks, and gambol in his eyes;
Feed him with apricocks, and dewberries,
With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries.
Their honey bags steal from the humble-bees,
And for night tapers crop their waxen thighs,
And light them at the fiery glow-worm's eyes,
To have my love to bed, and to arise;
And pluck the wings from painted butterflies,
To fan the moon-beams from his sleeping eyes.
Nod to him, elves, and do him courtesies.

1 Fri. Hail! mortal.
2 Fri. Hail!
3 Fri. Hail!
4 Fri. Hail!

Bot. I cry your worship's mercy, heartily.—I beseech, your worship's name.

Cob. Cobweb.

Bot. I shall desire of you more acquaintance, good master Cobweb. If I cut my finger, I shall make bold with you.—Your name, honest gentleman?

Peas. Peas-blossom.

Bot. I pray you, commend me to mistress Squash, your mother, and to master Peasod, your father.
Good master Peas-blossom; I shall desire of you more acquaintance too.—Your name, I beseech you, sir?

Mrs. Mustard-seed.

Bot. Good master Mustard-seed, I know your patience well: that same cowardly, giant-like ox-beef hath devoured many a gentleman of your house. I promise you, your kindred hath made my eyes water ere now. I desire of you more acquaintance, good master Mustard-seed.

Tit. Come, wait upon him: lead him to my bower.
The moon, methinks, looks with a watery eye,
And when she weeps, weeps every little flower,
Lamenting some enforced chastity.
Tie up my lover's tongue, and bring him silently.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another Part of the Wood.

Enter Oberon.

Obe. I wonder, if Titania be awak'd;
Then, what it was that next came in her eye,
Which she must dote on in extremity.

Enter Puck.

Here comes my messenger.—How now, mad spirit?
What night-rule* now about this haunted grove?

Puck. My mistress with a monster is in love.
Near to her close and consecrated bower,
While she was in her dull and sleeping hour,
A crew of patches, rude mechanicals,
That work for bread upon Athenian stalls,
Were met together to rehearse a play,
Inched for great Theseus' nuptial day.
The shallowsiest thick-skin of that barren sort,
Who Pyramus presented in their sport,
Forsook his scene, and enter'd in a brake,
When I did him at this advantage take;
An ass's now! I fixed on his head:
Anon, his Thiebe must be answered,
And forth my mimic comes. When they him spy,
As wild geese that the creeping fowler eye,
Or russet-paced choughs, many in sort,
Rising and cawing at the gun's report,
Sever themselves, and mailly sweep the sky;
So, at his sight, away his fellows fly,
And, at our stamp, here o'er and o'er one falls:
He murder'd cares, and help from Athens calls.
Their sense thus weak, lost with their fears thus strong,
Made senseless things begin to do them wrong,
For brickers and thorns at their apparel snatch,
Some, sleeves, some, hats, from yielders all things catch.
I led them on in this distracted fear,
And left sweet Pyramus translated there;
When in that moment (so it came to pass,) Titania wak'd, and straightway lov'd an ass.

Obe. This falls out better than I could devise.
But hast thou yet latch'd the Athenian's eyes
With the love-juice, as I did bid thee do?

Puck. I took him sleeping, (that is finish'd too)
And the Athenian woman by his side;
That, when he wak'd, of force she must be ey'd.

Enter Demetrius and Hermia.

Obe. Stand close: this is the same Athenian.
Puck. This is the woman; but not this the man.

[They stand apart.*

Dem. O! why rebuke you him that loves you so?
Lay breath so bitter on your bitter foes.

Her. Now, I but chide; but I should use thee worse,
For thou, I fear, hast given me cause to curse.
If thou hast slain Lysander in his sleep,
Being o'er shoes in blood, plunge in the deep,
And kill me too.

The sun was not so true unto the day,
As he to me. Would he have stol'n away
From sleeping Hermia? I'll believe as soon,
This whole earth may be bor'd, and that the moon
May through the centre creep, and so displease
Her brother's noon-tide with the Antipodes.

It cannot be but thou hast murder'd him;
So should a murderer look, so dead, so grim.

Dem. So should the murder'd look, and so should I,
Pier'd through the heart with your stern cruelty;
Yet you, the murderer, look as bright, as clear,
As yonder Venus in her gimmering sphere.

Her. What's this to my Lysander? where is he?
Ah, good Demetrius, wilt thou give him me?

Dem. I have rather give him the same day to my hounds.

Her. Our dog! out, cur! thou driv'st me past the bounds
Of maiden's patience. Hast thou slain him then?
Henceforth be never number'd among men!
O! once tell true, tell true, 'tis for my sake;
Durst thou have look'd upon him, being awake,
And hast thou kill'd him sleeping? O brave touch!
Could not a worm, an adder, do so much?

* This direction not in f. e.
An adder did it; for with double tongue
Than thine, thou serpent, never adder stung.

Dem. You spend your passion in a mispris’d flood: I am not guilty of Lysander’s blood.
Nor is he dead, for aught that I can tell.
Her. I pray thee, tell me then, that he is well.
Dem. And, if I could, what should I get therefore?
Her. A privilege, never to see me more.
And from thy hated presence part I so; See me no more, whether he be dead or no. [Exit. Dem. There is no following her in this fierce vein:
Here, therefore, for a while I will remain.
So sorrow’s heaviness doth heavier grow
For debt that bankrupt sleep doth sorrow owe;
Which now in some slight measure it will pay,
If for his tender love I make some stay. [Lies down.

Obe. What hast thou done? thou hast mistaken quite,
[Coming forward.
And laid the love-juice on some true-love’s sight:
Of thy misprision must perforce ensue
Some true-love turn’d, and not a false turn’d true.

Puck. Then fate o'er-rules; that one man holding troth,
A million fall, confounding oath on oath.
Obe. About the wood go swifter than the wind,
And Helena of Athens look thou find:
All fancy-sick she is, and pale of cheer
With sights of love, that cost the fresh blood dear.
By some illusion see you bring her here:
I'll charm his eyes against she do appear.

Puck. I go, I go; look how I go:
Swifter than arrow from the Tartar’s bow. [Exit.

Obe. Flower of this purple die,
Hit with Cupid’s archery,
Sink in apple of his eye.
When his love he doth esp’y,
Let her shine as gloriously
As the Venus of the sky,—
When thou wak’st, if she be by,
Beg of her for remedy.

Re-enter Puck.
Puck. Captain of our fairy band,
Helena is here at hand,
And the youth, mistook by me,
Pleading for a lover’s fee.
Shall we their feud present see?
Lord, what fools these mortals be!

Obe. Stand aside; the noise they make
Will cause Demetrius to awake.
Puck. Then will two at once woo one;
That must needs be sport alone;
And those things do best please me,
That befall preposterously. [They stand apart.

Enter LYSANDER and HELENA.

Lys. Why should you think that I should woo in scorn?
Scorn and derision never come in tears:
Look: when I vow I weep, and vows so born,
In their captivity all truth appears.
How can these things in me seem scorn to you,
Bearing the badge of faith to prove them true?

Hel. You do advance your cunning more and more.
When truth kills truth, O, devilish-holy fray! These vows are Hermia’s: will you give her o’er? Weigh oath with oath, and you will nothing weigh:
Your vows, to her and me, put in two scales,
Will even weigh, and both as light as tales.
Lys. I had no judgment, when to her I swore.

Hel. Nor none, in my mind, now you give her o’er.
Lys. Demetrius loves her, and he loves not you.

Dem. O Helen, goddess, nymph, perfect, divine! [Awaking.
To what, my love, shall I compare thine eye?
Crystal is muddied. O! how ripe in show
Thy lips, those kissing cherries, tempting grow!
That pure congealed white, high Taurus snow,
Fann’d with the eastern wind, turns to a crown,
When thou holdest up thy hand. O, let me kiss
This impress of pure-white, this seal of bliss!

Hel. O spite! O hell! I see you all are bent
To set against me, for your Array:—
If you were civil, and knew courtesy,
You would not do me thus much injury.
Can you not hate me, as I know you do,
But you must join in souls to mock me too?
If you were men, as men you are in show,
You would not use a gentle lady so:
To vow, and swear, and super-praise my parts,
When I am sure, you hate me with your hearts.
You both are rivals, and love Hermia,
And now both rivals, to mock Helena.

A trim exploit, a manly enterprise,
To conjure tears up in a poor maid’s eyes
With your derision! none of noble sort
Would so offend a virgin, and export
A poor soul’s patience, all to make you sport.
Lys. You are unknown, Demetrius; be not so,
For you love Hermia; this, you know, I know:
And here, with all good will, with all my heart,
In Hermia’s love I yield you up my part;
And yours in Helena to me bequeath,
Whom I do love, and will do till my death.

Hel. Never did mockers waste more idle breath.

Dem. Lysander, keep thy Hermia: I will none:
If e’er I lov’d her, all that love is gone.
My heart to her but as guest-wise sojourn’d,
And now to Helen it is home return’d;
There to remain.

Lys. Helen, it is not so.

Dem. Disparage not the faith thou dost not know,
Lest to thy peril thou aby it dear.—
Look, where thy love comes: yonder is thy dear.

Enter HERMIA.
Her. Dark night, that from the eye his function takes,
The ear more hack of apprehension makes;
Wherein it doth impair the seeing sense,
It pays the hearing double recompense.
Thou art not by mine eye, Lysander; found;
Mine ear, I thank it, brought me to thy sound.
But why unkindly didst thou leave me so?
Lys. Why should he stay, whom love doth press to go?
Her. What love could press Lysander from my side?
Lys. Lysander’s love, that would not let him bide,
Fair Helena, who more engilds the night
Than all you fiery oes* and eyes of light.
Why seek’st thou me? could not this make thee know,
The hate I bare thee made me leave thee so?
Her. You speak not as you think: it cannot be.

Hel! she is one of this confederacy.
Now I perceive they have conjoin’d, all three,
To fashion this false sport in spite of me:
Injurious Hermia! most ungrateful maid!
Have you conspire’d, have you with these contriv’d
To bait me with this foul derision?
Is all the counsel that we two have shar’d,
The sisters’ vows, the hours that we have spent,
When we have chid the hasty-footed time
For Parting us,—O! is all forgot?
All school days’ friendship, childhood’s innocence?

* on a mispris’d mood: in f. e. 2 princess: in f. e. * Eyes.
We, Hermia, like two artificial gods,
Have with our needles created both one flower,
Both on one sampler, sitting on one cushion,
Both warbling of one song, both in one key,
As if our hands, our sides, voices, and minds,
Had been incorporate. So we grew together,
Like to a double cherry, seeming parted,
But yet an union in partition;
Two loving' berries moulded on one stem,
So, with two seeming bodies, but one heart;
Two blossoms in one bud; one root,
Due but to one, and which may ne'er be cut asunder.
And will you rend our ancient love asunder?
To join with men in scorning your poor friend?
It is not friendly, 'tis not maidenly:
Our sex, as well as I, may chide you for it,
Though I alone do feel the injury.

Her. I am amazed at your passionate words.
I scorn you not; it seems that you scorn me.

Hel. Have you not set Lysander, as in scorn,
To follow me, and praise my eyes and face,
And made your other love, Demetrius,
(Who even but now did spurn me with his foot)
To call me goddess, nymph, divine, and rare,
Precious, celestial! When he speaks he this,
To her he hates? and wherefore doth Lysander
Deny your love, so rich within his soul,
And tender me, forsooth, affection,
But by your setting out, by your consent?
What though I be not so in grace as you,
So hung upon with love, so fortunate,
But miserable most to love unlov'd,
This you should pity, rather than despise.

Her. I understand not what you mean by this.

Hel. Ay, do, persever, counterfeit sad looks,
Make mouths upon me when I turn my back;
Wink at each other; hold the sweet jest up:
This sport, well carried, shall be chronicled.
If you had any pity, grace, or manners,
You would not make me such an argument.
But, fare ye well: 'tis partly mine own fault,
Which death, or absence, soon shall remedy.

Lys. Stay, gentle Helena: hear my excuse:
My love, my life, my soul, fair Helena!

Hel. O excellent! Sweet, do not scorn her so.

Dem. If she cannot entreat, I can compel.

Lys. Thou canst compel no more than she entreat:
Thy threats have no more strength than her weak prayers.—

Hel. I love thee; by my life, I do:
I swear by that which I will lose for thee,
To prove him false, that says I love thee not.

Dem. I say, I love thee more than he can do.

Lys. If thou say so, withdraw, and prove it too.

Dem. Quick, come.—

Her. Lysander, whereto tends all this? [Holding him?

Lys. Away, you Ethiop!

Dem. No, no, no!—

Seem to break loose; take on, as you would follow;
But yet come not. You are a tame man, go!

Lys. Hang off, thou cat, thou burr! vile thing, let loose,
Or I will shake thee from me like a serpent.

Her. Why are you grown so rude? what change is this, Sweet love?

Lys. Thy love? out, tawny Tarlat, out! Out,
Out, leathen medicine! hated potion, hence!

Hel. Do you not jest?

Hel. Yes, 'tis so; and so do you.

Lys. Demetrius, I will keep my word with thee.

Dem. I would, I had your bond; for, I perceive,
A weak bond holds you: I'll not trust your word.

Lys. What! should I hurt her, strike her, kill her dead?

Although I hate her, I'll not harm her so.

Her. What! can you do me greater harm than hate?
Hate me! wherfore? 'O me!' what means' my love?
Am not I Hermia? Are not you Lysander?
I am as fair now, as I was crewhide.
Since night you loved me; yet, since night you left me:
Why, then you left me (O, the gods forbid!)
In earnest, shall I say?

Lys. Ay, by my life;
And never did desire to see thee more.
Therefore, be out of hope, of question, doubt;
Be certain, nothing truer: 'tis no jest,
That I do hate thee, and love Helena.

Her. O me!—you juggler! you canker-blossom!
You thief of love! what, have you come by night,
And stolen my love's heart from him?

Hel. Fine, if faith!
Have you no modesty, no maiden shame,
No touch of bashfulness? Where is then the tear
Impatient answers from my gentle tongue?
Fie, fie! you counterfeit, you puppet, you!

Her. Puppet! why so? Ay, that way goes the game.
Now I perceive that she hath made compare
Between our statures: she hath urg'd her height,
And with her personage, her tall personage,
Her height, forsooth, she hath prevail'd with him.—
And are you grown so high in his esteem,
Because I am so dwarfish, and so low?
How low am I, thou painted maypole? speak;
How low am I? I am not yet so low,
But that my nails can reach unto thine eyes.

Hel. I pray you, though you mock me, gentlemen,
Let her not hurt me: I was never curt;
I have no gift at all in shrewishness;
I am a right maid for my cowardice:
Let her not strike me. You, perhaps, may think,
Because she is something lower than myself,
That I can match her.

Her. Lower! hark, again.

Hel. Good Hermia, do not be so bitter with me.
I evermore did love you, Hermia,
Did ever keep your counsels, never wrong'd you;
Save that, in love unto Demetrius,
I told him of your stealth unto this wood.
He follow'd you; for love, I follow'd him;
But he hath chid me hence, and threaten'd me
To strike me, spurn me, nay, to kill me too:
And now, so you will let me quiet go,
To Athens will I bear my folly back,
And follow you no farther. Let me go:
You see how simple and how fond I am.

Her. Why, get you gone. Who is't that hinder's you?
Hel. A foolish heart, that I leave here behind.

Her. What, with Lysander?

Hel. With Demetrius.

Lys. Be not afraid: she shall not harm thee, Helena.

Dem. No, sir; she shall not, though you take her part.

Hel. O! when she is angry, she is keen and shrewd.
She was a vixen when she went to school;
And, though she be but little, she is fierce.

Her. Little again? nothing but low and little?
Why will you suffer her to flout me thus?
Let me come to her.

[i love]: in f. a

SCENE II.
MIDSUMMER-NIGHT’S DREAM.

Lys.  Get you gone, you dwarf;
You minimus, of hindering knot-gross’d made:
You head, you acorn.

Dem.  You are too officious
In her behalf that scorns your services.
Let her alone; speak not of Helena;
Take not her part, for if thou dost intend
Never so little show of love to her,
Thou shalt aby1 it.

Lys.  Now she holds me not;
Now follow, if thou dar’st, to try whose right,
Or thine or mine, is most in Helena.

Her.  Follow? nay, I’ll go with thee, check by jowl.
[Exit Lys. and Dem.

Her.  You, mistress, all this coil is ’long of you.
Nay, go not back.
Hel.  I will not trust you, I,
Nor longer stay in your curt’sey company.
Your hands, than mine, are quicker for a fray;
My legs are longer though, to run away.
[Exit.

Her.  I am amaz’d, and know not what to say.
[Exit.
Ob.  This is thy negligence: still thou mistak’st,
[Coming forward.

Or else commit’s thy knavery willfully.

Puck.  Believe me, king of shadows, I mistook.
Did you not tell me I should know the man
By the Athenian garments he had on?
And so far blameless proves my enterprise,
That I have ’nointed an Athenian’s eyes;
And so far am I glad it did sort,
As this their jangling I esteem a sport.

Ob.  Thou seest these lovers seek a place to fight:
He, therefore, Robin, overeast the night;
The starry welkin cover thou anon
With drooping fog, as black as Acheron;
And lead these testy rivals so astray,
As one come not within another’s way.
Like to Lysander some time frame thy tongue,
Then stir Demetrius up with bitter wrong;
And sometime rail thou like Demetrius;
And from each other look thou lead them thus,
Till o’er their brows death-counterfeiting sleep,
With leaden legs and batty wings, doth creepe;
Then crush this herb into Lysander’s eye;
Whose liquor hath this virtuous property,
To take from thence all error with his might,
And make his eye-balls roll with wonted sight.
When they next wake, all this decision
Shall seem a dream, and fruitless vision;
And back to Athens shall the lovers wand,
With league, whose date till death shall never end.
While I in this affray do thee employ,
I’ll to my queen, and beg her Indian boy;
And then I will her charmed eye release.

From monster’s view, and all things shall be peace.

Puck.  My fairy lord, this must be done with haste,
For night’s swift dragons eat the clouds full fast,
And yonder shines Aurora’s harbinger;
At whose approach, ghosts, wandering here and there,
Tropp home to church-yards: damned spirits all,
That in cross-ways and floods have burial,
Already to their wormy beds are gone;
For fear lest day should look their shame’s upon,
They willfully themselves exile from light,
And must for eye-consort with black-brow’d night.
Ob.  But we are spirits of another sort,
I with the morning’s love have oft made sport;
And, like a forester, the groves may tread,

Even till the eastern gate, all fiery-red,
Opening on Neptune with fair blessed beams,
Turns into yellow gold his salt green streams.
But, notwithstanding, haste; make no delay:
We may effect this business yet ere day.
[Exit Oberon.
Puck.  Up and down, up and down;
I will lead them up and down:
I am fear’d in field and town;
Goblin, lead them up and down.

Here comes one.

Enter LYSANDER.

Lys.  Where art thou, proud Demetrius? speak thou now.
[thou?
Puck.  Here, villain! drawen and ready. Where art
Lys.  I will be with thee straight.
Puck.  Follow me then
To plainer ground.

Enter DEMETRIUS.

Dem.  Lysander! speak again.
Thou run whay, thou coward, art thou fled?
Speak! In some bush? Where dost thou hide thy head?
Puck.  Thou coward! art thou bragging to the stars,
Telling the bushes that thou look’st for wars,
And wilt not come? Come, recreant; come, thou child;
I’ll whip thee with a rod: he is doli’d,
That draws a sword on the wise.

Dem.  Yes; art thou there?
Puck.  Follow my voice: we’ll try no manhood here.
[Exeunt.

Re-enter LYSANDER.

Lys.  He goes before me, and still dares me on:
When I come where he calls, then he is gone.
The villain is much lighter heel’d than I:
I follow’d fast, but faster he did fly;
That fallen am I in dark uneven way,
And here will rest me. Come, thou gentle day!
[Dies down.

For if but once thou show me thy grey light,
I’ll find Demetrius, and revenge this spite.

[Sleeps.

Re-enter PUCK and DEMETRIUS.

Puck.  Ho! ho! ho! Coward, why com’st thou not?
Dem.  Abide me, if thou dar’st; for well I wot,
Thou run’st before me, shifting every place;
And dar’st not stand, nor look me in the face.
Where art thou now?
Puck.  Come hither: I am here.
Dem.  Nay, then thou mock’st me. Thou shalt by this dear,
If ever I thy face by day-light see;
Now, go thy way. Faintness constraineth me
To measure out my length on this cold bed.
By day’s approach look to be visited.
[Dies down and sleeps.

Enter HELENA.

Hel.  O weary night! O, long and tedious night!
Abate thy hours: shame, comforts, from the east,
That I may back to Athens, by day-light,
From these that my poor company detest.
And sleep, that sometimes shuts up sorrow’s eye,
Steal me a while from mine own company.
[Sleeps.
Puck.  Yet but three? Come one more;
Two of both kinds make up four.
Here she comes, curt and sad.
Cupid is a knavish lad,
Thus to make poor females mad.

[Enter HERMAIA.

Her.  Never so weary, never so in woe,
Bedabbled with the dew, and torn with briers:

1 Formerly supposed to have the property of hindering the growth.
2 Abide, answer for.
3 Not in f. e.
4 So the quarto: the folio: willingly.
I can no farther crawl, no farther go;
My legs can keep no pace with my desires.
Here will I rest me till the break of day.
Heavens shield Lysander, if they mean a fray!

Puck. On the ground sleep sound:
I'll apply to your eye,
Gentle lover, remedy.
[Anointing] Lysander's eyes.
When thou wak'st, see thou tak'st st

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Same.
Enter Titania and Bottom: Fairies attending:
Oberon behind unseen.

Tita. Come, sit thee down upon this flowery bed,
While I thy amiable cheeks do coin
And stick my needle the pretty thistledown head,
And kiss thy fair large ears, my gentle joy.
Bot. Where's Pea-blossom?
Peas. Ready,
Bot. Scratch my head, Pea-blossom.—Where's my monsieur Cobweb?
Cob. Ready.
Bot. Monsieur Cobweb; good monsieur, get your weapons in your hand; and kill me a red-hipped hum-ble-bee on the top of a thistle; and, good monsieur, bring me the honey-bag. Do not fret yourself too much in the action, monsieur; and, good monsieur, have a care the honey-bag break not: I would be loath to have you overflown with a honey-bag, signior.—
Where's monsieur Mustard-seed?
Must. Ready.
Bot. Give me your neif, monsieur Mustard-seed.
Pray you, leave your courtesy, good monsieur:
Must. What's your will?
Bot. Nothing, good monsieur, but to help cavalery Cobweb to scratch. I must to the barber's, monsieur; for, methinks, I am marvellous hairy about the face, and I am such a tender ass, if my hair do but tickle me, I must scratch.
Tita. What, wilt thou hear some music, my sweet love?
Bot. I have a reasonable good ear in music: let's have the tangs and the bones.
Tita. Or, say, sweet love, what thou desir'st to eat.
Bot. Truly, a peck of provender: I could munch your good dry oats. Methinks, I have a great desire to a bottle of hay: good hay, sweet hay, hath no fellow.
Tita. I have a venturous fairy that shall seek
The squirrel's hoard, and fetch thee new nuts.
Bot. I had rather have a handful or two of dried peas. But, I pray you, let none of your people stir me: I have an exposition of sleep come upon me.
Tita. Sleep thou, and I will wind thee in my arms.
Fairies, be gone, and be a while away. So doth the woodbine, the sweet honeysuckle,
Gently encist: the female ivy so
Earings the barking fingers of the elm.
O, how I love thee! how I dote on thee!  [They sleep.
Enter Puck.
Obe. [Advancing:] Welcome, good Robin. Soest thou this sweet sight?
Her dotage now I do begin to pity;
For meeting her of late behind the wood,
Tell me how it came this night,
That I sleeping here was found
With these mortals on the ground.

[Exeunt.

[Horns sound within.

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Egeus, and train.

The. Go, one of you, find out the forester;
For now our observation is perform'd:
And since we have the vaward of the day,
My lord, and hear the music of my hounds.—
Uncouple in the western valley: let them go! —
Despatch, I say, and find the forester.
We will, fair queen, up to the mountain's top,
And mark the musical confusion
Of hounds and echo in conjunction.
Hipp. I was with Heracles, and Cadmus, once,
When in a wood of Crete they bay'd the bear
With hounds of Sparta: never did I hear
Such gallant chiding: for, besides the groves,
The skies, the fountains, every region near Sesi'd all one mutual cry. I never heard
So musical a discord, such sweet thunder.

The. My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind,
So dew-lap'd and garden-like, 6
With ears that sweep away the morning dew;
Crook-kneed, and dew-lap'd like Thessalian bulls;
Slow in pursuit, but match'd in mouth like bells,
Each under each. A cry more tunable
Was never hallo'd to, nor cheer'd with horn,
In Crete, in Sparta, nor in Thessaly:—
Judge, when you hear.—But, soft! what nymphs are these?
Ege. My lord, this is my daughter here asleep;
And this, Lysander; this Demetrius is;
This Helena, old Nedars Helena:
I wonder of their being here together.

The. No doubt, they rose up early to observe
The rite of May; and, hearing our intent,
Came here in grace of our solemnity.—
But speak, Egeus; is not this the day
That Hermia should give answer of her choice?
Ege. It is, my lord.
The. Go, bid the huntsmen wake them with their horns.
[Exeunt, horns and shouts within. Demetrius, Lysander, Hermia, and Helena, wake and start up.

The. Good-morrow, friends. Saint Valentine is past;
Begin these wood-birds but to couple now?
Lys. Pardon, my lord.
[He and the rest kneel.

The. I pray you all, stand up.
I know; you two are rival enemies:
How comes this gentle concord in the world,
That hatred is so far from jealousy,
To sleep by hate, and fear no enmity?
Lys. My lord, I shall reply amaz'd,
Half sleep, half waking: but as yet, I swear,
I cannot truly say how I came here;
But, as I think, (for truly would I speak, —
And now I do bethink me, so it is)
I came with Hermia hither: our intent
Was to be gone from Athens, where we might be Without the peril of the Athenian law.
Ege. Enough, enough! my lord, you have enough.
I beg the law, the law; upon his head.
They would have stol'n away; and Demetrius,
Therby to have defeated you and me;
You, of your wife, and me, of my consent,
Of my consent that she should be your wife.

Dem. My lord, fair Helen told me of their stealth,
Of this their purpose hither, to this wood;

And I in fury hither follow'd them,
Fair Helena in fancy following me.
But, my good lord, I wot not by what power,
(By but some power it is,) my love to Hermia,
Melted as the snow, seems to me now
As the remembrance of an idle gawd,
Which in my childhood I did dote upon;
And all the faith, the virtue of my heart,
The object, and the pleasure of mine eye,
Is only Helena. To her, my lord,
Was I bro'th'd ere I saw Hermia:
But, like in sickness, did I loath this food;
But, as in health, come to my natural taste,
Now do I wish it, love it, long for it,
And will for evermore be true to it.
The. Fair lovers, you are fortunately met.
Of this discourse we more will hear anon.—

Egeus, I will overbear your will,
For in the temple, by and by with us,
These couples shall eternally be knit.
And, for the morning now is something worn,
Our purpose'd hunting shall be set aside.
Away, with us, to Athens: three and three,
We'll hold a feast in great solemnity.—
Come, Hippolyta.
[Exeunt Theseus, Hippolyta, Egeus, and train.

Dem. These things seem small, and undistinguishable,
Like far-off mountains turned into clouds.
Her. Methinks, I see these things with parted eye,
When every thing seems double.

Hel. So methinks:
And I have found Demetrius, like a jewel,
Mine own, and not mine own.

Dem. Are you sure
That we are awake? It seems to me
That yet we sleep, we dream.—Do not you think
The duke was here, and bid us follow him?
Her. Yea, and my father.

Hel. And Hippolyta.
Lys. And he did bid us follow to the temple.

Dem. Why then, we are awake. Let's follow him;
And by the way let us recount our dreams.
[Exeunt.

Bot. [Waking:] When my eye comes, call me, and I will answer:—my next is, "Most fair Pyramus?"

—Hey, ho! —Peter Quince! Flute, the bellowsmender! Snout, the tinker! Starveling! God's life!
I stole his heart, and left him asleep. I have had a most rare vision. I have had a dream,—past the wit of man to say what dream it was; man is but an ass, if he go about to expound this dream. Methought I was,—there is no man can tell what. Methought I was, and methought I had,—but man is but a patched fool, if he will offer to say what methought I had.
The eye of man hath not heard, the ear of man hath not seen, man's hand is not able to taste, his tongue to conceive, nor his heart to report, what my dream was. I will get Peter Quince to write a ballad of this dream: it shall be called Bottom's Dream, because it hath no bottom, and I will sing it in the latter end of the play, before the duke: peradventure, to make it the more gracious, I shall sing it at Thisbe's death.

[Exit.

Enter Quince, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Quin. Have you sent to Bottom's house? is he come home yet?

Star. He cannot be heard of. Out of doubt, he is transported.
Flu. If he come not, then the play is marred. It goes not forward, doth it?

Quin. It is not possible; you have not a man in all

Athens able to discharge Pyramus, but he.

Flu. No; he hath simply the best wit of any hand-crafty man in Athens.

Quin. Yea, and the best person too; and he is a very paramour for a sweet voice.

Flu. You must say, paragon: a paramour is, God bless us! a thing of nought.

Enter Snug.

Snug. Masters, the duke is coming from the temple, and there is two or three lords and ladies more married. If our sport had gone forward, we had all been made men.

Flu. O, sweet bully Bottom! Thus hath he lost sixpence a-day during his life; he could not have

'scaped sixpence a-day: an the duke had not given him sixpence a-day for playing Pyramus, I'll be hanged; he would have deserved it: sixpence a-day in Pyramus, or nothing.

ACT V.

SCENE 1.—The Same. An Apartment in the Palace of Theseus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolystal Philostrate, Lords, and Attendants.

Hip. 'Tis strange, my Theseus, that these lovers speak of.

The. Mere stranger than true: I never may believe

These antic fables, nor these fairy toys.

Lovers, and madmen, have such seething brains,

Such shaping fantasies, that apprehend

More than cool reason ever comprehends.

The lunatic, the lover, and the poet,

Are of imagination all compact:

One sees more devils than vast hell can hold;

That is, the madman: the lover, all as frantic,

Sees Helen's beauty in a brow of Egypt:

The poet's eye, in a fine frenzy rolling,

Doth glance from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven;

And, as imagination bodies forth

The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen

Turns them to shapes, and gives to airy nothing

A local habitation, and a name.

Such tricks hath strong imagination,

That, if it would but apprehend some joy,

It comprehends some bringer of that joy;

Or in the night, imagining some fear,

How easy is a bush supposed a bear?

Hip. But all the story of the night told over,

And all their minds brandish'd so together,

More witnesseth than fancy's images,

And grows to something of great constancy,

But, howsoever, strange, and admirable.

The. Here come the lovers, full of joy and mirth.

Enter Lysander, Demetrius, Hermia, and Helena.

Joy, gentle friends; joy, and fresh days of love,

Accompany your hearts!

Lys. More than to us

Wait in your royal walks, your board, your bed! [have,

The. Come now; what masks, what dances shall we

To wear away this long age of three hours,

Between our after-supper, and bed-time?

Where is our usual manager of mirth?

Enter Bottom.

Bot. Where are these lads? where are these hearts?

Quin. Bottom!—O most courageous day! O most happy hour!

Bot. Masters, I am to discourse wonders; but ask me not what, for, if I tell you, I am no true Athenian.

I will tell you every thing, right as it fell out.

Quin. Let us hear, sweet Bottom.

Bot. Not a word of me. All that I will tell you is, that the duke hath dined. Get your apparel together;

good strings to your beards, new ribbons to your pumps: meet presently at the palace; every man look o'er his part; for, the short and the long is, our play is preferred. In any case let Theseus have clean linen, and let not him that plays the lion pare his nails, for they shall hang out for the lion's claws. And, most dear actors, eat no onions, nor garlic, for we are to utter sweet breath, and I do not doubt but to hear them say, it is a sweet comedy. No more words:

away! go; away!

[Exeunt.]

What revels are in hand? Is there no play,

To ease the anguish of a torturing hour?

Call Philostrate.

Philostr. Here, mighty Theseus.

The. Say, what abridgment have you for this evening?

What mask? what music? How shall we beguile

The lazy time, if not with some delight?

Philostr. There is a brief how many sports are ripe;

Make choice of which your highness will see first.

[Giving a paper.]

The. [Reads.] "The battle with the Centaurs, to be sung

By an Athenian eunuch to the harp."

We 'll none of that: that have I told my love,

In glory of my kinman Hercules.

"The riot of the tipsey Bacchanals,

Tearing the Thracian singer in their rage."

That is an old device; and it was play'd.

When I from Theseus came last a conqueror.

"The thrice three Muses mourning for the death

Of learning, late deceas'd in begging."

That is some satire, keen, and critical,

Not sorting with a nuptial ceremony.

"A tedious brief scene of young Pyramus,

And his love Thise; very tragical mirth."

Merry and tragical! Tedium and brief!

That is, hot ice, and wondrous seething snow.

How shall we find the concert of this discord?

Philostr. A play this is, my lord, some ten words long;

Which is as brief as I have known a play;

But by ten words, my lord, it is too long,

Which makes it tedious; for in all the play

There is not one word apt, one player fitted:

And tragical, my noble lord, it is,

For Pyramus therein doth kill himself.

Which, when I saw rehearse'd, I must confess,

Made mine eyes water; but more merry tears

The passion of loud laughter never shed.

The. What are they, that do play it?

Philostr. Hard-handed men, that work in Athens here,

Which never labour'd in their minds till now;

And now have told'd their youth's forgetful memories

With this same play, against your nuptial.
The. And we will hear it.

Philost. No, my noble lord: It is not for you: I have heard it over, And it is nothing, nothing in the world, Unless you can find sport in their intents. Extremely stretch'd, and cou'd with cruel pain, To do you service.

The. I will hear that play: For never any thing can be amiss, When simpleness and duty tender it. Go, bring them in; and take your places, ladies. [Exit Philost.

Hip. I love not to see wretchedness o'ercharg'd, And duty in his service perishing.

The. Why, gentle sweet, you shall see no such thing.

Hip. He says they can do nothing in this kind.

The. The kinder we, to give them thanks for nothing. Our sport shall be to take what they mistake: And what poor duty cannot do, Noble respect takes it in might, not merit. Where I have come, great clerks have purposed To meet me with premeditated welcomes: Where I have seen them shiver and look pale, Make periods in the midst of sentences, Throttle their practis'd accent in their tears, And, in conclusion, dumbly have broke off, Not paying me a welcome. Trust me, sweet, Out of this silence, yet, I pick'd a welcome; And in the modesty of fearful duty I read as much, as from the rattling tongue Of saucy and audacious eloquence.

Love, therefore, and tongue-tied simplicity, In least speak most, to my capacity.

Enter Philost.

Philost. So please your grace, the prologue is addrest.
The. Let him approach. [Flourish of trumpets. Enter the Prologue.

Prolog. If we offend, it is with our good will. That you should think, we come not to offend, But with good-will. To show our simple skill, That is the true beginning of our end. Consider, then, we come but in despite. We do not come as meddling to content you, Our true intent is: All for your delight, We are not here. That you should here repent you, The actors are at hand; and, by their show, You shall know all, that you are like to know.
The. This fellow doth not stand upon his points. Lys. He hath rid his prologue like a rough eel; he knows not the stop. A good moral, my lord: it is not enough to speak, but to speak true.

Hip. Indeed, he hath played on this prologue, like a child on a recorder; a sound, but not in government.

The. His speech was like a tangled chain, Nothing impair'd, but all disorder'd.

Who is next? Enter the Presenter, Pyramus, and Thisby, Wall, Moonshine, and Lion, as in dumb show.

Pres. 4 Gentles, per chance, you wonder at this show; But wonder on, till truth make all things plain.

This man is Pyramus, if you would know: This beauteous lady Thisby is, certain. This man, with lime and rough-cast, doth present What that wise did these lovers sander; And through wall's chink, poor souls, they are content To whisper, at which let no man wonder. This man, with lantern, dog, and bush of thorn, Presenteth moonshine; for, if you will know, By moonshine did these lovers think no scorn

1 Ready. 2 Flagoelet. 3 Not in f. e. 4 This speech is given in f. a. to the Prologue.

Enter Pyramus.

Pyramus. 4 O, grim-look'd night! O, night with hue so black! O night, which ever art, when day is not! O night! O night! I shall, I shall, I shall! I fear my Thisby's promise is forgot. And thou, O wall! O sweet, O lovely wall! That stand'st between her father's ground and mine; Thou wall, O wall! O sweet, and lovely wall! Show me thy chink to blink through with mine eye.
[Wall holds up his fingers.
Thanks, courteous wall: Jove shield thee well for this! But what see I? No Thisby do I see. O wicked wall! through whom I see no bliss; Curst be thy stones for thus deceiving me!
The. The wall, methinks, being sensible, should curse again.

Pyramus. No, in truth, sir, he should not. 5 Deceiving me, is Thisby's cue: she is to enter now, and I am to spy her through the wall. You shall see, it will fall pat as I told you.

Enter Thisby.

Thisby. This, O wall, full often hast thou heard my moans, For parting my fair Pyramus and me: My cherry lips have often kiss'd thy stones; Thy stones with lime and hair knit up in thee.

Pyramus. 1 I see a voice: now will I to the chink, To spy an I can hear my Thisby's face.

Thisby. 2 This. My love! thou art my love, I think.

Pyramus. Think what thou wilt, I am thy lover's grace; And like Limander am I trusty still.

Thisby. And I like Helen, till the fates me kill.

Pyramus. 3 Not Shafalus to Procrus, but so true.

Thisby. 4 As Shafalus to Procrus, I to you.

Pyramus. 5 O I kiss me through the hole of this vile wall.

Thisby. I kiss the wall's hole, not your lips at all.
Pyg. "Wilt thou at Ninny's tomb meet me straightway?"

This. "Tide life, tide death, I come without delay."

Wall. "Thus have I, wall, my part discharged so; And, being done, thus wall away doth go."

[Exit Wall, Pyramus, and Thisbe.]

The. Now is the wall down between the two neighbours.

Dem. No remedy, my lord, when walls are so willful to hear without warning.

Hip. This is the silliest stuff that e'er I heard.

Thé. The best in this kind are but shadows; and the worst are no worse, if imagination amend them.

Hip. It must be your imagination, then, and not theirs.

The. If we imagine no worse of them, than they of themselves, they may pass for excellent men. Here come two noble beasts in, a man and a lion.

Enter Lion and Moonshine.

Lion. "You, ladies, you, whose gentle hearts do fear The smallest monstrous mouse that creeps on floor, May now, perchance, both quake and tremble here, When lion rough in wilder rage doth roar.

Then know, that I, one Snug, the joiner, am A lion's fell, nor else no lion's dam:

For, if I should as lion come in strife Into this place, 't were pity of your life."

The. A very gentle beast, and of a good conscience.

Dem. The very best at a beast, my lord, that e'er I saw.

Lys. This lion is a very fox for his valour.

The. True, and a goose for his discretion.

Dem. Not so, my lord; for his valour cannot carry his discretion, and the fox carries the goose.

The. His discretion, I am sure, cannot carry his valour, for the goose carries not the fox. It is well: leave it to his discretion, and let us listen to the moon.

Moon. "This lantern doth the horned moon present;"

Dem. He should have worn the horns on his head.

The. He is not crescent, and his horns are invisible within the circumference.

Moon. "This lantern doth the horned moon present; Myself the man i' the moon do seem to be."

The. This is the greatest error of all the rest. The man should be put into the lantern: how is it else the man i' the moon?

Dem. He dares not come there for the candle: for, you see, it is already in snuff.

Hip. I am awary of this moon: would, he would change!

The. It appears by his small light of discretion, that he is in the wane; but yet, in courtesy, in all reason, we must stay the time.

Lys. Proceed, moon.

Moon. All that I have to say, is, to tell you, that the lantern is the moon; I, the man, in the moon; this thorn-bush, my thorn-bush; and this dog, my dog.

Dem. Why, all these should be in the lantern; for all these are in the moon. But, silence! here comes Thisbe.

Enter Thisbe.

This. "This is old Ninny's tomb. Where is my love?"

Lion. "Oh—!" [The lion roars.—Thisbe runs off.

Dem. Well roared, lion.

The. Well run, Thisbe.

Hip. Well shone, moon.—Truly, the moon shines with a good grace. [The Lion tears Thisbe's mantle, and exit.

The. Well mouthed, lion.

Dem. And then came Pyramus.

Ly. And so the lion vanished.

Enter Pyramus.

Pyg. "Sweet moon, I thank thee for thy sunny beams; I thank thee, moon, for shining now so bright, For, by thy gracious, golden, glittering streams, I trust to take of truest Thisby sight.

But stay;—O spite! [Seeing Thisbe's mantle.] But mark, poor knight, What dreadful dole is here! Eyes, do you see? How can it be?

O dainty duck! O dear! Thy mantle good, What! stain'd with blood?

Approach, ye furies fell! O fate! come, come; Cut thread and thrum;

Quail, crush, conclude, and quell!"

The. This passion on: the death of a dear friend, would go near to make a man look sad.

Hip. Beshrew my heart, but I pity the man.

Pyg. "O, wherefore, nature, didst thou lions frame, Since lion vile hath here defouled my dear? Which is—no—what was the fairest Dame, That liv'd, that lov'd, that lik'd, that look'd with cheer.

Come, tears, confound;

Out, sword, and wound

The pap of Pyramus:

Aye, that left pap,

Where heart doth hop:

Thus die I, thus, thus, thus! [Stabs himself Now am I dead, as often.] Now am I fled;

My soul is in the sky:

Tongue, lose thy light!

Moon, take thy flight! [Exit Moonshine.]

Now die, die, die, die, die! [Dies.

Dem. No die, but an ace, for him: for he is bus one.

Lys. Less than an ace, man, for he is dead; he is nothing.

The. With the help of a surgeon, he might yet recover, and yet prove an ass.

Hip. How chance moonshine is gone, before Thisbe comes back and finds her lover?

The. She will find him by starlight.—Here she comes, and her passion ends the play.

Enter Thisbe

Hip. Methinks, she should not use a long one for such a Pyramus: I hope she will be brief.

Dem. A mote will turn the balance, which Pyramus, which Thisbe, is the better: he for a man, God warrant us; she for a woman, God bless us.

Lys. She hath spied him already with those sweet eyes.

Dem. And thus she means, videlicet.—

This. "Asleep, my love? What, dead, my dove? O Pyramus! arise: Speak, speak! Quite dumb? Dead, dead? A tomb Must cover thy sweet eyes. This lily lip, This cherry tip," These yellow cowslip cheeks, Are gone, are gone.

SCENE II.

Lovers, make moan:
His eyes were green as leeks.
O! sisters three,
Come, come to me,
With hands as pale as milk;
Lay them in gore,
Since you have shore
With shears his thread of silk.
Tongue, not a word. —
Come, trusty sword;
Come, blade, my breast imbrue:
And farewell, friends.—
Thus Thisby ends:
Adieu, adieu, adieu.3

[Dies.

The. Moonshine and Lion are left to bury the dead.

Dem. Ay, and wall too.

Bot. No, I assure you; the wall is down that parted their fathers. Will it please you to see the epilogue, or to hear a Bergomask dance between two of our company?
The. No epilogue, I pray you; for your play needs no excuse. Never excuse, for when the players are all dead, there need none to be blamed. Marry, if he that writ it, had played Pyramus, and hanged himself in Thisbe’s garter, it would have been a fine tragedy; and so it is, truly, and very notably discharged. But come, your Bergomask: let your epilogue alone.

[A dance.

The iron tongue of midnight hath told twelve.—
Lovers, to bed: ’t is almost fairy time.
I fear we shall oversleep the coming morn,
As much as we this night have overwatch’d.
This palpable gross play hath well beguil’d
The heavy gait of night.—Sweet friends, to bed.
A fortnight hold we this solemnity,
In nightly revels, and new jollity.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.

Enter Puck, with a broom on his shoulder.

Puck. Now the hungry lion roars,
And the wolf beholds the moon;
Whilst the heavy plowman snores,
All with weary task forborne.

Now the wasted brands do glow,
Whilst the screech-owl, screeching loud,
Puts the wretch, that lies in woe,
In remembrance of a shroud.

Now it is the time of night,
That the graves, all gaping wide,
Every one lets forth his sprite,
In the church-way paths to glide:
And we fairies, that do run
By the triple Hecate’s team,
From the presence of the sun,
Following darkness like a dream,
Now are frolic; not a mouse

1 So called, from the place in Italy it was derived from. 2 The rest of this direction not in f. e. Puck is thus represented in an old woodcut. 3 f. e. all have a period instead of a comma. 4 in safety.

Shall disturb this hallow’d house:
I am sent with broom before,
To sweep the dust behind the door.

Enter Oberon and Titania, with all their train.

Obe. Through the house give gimmering light,
By the dead and drowsy fire;
Every elf, and fairy sprite,
Hop as light as bird from brier;
And this ditty after me
Sing, and dance it trippingly.

Tit. First, rehearse your song by rote,
To each word a warbling note:
Hand in hand with fairy grace
Will we sing, and bless this place.

THE SONG.

Now, until the break of day,
Through this house each fairy stray.
To the best bride-bed will we,
Which by us shall blessed be;
And the issue there create
Ever shall be fortunate.
So shall all the couples three Ever true in loving be;
And the bits of nature’s hand
Shall not in their issue stand:
Never mole, hare-lip, nor scar,
Nor mark prodigious, such as are Despised in nativity,
Shall upon their children be,3
With this field-dew consecrate.
Every fairy take his gait,
And each several chamber bless,
Through this palace with sweet peace;
Ever shall it safely4 rest,
And the owner of it blest.
Trip away; make no stay;
Meet me all by break of day.

[Exeunt Oberon, Titania, and train.

Puck. If we shadows have offended,
Think but this, and all is mended,
That you have but slumber’d here,
While these visions did appear;
And this weak and idle theme,
No more yielding but a dream,
Gentles, do not reprehend:
If you pardon, we will mend.
And, as I’m an honest Puck,
If we have unearned luck
Now to ‘scape the serpent’s tongue,
We will make amends ere long,
Else the Puck a liar call:
So, good night unto you all.
Give me your hands, if we be friends,
And Robin shall restore amends. [Exit.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Venice. A Street.

Enter ANTONIO, Salario, and Salanio.

Ant. In sooth, I know not why I am so sad. It wearies me; you say, it wearies you; But how I caught it, found it, or came by it; What stuff’t is made of, whereof it is born, I am to learn; And such a want-wit sadness makes of me, That I have much ado to know myself.

Salar. Your mind is tossing on the ocean. There, where your argosies1 with portly sail, Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood, Or, as it were, the pageants of the sea, Do overpeer the petty traffickers, That curst’y to them, do them reverence, As they fly by them with their woven wings.

Salar. Believe me, sir, I had such venture forth, The better part of my affections would Be with my hopes abroad. I should be still Plucking the grass to know where sits the wind, Peering in maps for ports, and piers, and roads; And every object that might make me fear Misfortune to my ventures, out of doubt, Would make me sad.

Salar. My wind, cooling my broth, Would blow me to an ague, when I thought What harm a wind too great might do at sea. I should not see the sandy hour-glass run, But I should think of shallows and of flats, And see my wealthy Andrewock’d in sand, Vailing her high top lower than her ribs, To kiss her burial. Should I go to church, And see the holy edifice of stone, And not bethink me straight of dangerous rocks, Which touching but my gentle vessel’s side, Would scatter all her spices on the stream,
You grow exceeding strange: must it be so?

Sal. We'll make our pleasures to attend on yours.

Lor. My lord Bassanio, since you have found Antonio, we two will leave you; but at dinner-time, I pray you, have in mind where we must meet.

Bass. I will not fail you.

Gra. You look not well, signior Antonio; you have too much respect upon the world: they lose it, that do buy it with much care. Believe me, you are marvellously chang'd.

Ant. I hold the world but as the world, Gratiano; a stage, where every man must play a part, and mine a sad one.

Gra. Let me play the fool:

With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come, And let my liver rather heat with wine, Than my heart cool with mortifying groans. Why should a man, whose blood is warm within, Sit like his grandsire cut in alabaster? Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice By being peevish? I tell thee what, Antonio,— I love thee, and it is my love that speaks:—

There are a sort of men, whose visages Do cream and mantle, like a standing pond, And do a willful stillness entertain, With purpose to be dress'd in an opinion Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit; As who should say, "I am sir Oracle." And, when I ope my lips, let no dog bark!"

O! my Antonio, I do know of these, That therefore only are reputed wise, For saying nothing; when I am very sure, If they should speak, 't would almost damn those ears, Which, hearing them, would call their brothers fools.

I'll tell thee more of this another time:

But fish not, with this melancholy bait, For this fool-gudgeon, this opinion.

Come, good Lorenzo.—Fare ye well, awhile: I'll end my exhortation after dinner.

Lor. Well, we will leave you, then, till dinner-time.

I must be one of those same dumb wise men, For Gratiano never lets me speak.

Gra. Well, keep me company but two years more, Then I'll set forth the round of thine own tongue.

Ant. Farewell! I'll grow a talker for this gear.

Gra. Thanks, i' faith; for silence is only commendable In a neat's tongue dried, and a maid not vendible.

[Exeunt Gratiano and Lorenzo.]

Ant. It is that:—any thing now.

Bass. Gratiano speaks an infinite deal of nothing, more than any man in all Venice. His reasons are his two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff: you shall seek all day ere you find them; and when you have them, they are not worth the search.

Ant. Well; tell me now, what lady is the same To whom you swore a secret pilgrimage, That you to-day promised to tell me of?

Bass. 'Tis not unknown to you, Antonio, how much I have disabled mine estate, By something showing a more swelling port Than my faint means would grant continuance:

Nor do I now make man to be abridg'd From such a noble rate; but my chief care Is to come fairly off from the great debts, Wherein my time, something too prodigal, Hath left me gaged. To you, Antonio, I owe the most, in money, and in love;

And from your love I have a warranty To unburthen all my plots and purposes, How to get clear of all the debts I owe.

Ant. I pray you, good Bassanio, let me know it; And if it stand, as you yourself still do, Within the eye of honour, be assur'd, My purse, my person, my extremest means, Lie all unlock'd to your occasions.

Bass. In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft, I shot his fellow of the self-same flight The self-same way with more advised watch, To find the other forth; and by adventuring both, I oft found both. I urge this childhood proof, Because what follows is pure innocence. I owe you much, and, like a wasteful youth, That which I owe is lost; but if you please To shoot another arrow that self way Which you did shoot the first, I do not doubt, As I will watch the aim, or to find both, Or bring your latter hazard back again, And thankfully rest debtor for the first.

Ant. You know me well, and herein spend but time, To wind about my love with circumstance; And, out of doubt, you do me now more wrong, In making question of my uttermost, Than if you had made waste of all I have: Then, do but say to me what I should do, That in your knowledge may by me be done, And I am press'd unto it: therefore, speak.

Bass. In Belmont is a lady richly left, And she is fair, and, fairer than that word, Of wondrous virtues: sometimes from her eyes I did receive fair speechless messages. Her name is Portia; nothing undervalued To Cato's daughter, Brutus' Portia. Nor is the wide world ignorant of her worth, For the four winds blow in from every coast Renowned suitors; and her sunny locks Hang on her temples like a golden fleece; Which makes her seat of Belmont Colchis' strand, And many Jasons come in quest of her.

O, my Antonio! had I but the means To hold a rival place with one of them, I have a mind pressages me such thrift, That I should questionless be fortunate. And then knew'st, that all my fortunes are at sea; Neither have I money, nor commodity To raise a present sum: therefore, go forth; Try what my credit can in Venice do: That shall be rack'd, even to the uttermost, To furnish thee to Belmont, to fair Portia. Go, presently inquire, and so will I, Where money is, and I no question make, To have it of my trust, or for my sake.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Belmont. An Apartment in Portia's House.

Enter Portia and Nerissa.

Por. By my troth, Nerissa, my little body is aweary of this great world.

Ner. You would be, sweet madam, if your miseries were in the same abundance as your good fortunes are. And, yet, for aught I see, they are as sick, that surfeit with too much, as they that starve with nothing: it is no mean' happiness, therefore, to be seated in the mean: superfluity comes sooner by white hairs, but competency lives longer.

Por. Good sentences, and well pronounced.
Ner. They would be better, if well followed.

Por. If to do were as easy as to know what were good to do, chapels had been churches, and poor men’s cottages princes’ palaces. It is a good divine that follows his own instructions: I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done, than be one of the twenty to follow mine own teaching. The brain may devise laws for the blood; but a hot temper leaps o’er a cold decree: such a liruo is madness, the youth, to skip o’er the meshes of good counsel, the cramp. But this reasoning is not in the fashion to choose me a husband—O me! the world choose! I may neither choose whom I would, nor refuse whom I dislike; so is the will of a living daughter curbed by the will of a dead father.

—Is it not hard, Nerissa, that I cannot choose one, nor refuse none?

Ner. Your father was ever virtuous, and holy men at their death have good inspirations: therefore, the lottery, that he hath devised in these three chests of gold, silver, and lead (whereof he chooses his meaning, chooses you) will, no doubt, never be chosen by any rightly, but one whom you shall rightly love. But what warmth is there in your affection towards any of these princely suitors that are already come?

Por. I am apt to censure them, and as thou namest them, I will describe them; and, according to my description, level at my affection.

Ner. First, there is the Neapolitan prince.

Por. Ay, that’s a colt, indeed, for he doth nothing but talk of his horse; and he makes it a great approbation of his own good parts, that he can shoe him himself. I am much afraid, my lady his mother played false with a smith.

Ner. Then, is there the county Palatine.

Por. He doth nothing but frown, as who should say, “An you will not have me, choose.” He hears merry tales, and smiles not: I fear he will prove the weeping philosopher when he grows old, being so full of unmanly sadness in his youth. I had rather be married to a death’s head with a bone in his mouth, than to either of these. God direct me from these two!

Ner. How say you by the French lord, monsieur le Bon?

Por. God made him, and therefore let him pass for a man. In truth, I know it is a sin to be a mocker; but, he! why, he hath a horse better than the Neapolitan’s; a better bad habit of rowing than the count Palatine: he is every man in man; if a throat can sing, he falls straight a capering: he will fence with his own shadow. If I should marry him, I should marry twenty husbands. If he would despise me, I would forgive him; for if he love me to madness, I shall never requite him.

What say you, then, to Faulconbridge, the young baron of England?

Por. You know, I say nothing to him, for he understands not me, nor I him: he hath neither Latin, French, nor Italian; and you will come into the court and swear, that I have a poor penny-worth in the English. He is a proper man’s picture; but, alas! who can converse with a dumb show? How oddly he is suited! I think, he bought his doublet in Italy, his round hose in France, his bonnet in Germany, and his behaviour every where.

Ner. What think you of the Scottish lord, his neighbour?

Por. That he hath a neighbourly charity in him; for he borrowed a box of the ear of the Englishman, and swore he would pay him again, when he was able: I think, the Frenchman became his surety, and sealed under for another.

Ner. How like you the young German, the duke of Saxony’s nephew?

Por. Very vilely in the morning, when he is sober; and most vilely in the afternoon, when he is drunk: when he is best, he is a little worse than a man; and when he is worst, he is little better than a beast. An the worst fall that ever fell, I hope, I shall make shift to go without him.

Ner. If he should offer to choose, and choose the right casket, you should refuse to perform your father’s will, if you should refuse to accept him.

Por. Therefore, for fear of the worst, I pray thee, set a deep glass of Rhenish wine on the contrary casket; for, if the devil be within, and that temptation without, I know he will choose it. I will do anything, Nerissa, ere I will be married to a sponge.

Ner. You need not fear, lady, the having any of these lords: they have acquainted me with their determinations; which is indeed, to return to their homes, and to trouble you with no more suit, unless you may be won by some other sort than your father’s imposition.

Por. If I live to be as old as Sibylla, I will die as chaste as Diana, unless I be obtained by the manner of my father’s will. I am glad this parcel of wooers are so reasonable: for there is not one among them but I dote on his very absence, and I pray God grant them a fair departure.

Ner. Do you not remember, lady, in your father’s time, a Venetian, a scholar, and a soldier, that came hither in company of the marquis of Montferrat?

Por. Yes, yes; it was Bassanio.

Ner. True, madam: he, of all the men that ever my foolish eyes looked upon, was the best deserving a fair lady.

Por. I remember him well, and I remember him worthy of thy praise. 2—How now? what news?

Enter a Servant.

Serv. The four strangers seek for you, madam, to take their leave; and there is a forerunner come from a fifth, the prince of Morocco, who brings word, the prince, his master, will be here to-night.

Por. If I could bid the fifth welcome with so good heart, as I can bid the other four farewell, I should be glad of his approach: if he have the condition of a saint, and the complexion of a devil, I had rather he should shrieve me than wive me. Come, Nerissa. Sirrah, go before. 3—Whiles we shut the gate upon one woorer, another knocks at the door.

SCENE III. Venice. A public Place.

Enter Bassanio and Shylock.

Sky. Three thousand ducats.—well.

Bass. Ay, sir, for three months.

Sky. For three months.—well.

Bass. For the which, as I told you, Antonio shall be bound.

Sky. Antonio shall become bound;—well.

Bass. May you stand me? Will you pleasure me? Shall I know your answer?

Sky. Three thousand ducats for three months, and Antonio bound.

Bass. Your answer to that.

Sky. Antonio is a good man.

1 reason : in f. e. The quartos, as in the text. 2 The rest of the sentence is from the quartos. 3 Knight and Dyce print these three words as the first, and the rest of the speech as the last line of a couplet.
SCENE III.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

Bass. Have you heard any imputation to the contrary?

Shy. Ho! no, no, no, no—my meaning, in saying he is a good man, is to have you understand me, that he is sufficient; yet his means are in supposition. He hath an argosy bound to Tripolis, another to the Indies; I understand moreover upon the Rialto, he hath a third at Mexico, a fourth for England, and other ventures he hath squandered abroad; but ships are but beards, sailors but men: there be land-rats, and water-rats, land-thieves, and water-thieves; I mean, pirates: and then, there is the peril of waters, winds, and rocks. The man is, notwithstanding, sufficient: three thousand ducats.—I think, I may take his bond.

Bass. I will hand one over you may.

Shy. I will be assured, I may; and, that I may be assured, I will bethink me. May I speak with Antonio?

Bass. If it please you to dine with us.

Shy. Yes, to smell pork; to eat of the habitation which your prophet, the Nazarite, conjured the devil into. I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, walk with you, and so following: but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you. What news on the Rialto?—Who is he comes here?

Enter Antonio.

Bass. This is signior Antonio.

Shy. [Aside.] How like a favvning publican he looks! I hate the name of Christian; But more, for that, in low simplicity, He lends out money gratis, and brings down The rate of usance here with us in Venice. If I can catch him once upon the hip, I will feed fat the ancient grudge I bear him. He hates our sacred nation; and he rails, Even there where merchants most do congregate, On me, my bargains, and my well-won thrift, Which he calls interest. Cursed be my tribe, If I forgive him!

Bass. Shylock, do you hear?

Shy. I am debating of my present store, And, by the near guess of my memory, I cannot instantly raise up the gross Of full three thousand ducats. What of that? Tubal, a wealthy Hebrew of my tribe, Will furnish me. But soft! how many months Do you desire?—Rest you fair, good signior;

[To Antonio.]

Your worship was the last man in our mouths.

Ant. Shylock, albeit I neither lend nor borrow, By taking, nor by giving of excess, Yet, to supply the ripe wants of my friend, I'll break a custom. Are you yet possess'd, How much he would?

Shy. Ay, ay, three thousand ducats.

Ant. And for three months.

Shy. I had forgot—three months; you told me so. Well then, your bond; and let me see—But hear you: Methought, you said, you neither lend nor borrow Upon advantage.

Ant. I do never use it.

Shy. When Jacob graz'd his uncle Laban's sheep, This Jacob from our holy Abraham was (As his wise mother wrougth in his behalf,) The third possessor; ay, he was the third. Ant. And what of him? did he take interest?

Shy. No, not take interest; not, as you would say, Directly interest: mark what Jacob did. When Laban and himself were compromis'd, That the sheep were break'd, and pied,

1 Used as scattered; not in a reproachful sense. —Knight. water-thieves and land-thieves: in f. c. 2 f. c. inserted; inferred has here the sense of brought in. 4 Probably the island so called on which was the Exchange, and not the bridge, which was built in 1691.

Should fall as Jacob's hire, the ewes, being rank, In end of autumn turned to the rams; And when the work of generation was Between these woolly breeders in the act, The skilful shepherd peeld me certain wands, And, in the doing of the deed kind, He stuck them up before the falsome ewes, Who, then conceiving, did in eaning time Fall party-colour'd lambs, and those were Jacob's. This was a way to thrive, and he was blest: And thrift is blessing, if men steal it not.

Ant. This was a venture, sir, that Jacob serv'd for; A thing out in his power to bring to pass. But away'd, and fashion'd by the hand of heaven. Was this inferred to make interest good? Or is your gold and silver, ewes and rams?

Shy. I cannot tell: I make it breed as fast,— But note me, signior.

Ant. Mark you this, Bassanio. The devil can cite scripture for his purpose. An evil soul, producing holy witness, Is like a villain with a smiling cheek, A goodly apple rotten at the heart. O, what a goodly outside falsehood hath!

Shy. Thee thousand ducats—'tis a good round sum. Three months from twelve, then let me see the rate. Ant. Well, Shylock, shall we be holding to you?

Shy. Signior Antonio, many a time and oft, On the Rialto, you have rated me About my monies and my usances: Still have I borne it with a patient shrug; For sucrance is a badge of all our tribe. You call'd me—believer, cut-throat dog, And spit upon my Jewish garbnderine, And all for use of that which is mine own. Well then, it now appears, you need my help: Go to, then; you come to me, and you say, "Shylock, we would have monies:" you say so; You, that did void your rheum upon my beard, And foot me as you spurn a stranger cur Over your threshold: monies is your suit. What should I say to you? Should I not say, "Hath a dog money? Is it possible, A cur can lend three thousand ducats?" or Shall I bend low, and in a bondman's key, With bated breath, and whispering humbleness, Say this:—

"Fair sir, you spit on me on Wednesday last; You spurn'd me such a day; another time You call'd me dog; and for these courtesies I'll lend you thus much monies?"

Ant. I am as like to call thee so again, To spit on thee again, to spurn thee too. If thou wilt lend this money, lend it not As to the friend; for when thou take A breed for a barren metal of his friend? But lend it rather to thine enemy; Who if he break, thou may'st with better face Exact the penalty.

Shy. Why, look you, how you storm! I would be friends with you, and have your love, Forget the shame that you have stain'd me with, Supply your present wants, and take no doit Of usance for my monies, And you 'll not hear me. This is kind I offer.

Ant. This were kindness.

Shy. This kindness will I show. Go with me to a notary, seal me there.
Your single bond; and, in a merry sport,
If you repay me not on such a day,
In such a place, such sum or sums as are Express’d in the condition, let the forfeit
Be nominated for an equal pound
Of your fair flesh, to be cut off and taken
In what part of your body pleaseth me.

Ant. Content, in faith: I’ll seal to such a bond,
And say there is much kindness in thee, Jew.

Bass. You shall not seal to such a bond for me:
I’ll rather dwell in my necessity.

Ant. Why, fear not, man; I will not forfeit it:
Within these two months, that’s a month before
This bond expires, I do expect return
Of thrice three times the value of this bond.

Shy. O, father Abraham! what these Christians are,
Whose own hard dealings teaches them suspect
The thoughts of others.—Pray you, tell me this;
If he should break his day, what should I gain
By the exaction of the forfeiture?
A pound of man’s flesh, taken from a man,
Is not so estimable, profitable neither,
As flesh of muttons, beveses, or goats. I say,
To buy his favour I extend this friendship:
If he will take it, so; if not, aside;
And, for my love, I pray you, wrong me not.

Ant. Yes, Shylock, I will seal unto this bond.

Shy. Then meet me forthwith at the notary’s,
Give him direction for this merry bond,
And I will go and purse the duetts straight;
See to my house, left in the fearful guard
Of an unthrifty knife, and presently
I will be with you.

[Exit.]

Ant. Hee thee, gentle Jew.
The Hebrew will turn Christian: he grows kind.

Bass. I like not fair terms, and a villain’s mind.

Ant. Come on: in this there can be no dismay,
My ships come home a month before the day. [Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Belmont. An Apartment in Portia’s House.

Enter the Prince of Morocco, and his followers: PORTIA, NERissa, and other of her train. Flourish Cornets.

Mor. Mislike me not for my complexion,
The shadow’d livery of the burning’ sun,
To whom I am a neighbour, and near bred.
Bring me the fairest creature northward born,
Where Phlebus’ fire scarce thawes the icelets,
And let us make incision for your love,
To prove whose blood is reddest, his, or mine.
I tell thee, lady, this aspect of mine
Hath fear’d the valiant: by my love, I swear,
The best regarded virgins of our clime
Have lov’d it too. I would not change this hue,
Except to seal your thoughts, my gentle queen.

Por. In terms of choice I am not solely led
By nice direction of a maiden’s eyes:
Besides, the lottery of my destiny
Bars me the right of voluntary choosing;
But, if my father had not scanted me,
And hedg’d me by his wit, to yield myself
His wife who wins me by that means I told you,
Yourself, renowned prince, then stood as fair,
As any comber I have look’d on yet,
For my affection.

Mor. Even for that I thank you:
Therefore, I pray you, lead me to the caskets,
To try my fortune. By this simulacrum,
That swel the Sophy, and a Persian prince,
That won three fields of Sultam Soliman,—
I would out-stare the sternest eyes that look.
Out-brave the heart most daring on the earth,
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear,
Yea, mock the lion when he roars for prey,
To win thee, lady. But, alas the while!
If Hercules and Lichas play at dice,
Which is the better man? the greater throw
May turn by fortune from the weaker hand:
So is Aileides beaten by his page;*
And so may I, blind fortune leading me.
Miss that which one unworthy may attain,
And die with grieving.

* burnish’d: in f. e. 2 One of the quarto, and the folio read: “n’t-o-scare.” 3 old ed.: rage. Most have, however, adopted the change; also suggested by Theoalb. 4 courageous: in f. e. 5 This direction not in f. e.
SCENE II.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

Enter Old Gobbo, with a Basket.

Gob. Master, young man, you; I pray you, which is the way to master Jew's?

Laun. [Aside.] O heavens! this is my true begotten father, who, being more than sand-blind, high-gravel blind, knows me not:—I will try confusion 1 with him.

Gob. Master, young gentleman, I pray you, which is the way to master Jew's?

Laun. Turn up on your right hand at the next turning, and at the next turning of all, on your left; marry, at the very next turning, turn of no hand, but turn down indirectly to the Jew's house.

Gob. By God's senti 2 , 'twill be a hard way to hit. Can you tell me whether one Launcelot, that dwells with him, dwell with him, or no?

Laun. Talk you of young master Launcelot?—[Aside.] Mark me now; now will I raise the waters.—[To him.] Talk you of young master Launcelot?

Gob. No master, sir, but a poor man's son: his father, though I say it, is an honest exceeding poor man; and, God be thanked, well to live.

Laun. Well, let his father be what a' will, we talk of young master Launcelot.

Gob. Your worship's friend, and Launcelot, sir.

Laun. But I pray you, ergo, old man, ergo, I beseech you, talk you of young master Launcelot?

Gob. Of Launcelot, an' please your master.

Laun. Ergo, Launcelot. Talk not of master Launcelot, father; for the young gentleman (according to fates and destinies, and such odd sayings, the sisters three, and such branches of learning), is, indeed, deceased; or, as you would say, in plain terms, gone to heaven.

Gob. Marry, God forbid! the boy was the very staff of my age, my very prop.

Laun. [Aside.] Do I look like a caddgel, or a hovel-post, a staff, or a prop?—[To him.] Do you know me, father?

Gob. Alack the day: I know you not, young gentleman. But, I pray you, tell me, is my boy, [God rest his soul!] alive, or dead?

Laun. Do you not know me, father?

Gob. Alack, sir, I am sand-blind; I know you not.

Laun. Nay, indeed, if you had your eyes, you might fail of the knowing me: it is a wise father that knows his own child. Well, old man, I will tell you news of your son. [Kneels.] Give me your blessing: truth will come to light; murder cannot be hid long, a man's son may, but in the end truth will out.

Gob. Pray you, sir, stand up. I am sure you are not Launcelot, my boy.

Laun. Pray you, let 's have no more fooling about it, but give me your blessing: I am Launcelot, your boy that was, your son that is, your child that shall be.

Gob. I cannot think you are my son.

Laun. I know not what I shall think of that; but I am Launcelot, the Jew's man, and, I am sure, Margery, your wife, is my mother.

Gob. Her name is Margery, indeed: I'll be sworn, if thou be Launcelot, thou art mine own flesh and blood. Lord! worshipp'd might he be! what a beast hast thou got: thou hast got more hair on thy chin, than Dobbin my fill 3 -horse has on his tail.

Laun. [Rising.] It should seem, then, that Dobbin's tail grows backward: I am sure he had more hair of his tail, than I have of my face, when I last saw him.

Gob. Lord! how art thou changed! How dost thou

1 One of the comites reads: "conclusions." 2 Saints. 3 f. e.: phill, same as thill, or shaft-horse. 4 Not in f. e. 5 A common Italian present. Some argue from this and other similar references, that Shakespeare visited Italy. 6 Laced, or ornamented.
These things being bought, and orderly bestow'd,
Return in haste, for I do feast to-night.
My best-esteem'd acquaintance: hee thee, go.

Leon. My best endeavours shall be done herein.

Enter Gratiano.

Gra. Where is your master?
Leon. Yonder, sir, he walks. [Exit Leonardo.

Gr. Signior Bassanio!

Bass. Gratiano.

Gr. I have a suit to you.

Bass. You have obtain'd it.

Gr. You must not deny me. I must go with you to Belmont.

Bass. Why, then you must; but hear thee, Gratiano.

Thou art too wild, too rude, and bold of voice;—
Paris, that become thee happily enough,
And in such eyes as ours appear not faults;
But where thou art not known, why, there they showed Something too liberal.—Pray thee, take pain
To alay with some cold drops of modesty.
Thy skipping spirit, lest through thy wild behaviour,
I be misconstrued in the place I go to,
And lose my hopes.

Gr. Signior Bassanio, hear me:
If I do not put on a sober habit,
Talk with respect, and swear but now and then,
Wear prayer-books in my pocket, look demurely;
Nay more, while grace is saying, hood mine eyes
Thus with my hat, and sigh, and say amen;
Use all the observance of civility,
Like one well studied in a sad oastent
To please his grandam, never trust me more.

Bass. Well, we shall see your bearing.

Gr. Nay, but I bar to-night: you shall not gage me
By what we do to-night.

Bass. No, that were pity.

I would entreat you rather to put on
Your boldest suit of mirth, for we have friends
That purpose merriment. But fare you well,
I have some business.

Gr. And I must to Lorenzo, and the rest;
But we will visit you at supper-time. [Exit.}

SCENE III.—The Same. A Room in Shylock's House.

Enter Jessica and Launcelot.

Jes. I am sorry thou wilt leave my father so:
Our house is hell, and thou, a merry devil,
Didst rob it of some taste of tediousness
But fare thee well; there is a ducat for thee.
And, Launcelot, soon at supper shalt thou see
Lorenzo, who is thy new master's guest;
Give him this letter: do it secretly,
And so farewell. I would not have my father
See me in talk with thee.

Launc. Adieu!—tears exhibit my tongue.

Most beautiful pagan,—most sweet Jew! If a Christian Did not play the knave, and get thee, I am much deceived;
but, adieu! these foolish drops do somewhat drown my manly spirit: adieu!

Jes. Farewell, good Launcelot.

Alack, what heinous sin is it in me,
To be ashamed to be my father's child!
But though I am a daughter to his blood,
I am not to his manners. O Lorenzo!
If thou keep promise, I shall end this strife,
Become a Christian, and thy loving wife. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—The Same. A Street.

Enter Gratiano, Lorenzo, Salanro, and Salanio.

Lor. Nay, we will stink away in supper-time,

Disguise us at my lodging, and return
All in an hour.

Gra. We have not made good preparation.
Salar. We have not spoke as yet of torch-bearers.
Salan. 'Tis vile, unless it may be quaintly order'd,
And better, in my mind, not undertook.

Lor. 'Tis now but four o'clock: we have two hours
To furnish us.——

Enter Launcelot, with a letter.

Friend Launcelot, what's the news?

Laun. An it shall please you to break up this,
it shall seem to signify.

[Giving a letter.

Lor. I know the hand: in faith, 'tis a fair hand,
And whiter than the paper it writ on
Is the fair hand that writ.

Gra. Love-news, in faith.

Laun. By your leave, sir.

Lor. Whiter goest thou?

Laun. Marry, sir, to bid my old master, the Jew, to sup to-night with my new master, the Christian.
Lor. Hold here, take this.—Tell gentle Jessica,
I will not fail her:—speak it privately;
Go, Gentlemen. [Exit Launcelot.

Will you prepare for this masque to-night?
I am provided of a torch-bearer.

Salar. Ay, marry, I 'll be gone about it straight.
Salan. And so will I.

Lor. Meet me, and Gratiano,
At Gratiano's lodging some hour hence.

Salar. 'Tis good we do so. [Exeunt Salar. and Salan.

Gra. Was not that letter from fair Jessica?

Lor. I must needs tell thee all. She hath directed,
How I shall take her from her father's house;
What gold and jewels she is furnish'd with;
What page's suit she hath in readiness.

If e'er the Jew her father come to heaven,
It will be for his gentle daughter's sake;
And never dare misfortune cross her foot,
Unless she do it under this excuse,
That she is issue to a faithless Jew.
Come, go with me: persue this, as thou goest.
Fair Jessica shall be my torch-bearer. [Exit.

SCENE V.—The Same. Before Shylock's House.

Enter Shylock and Launcelot.

Shy. Well, thou shalt see, thy eyes shall be thy judge,
The difference of old Shylock and Bassanio.—
What, Jessica!—Thou shalt not gormandize,
As thou hast done with me!—What, Jessica!—
And sleep and snore, and rend apparel out.—
Why, Jessica, I say!

Laun. Why, Jessica!

Laun. Your worship was wont to tell me, that I could do nothing without bidding.

Enter Jessica.

Jes. Call you? What is your will?

Shy. I am bid forth to supper, Jessica:
There are my keys.—But wherefore should I go?
I am not bid for love; they flatter me;
But yet I 'll go in hate, to feed upon
The prodigal Christian.—Jessica, my girl,
Look to my house:—I am right loath to go.
There is some ill a brewing towards my rest,
For I did dream of money-bags to-night.

Laun. I beseech you, sir, go: my young master dothe expect your reproach.

Shy. So do I.

Laun. And they have conspired together:—I will not say, you shall see a masque; but if you do, then it was not for nothing that my nose fell a bleeding on black Monday last, at six o’clock i the morning, falling out that year on Ash-Wednesday was four year in the afternoon. [Jessica:

Shy. What! are there masques?—Hear you me,
Lock up my doors; and when you hear the drum,
And the vile creaking of the wray-neck’d fife,
Clamber not you up to the casement-then,
Nor thrust your head into the public street
To gaze on Christian fools with varnish’d faces,
But stop my house’s ears, I mean my casements;
Let not the sound of shallow folly enter
My sober house.—By Jacob’s staff, I swear,
I have no mind of feasting for’th-night;
But I will go.—Go you before me, sirrah;
Say, I will come.

Laun. I will go before, sir.—Mistress, look out at window, for all this:

There will come a Christian by,
Will be worth a Jewess’ eye. [Exit Laun.

Shy. What says that fool of Hagar’s offspring? ha!

Jes. His words were, farewell, mistress; nothing else.

Shy. The patch is kind enough; but a huge feeder,
Snail-slow in profit, and he sleeps by day
More than the wild-cat; drones have not with me;
Therefore I part with him, and part with him
To one that I would have him help to waste
His borrowed purse.—Well, Jessica, go in:
Perhaps I will return immediately.
Doo, as I bid you; shut doors after you:
Safe bind, safe find,
A proverb never stales in thrifty mind. [Exit.

Jes. Farewell; and if my fortune be not crost,
I have a father, you a daughter, lost. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—The Same.

Enter Gratiano and Salarino, masked.

Gra. This is the pent-house, under which Lorenzo
Desir’d us to make stand.

Salar. His hour is almost past.

For lovers ever run before the clock.

Salar. O! ten times faster Venus’ pigeons fly
To seal love’s bonds new-made, than they are wont
To keep oblig’d faith unforfeited!

Gra. That ever holds: who riseth from a feast,
With that keen appetite that he sits down?

Where is the horse that doth untread again
His tedious manus, with the unbated fire
That he did pace them first? All things that are,
Are with more spirit chased than enjoy’d.

How like a younger, or a prodigal,
The scar’d bark puts from her native bay,
Hugg’d and embraced by the strumpet wind!

How like a prodigal doth she return,
With over-weather’d ribs, and ragged sails,
Lean, rent, and beggar’d by the strumpet wind!

Enter Lorenzo.

Salar. Here comes Lorenzo:—more of this hereafter.

Lor. Sweet friends, your patience for my long abode;
Not I, but my affairs have made you wait:
When you shall please to play the thievies for wives,
I’ll watch as long for you then.—Approach,
Here dwells my father Jew.—Ho! who’s within?

Enter Jessica above, as a boy.

Jes. Who are you? Tell me for more certainty,
Albeit I’ll swear that I do know your tongue.

Lor. Lorenzo, and thy love.

Jes. Lorenzo, certain; and my love, indeed,
For whom love I so much? And now who knows,
But you, Lorenzo, whether I am yours?

Lor. Heaven, and thy thoughts are witness that thou art.

Jes. Here, catch this casket: it is worth the pains.
I am glad’t is night, you do not look on me,
For I am much ashamed of my exchange;
But love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit;
For if they could, Cupid himself would blush
To see me thus transformed to a boy.

Lor. descend, for you must be my torch-bearer.

Jes. What! must I hold a candle to my shames?
They in themselves, good sooth, are too light.
Why, ’tis an office of discovery, love,
And I should be obscure’d.

Lor. So are you, sweet,
Even in the garnish of a lovely boy.
But come at once;
For the close night doth play the run-away,
And we are stay’d for at Bassanio’s feast.

Jes. I will make fast the doors, and gild myself
With some more ducats, and be with you straight.

[Exit, from above.

Gra. Now, by my hood, a Gentile, and no Jew.

Lor. Beshrew me, but I love her heartily;
For she is wise, if I can judge of her,
And fair she is, if that mine eyes be true,
And true she is, as she hath prov’d herself;
And therefore, like herself, wise, fair, and true,
Shall she be placed in my constant soul.

Enter Jessica, to them below.

What, art thou come?—On, gentlemen: away!
Our masquing mates by this time for us stay.

[Exit with Jessica and Salarino.

Enter Antonio.

Ant. Who’s there?

Gra. Signior Antonio?

Ant. Fie, fie, Gratiano! where are all the rest?
’T is nine o’clock; our friends all stay for you.
No masque to-night: the wind is come about,
Bassanio presentely will go aboad:
I have sent twenty out to seek for you.

Gra. I am glad on’t: I desire no more delight,
Than to be under sail, and gone to-night. [Exit.

SCENE VII.—Belmont. An Apartment in Portia’s House.

Enter Portia, with the Prince of Morocco, and both their trains.

Por. Go, draw aside the curtains, and discover
The several caskets to this noble prince. [Curtains
Now make your choice. [drawn aside.

Mor. The first, of gold, who this inscription bears—
“Who chooseth me shall gain what many men desire.”

The second, silver, which this promise carries—
“Who chooseth me, shall get as much as he deserves.”

This third, dull lead, with warning all as blunt:—
“Who chooseth me must give and hazard all he hath.”

How shall I know if I do choose the right?

Por. The one of them contains my picture, prince;
If you choose that, then I am yours withal.

Mor. Some god direct my judgment! Let me see,
I will survey th’ inscriptions back again:
What says this leaden casket?

---

1 Stow says, Black Monday got its name from the following occurrence: On Easter-Monday, April 14, 1699, Edward III., with his host, lay before the city of Paris, and the day "was full dark of mist and hail, and so bitter cold that many men died on their horses' backs with the cold." 2 Past bind, fast find: in f. s. 3 This direction not in f. s.
With him is Gratiano gone along;
And in their ship, I'm sure, Lorenzo is not.
Salar. The villain Jew with outeries rais'd the duke,
Who went with him to search Bassanio's ship.
Salar. He came too late, the ship was under sail:
But there the duke was given to understand,
That in a gondola were seen together
Lorenzo and his amorous Jessica.
Besides, Antonio certified the duke,
They were not with Bassanio in his ship.
Salar. I never heard a passion so confus'd,
So strange, outrageous, and so variable,
As the dog Jew did utter in the streets:
"My daughter!—O my daughter! Fled
With a Christian?—O my Christian ducats!
Justice! the law! my ducats, and my daughter!
A sealed bag, two sealed bags of ducats,
Of double ducats, stol'n from me by my daughter!
And jewels too! two rich and precious stones,
Stol'n by my daughter!—Justice! find the girl!
She hath the stones upon her, and the ducats!"
Salar. Why, all the boys in Venice follow him,
Crying, his stones, his daughter, and his ducats.
Salar. Let good Antonio look he keep his day,
Or he shall pay for this.
Salar. Marry, well remember'd.
I reason'd with a Frenchman yesterday,
Who told me, in the narrow seas, that part
The French and English, there miscarried
A vessel of our country, richly fraught.
I thought upon Antonio when he told me,
And wish'd in silence that it were not his.
Salar. You were best to tell Antonio what you hear;
Yet do not suddenly, for it may grieve him.
Salar. A kinder gentleman tries not the earth.
I saw Bassanio and Antonio part.
Bassanio told him, he would make some speed
Of his return: he answer'd—"Do not so;
Slubber not business for my sake, Bassanio,
But stay the very riping of the time:
And for the Jew's bond, which he hath of me,
Let it not enter in your mind of love;
Be merry; and apply your pensivest thoughts
To curstness, and such fair ostens of love
As shall conveniently become you there."
And even there, his eye being big with tears,
Turning his face, he put his hand behind him,
And with affection wondrous sensible
He wrung Bassanio's hand; and so they parted.
Salar. I think, he only loves the world for him.
I pray thee, let us go, and find him out,
And quicken his embrac'd heaviness
With some delight or other.
Salar. Do we so. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IX.—Belmont. An Apartment in Portia's House.

Enter Nerissa, with a Servitor.
Ner. Quick, quick; I pray thee; draw the curtains straight.
The prince of Arragon hath ta'en his oath,
And comes to his election presently.
Enter the Prince of Arragon, Portia, and their trains.
Flourish cornets. Curtains withdrawn.
Por. Behold, there stand the caskets, noble prince.
If you choose that wherein I am contain'd,
Straight shall our nuptial rites be solemniz'd;
But if you fail, without more speech, my lord,
You must be gone from hence immediately.
Ar. I am enjoin'd by oath to observe three things:
THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

First, never to unfold to any one
Which casket 't was I chose: next, if I fail
Of the right casket, never in my life
To woo a maid in way of marriage: lastly,
If I do fail in fortune of my choice,
Immediately to leave you and be gone.

Por. To these injunctions ever one doth swear,
That comes to hazard for my worthless self.

Ar. And so have I address'd me. Fortune now
To my heart's hope!—Gold, silver and base lead.

"Who chooseth me must give and hazard all he hath;"
You shall look fairer, ere I give, or hazard.

What says the golden chest? ha! let me see:—
"Who chooseth me shall gain what many men desire."
What many men desire:—that many may be meant
By the fool multitude, that choose by show,
Not learning more than the fond eye doth teach;
Which prize not this: interior, but, like the martlet,
Builds in the weather, on the outward wall,
Even in the force and road of casualty.
I will not choose what many men desire,
Because I will not jump with common spirits,
And rank me with the barbarous multitudes.

Why, then to thee, thou silver treasure-house;
Tell me once more what title thou dost bear:
"Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves?"
And well said too; for who shall go about
To even fortune, and be honourable,
Without the stamp of merit? Let none presume
To wear an undeserved dignity.

O! that estates, degrees, and offices,
Were not deriv'd corruptly; and that clear honour
Were purchas'd by the merit of the wearer!
How many then should cover, that stand bare;
How many be commend'd, that command;
How much low peasantry would then be gild'd
From the true seed of honour; and how much honour
Pick'd from the chaff and ruin of the times,
To be new varnish'd! Well, but to my choice:
"Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves."
I will assume desert:—gives me a key for this,
And instantly unlock my fortunes here.

[He opens the silver casket.]

Por. Too long a pause for that which you find there.

Ar. What's here? the portrait of a blinking idiot,
Presenting me a schedule? I will read it.

How much unlike art thou to Portia?
How much unlike my hopes, and my devisings!

"Who chooseth me shall have as much as he deserves."
Did I deserve no more than a fool's head?
Is that my prize? are my deserts no better?

Por. To offend, and judge, are distinct offices,
And of opposed natures.

Ar. What is here?

"The fire seven times tried this:
Seven times tried that judgment is,
That did never choose amiss.
Some there be that shadows kiss;
Such have but a shadow's bliss.
There be fools alive, I wis,
Silver'd o'er; and so was this.
Take what wife you will to bed,
I will ever be your head:
So begone: you are sped."

Still more fool I shall appear
By the time I linger here:
With on fool's head I came to woo,
But I go away with two.—

Sweet, adieu. I'll keep my oath,
Patiently to bear my wroth.

[Exeunt Arragon, and train.]

Por. Thus hath the candle sing'd the moth.
O, these deliberate fools! when they do choose,
They have the wisdom by their wit to lose.

Ner. The ancient saying is no heresy;
Hanging and wiving go by destiny. drawn.

Por. Come, draw the curtain, Nerissa. [Curtains

Enter a Messenger.]

Mess. Where is my lady?

Por. Here; what would my lord?

Mess. Madam, there is aught at your gate
A young Venetian, one that comes before
To signify the approaching of his lord,
From whom he bringeth sensible regrets;
To wit, (besides commendis, and courteous breath,)
Gifts of rich value; yet I have not seen
So likely an ambassador of love,
A day in April never came so sweet,
To show how costly summer was at hand,
As this fore-supper comes before his lord.

Por. No more, I pray thee: I am half afeard,
Thou wilt say anon he is some kin to thee,
Thou spend'st such high-day wit in praising him.—

Come, come, Nerissa; for I long to see
Cupid's quick post, that comes so mannerly.

Ner. Bassanio, lord Love, if thy will it be. [Exeunt.]
Salan. And Shylock, for his own part, knew the bird was fled; and then, it is the complexion of them all to leave the dam.

Shy. She is damned for it.

Salan. That's certain, if the devil may be her judge.

Shy. My own flesh and blood to rebel!

Salan. Out upon it, old carrion! rebels it at these years?

Shy. I say, my daughter is my flesh and blood.

Salan. There is more difference between thy flesh and her, than between jet and ivory; more between your bloods, than there is between red wine and rhenish. But tell us, do you hear whether Antonio has any loss or no?

Shy. There I have another bad match: a bankrupt, a prodigal, who dare scarce show his head on the Rialto;—a beggar, that was won't to come so smug upon the mart.—Let him look to his bond: he was wont to call me usurer;—let him look to his bond: he was wont to lend money for a Christian courtesy;—let him look to his bond.

Salan. Why, I am sure, if he forfeit, thou wilt not take his flesh: what's that good for?

Shy. To bait fish withal; if it will feed nothing else, it will feed my revenge. He hath disgraced me, and hindered me half a million; laughed at my losses, mocked at my griefs, thwarted my bargains, cooled my friends, heated mine enemies; and what's his reason? I am a Jew. Hath not a Jew eyes? hath not a Jew hands, organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions? fed with the same food, hurt with the same winter and summer, as a Christian is? if you prick us, do we not bleed? if you tickle us, do we not laugh? if you poison us, do we not die? and if you wrong us, shall we not revenge? If we are like you in the rest, we will resemble you in that. If a Jew wrong a Christian, what is his humility? revenge. If a Christian wrong a Jew, what should his sufferance be by Christian example? why, revenge. The villainy you teach me, I will execute; and it shall go hard but I will better the instruction.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Gentlemen, my master Antonio is at his house, and desires to speak with you both.

Salan. We have been up and down to seek him.

Salan. Here comes another of the tribe: a third cannot be matched, unless the devil himself turn Jew. [Exeunt.]

Shy. How now, Tubal? what news from Genoa? hast thou found my daughter?

Tub. I often came where I did hear of her, but cannot find her.

Shy. Why there, there, there, there! a diamond gone, cost me two thousand ducats in Frankfort. The curse never fell upon our nation till now; I never felt it till now:—two thousand ducats in that; and other precious, precious jewels.—I would, my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her ear! would she be hearseed at my foot, and the ducats in her coffin! No news of them?—Why, so;—and I know not what's spent in the search: Why then—loss upon loss: the thief gone with so much, and so much to find the thief, and no satisfaction, no revenge; nor no ill luck stirring, but what lights o' my shoulders; no sighs, but o' my breathing; no tears, but o' my shedding.

Tub. Yes, other men have ill luck too. Antonio, as I heard in Genoa,—

Shy. What, what, what? ill luck, ill luck?

Tub. —hath an argosy cast away, coming from Tripolis.

Shy. I thank God! I thank God! Is it true? is it true?

Tub. I spoke with some of the sailors that escaped the wreck.

Shy. I thank thee, good Tubal.—Good news, good news! ha! ha!—Where? in Genoa?

Tub. Your daughter spent in Genoa, as I heard, one night, fourscore ducats.

Shy. Thou stick'st a dagger in me. I shall never see any golden coin. Fourscore ducats at a sitting? fourscore ducats!

Tub. There came divers of Antonio's creditors in my company to Venice, that swear he cannot choose but break.

Shy. I am very glad of it. I'll plague him; I'll torture him: I am glad of it.

Tub. One of them showed me a ring, that he had of your daughter for a monkey.

Shy. Out upon her! Thou tormentst me, Tubal: it was my torquise; I had it of Leah, when I was a bachelor: I would not have given it for a wilderness of monkeys.

Tub. But Antonio is certainly undone.

Shy. Nay, that's true, that's very true. Go, Tubal, see an officer; bespeak him a fortnight before. I will have the heart of him, if he forfeit; for, were he out of Venice, I can make what merchandise I will. Go, Tubal, and meet me at our synagogue: go, good Tubal; at our synagogue, Tubal. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Belmont. An Apartment in Portia's House.

Enter Bassanio, Portia, Gratiano, Nerissa, and their Attendants.

Por. I pray you tarry: pause a day or two, before you hazard; for, in choosing wrong, I lose your company; therefore, forbear a while.

There's something tells me, (but it is not love,) I would not lose you, and you know yourself, Hate counsels not in such a quality.

But lest you should not understand me well, And yet a maiden hath no tongue but thought, I would detain you here some month or two, Before you venture for me. I could teach you, How to choose right, but then I am forewarned; So will I never be: so may you miss me; But if you do, you'll make me wish a sin, That I had been forewarned. Beshrew your eyes, They have o'er-look'd me, and divided me: One half of me is yours, the other half yours.—Mine own, I would say; but if mine, then yours, And so all yours! O! these naughty times Put bars between the owners and their rights; And so, though yours, not yours.—Prove it so, Let fortune go to hell for it,—not I. I speak too long; but 'tis to pause the time, To eke it, and to draw it out in length, To stay you from election.

Mes. Let me choose:

Por. For, as I am, I live upon the rack.

Bass. Upon the rack, Bassanio? then confess What treason there is mingled with your love.

Bass. None. but that ugly treachry of mistrust, Which makes me fear the enjoyment of my love.

1 that used: in f. e. 2 It was a popular superstition, that this stone "doth move when there is any peril prepared to him who weareth it." 3 Fenton's Secret Wonders of Nature; 1569. 4 Charmed. 5 poise: in f. e.
There may as well be amity and life
'Tween snow and fire, as thou and my love.

Por. Ay, but I fear you speak upon the rack,
Where men enforced do speak any thing.

Bass. Promise me life, and I'll confess the truth.

Por. Well then, confess, and live.

Confess, and love.

Had been the very sum of my confession.
O, happy torment, when my torturer
Doth teach me answers for deliverance! [drawn aside.
But let me to my fortune and the caskets. [Curtains

Por. Away then. I am lock'd in one of them:
If you do love me, you will find me out.—
Nerissa, and the rest, stand all aloof—
Let music sound while he doth make his choice;
Then, if he lose, he makes a swan-like end,
Fading in music: that the comparison
May stand more proper, my eye shall be the stream,
And watery death-bed for him. He may win,
And what is music then? then music is Even as the flourish when true subjects bow
To a new-crowned monarch: such it is,
As are those dulcet sounds in break of day,
That creep into the dreaming bridegroom's ear,
And summon him to marriage. Now he goes,
With no less presence, but with much more love,
Than young Alcides, when he did redeem
The virgin tribute paid by howling Troy
To the sea-monster, that she might be office.
The rest aloof are the Dardanian wives,
With bleared visages, come forth to view
The issue of th' exploit. Go, Hercules!
Live thou, I live:—with much, much more dismay
I view the fight, than thou that mak'st the fray.

A Song, the whilst Bassanio comments on the caskets

Tell me, where is fancy bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head?
How begot, how nourished?
Reply, reply.

It is engender'd in the eyes,
With gazing fed; and fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies.
Let us all ring fancy's knell;
I'll begin it,—Ding, dong, bell.

All. Ding, dong, bell.

Bass. So may the outward shows be least themselves:
The world is still deceiv'd with ornament.
In law, what plea so tainted and corrupt,
But, being season'd with a gracious voice,
Obscures the show of evil? In religion,
What damned error, but some sober brow
Will bless it, and approve it with a text,
Hiding the grossness with fair ornament?
There is no vice so simple, but assumes
Some mark of virtue on his outward parts.
How many cowards, whose hearts are all as false
As stairs of sand, wear yet upon their chins
The beards of Hercules, and frowning Mars,
Who, inward search'd, have livers white as milk;
And these assume but valour's excrement,
To render them redoubt'd. Look on beauty,
And you shall see't is purchased by the weight;
Which therein works a miracle in nature,
Making them lightest that wear most of it:
So are those crissed snaky golden locks,
Which make such wanton gambols with the wind.

Upon supposed fairness, often known
To be the dowry of a second head,
The swell that bred them, in the gondola.
Thus ornament is but the guiling' shore
To a most dangerous sea, the beauteous scarf
Veiling an Indian*: beauty, in a word,
The seeming truth which cunning times put on
To entrap the wisest. Therefore, thou gaudy gold,
Hard food for Midas, I will none of thee.
Nor none of thee, thou pale and common drudge
'Tween man and man: but thou, thou meagre lead,
Which rather threat'nest than dost promise aught,
Thy paleness moves me more than eloquence,
And here choose I. Joy be the consequence!

Por. Por. Show me, lord Bassanio, what is the other side of the piece,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash-embraç'd despair,
And shuddering fear, and green-eyed jealousy.
O love! be moderate; allay thy ecstacy,
In measure rain thy joy; scent this excess:
I feel too much thy blessing; make it less,
For fear I surfeit!

Bass. What find I here? [He opens the leaden casket.
Fair Portia's counterfeit! What demi-god
Hath come so near creation? Move these eyes?
Or whether, riding on the balls of mine,
Seem they in motion? Here are sev'd lips,
Parted with sugar breath; so sweet a bar
Should suck such sweet friends. Here, in her hairs,
The rainbow shines, and that one lock which
A golden mesh I entrap the hearts of men,
Faster than gnats in cobwebs; but her eyes!—
How could he see to do them; having made one,
Methinks, it should have power to steal both his,
And leave itself unfinish'd:* yet look, how far
The substance of my praise doth wrong this shadow
In underprizing it, so far this shadow
Both limp behind the substance.—Here's the scroll,
The continent and summary of my fortune.

"You that choose not by the view,
Chance as fair, and choose as true!
Since this fortune falls to you,
Be content, and seek no new.
If you be well pleased with this,
And hold your fortune for your bliss,
Turn you where your lady is,
And claim her with a loving kiss."

A gentle scroll.—Fair lady, by your leave;
I come by note, to give, and to receive. [Kissing her
Like one of two contending in a prize,
That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes,
Hearing applause, and universal shout,
Giddy in spirit, still gazing, in a doubt
Whether those peals of praise be his or no;
So, thrice fair lady, stand I, even so,
As doubtful whether what I see be true,
Un'thor confirm'd, sign'd, ratified by you.

Por. You see me, lord Bassanio, where I stand,
Such as I am: though, for myself alone
I would not be ambitious in my wish,
To wish myself much better; yet for you
I would be tribled twenty times myself;
A thousand times more fair, ten thousand times more rich,
That only to stand high in your account,
I might in virtues, beauties, livings, friends,
Exceed account: but the full sum of me
Is sum of nothing; which, to term in gross,
Is an unlesson'd girl, uneschow'd, unpardt'sd:
Happy in this, she is not yet so old

This direction not in f. e. guiled: in f. e. f. e. have: "Veiling an Indian beauty; in a word. unformi'd: in f. e. Stevens suggested the same change. So the quartus; the folio; "You see, my lord Bassanio."
THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

ACT III.

But she may learn; happier than this,
She is not bred so dull but she can learn;
Happiest of all, in that her gentle spirit
Commits itself to yours to be directed.
As from her lord, her governor, her king.
Myself, and what is mine, to you, and yours
Is now converted: but now I was the lord
Of this fair mansion, master of my servants,
Queen o'er myself; and even now, but now,
This house, these servants, and this same myself,
Are yours, my lord. I give them with this ring,
Which when you part from, lose, or give away,
Let it presage the ruin of your love,
And be my vantage to exclaim on you. [Giving it.]

Bass. Madam, you have bereft me of all words:
Only my blood speaks to you in my veins;
And there is such confusion in my powers,
As after some oration, fairly spoke
By a beloved prince, there doth appear
Among the buzzing pleased multitude;
Where every something, being bient together,
Turns to a null of nothing, save of joy,
Express'd, and not express'd. But when this ring
Parts from this finger, then parts life from hence:
O! then be bold to say, Bassanio’s dead.

Ner. My lord and lady, it is now our time,
That have stood by; and seen our wishes prosper,
To cry, good joy. Good joy, my lord, and lady!

Grat. My lord Bassanio, and my gentle lady!
I wish you all the joy that you can wish.
For, I am sure, you can wish none from me;
And, when your honours mean to solemnize
The bargain of your faith, I do beseech you,
Even at that time I may be married too.

Bass. With all my heart, so thou canst get a wife.

Grat. I thank your lordship, you have got me one.
My eyes, my lord, can look as swift as yours:
You saw the mistress, I beheld the maid;
You lov’d, I lov’d; for intermission
No more pertains to me, my lord, than you.
Your fortune stood upon the caskets there,
And so did mine too, as the matter falls;
For you were here, and I was there again.
And swearing, till my very tongue was dry
With oaths of love, at last, if promise last,
I get a promise of this fair one here,
To have her love, provided that your fortune
Achiev’d her mistress.

Por. Is this true, Nerissa?

Ner. Madam, it is, so you stand pleas’d withal.

Bass. And do you know, Gratiano, mean good faith?

Grat. Yes, faith, my lord. [Marriage.

Bass. Our feast shall be much honour’d in your house.
We ’ll play with them the first boy for a thousand ducats.

Ner. What, and stake down?

Grat. No; we shall ne’er win at that sport, and stake down.—
But who comes here? Lorenzo, and his infidel?
What! and my old Venetian friend, Salerio?

Enter Lorenzo, Jessica, and Salerio.

Bass. Lorenzo, and Salerio, welcome hither,
If that the youth of my new interest here
Have power to bid you welcome.—By your leave
I bid my very friends and countrymen,
Sweet Portia, welcome.

Por. So do I, my lord:
They are entirely welcome.

Lor. I thank your honour.—For my part, my lord,

1 all is: in f. e. 2 Not in f. e. 3 roof: in f. e.; in the folio rough. 4 Not in f. e.
SCENE IV.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE. 179

Por. Is it your dear friend that is thus in trouble?
Bass. The dearest friend to me, the kindest man,
The best condition'd and unwearied spirit,
In doing courtesies; and one in whom
The ancient Roman honour more appears,
Than any that draws breath in Italy.
Por. What sum owes he the Jew?
Bass. For me, three thousand ducats.
Por. What! no more?
Pay him six thousand, and deface the bond:
Double six thousand, and then trouble that,
Before a friend of this description
Shall lose a hair through my Bassanio's fault.
First, go with me to church, and call me wife,
And then away to Venice to your friend;
For never shall you lie by Portia's side
With an unquiet soul. You shall have gold
To pay the petty debt twenty times over:
When it is paid, bring your true friend along.
My maid Nerissa and myself, mean time,
Will live as maids and widows. Come, away!
For you shall hence upon your wedding-day.
Bid all your friends welcome, show a merry cheer;
Since you are dear bought, I will love you dearly.
But let me hear the letter of your friend.
Bass. [Reads.] 4 Sweet Bassanio, my ships have all miscarried, my creditors grow cruel, my estate is very low, my bond to the Jew is forfeit; and since in paying it it is impossible I should live, all debts are cleared between you and I, if I might but see you at my death. Notwithstanding, use your pleasure: if your love do not persuade you to come, let not my letter.
Por. O love! despacth all business, and begone.
Bass. Since I have your good leave to go away,
I will make haste; but till I come again,
No bad shall e'er be guilty of my stay,
Nor rest betroposer twixt us twain. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Venice. A Street.

Enter Shylock, Salanio, Antonio, and Iailer.

Shy. Iailor. look to him: tell not me of mercy.
This is the foot that lent out money gratis.

Iailer, look to him.

Ant. Hear me yet, good Shylock.
Shy. I'll have my bond; speak not against my bond;
I have sworn an oath that I will have my bond.
Thou call'dst me dog before thou hadst a cause,
But, since I am a dog, beware my fangs.
The duke shall grant me justice.—I do wonder,
Thou naughty Iailer, that thou art so fond
To come abroad with him at his request.
Ant. I pray thee, hear me speak.
Shy. I'll have my bond; I will not hear thee speak;
I'll have my bond, and therefore speak no more.
I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To Christian intercessors. Follow not;
I'll have no speaking: I will have my bond.

[Exeunt Shylock.
Salan. It is the most impenetrable cur,
That ever kept with men.
Ant. Let him alone:
I'll follow him no more with bootless prayers.
He seeks my life; his reason well I know.
I oft deliver'd from his forfeitures
Many that have at times made me to;
Therefore he hates me.
Salan. I am sure, the duke
Will never grant this forfeiture to hold.
Ant. The duke cannot deny the course of law;
For the commodity that strangers have
With us in Venice, if it be denied,
Will much impeach the justice of the state;
Since, that the trade and profit of the city
Consistseth of all nations. Therefore, go:
These griefs and losses have so 'bated me,
That I shall hardly spare a pound of flesh
To-morrow to my bloody creditor.—
Well, jailor, on.—Pray God, Bassanio come
To see me pay his debt, and then I care not. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Belmont. A Room in Portia's House.

Enter Portia, Nerissa, Lorenzo, Jessica, and Balthazar.

Lor. Madam, although I speak it in your presence,
You have a noble and a true conceit
Of god-like amity; which appears most strongly
In bearing thus the absence of your lord.
But, if you knew to whom you show this honour,
How true a gentleman you send relief,
How dear a lover of my lord, your husband,
I know, you would be prouder of the work,
Than customary bounty can enforce you.
Por. I never did repent for doing good,
Nor shall not now: for in companions
That do converse and waste the time together,
Whose souls do bear an equal yoke of love,
There must be needs a like proportion
Of lineaments, of manners, and of spirit;
Which makes me think, that this Antonio,
Being the bosom lover of my lord,
Must needs be like my lord. If it be so,
How little is the cost I have bestowed,
In purchasing the semblance of my soul
From out the state of hellish cruelty!
This comes too near the praising of myself,
Therefore, no more of it: hear other things.—
Lorenzo, I commit into your hands
The husbandry and manage of my house,
Until my lord's return: for mine own part,
I have toward heaven breath'd a sacred vow
To live in prayer and contemplation,
Only attended by Nerissa here,
Unif her husband and my lord's return.
There is a monastery two miles off,
And there we will abide. I do desire you
Not to deny this imposition,
The which my love, and some necessity,
Now lays upon you.
Lor. Madam, with all my heart:
I shall obey you in all fair commands.
Por. My people do already know my mind,
And will acknowledge you and Jessica
In place of lord Bassanio and myself.
So fare you well, till we shall meet again.
Lor. Fair thoughts, and happy hours, attend on you!
Jes. I wish your ladyship all heart's content.
Por. I thank you for your wish, and am well-pleas'd
To wish it back on you: fare you well, Jessica.—
[Exeunt Jessica and Lorenzo.

Now, Balthazar,
As I have ever found thee honest, true,
So let me find thee still. Take this same letter,
And use thou all the endeavours of a man,
In speed to Padua: see thou render this
Into my cousin's hand, doctor Bellario;
And, lock, what notes and garniture doth he give thee.
THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

ACT III.

180

Bring them, I pray thee, with imagin'd speed
Unto the Transeet, to the common ferry
Which trades to Venice. Waste no time in words,
But get thee gone: I shall be there before thee.

Balth. Madam, I go with all convenient speed. [Exit.

Por. Come on, Nerissa: I have work in hand,
That you yet know not of. We'll see our husbands,
Before they think of us.

Ner. Shall they see us?

Por. They shall, Nerissa: but in such a habit,
That they shall think we are accomplished
With that we lack. I'll hold thee any wager,
When we are both accosted like young men,
I'll prove the prettier fellow of the two,
And wear my dagger with the braver grace;
And speak between the change of man and boy,
With a reed voice; and turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride; and speak of frays,
Like a fine bragging youth; and tell quaint lies,
How honourable ladies sought my love,
Which I denying, they fell sick and died;
I could not do withal:—then, I'll repent,
And wish, for all that, that I had not kill'd them.
And twenty of these puny lyes I'll tell,
That men shall swear, I have discontinued school
Above a twelvemonth. I have within my mind
A thousand raw tricks of these bragging Jacks,
Which I will practise.

Ner. Why, shall we turn to men?

Por. Pie! what a question 's that,
If thou wert near a lewd interpreter.
But come: I'll tell thee all my whole device
When I am in my coach, which stays for us
At the park gate; and therefore haste away,
For we must measure twenty miles to-day. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The Same. A Garden.

Enter LAUNCELOT and JESSICA.

Laun. Yes, truly; for, look you, the sins of the father are to be laid upon the children; therefore, I promise you,
I fear you. I was always plain with you, and so now
I speak my agitation of the matter: therefore, be of good cheer; for, truly, I think you are damned.
There is but one hope in it that can do you any good,
and that is but a kind of bastard hope neither.

Jess. And what hope is that, I pray thee?

Laun. Marry, you may partly hope that your father got you not; that you are not the Jew's daughter.

Jess. That were a kind of bastard hope, indeed: so the sins of my mother should be visited upon me.

Laun. Truly, then, I fear you are damned both by father and mother: thus when I shun Seylla, your father, I fall into Charybdis, your mother. Well, you are gone both ways.

Jess. I shall be saved by my husband; he hath made me a Christian.

Laun. Truly, the more to blame he: we were Christians enow before; 'c'en as many as could well live one by another. This making of Christians will raise the price of hogs: if we grow all to be pork-eaters, we shall not shortly have a rasher on the coals for money.

Enter LORENZO.

Jess. I'll tell my husband, Launecot, what you say:
here he comes.
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Venice. A Court of Justice.

Enter the Duke; the Magnificoes; Antonio, Bassanio, Gratiano, Salarino, Salanio, and others.

Duke. What, is Antonio here?

Ant. Ready, so please your grace.

Duke. I am sorry for thee: thou art come to answer a stony adversary, an inhuman wretch Uncapable of pity, void and empty From any dram of mercy.

Ant. I have heard,
Your grace hath ta'en great pains to qualify His rigorous course; but since he stands obdurate, And that no lawful means can carry me Out of his envy's reach, I do oppose
My patience to his fury, and am arm'd To suffer with a quietness of spirit, The very tyranny and rage of his

Duke. Go one, and call the Jew into the court.

Salar. He's ready at the door. He comes, my lord.

Enter Shylock.

Duke. Make room, and let him stand before our face.—

Shylock, the world thinks, and I think so too,
That thou but lead'st this fashion of thy malice To the last hour of act; and then, 'tis thought, Thou 'lt show thy mercy and remore, more strange Than is thy strange apparent cruelty; And where thou now exact'st the penalty, Which is a pound of this poor merchant's flesh, Thou will not only lose2 the forfeiture, But, touch'd with human gentleness and love, Forgive a moiety of the principal; Glancing an eye of pity on his losses, That have of late so huddled on his back, Enow to press a royal merchant down, And pluck commiseration of his state From brassy bosoms, and rough hearts of flint, From stubborn Turks and Tartars, never train'd To offices of tender courtesy.

We all expect a gentle answer, Jew.

Shy. I have possess'd your grace of what I purpose; And by our holy Sabbath I have sworn To have the due and forfeit of my bond: If you deny it, let the danger light Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. You'll ask me, why I rather choose to have A weight of carrion flesh, than to receive Three thousand ducats? I'll not answer that: But, say, it is my humour: is it answer'd?

What if my house be troubled with a rat, And I be pleas'd to give ten thousand ducats To have it baned? What, are you answer'd yet?

Some men there are love not a gaping pig; Some, that are mad if they behold a cat; And others, when the bag-pipe sings1 the nose, Cannot contain their urine for affection: Masters of passion sway3 it to the mood Of what they like, or what they hate. Now, for your answer: As there is no firm reason to be render'd, Why he cannot abide a gaping pig; 1

1 Hatred. 2 The old copies have "loose." 3 The old copies have "sway's." Knight reads the passage thus:

[...]

4 wollen: in f. o. Bollen means swollen. 5 in f. o.

You may as well use question with the wolf,
Why he hath made the eoe bleat for the lamb.
ERE thou shalt lose for me one drop of blood.

Ant. I am a tainted wether of the flock,
Meestet for death: the weakest kind of fruit
Dropt by the hand of sin, and so live
You cannot better be employ'd, Bassanio.

To than live still, and write mine epitaph.

Enter Nerissa, dressed like a lawyer's clerk.

Duke. Came you from Padua, from Bellario?

Ner. From both, my lord. Bellario greets your grace.

[Presenting a letter.]

Bass. Why dost thou what thy knife so earnestly?

Shylock whets his knife.

Shy. To cut the forfeiture from that bankrupt there.

Gra. Not on thy sole, but on thy soul, harsh Jew,
Thou mak'st thy knife keen; but no metal can,
No, not the hangman's axe, bear half the keenness
Of thy sharp envy. Can no prayers pierce thee?

Shy. No, none that thou hast will enough to make.

Gra. O, be thou damn'd, inexorable dog,
And for thy life let justice be accus'd!
Thou almost mak'st me wave in my faith,
To hold opinion with Pythogoras,
That souls of animals infect themselves
Into the trunks of men: thy currrish spirit
Govern'd a wolf, who, hang'd for human slaughter,
Even from the gallows did his fell soul fleet,
And whilst thou lay'st in thy unhallowed dam,
Infus'd itself in thee; for thy desires
Are wolfish, bloody, starv'd, and ravenous.

Shy. Till thou canst rail the seal from off my bond,
Thou but offend'st thy honour to so loud,
Repair thy wit, good youth, or it will fall
To curseless ruin.—I stand here for law.

Duke. This letter from Bellario doth commend
A young and learned doctor to our court.—

Where is he?

Ner. He attendeth here hard by,
To know your answer, whether you'll admit him.

Duke. With all my heart:—some three or four of you,
Go give him courteous conduct to this place.—

Mean time, the court shall hear Bellario's letter.

[Clerk reads.] "Your grace shall understand, that as early to your letter I am very sick; but in the instant that your messenger came, in loving visitation was with me a young doctor of Rome; his name is Balthazer. I acquainted him with the cause in controversy between the Jew and Antonio, the merchant: we turned o'er many books together: he is furnish'd with my opinion; which, better'd with his own learning, the greatness whereof I cannot enough commend, comes with him, at my importunity, to fill up your grace's request in my stead. I beseech you, let his lack of years be no impediment to let him lack a reverend estimation, for I never knew so young a body with so old a head. I leave him to your gracious acceptance, whose trial shall better publish his commendation."—

Duke. You hear the learned Balthazer, what he writes:
And here, I take it, is the doctor coming.

Enter Portia, dressed like a doctor of laws.

Give me your hand. Came you from old Bellario?

Por. I did, my lord.

Duke. You are welcome: take your place.

Are you acquainted with the difference
That holds this present question in the court?

Por. I am informed throughly of the cause.—

Which is the merchant here, and which the Jew?

Duke. Antonio and old Shylock, both stand forth.

Por. Is your name Shylock?

1 Not in  f. a.  2 f. e., in part: inexorable.  3 An old phrase for being in the power of, as well as, indebted to.  4 Not in f. a.
There is no power in the tongue of man
To alter me. I stay here on my bond.

Ant. Most heartily I do beseech the court
To give the judgment.

Por. Why, then, thus it is:—
You must prepare your bosom for his knife.

Shy. O, noble judge! O, excellent young man!

Por. For the intent and purpose of the law;
Hath full relation to the penal law.

Shy. This is just true. O, wise and upright judge!
How much more elder art thou than thy looks!

Por. Therefore, lay bare your bosom.

Shy. Ay, his breast;
So says the bond:—doth it not, noble judge?—
Nearest his heart: those are the very words.

Por. It is so. Are there balance here to weigh
The flesh?

Shy. I have them ready. [Producing scales.]

Por. Have by some surgeon, Shylock, on your charge,
To stop his wounds, lest he do bleed to death.

Shy. Is it so nominated in the bond?

Por. Not so express'd; but in effect of that?
'T were good you do so much for charity.

Shy. I cannot find it: 'tis not in the bond.

Por. You, merchant, have you any thing to say?

Ant. But little: I am arm'd, and well prepar'd—

Give me your hand, Bassanio: fare you well.

Grieve not that I am fallen to this for you,
For herein fortune shows herself more kind
Than is her custom: it is still her use
To let the wretched man out-live his wealth,
To view with hollow eye, and wrinkled brow,
An age of poverty: from which lingering penance
Of such misery doth she cut me off.

Commend me to your honourable wife:
Tell her the process of Antonio's end;
Say, how I lov'd you, speak me fair in death;
And, when the tale is told, bid her be judge,
Whether Bassanio had not once a lover.

Repent not you that you shall lose your friend,
And repent not that he pays your debt;
For, if the Jew do eat but deep enough,
I'll pay it instantly with all my heart.

Bass. Antonio, I am married to a wife,
Which is as dear to me as life itself;
But life itself, my wife, and all the world,
Are not with me esteem'd above thy life:
I would lose all, ay, sacrifice them all,
Here to this devil, to deliver you.

Por. Your wife would give you little thanks for that,
If she were by to hear you make the offer.

Gra. I have a wife, whom I protest, I love:
I would she were in heaven, so she could
Entreat some power to change this curiass Jew.

Ner. 'Tis well you offer it behind her back;
The wish would make else an unquiet house.

Shy. These be the Christian husbands! I have a daughter:
Would any of the stock of Barabbas
Had been her husband, rather than a Christian!
We trifle time; I pray thee, pursue sentence.

Por. A pound of that same merchant's flesh is thine:
The court awards it, and the law doth give it.

Shy. Most rightful judge!

Por. And you must cut this flesh from off his breast:
The law allows it, and the court awards it.

Shy. Most learned judge!—A sentence! come, prepare!
[Shewing the scales again.

Por. Tarry a little: there is something else. —
This bond doth give thee here no jot of blood;
The words expressly are, a pound of flesh:
Take then thy bond, take thou thy pound of flesh;
But, in the cutting of it, if thou dost shed
One drop of Christian blood, thy lands and goods
Are by the laws of Venice confiscate.

unto the state of Venice.

Gra. O upright judge!—Mark, Jew:—O learned judge!

Shy. Is that the law?

Por. Thyself shalt see the act:
For, thou art judge, be assured,
Thou shalt have justice, more than thou desirest.

Gra. O learned judge!—Mark, Jew:—a learned judge!

Shy. I take his offer then: pay the bond thrice,
And let the Christian go.

Bass. Here is the money.

Por. Soft!—
The Jew shall have all justice;—soft!—no haste:—
He shall have nothing but the penalty.

Gra. O Jew! an upright judge, a learned judge!

Por. Therefore, prepare thee to cut off the flesh.
Shed thou no blood; nor cut thou less, nor more,
But just a pound of flesh: if thou tak'st more,
Or less, than a just pound,—be it so much
As makes it light, or heavy, in the balance;
Or the division of the twentieth part
Of one poor scripul; nay, if the scale do turn
But in the estimation of a hair,
Thou diest, and all thy goods are confiscate.

Gra. A second Daniel, a Daniel, Jew!

Now, infidel, I have thee on the hip.

Por. Why doth the Jew pause? Take thy forfeiture.

Shy. Give me my principal, and let me go.

Bass. I have it ready for thee: here it is.

Por. He hath refus'd it in the open court:
He shall have mercy justice, and his bond.

Gra. A Daniel, still say I; a second Daniel!—
I thank thee, Jew, for teaching me that word.

Shy. Shall I not have barely my principal?

Por. Thou shalt have nothing but the forfeiture,
To be so taken at thy peril, Jew.

Shy. Why then the devil give him good of it.
I'll stay no longer question.

Por. Tarry, Jew:

The law hath yet another hold on you.
It is enacted in the laws of Venice,
If it be proved against an alien,
That by direct, or indirect attempts,
He seek the life of any citizen,
The party, 'gainst the which he doth contrive,
Shall seize one half his goods: the other half
Comes to the privy coffer of the state;
And the offender's life lies in the mercy
Of the duke only, 'gainst all other voice.
In which predicament, I say, thou stand'st;
For it appears by manifest proceeding,
That, indirectly, and directly too,
Thou hast contriv'd against the very life
Of the defendant, and thou hast incur'd
The danger formerly by me reheard'd.

Doth, therefore, and beg mercy of the duke.

Gra. Beg, that thou may'st have leave to hang thyself:

And yet, thy wealth being forfeit to the state,
Thou hast not left the value of a cord;
Therefore, thou must be hang'd at the state's charge.
Duke. That thou shalt see the difference of our spirit,
I pardon thee thy life before thou ask it.
For half thy wealth, it is Antonio's;
The other half comes to the general state,
Which humbleness may drive unto a fine.
Por. Ay, for the state; not for Antonio.
Shy. Nay, take my life and all; pardon not that:
You take my house, when you do the gip
That doth sustain my house; you take my life,
When you do take the means whereby I live.
Por. What mercy can you render him, Antonio?
Gra. A halter gratis; nothing else, for God's sake!
Ant. So please my lord the duke, and all the court,
To quit the fine for one half of his goods,
I am content, so he will let me have
The other half in use, to render it,
Upon his death, unto the gentleman
That lately stole his daughter:
Two things provided.—that, for this favour,
He presently become a Christian;
The other, that he do record a gift,
Here in the testament, that he shall possess'd,
Unto his son Lorenzo, and his daughter.
Duke. He shall do this, or else I do recall
The pardon, that I late pronounced here.
Por. Art thou contented, Jew? what dost thou say?
Shy. I am content.
Por. Clerk, draw a deed of gift.
Shy. You pray, give me leave to go from hence.
I am not well. Send the deed after me,
And I will sign it.
Duke. Get thee gone, but do it.
Gra. In christening thou shalt have two godfathers:
Had I been judge, thou should'st have had ten more,
To bring thee to the gallows, not the font.
[Exit Shylock.
Duke. Sir, I entreat you home with me to dinner.
Por. I humbly do desire your grace of pardon:
I must away this night toward Padua,
And it is meet I presently set forth.
Duke. I am sorry, that your leisure serves you not.
Antonio, gratify this gentleman.
[Exit Duke.
Por. For, in my mind, you are much bound to him.
[Exeunt Duke, Magnificoes, and train.
Bass. Most worthy gentleman, I and my friend
Have by your wisdom been this day acquainted
Of grievous penalties; in lieu whereof,
Three thousand ducats, due unto the Jew,
We freely cede our courteous pains withal.
Ant. And stand indebted, ever and above,
In love and service to you evermore.
Por. He is well paid, that is well-satisfied;
And I, delivering you, am satisfied.
And therein do account myself well paid:
My mind was never yet more mercenary.
I pray you, know me, when we meet again:
I wish you well, and so I take my leave.
Bass. Dear sir, of force I must attempt you farther:
Take some remembrance of us, as a tribute,
Not as a fee. Grant me two things, I pray you;
Not to deny me, and to pardon me.
Por. You press me far, and therefore I will yield,
Give me your gloves, I'll wear them for your sake;
And, for your love, I'll take this ring from you.——
Do not draw back your hand; I'll take no more,
And you in love shall not deny me this.
Bass. This ring, good sir?—alas, it is a trifle;
I will not shame myself to give you this.
Por. I will have nothing else but only this;
And now, methinks, I have a mind to it.
Bass. There's more depends on this, than on the value.
The dearest ring in Venice will I give you,
And find it out by proclamation;
Only for this, I pray you, pardon me.
Por. I see, sir, you are liberal in offers:
You taught me first to beg, and now, methinks,
You teach me how a beggar should be answer'd.
Bass. Good sir, this ring was given me by my wife;
And when she put it on she made me vow,
That I should neither sell, nor give, nor lose it.
Por. That 'luse serves many men to save their gifts.
An if your wife be not a mad woman,
And know how well I have deserve'd this ring,
She would not hold out enemy for ever.
For giving it to me. Well, peace be with you.
[Exit Bassiano.
Ant. My Lord Bassiano, let him have the ring,
Let his deservers, and my love withal,
Be valued 'gainst your wife's commandment.
Bass. Go, Gratiano; run and overtake him;
Give him the ring, and bring him if thou canst,
Unto Antonio's house.—Away! make haste.
[Exit Gratiano.
SCENE II.—The Same. A Street.
Enter Portia and Nerissa.
Por. Inquire the Jew's house out, give him this deed,
And let him sign it. We'll away to-night.
And be a day before our husbands home.
This deed will be well welcome to Lorenzo.
[Exit Gratiano running.
Gra. Fair sir, you are well o'erta'en.
My lord Bassiano, upon more advice,
Hath sent you here this ring, and doth entreat
Your company at dinner.
Por. That cannot be.
His ring I do accept most thankfully,
And so, I pray you, toll him: furthermore,
I pray you, show my youth old Shylock's house.
Gra. That will I do.
Ner. Sir, I would speak with you.——
I'll see if I can get my husband's ring,
[To Portia.
Which I did make him swear to keep for ever.
Por. Thou may'st, I warrant. We shall have old swearing,
That they did give the rings away to men;
But we'll outface them, and outwear them too.
Away! make haste: thou know'st where I will tarry.
Ner. Come, good sir; will you show me to this house?
[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Belmont. The Avenue to Portia’s House.

Enter Lorenzo and Jessica.

Lor. The moon shines bright.—In such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
And they did make no noise; in such a night,
Troilus, methinks, mounted the Trojan walls,
And sigh’d his soul toward the Grecian tents,
Where Crescind lay that night.

Jes. In such a night, did Thisbe fearfully o’ertrip the dew;
And saw the lion’s shadow ere himself,
And ran dismay’d away.

Lor. In such a night, stood Dido with a willow in her hand
Upon the wild sea-banks, and wad’d her love
To come again to Carthage.

Jes. In such a night, Medea gather’d the enchanted herbs
That did renew old Aeson.

Lor. In such a night, did Jessica steal from the wealthy Jew,
And with an unthrift love did run from Venice,
As far as Belmont.

Jes. In such a night, did young Lorenzo swear he lov’d her well,
Stealing her soul with many vows of faith,
And ne’er a true one.

Lor. In such a night, did pretty Jessica, like a little shrew,
Slander her love, and he forgave it her.

Jes. I would out-night you, did no body come;
But, hark, I hear the footing of a man. [Enter Stephano.]

Lor. Who comes so fast in silence of the night?
Steph. A friend.

Lor. A friend? what friend? your name, I pray you, friend?
Steph. Stephano is my name; and I bring word,
My mistress will before the break of day
Be here at Belmont: she doth stray about
By holy crosses, where she kneels and prays
For happy wedlock hours.

Lor. Who comes with her?
Steph. None, but a holy hermit, and her maid.

I pray you, is my master yet return’d?

Lor. He is not, nor we have not heard from him.—
But go we in, I pray thee, Jessica,
And ceremoniously let us prepare
Some welcome for the mistress of the house.

[Enter Launcelot.

Laun. Sola, sola! we ha, ho! sola, sola!

Lor. Who calls?

Laun. Sola! did you see master Lorenzo, and mistres Lorenza? sola, sola!

Lor. Leave hallooing, man; here.

Laun. Sola! where? where?

Lor. Here.

Laun. Tell him, there’s a post come from my master, with his horn full of good news: my master will be here ere morning. [Exit.

Lor. Sweet soul, let’s in, and there expect their coming.
And yet no matter;—why should we go in?

[Music.

My friend Stephano, signify, I pray you,
Within the house, your mistress is at hand;
And bring your music forth into the air.—

[Exit Stephano.

How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon this bank!
Here we will sit, and let the sounds of music
Creep in our ears: soft stillness, and the night,
Become the touches of sweet harmony.
Sit, Jessica: look, how the floor of heaven
Is thick inlaid with patterns of bright gold;
There’s not the smallest orb, which thou behold’st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-ey’d cherubins:
Such harmony is in immortal souls;
But, whilst this muddy vesture of decay
Doth grossly close it in, we cannot hear it.

[Enter Musicians.

Come, ho! and wake Diana with a hymn:
With sweetest touches pierce your mistress ear,
And draw her home with music. [Music.

Jes. I am never merry when I hear sweet music.

Lor. The reason is, your spirits are attentive:
For do but note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Feching mad bounds, bellowing, and neighing loud,
Which is the hot condition of their blood,
If they but hear, perchance, a trumpet sound,
Or any air of music touch their ears,
You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
Their savage eyes turn’d to a modest gaze,
By the sweet power of music: therefore, the poet
Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods,
Since nought so stockish, hard, and full of rage,
But music for the time doth change his nature,
The man that hath no music in himself,
Nor is not mov’d with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils:
The motions of his spirit are dull as night,
And his affections dark as Erebus.

Let no such man be trusted.—Mark the music.

[Music again.

[Enter Portia and Nerissa, at a distance.

Por. That light we see is burning in my hall.
How far that little candle throws his beams!
So shines a good deed in a naughty world.

Ner. When the moon shone, we did not see the candle.

Por. So doth the greater glory dim the less:
A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by: and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Music! hark!

Ner. It is your music, madam, of the house.

Por. Nothing is good, I see, without respect:
Methinks, it sounds much sweeter than by day.

Ner. Silence bestows that virtue on it, madam.

Por. The crow doth sing as sweetly as the lark,
When neither is attended: and, I think,
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren.

How many things by season reason’d are
To their right praise, and true perfection—

Peace! now the moon sleeps with Endymion,
And would not be awak’d! [Music ceases.

Lor. That is the voice.
THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

ACT V.

Or I am much deceived, of Portia.

Por. He knows me as the blind man knows the cuckoo, By his sad voice.

Lor. Dear lady, welcome home.

Por. We have been praying for our husbands' welfare, Which speed, we hope, the better for our words.

Are they return'd?

Lor. Madam, they are not yet;

But there is come a messenger before,

To signify their coming.

Por. Go in, Nerissa:

Give order to my servants, that they take

No note at all of our being absent hence;—

Nor you, Lorenzo;—Jessica, nor you.

[Loud noise heard near the house.

Por. This night, methinks, is but the daylight sick;

It looks a little paler: 'tis a day,

Such as the day is when the sun is hid.

Enter Bassanio, Antonio, Gratiano, and their followers.

Bass. We should hold day with the Antipodes,

If you would walk in absence of the sun.

Por. Let me give light, but let me not be light;

For a light wife doth make a heavy husband,

And never be Bassanio so for me:

But God sort all.—You are welcome home, my lord.

Bass. I thank you, madam. Give welcome to my friend:

This is the man, this is Antonio,

To whom I am so infinitely bound.

Por. You should in all sense be much bound to him,

For, as I hear, he was much bound for you.

Ant. No more than I am well acquitt'd of.

Por. Sir, you are very welcome to our house:

It must appear in other ways than words,

Therefore, I scent this breathing courtesy.

Gra. [To Nerissa.] By yonder moon, I swear, you do me wrong;

In faith, I gave it to the judge's clerk:

Would he were got that had it, for my part,

Since you do take it, leave me so much at heart.

Por. A quarrel, ho, already! what's the matter?

Gra. About a hoop of gold, a patry ring

That she did give to me; whose poesy was

For all the world, like cutlers' poetry

Upon a knife, "Love me, and leave me not."

Ner. What talk you of the poesy, or the value?

You swore o' me, when I did give it you,

That you would wear it till your four* hour of death,

And that it should lie with you in your grave:

Though not for me, yet for your vehement oaths,

You should have been respective, and have kept it.

Gave it a judge's clerk! no, God's my judge;—

The clerk will never wear that hair on face, that had it.

Gra. He will, an if he live to be a man.

Ner. Ay, if a woman live to be a man.

Gra. Now, by this hand, I gave it to a youth,

A kind of boy; a little scrubbed boy,

No higher than thyself, the judge's clerk;

A prating boy, that begg'd it as a fee:

I could not for my heart deny it him.

Por. You were to blame, I must be plain with you,

To part so slightly with your wife's first gift;

A thing stuck on with oaths upon your finger,

And so riveted with faith unto your flesh.

I gave my love a ring, and made him swear

Never to part with it; and here he stands:

I dare be sworn for him, he would not leave it,

Nor pluck it from his finger for the wealth

That the world masters. Now, in faith, Gratiano,

You give your wife too unkind a cause of grief:

An't were to me, I should be mad at it.

Bass. [Aside.] Why, I was best to cut my left hand

And swear I lost the ring defending it.

Gra. My lord Bassanio gave his ring away

Unto the judge that begg'd it, and, indeed,

Deserv'd it too; and then the boy, his clerk,

That took some pains in writing, he begg'd mine;

And neither man, nor master, would take aught

But the two rings.

Por. What ring, gave you, my lord?

Not that, I hope, which you receiv'd of me.

Bass. If I could add a lie unto a fault,

I would deny it; but you see, my finger

Hath not the ring upon it: it is gone.

Por. Even so void is your false heart of truth.

By heaven, I will ne'er come in your bed

Until I see the ring.

Ner. Nor I in yours,

Till I again see mine.

Bass. Sweet Portia,

If you did know to whom I gave the ring,

If you did know for whom I gave the ring,

And would conceive for what I gave the ring,

And how unwillingly I left the ring;

When naught would be accepted but the ring,

You would abate the strength of your displeasure.

Por. If you had known the virtue of the ring,

Or half her worthiness that gave the ring,

Or your own honour to retain the ring,

You would not then have parted with the ring.

What man is there so much unreasonable,

If you had pleas'd to have defended it

With any terms of zeal, wanted the modesty

To urge the thing held as a ceremony?

Nerissa teaches me what to believe:

I'll die for 't, but some woman had the ring.

Bass. No, by mine honour, madam, by my soul,

No woman had it; but a civil doctor

Which did refuse three thousand ducats of me,

And begg'd the ring, the which I did deny him,

And suffer'd him to go displeas'd away,

Even he that had held up the very life

Of my dear friend. What should I say, sweet lady?

I was enforc'd to send it after him:

I was beset with shame and courtesy;

My honour would not let ingratitude

So much besmirch me. Pardon me, good lady,

For, by these blessed candles of the night,

Had you been there, I think, you would have begg'd

The ring of me to give the worthy doctor.

Por. Let not that doctor come near my house.

Since he hath got the jewel that I lov'd,

And that which you did swear to keep for me,

I will become as liberal as you:

I'll not deny him any thing I have;

No, not my body, nor my husband's bed.

Know him I shall, I am well sure of it:

Lie not a night from home; watch me like Argus;

If you do not, if I be left alone,

Now, by mine honour, which is yet mine own,

I'll have that doctor for my bedfellow.

Ner. And his clerk; therefore, he well advis'd

How you do leave me to mine own protection.

Gra. Well, do you so: let not me make him then;
For, if I do, I 'll mar the young clerk's pen.
Ant. I am th' unhappy subject of these quarrels,
Por. Sir, grieve not you; you are welcome notwithstanding.

Bass. Portia, forgive me this enforced wrong;
And in the hearing of these many friends
I swear to thee, even by thine own fair eyes,
Wherein I see myself,—
Por. Mark you but that!
In both my eyes he doubly sees himself;
In each eye, one — swear by your double self,
And there's an oath of credit.

Bass. Nay, but hear me.
Pardon this fault, and by my soul I swear,
I never more will break an oath with thee.
Ant. I once did lend my body for his wealth,
Which but for him that had your husband's ring;
Had quite miscarried: I dare be bound again,
My soul upon the forfeit, that your lord
Will never more break faith advisedly.
Por. Then, you shall be his surety. Give him this,
And bid him keep it better than the other.
Ant. Here, lord Bassanio; swear to keep this ring.

Bass. By heaven! it is the same I gave the doctor.
Por. I had it of him: pardon me, Bassanio,
For by this ring the doctor lay with me.
Ner. And pardon me, my gentle Gratiano,
For that same scrupled boy, the doctor's clerk,
In lieu of this last night did lie with me.

Gra. Why, this is like the mending of highways
In summer, when the ways are fair enough.
What! are we cuckolds, ere we have deserv'd it?
Por. Speak not so grossly. — You are all amazed:
Here is a letter, read it at your leisure;
It comes from Padua, from Bellario:
There you shall find, that Portia was the doctor;
Nerissa there, her clerk. Lorenzo, here,
Shall witness I set forth as soon as you,
And even but now return'd: I have not yet
Enter'd my house. — Antonio, you are welcome;
And I have better news in store for you,
Than you expect: unseal this letter soon;
There you shall find, three of your argosies
Are richly come to harbour suddenly.
You shall not know by what strange accident
I chanced on this letter.

Ant. I am dumb.

Bass. Were you the doctor, and I knew you not?
Gra. Were you the clerk, that is to make me cuckold?

Ner. Ay; but the clerk that never means to do it,
Unless he live until he be a man.

Bass. Sweet doctor, you shall be my bedfellow:
When I am absent, then, lie with my wife.

Ant. Sweet lady, you have given me life and living,
For here I read for certain that my ships
Are safely come to road.

Por. How now, Lorenzo?

My clerk hath some good comforts, too, for you.

Ner. Ay, and I'll give them him without a fee.—
There do I give to you and Jessica,
From the rich Jew, a special deed of gift,
After his death, of all he dies possessed of.

Lor. Fair ladies, you drop manna in the way
Of starved people.

Por. It is almost morning,
And yet, I am sure, you are not satisfied
Of these events at full. Let us go in;
And charge us there upon intergatories,
And we will answer all things faithfully.

Gra. Let it be so: the first intergatory,
That my Nerissa shall be sworn on, is,
Whether till the next night she had rather stay,
Or go to bed now, being two hours to day?
But were the day come, I should wish it dark,
Till I were couching with the doctor's clerk.
Well, while I live, I'll fear no other thing
So sore, as keeping safe Nerissa's ring. [Exeunt.]

ACT I.

SCENE I.—An Orchard, near Oliver’s House.

Enter Orlando and Adam.

Orl. As I remember, Adam, it was upon this fashion: he bequeathed me by will but a poor thousand crowns; and, as thou say’st, charged my brother on his blessing to breed me well: and there begins my sadness. My brother Jaques he keeps at school, and report speaks goldenly of his profit: for my part, he keeps me rustically at home, or, to speak more properly, stays me here at home unkept; for call you that keeping for a gentleman of my birth, that differs not from the stalling of an ox? His horses are bred better; for, besides that they are fair with their feeding, they are taught their manage, and to that end riders dearly hired: but I, his brother, gain nothing under him but growth, for the which his animals on his dunghills are as much bound to him as I. Besides this nothing that he so plentifully gives me, the something that nature gave me, his countenance seems to take from me: he lets me feed with his hinds, bars me the place of a brother, and, as much as in him lies, mines my gentility with my education. This is it, Adam, that grieves me; and the spirit of my father, which I think is within me, begins to mutiny against this servitude. I will no longer endure it, though yet I know no wise remedy how to avoid it.

Adam. Yonder comes my master, your brother.

Orl. Go apart, Adam, and thou shalt hear how he will shake me up.

Enter Oliver.

Oli. Now, sir! what make you here?

Orl. Nothing: I am not taught to make any thing.

Oli. What mar you then, sir?

Orl. Marry, sir, I am helping you to mar that which God made, a poor unworthy brother of yours, with idle-ness.

1 It was upon this fashion bequeathed, &c. 2 Behavior. 3 Not in f. e. 4 A petty malediction. 5 Not in f. e.
eres as may become a gentleman, or give me the poor allottery my father left me by testament: with that I will go buy my fortunes.

Oli. And what wilt thou do? beg, when that is spent? Well, sir, get you in: I will not long be troubled with you; you shall have some part of your will. I pray you, leave me.

Ori. I will no further offend you, than becomes me for thy good.

Oli. Get you with him, you old dog.

Adam. Is old dog my reward? Most true, I have lost my teeth in your service.—God be with my old master! he would not have spoke such a word.

[Exit Orlando and Adam.

Oli. Is it even so? begin you to grow upon me? I will physic your rankness, and yet give no thousand crowns neither. Hola, Dennis!

Enter Dennis.

Denn. Calls your worship?

Oli. Was not Charles, the duke's wrestler, here to speak with me?

Denn. So please you, he is here at the door, and importing access to you.

Oli. Call him in. [Exit Dennis.]

'T will be a good way; and to-morrow the wrestling is.

Enter Charles.

Cha. Good morrow to your worship.

Oli. Good monsieur Charles, what's the new news at the new court?

Cha. There's no news at the court, sir, but the old news; that is, the old duke is banished by his younger brother the new duke, and three or four loving lords have put themselves into voluntary exile with him, whose lands and revenues enrich the new duke; therefore he gives them good leave to wander.

Oli. Can you tell, if Rosalind, the old duke's daughter, be banished with her father?

Cha. O! no; for the new duke's daughter, her cousin, so loves her, being ever from their cradles bred together, that she would have followed her exile, or have died to stay behind her. She is at the court, and no less beloved of her uncle than his own daughter; and never two ladies loved as they do.

Oli. Where will the old duke live?

Cha. They say, he is already in the forest of Arden, and a many merry men with him; and there they live like the old Robin Hood of England. They say, many young gentlemen flock to him every day; and fleet the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world.

Oli. What, you wrestle to-morrow before the new duke?

Cha. Marry, do I, sir; and I came to acquaint you with a matter. I am given, sir, secretly to understand, that your younger brother, Orlando, hath a disposition to come in disguised against me, to try a fall. To-morrow, sir, I wrestle for my credit, and he that escapes me without some broken limb shall acquit him well. Your brother is but young, and tender; and, for your love, I would be loath to foil him, as I must for my own honour if he come in: therefore, out of my love to you I came hither to acquaint you withal, that either you might stay him from his intendment, or brook such disgrace well as he shall run into, in that it is a thing of his own search, and altogether against my will.

Oli. Charles, I thank thee for thy love to me, which, thou shalt find, I will most kindly requite. I had myself notice of my brother's purpose herein, and have, by underhand means, laboured to dissuade him from it; but he is resolute. I'll tell thee, Charles: it is the stubbornest young fellow of France; full of ambition, an envious emulator of every man's good parts, a secret and villainous contriver against me his natural brother: therefore, use thy discretion. I had as lief thou didst break his neck as his finger: and thou wilt best look to it; for if thou dost him any slight disgrace, or if he not mightily grace himself on thee, he will practise against thee by poison, entrap thee by some treacherous device, and never leave thee till he hath ta'en thy life by some indirect means, or other; for, I assure thee (and almost with tears I speak it) there is not one so young and so villainous this day living. I speak but brotherly of him; but should I anatomize him to thee as he is, I must blush and weep, and thou must look pale and wonder.

Cha. I am heartily glad I came hither to you. If he come to-morrow, I'll give him his payment: if ever he go alone again, I'll never wrestle for prize more. And so, God keep your worship! [Exit.

Oli. Farewell good Charles.—Now will I stir this gastermer. I hope, I shall see an end of him; for my soul, yet I know not what hast thou done but he: yet he's gentle; never schooled, and yet learned; full of noble device; of all sorts enchantingly beloved, and, indeed, so much in the heart of the world, and especially of my own people, who best know him, that I am altogether misprised. But it shall not be so long; this wrestler shall clear all: nothing remains, but that I kindle the boy thither, which now I'll go about.

END OF THE SECOND ACT.

SCENE II.—A LAWN BEFORE THE DUKE'S PALACE.

Enter Rosalind and Celia.

Cel. I pray thee, Rosalind, sweet my coz, be merry.

Ras. Dear Celia, I show more mirth than I am mistress of, and would you yet P were merrier? Unless you could teach me to forget a banished father, you must not learn me how to remember any extraordinary pleasure.

Cel. Herein, I see, thou lovtest me not with the full weight that I love thee. If my uncle, thy banished father, had banished thy uncle, the duke my father, so thou hadst been still with me, I could have taught my love to take thy father for mine: so wouldst thou, if the truth of thy love to me were so righteously tempered, as mine is to thee.

Ras. Well, I will forget the condition of my estate, to rejoice in yours.

Cel. You know, my father hath no child but I, nor none is like to have; and, truly, when he dies, thou shalt be his heir: for what he hath taken away from thy father perforce, I will render thee again in affection: by mine honour, I will; and when I break that oath let me turn monster. Therefore, my sweet Rose, my dear Rosc, be merry.

Ras. From henceforth I will, coz, and devise sports. Let me see; what think you of falling in love?

Cel. Marry, I pray thee, do, to make sport withal: but love no man in good earnest; nor no further in sport neither, than with safety of a pure blush thou may'st in honour come off again.

Ras. What shall our sport then?

Cel. Let us sit, and mock the good housewife, Fortune, from her wheel, that her gifts may henceforth be bestowed equally.

Ras. I would, we could do so; for her benefits are mightily misplaced, and the bountiful blind woman doth most mistake in her gifts to women.

Cel. 'T is true, for those that she makes fair, she Enter Touchstone.

Cel. No: when nature hath made a fair creature, nay she not by fortune fall into the fire?—Though nature hath given us wit to flout at fortune, hath not fortune sent in this fool to cut off the argument?

Ros. Nay, now thou goest from fortune's office to nature's: fortune reigns in gifts of the world, not in the lineaments of nature.

Enter Touchstone.

Cel. Pr'ythee, who is't that thou mean'st?

Touch. One that old Frederick, your father, loves.

Ros. My father's love is enough to honour him enough. Speak no more of him: you'll be whipped for taxation, one of these days.

Touch. The more pity, that fools may not speak wisely, what wise men do foolishly.

Cel. By my troth, thou say'st true: for since the little wit that fools have was silenced, the little folly that wise men have makes a great show. Here comes monsieur Le Beau.

Ros. With his mouth full of news.

Touch. Which he will put on us, as pigeons feed their young.

Ros. Then shall we be news-earm'd.

Cel. All the better: we shall be the more marketable.

Bon jour, monsieur Le Beau: what's the news?

Cel. Le Beau. Fair princess, you have lost much good sport.

Le Beau. What colour, madam? How shall I answer you?

Ros. As wit and fortune will.

Touch. Or as the destinies decree.

Cel. Well said: that was laid on with a trowel.

Ros. Nay, if I keep not my rank,—Thou lowest thy old smell.

Le Beau. You amaze me, ladies: I would have told you of good wrestling, which you have lost the sight of.

Ros. Yet tell us the manner of the wrestling.

Le Beau. I will tell you the beginning; and, if it please your ladyships, you may see the end, for the best is yet to do: and here, where you are, they are coming to perform it.

Cel. Well,—the beginning, that is dead and buried.

Le Beau. There comes an old man, and his three sons,—Cel. I could match this beginning with an old tale.

Le Beau. Three proper young men, of excellent growth and presence:—Ros. With bills' on their necks,—"Be it known unto all men by these presents," —Le Beau. The eldest of the three wrestled with Charles, the duke's wrestler; which Charles in a moment threw him, and broke three of his ribs, that there is little hope of life in him: so he served the second, and so the third. Yonder they lie, the poor old man, their father, making such pitiful dole over them, that all the beholders take his part with weeping.

Ros. Alas!

Touch. But what is the sport, monsieur, that the ladies have lost?

Le Beau. Why, this that I speak of.

Touch. Thus men may grow wiser every day! it is the first time that ever I heard breaking of ribs was sport for ladies.

Cel. Or I, I promise thee.

Ros. But is there any else longs to see this broken music in his sides? is there yet another dotes upon rib-breaking?—Shall we see this wrestling, cousin?

Le Beau. You must, if you stay here; for here is the place appointed for the wrestling, and they are ready to perform it.

Cel. Yonder, sure, they are coming: let us now stay and see it.

Flourish. Enter Duke Frederick, Lords, Orlando, Charles, and Attendants.

Duke F. Come on: since the youth will not be entreated, his own peril on his forwardness.

Ros. Is yonder the man?

Le Beau. Even he, madam.

Cel. Alas! he is too young: yet he looks successfully.

Duke F. How now, daughter, and cousin! are you crept hither to see the wrestling?

Ros. Ay, my liege, so please you give us leave.

Duke F. You will take little delight in it, I can tell you, there is such odds in the men. In pity of the challenger's youth, I would fain dissuade him, but he will not be entreated: speak to him, ladies; see if you can move him.

Cel. Call him hither, good monsieur Le Beau.

Duke F. Do so; I'll not be by. [Duke goes apart. Le Beau. Monsieur the challenger, the princess calls for you.

Orl. I attend them with all respect and duty.

Ros. Young man, have you challenged Charles the wrestler?

Orl. No, fair princess; he is the general challenger: I come but in, as others do, to try with him the strength of my youth.

Cel. Young gentleman, your spirits are too bold for your years. You have seen cruel proof of this man's strength: if you saw yourself with our eyes, or know yourself with our judgment, the fear of your adventure would counsel you to a more equal enterprise. We pray, for your own sake, to embrace your own safety, and give over this attempt.

Ros. Do, young sir: your reputation shall not therefore be misprised. We will make it our suit to the duke, that the wrestling might not go forward.

Orl. I beseech you, punish me not with your hard thoughts, wherein I confess me much guilty, to deny so fair and excellent ladies anything. But let your fair eyes, and gentle wishes, go with me to my trial: wherein if I be foiled, there is but one shame that was never gracious: if killed, but one dead that is willing to be so. I shall do my friends no wrong: for I have none to lament me; the world no injury; for in it I have nothing; only in the world I fill up a place, which may be better supplied when I have made it empty.

Ros. The little strength that I have, I would it were with you.

Cel. And mine, to eke out hers.

Ros. Fare you well. Pray heaven, I be deceived in you.

Cel. Your heart’s desires be with you.

Cha. Come; where is this young gallant, that is so desirous to lie with his mother earth?

Orl. Ready, sir; but his will hath in it a more modest working.

Duke F. You shall try but one fall.

Cel. No, I warrant your grace, you shall not entreat him to a second, that have so mightily persuaded him from a first.

Orl. You mean to mock me after: you should not have molested me before; but come your ways.

Ros. No, Herebeus be thy speed, young man! Cel. I would I were invisible, to catch the strong fellow by the leg. [CHARLES AND ORLANDO WRESTLE.

Ros. O, excellent young man!

Cel. If I had a thunderbolt in mine eye, I can tell who should down. [CHARLES IS THROWN. Shout. Duke F. No more, no more.

Orl. Yes, I beseech your grace: I am not yet well breathed.

Duke F. How dost thou, Charles?

Le Beau. He cannot speak; my lord.

Duke F. Bear him away. [CHARLES IS BORNE OUT.

What is thy name, young man?

Orl. Orlando, my liege: the youngest son of Sir Rowland de Bois.

Duke F. I would, thou hadst been son to some man else.

The world esteem’d thy father honourable,

But I did find him still mine enemy:

Thou shouldst have better pleas’d me with this deed,

Hadst thou descended from another house.

But fare thee well; thou art a gallant youth.

I would thou hadst told me of another father.

[Exeunt Duke FRED. TRAIN, AND LE BEAU.

Cel. Were I my father, coz, would I do this?

Orl. I am more proud to be sir Rowland’s son,

His youngest son, and would not change that calling,

To be adopted heir to Frederick.

Ros. My father lov’d sir Rowland as his soul,

And all the world was to my father’s mind.

Had I before known this young man his son,

I should have given him tears unto entreaties,

Ere he should thus have ventured.

Cel. Gentle cousin,

Let us go thank him, and encourage him:

My father’s rough and envious disposition

Sticks me at heart.—Sir, you have well serv’d:

1 A shield fastened to a pole, or a puppet, used as a mark in tilting.

If you do keep your promises in love
But justly, as you have exceeded all promise,
Your mistress shall be happy.

Ros. Gentleman,

[Giving him a chain.

Wear this for me, one out of suits with fortune,
That could give more, but that her hand lacks means—
Shall we go, coz?

Cel. Ay.—Fare you well, fair gentleman.

Orl. Can I not say, I thank you? My better parts
Are all thrown down, and that which here stands up
Is but a quintain1, a mere lessel block.

Ros. He calls us back. My pride fell with my fortunes; I’ll ask him what he would.—Did you call, sir?—Sir, you have wrestled well, and overthrown
More than your enemies.

Cel. Will you go, coz?

Ros. Have with you.—Fare you well.

Orl. What passion hangs these weights upon my tongue?

I cannot speak to her, yet she urg’d conference.

[RE-ENTER LE BEAU.

O, poor Orlando! thou art overthrown.

Or Charles, or something weaker, masters thee.

Le Beau. Good sir, I do in friendship counsel you

To leave this place. Albeit you have deserv’d
High commendation, true applause, and love,
Yet such is now the duke’s condition,

That he misconstrues all that you have done.

The duke is humorous: what he is, indeed,
More suits you to conceive, than me to speak of.

Orl. I thank you, sir; and, pray, you tell me this:

Which of the two was daughter of the duke,

That here was at the wrestling?

Le Beau. Neither his daughter, if we judge by manners;

But yet, indeed, the shorter2 is his daughter:

The other is daughter to the banish’d duke,

And here detain’d by her usurping uncle,

To keep his daughter company: whose loves

Are dearer than the natural bond of sisters.

But I can tell you, that of late this duke

Hath ta’en displeasure ‘gainst his gentle niece,

Grounded upon no other argument,

But that the people praise her for her virtues,

And pity her for her good father’s sake;

And, on my life, his malice ‘gainst the lady

Will suddenly break forth.—Sir, fare you well:

Hereafter, in a better world than this,

I shall desire more love and knowledge of you.

Orl. I rest much bounden to you: fare you well.

[Exeunt LE BEAU.

Thus must I from the smoke into the smoother;

From tyrant duke, unto a tyrant brother.—

But heavenly Rosalind!

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter CELIA and ROSALIND.

Cel. Why, cousin; why, Rosalind.—Cupid have mercy!—Not a word?

Ros. Not one to throw at a dog.

Cel. No, thy words are too precious to be cast away

Upon curs: throw some of them at me: come, I am leamed with reasons.

Ros. Then there were two cousins laid up, when the other should be lamed with reasons, and the other mad without any.

Cel. But is all this for your father?
Ros. No, some of it for my father's child. 1 O, how full of briars is this working-day world!
Cel. They are but burs, cousin, thrown upon thee in holiday foolery: if we walk not in the trodden paths, our very petticoats will catch them.
Ros. I could shake them off my coat: these burs are in my heart.
Cel. Hem them away.
Ros. I would try, if I could cry hem, and have him.
Cel. Come, come; wrestle with thy affections.
Ros. O! they take the part of a better wrestler than myself.
Cel. O, a good wish upon you! you will try in time, in despite of a fall. — But, turning these jests out of service, let us talk in good earnest. Is it possible, on such a sudden, you should fall into so strong a liking with old sir Rowland's youngest son?
Ros. The duke my father lov'd his father dearly.
Cel. Dost it therefore ensue, that you should love his son dearly? By this kind of chance, I should hate him, for my father hated his father dearly; yet I hate not Orlando.
Ros. No 'faith, hate him not, for my sake.
Cel. Why should I not? doth he not deserve well?
Ros. Let me love him for that; and do you love him, because I do —
Enter Duke Frederick, with Lords.
Look, here comes the duke.
Duke F. Mistress, dispatch you with your fastest haste,
And get you from our court.
Ros. Me, uncle?
Duke F. You, cousin:
Within these ten days if that thou be'st found
So near our public court as twenty miles,
Thou diest for it.
Ros. I do beseech your grace,
Let me the knowledge of my fault bear with me.
If with myself I hold intelligence,
Or have acquaintance with mine own desires,
If that I do not dream, or be not frantic,
(As I do trust I am not) then, dear uncle,
Never so much as in a thought unborn
Did I offend your highness.
Duke F. Thus do all traitors:
If their purgation did consist in words,
They are as innocent as grace itself.
Let it suffice thee, that I trust thee not.
Ros. Yet your mistrust cannot make me a traitor.
Tell me, whereon the likelihood depends.
Duke F. Thou art thy father's daughter; there's enough.
Ros. So was I when your highness took his dukedom;
So was I when your highness banish'd him.
Treason is not inherited, my lord;
Or if we did derive it from our friends,
What's that to me? my father was no traitor.
Then, good my liege, mistake me not so much,
To think my poverty is treacherous.
Cel. Dear sovereign, hear me speak.
Duke F. Ay, Celia: we stay'd her for your sake;
Else had she walk with her father rang'd along.
Cel. I did not then entreat to have her stay:
It was your pleasure, and your own remorse.
I was too young that time to value her,
But now I know her. If she be a traitor,
Why so am I; we still have slept together,
Rose at an instant, learnt'd, play'd, eat together;
And whereas our went, like June's swans,
Still we went coupled, and inseparable.
Duke F. She is too subtle for thee; and her smooth, her very silence, and her patience,
Speak to the people, and they pity her.
Thou art a fool; she robs thee of thy name;
And thou wilt show more bright, and seem more virtuous, when she is gone. Then, open not thy lips:
Firm and irrevocable is my doom
Which I have pass'd upon her. She is banish'd.
Cel. Prentence that sentence, then, on me, my liege:
I cannot live out of her company.
Self:
Duke F. You are a fool. — You, niece, provide your-
If you can stay the time, upon mine honour,
And in the greatness of my word, you die.
[Exeunt Duke Frederick and Lords.
Cel. O, my poor Rosalind! whither wilt thou go?
Wilt thou change fathers? I will give thee mine.
I charge thee, be not thou more griev'd than I am.
Ros. I have more cause.
Cel. Thou hast not, cousin.
Pr'ythee, be cheerful: know'st thou not, the duke Hath banish'd me, his daughter?
Ros. That he hath not.
Cel. No? hath not? Rosalind lacks, then, the love,
Which teacheth thee that thou art one.
Shall we be sunder'd? shall we part, sweet girl?
No: let my father seek another heir.
Therefore, devise with me how we may fly,
Whither to go, and what to bear with us:
And do not seek to take your change upon you,
To bear your griefs yourself, and leave me out;
For, by this heaven, now at our sorrows pale,
Say what thou canst, I'll go along with thee.
Ros. Why, whither shall we go?
Cel. To seek my uncle
In the forest of Arden.
Ros. Alas, what danger will it be to us,
Maids as we are, to travel forth so far!
Beauty provokes thieves sooner than gold.
Cel. I'll put myself in poor and mean attire,
And with a kind of umber smirch my face.
The like do you: so shall we pass along,
And never stir assailants.
Ros. Were it not better,
Because that I am more than common tall,
That I did suit me all points like a man?
A gallant curtle-ax' upon my thigh,
A boar-spear in my hand; and, in my heart
Lie there what hidden woman's fear there will,
We'll have a swashing and a martial outside,
As many other mannish cowards have,
That doth outrage it with their semblances.
Cel. What shall I call thee, when thou art a man?
Ros. I'll have no worse' name than Jove's own page,
And therefore look you call me Ganymede.
But what will you be call'd?
Cel. Something that hath a reference to my state:
No longer Celia, but Aliena.
Ros. But, cousin, what if we essay'd to steal
The clownish fool out of your father's court?
Would he not be a comfort to our travel?
Cel. He'll go along o'er the wide world with me;
Leave me alone to woo him. Let's away,
And get our jewels and our wealth together,
Devise the fittest time, and safest way
To hide us from pursuit that will be made
After my flight. Now go we in content
To liberty, and not to banishment.
[Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter Duke, Senior, Amiens, and other Lords, like Foresters.

Duke S. Now, my co-nates, and brothers in exile, Hath not old custom made this life more sweet, Than that of painted pomp? Are not these woods More free from peril than the envious court? Here feel we not the penalty of Adam, The seasons' difference, or the icy fang, And churchilish chiding of the winter's wind, Which when it bites, and blows upon my body, Even till I shrink with cold, I smile, and say, This is no flattery: these are counsellors That feelingly persuade me what I am. Sweet are the uses of adversity, Which, like the toad,\(^1\) ugly and venemous, Wears yet a precious jewel in his head; And this our life, exempt from public haunt, Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks, Sermons in stones, and good in every thing.

Am't. I would not change it. Happy is your grace, That can translate the stubbornness of fortune Into so sweet and so gentle a style.

Duke S. Come, shall we go and kill us venison? And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fools, Being nativeburghers of this desert city, Should, in their own confines, with forked heads\(^2\) Have their round haunches gored.

1 Lord. Indeed, my lord, The melancholy Jaques grieves at that: And, in that kind, swears you do more usurp Than doth your brother that hath banish'd you. To-day, my lord of Amiens and myself Did steal behind him, as he lay along Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out Upon the brook that brauls along this wood; To the which place a poor sequencer'd stag, That from the hunter's aim had ta'en a hurt, Did come to languish: and, indeed, my lord, The wretched animal had forth such groans, That their discharge did stretch his leathern coat Almost to bursting; and the big round tears Cours'd one another down his innocent nose In piteous chaise: and thus the hairy fool, Much marked of the melancholy Jaques, Stood on the extremest verge of the swift brook, Augmenting it with tears.

Duke S. But what said Jaques? Did he not moralize this spectacle?

1 Lord. O Yes, into a thousand similes. First, for his weeping in the needless stream: "Poor deer," quoth he, "thou mak'st a testament As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more To that which hath too much." Then, being there alone, Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends; "'Tis right," quoth he; "thus misery doth part The flux of company." Anon, a careless herd, Full of the pasture, jumps along by him, And never stays to greet him: "Ay," quoth Jaques, "Sweep on, you fat and greedy citizen; 'Tis just the fashion: wherefore do you look SCENE II.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter Duke Frederick, Lords, and Attendants.

Duke F. Can it be possible that no man saw them? It cannot be: some villains of my court Are of consent and sufferance in this.

1 Lord. I cannot hear of any that did see her. The ladies, her attendants of her chamber, Saw her a-bed; and in the morning early They found the bed untreasur'd of their mistress.

2 Lord. My lord, the roynish\(^3\) clown, at whom so oft Your grace was wont to laugh, is also missing. Hesperia, the princess' gentlewoman, Confesses that she secretly o'er-heard Your daughter and her cousin much commend The parts and graces of the wrestler, That did but lately foil the sinewy Charles; And she believes, wherever they are gone, That youth is surely in their company.

Duke F. Send to his brother: fetch that gallant hither; If he be absent bring his brother to me. I'll make him find him. Do this suddenly; And let no search and inquisition fail To bring again these foolish runaways.

SCENE III.—Before Oliver's House.

Enter Orlando and Adam, meeting.

Orl. Who's there? Adam. What, my young master?—O, my gentle master! O, my sweet master! O, you memory Of old Sir Rowland! why, what make you here? Why are you virtuous? Why do people love you? And wherefore are you gentle, strong, and valiant? Why would you be so fond\(^4\) to overcome The bony priser of the humorous duke? Your praise is come too swiftly home before you. Know you not, master, to some kind of men Their graces serve them but as enemies? No more do yours: your virtues, gentle master, Are sanctified and holy traitors to you. O, what a world is this, when what is comely Envenoms him that bears it!

Orl. Why, what's the matter? Adam. O, unhappy youth! Come not within these doors: beneath\(^5\) this roof The enemy of all your graces lives. Your brother,—no, no brother; yet the son—

Yet not the son—| I will not call him son—
Of him I was about to call his father,—
Hath heard your praises, and this night he means
To burn the lodging where you use to lie,
And you within it: if he fail of that,
He will have other means to cut you off:
I overheard him, and his practices.
This is no place; this house is but a butchery:
Abhor it, fear it, do not enter it.
Oft. Why, whither, Adam, wouldst thou have me go?
Adam. No matter whither, so you come not here.
Oft. What! wouldst thou have me go and beg my food,
Or with a base and boisterous sword enforce
A thievish living on the common road.
This I must do, or know not what to do;
Yet this I will not do, do how I can.
I rather will subject me to the maleice
Of a diverted, proud, 1 and bloody brother.
Adam. But do not so. I have five hundred crowns,
The thrifty hire I saw'd under your father,
Which I did store, to be my foster-nurse
Wherein to raise and add in my old limbs lie lame,
And unregarded age in corners thrown.
Take that; and He that doth the ravens feed,
Yea, providently eaters for the sparrow,
Bo comfort to my age! Here is the gold:
All this I give you. Let me be your servant:
Though I look old, yet I am strong and lusty;
For in my youth I never did apply
Hot and rebellious liquors in my blood;
Nor did not with unashamed forehead woo
The means of weakness and debility:
Therefore my age is as a lusty winter,
Frasty, but kindly. Let me go with you:
I'll do the service of a younger man
In all your business and necessities.
Oft. O, good old man! how well in thee appears
The constant favour 2 of the antique world,
When service sweat for duty, not for meed!
Thou art not for the fashion of these times,
Where none will sweat but for promotion,
And having that, do choke their service up
Even with the having: it is not so with thee.
But, poor old man, thou prun'st a rotten tree,
That cannot so much as a blossom yield,
In lieu of all thy pains and husbandry.
But come thy ways: we'll go along together,
And ere we have thy youthful wages spent,
We'll light upon some settled low content.
Adam. Master, go on, and I will follow thee
To the last gasp with truth and loyalty,
From seventeen years, till now almost fourscore,
Here lived I, but now live here no more.
At seventeen years their fortunes seek;
But at fourscore it is too late a week:
Yet fortune cannot recompense me better,
Than to die well, and not my master's debtor. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter ROSALIND for Ganymede, CELIA for Aliena, and CLOEN, alias TOUCHSTONE.

Ros. O Jupiter! how weary 3 are my spirits!
Touch. I care not for my spirits, if my legs were not Weary.
Ros. I could find in my heart to disgrace my man's apparel,
And to cry like a woman; but I must comfort the weaker vessel, as doubling and hogs ought to show

1 diverted blood: in f. e. 2 service: in f. e. 3 The old copies have "merry," which Knight retains. * sat: in f. e. A bat used in washing linen. * Love, love: in f. e. * f. e. give these two lines as one. * This line not in f. e.

Ros. Peace, fool: he's not thy kinsman.
Cor. Who calls?
Touch. Your betters, sir.
Cor. Else are they very wretched.
Ros. Peace, I say. —

Ros. Good even to you, friend.
Cor. And to you, gentle sir; and to you all.
Ros. I pray thee, shepherd, if that love, or gold,
Can this desert place buy entertainment,
Bring us where we may rest ourselves, and feed.
Here's a young maid with travel much opprest,
And faiths for souer.
Cor.
Fair sir, I pity her,
And wish, for her sake more than for mine own,
My fortunes were more able to relieve her;
But I am shepherd to another man,
And do not shear the fleeces that I graze;
My master is of churlish disposition,
And little reeks to find the way to heaven
By doing deeds of hospitality.
Besides, his cote, his flockes, and bounds of feed,
Are now on sale; and at our sheepester now,
By reason of his absence, there is nothing
That you will feed on; but what is, come see,
And in my voice most welcome shall you be.
Ros.
What is he that shall buy his flock and pasture?
Cor.
That young swain that you saw here but ere-while,
That little cares for buying any thing.
Ros.
I pray thee, if it stand with honesty,
Buy thou the cottage, pasture, and the flock,
And thou shalt have to pay for it of us.
Cel.
And we will mend thy wages.  I like this place,
And willingly could waste my time in it.
Cor.
Assuredly, the thing is to be sold.
Go with me: if you like, upon report,
The soil, the profit, and this kind of life,
I am so much the more faithfuller be,
And buy with it your gold right suddenly.
[Exeunt.
SESCNE V.—Another Part of the Forest.
Enter Amiens, Jaques, and others.
SONG.
Ami.
Under the Greenwood tree,
Who loves to lie with me,
And tune his merry note
Unto the sweet bird's throat,
Come hither, come hither, come hither:
Here shall he see no enemy,
But winter and rough weather.
Jaq.
More, more! I pr'ythee, more.
Ami.
It will make you melancholy, monsieur Jaques.
Jaq.
I thank it.
More! I pr'ythee, more.
I can suck melancholy out of a song, as a weasel sucks eggs.
More! I pr'ythee, more.
Ami.
My voice is ragged; I know I cannot please you.
Jaq.
I do not desire you to please me; I do desire you to sing.
Come, more; another stanza.
Call you'em stanzas?
Ami.
What you will, monsieur Jaques.
Jaq.
Nay, I care not for their names; they owe me nothing.
Will you sing?
Ami.
More at your request, than to please myself.
Jaq.
Well then, if over I thank any man, I'll thank you; but that they call compliment is like the encounter of two dog-apes: and when a man thanks me heartily, methinks, I have given him a penny, and he renders me the beggarly thanks.
Come, sing; and you that will not, hold your tongues.
Ami.
Well, I'll end the song.—Sirs, cover the while:
The duke will drink under this tree.—He hath been all this day to look you.
Jaq.
And I have been all this day to avoid him.
He is too disputable for my company: I think of as many matters as he, but I give heaven thanks, and make no boast of them.
Come, wamble, come.
And looking on it with lack-lustre eye,
Says very wisely, "It is ten o'clock:
Thus may we see," quoth he, "how the world wags:
'Tis but an hour ago since it was nine,
And after one hour more 't will be eleven;
And so from hour to hour we ripe and ripe,
And then from hour to hour we rot and rot;
And thereby hangs a tale." When I did hear
The motley fool thus moral on the time,
My lungs began to crow like chanteelie,
That fools should be so deep contemplative;
And I did laugh, sans intermission,
An hour by his dial.—O, noble fool!
A worthy fool! Motley's the only wear.

Duke S. What fool is this?

Jag. Worthy fool!—One that hath been a courtier,
And says, if ladies be but young and fair,
They have the gift to know it; and in his brain,
Which is as dry as the remaining biscuit
After a voyage, he hath strange places cram'md
With observation, the which he vents
In mangled forms.—O, that I were a fool!
I am ambitious for a motley coat.

Duke S. Thou shalt have one.

Jag. It is my only suit;
Provided, that you weed your better judgments
Of all reflection that grows rank in them,
That I am wise. I must have liberty
Withal, as large a charter as the wind,
To blow on whom I please; for so fools have:
And they that are most galled with my folly,
They must must laugh. And why, sir, must they so?
The why is plain as to way to parish church:
He, that a fool doth very wisely hit,
Doth very foolishly, although he smart,
But¹ to seem senseless of the bob; if not,
The wise man's folly is anatomized,
Even by the squandering glances of the fool.
Invest me in my motley; give me leave
To speak my mind, and I will through and through Cleanse the foul body of all infected world,
If they will patiently receive my medicine.

Duke S. Fie on thee! I can tell what thou wouldst do.

Jag. What, for a counter, would I do, but good?

Duke S. Most mischievous foul sin, in chiding sin:
For thou thyself hast been a libertine,
As sensual as the brutish sting itself;
And all th' embossed sores, and headed evils,
That thou with license of free foot hast caught,
Wouldst thou disgorge into the general world.

Jag. Why, who cries out on pride,
That can therein tax any private party?
Doth it not flow as hugely as the sea?
Till that the very means of wear² do ebb?
What woman in the city do I name,
When that I say, the city-woman bears
The cost of princes on unworthy shoulders?
Who can come in, and say, that I mean her,
When such a one as she, such is her neighbour?
Or what is he of basest function,
That says, his bravery is not on my cost,
Thinking that I mean him, but therein suits
His folly to the mettle of my speech?
There then; how then? what then? Let me see wherein
My tongue hath wrong'd him: if it do him right,
Then he hath wrong'd himself; if he be free,
Why then, my taxing like a wild goose flies,
Unclaim'd of any man.—But who comes here?

1 f. e.: Not.
2 the very, very means: in f. e.
Made to his mistress' eye-brow. Then, a soldier, Full of strange oaths, and bearded like the pard, Jealous in honour, sudden and quick in quarrel, Seeking the bubble reputation
Even in the cannon's mouth. And then, the justice, In fair round belly, with good capon lin'd,
With eye severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances;
And so he plays his part. The sixth age shifts
Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloon,
With spectacles on nose, and pouch on side;
His youthful hose, well sav'd, a world too wide
For his shrunk shank, and his big manly voice,
Turning again childish treble, pipes
And whistles in his sound. Last scene of all,
That ends this strange eventful history,
Is second childishness, and mere oblivion;
Sirs, eyes, sans taste, sans everything.

Re-enter Orlando, with Adam.

Duke S. Welcome. Set down your venerable burden,
And let him feed.

Orl. I thank you most for him.

Adam. So had you need;
I scarce can speak to thank you for myself.

Duke S. Welcome; fail not to.
As yet to question you about your fortunes.
Give us some music; and, good cousin, sing.

[Confers with Orlando.]

ACT III.

Enter Corin and Touchstone.

Cor. And how like you this shepherd's life, master Touchstone?

Touch. Truly, shepherd, in respect of itself, it is a good life; but in respect that it is a shepherd's life, it is naught. In respect that it is solitary, I like it very well; but in respect that it is private, it is a very vile life. Now, in respect it is in the fields, it pleaseth me well; but in respect it is not in the court, it is tedious.

As it is a spare life, look you, if fits my humour well:
but as there is no more plenty in it, it goes much against my stomach. Hast any philosophy in thee, shepherd?

Cor. No more, but that I know the more one sick-ens, the worse at ease he is; and that he that wants money, means, and content, is without three good friends; that the property of rain is to wet, and fire to burn; that good pasture makes fat sheep, and that a great cause of the night, is lack of the sun; that he,
that hath learned no wit by nature nor art, may complain of good breeding, or comes of a very dull kindred.

Touch. Such a one is a natural philosopher. Wast ever in court, shepherd?

Cor. No, truly.

Touch. Then thou art damned.

Cor. Nay, I hope,—

Touch. Truly, thou art damned, like an ill-roasted egg, all on one side.

Cor. For not being at court? Your reason.

Touch. Why, if thou never wast at court, thou never saw'st good manners; if thou never saw'st good manners, then thy manners must be wicked; and wickedness is sin, and sin is damnation. Thou art in a parlous state, shepherd.
This is the very false gallop of verses: why do you infect yourself with them?

Ros. Peace! you dull fool: I found them on a tree.

Touch. Truly, the tree yields bad fruit.

Ros. I'll graft it with you, and then I shall graft it with a medlar: then it will be the earliest fruit i' the country: for you 'll be rotten e'er you be half ripe, and that's the right virtue of the medlar.

Touch. You have said; but whether wisely or no, let the forest judge.

Enter CELIA, reading a paper.

Ros. Peace! I say once.

Here comes my sister; reading: stand aside.

Cel. Why should this a desert be?

For it is unpeopled: No;

Tongues I'll hang on every tree,

That shall civil sayings show:

Some, how brief the life of man

Runs his erring pilgrimage,

That the stretching of a span

Buckles in his sum of age.

Some, of violated vows

Twist the souls off friend and friend:

But upon the fairest boughs,

Or at every sentence end,

Will I Rosalinda write:

Teaching all that read to know

The quintessence of every sprite.

Heaven would in little show.

Therefore heaven Nature charg'd,

That one body should be fill'd

With all graces wide enlarg'd:

Nature presently distill'd

Helen's cheek, but not her heart,

Cleopatra's majesty,

Atlantia's better part.

Sad Lucretia's modesty.

Thus Rosalind of many parts

By heavenly syndic was devis'd,

Of many faces, eyes, and hearts,

To have the touches dearest prize'd.

Heaven would that these gifts should have,

And I to live and die her slave.

Ros. O, most gentle Jupiter!—what tedious homily of love have you wearied your parishioners withal, and never cried, "Have patience, good people!"

Cel. How now? back, friends.—Shepherd, go off a little:—go with him, sirrah.

Touch. Come, shepherd, let us make an honourable retreat; though not with bag and baggage, yet with scrup and scrippage. [Execute CONIN and TOUCHSTONE.

Cel. Didst thou hear these verses?

Ros. O! yes, I heard them all, and more too; for some of them had in them more feet than the verses would bear.

Cel. That's no matter: the feet might bear the verses. Ros. Ay, but the feet were lame, and could not bear themselves without the verse, and therefore stood lamely in the verse.

Cel. But didst thou hear without wondering, how thy name should be hanged and carved upon these trees?

Ros. I was seven of the nine days out of the wonder, before you came; for look here what I found on a palm-tree: I was never so be-rhymed since Pythagoras' time, that I was an Irish rat, which I can hardly remember.

Cel. Trow you, who hath done this?

Ros. Is it a man?
Ros. Do you not know I am a woman? when I think, I must speak. Sweet, say on.

Enter Orlando and Jaques.

Ros. [Aside to Celia.] I will speak to him like a saucy lackey, and under that habit play the knave with him. [To him.] Do you hear, forester?

Orl. Very well: what would you?

Ros. I pray you, what is 't o'clock?

Orl. You should ask me, what time o' day: there's no clock in the forest.

Ros. Then, there is no true lover in the forest; else sighing every minute, and groaning every hour, would detect the lazy foot of time as well as a clock.

Orl. And why not the swift foot of time? had not that been as proper?

Ros. By no means, sir. Time travels in divers paces with divers persons. I'll tell you who Time ambles withal, who Time trots withal, who Time gallops withal, and who he stands still withal.

Orl. I pray thee, who doth he trot withal?

Ros. Marry, he trots hard with a young maid, between the contract of her marriage, and the day it is solemnized: if the interim be but a se'nnight, Time's in the which women still give the lie to their con-sciences. But, in good sooth, are you he that hangs the verses on the trees, wherein Rosalind is so admired?

Ros. I swear to thee, youth, by the white hand of Rosalind, I am that he, that unfortunate he.

Ros. But are you so much in love as your rhymes speak?

O. Neither rhyme nor reason can express how much.

Ros. Love is merely a madness, and, I tell you, deserves as well a dark house, and a whip, as madmen do; and the reason why they are not so punished and cured, is, that the lunacy is so ordinary, that the whipners are in love too. Yet I profess curing it by counsel.

O. Did you ever cure any so?

Ros. Yes, one; and in this manner. He was to imagine me his love, his mistress, and I set him every day to woo me: at which time would I, being but a moonish youth, grieve, be effeminate, changeable, longing, and liking; proud, fantastical, apish, shallow, inconstant, full of tears, full of smiles; for every passion something, and for no passion truly any thing, as boys and women are, for the most part, cattle of this colour:
would now like him, now loathe him; then entertain him, then forewear him; now weep for him, then spit at him; that I drave my suitor from his mad humour of love, to a loving humour of madness; which was, to forswear the full stream of the world, and to live in a nook, merely monastic. And thus I cured him; and this way will I take upon me to wash your liver as clean as a sound sheep's heart, that there shall not be one spot of love in't.

O. I would not be cured, youth.

Ros. I would cure you, if you would but call me
Rosalind, and come every day to my cote, and woo me.

O. Now, by the faith of my love, I will. Tell me where it is.

Ros. Go with me to it, and I'll show it you; and,
by the way, you shall tell me where in the forest you live. Will you go?

O. With all my heart, good youth.

Ros. Nay, you must call me Rosalind.—Come, sister, will you go?

SCENE III.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey; Jaques behind, ob-servering them.

Touch. Come apiece, good Audrey: I will fetch up your goats. Audrey. And how, Audrey? am I the man yet? Doth my simple feature content you?

Aud. Your features? Lord warrant us! what features?

Touch. I am here with thee and thy goats, as the most capricious poet, honest Ovid, was among the Goths.

Jaq. [Aside.] O knowledge ill-inhabited! worse than Jove in a thatch'd house?

Touch. When a man's verses cannot be understood, nor a man's good wit seconded with the forward child, derstanding, it strikes a man more dead than a great beckoning in a little room.—Truly, I would the gods had made thee poetical.

Aud. I do not know what poetical is. Is it honest in deed, and word? Is it a true thing?

Touch. No, truly, for the truest poetry is the most feigning; and lovers are given to poetry, and what they swear in poetry, it may be said, as lovers do feign.
Aud. Do you wish, then, that the gods had made me poetical?

Touch. I do, truly; for thou swearest to me, thou art honest: now, if thou wert a poet, I might have some hope thou didst feign.

Aud. Would you not have me honest?

Touch. Not truly, unless thou wert hard-favoured; for honesty coupled to beauty is to have honey a sauce to sugar.

Jaq. [Aside.] A material fool.

Aud. Well, I am not fair, and therefore, I pray the gods, make me honest.

Touch. Truly, and to cast away honesty upon a foul slut were to put good meat into an unclean dish.

Aud. And I am not a slut, though I thank the gods I am foul.

Touch. Well, praised be the gods for thy foulishness; sluttishness may come hereafter. But be it as it may be, I will marry thee; and to that end, I have been with sir Oliver Mar-text, the vicar of the next village, who has promised to meet me in this place of the forest, and to couple us.

Jaq. [Aside.] I would fain see this meeting.

Aud. Well, the gods give us joy.

Touch. Amen. A man might, if he were of a fearful heart, stagger in this attempt; for here we have no temple but the wood; no assembly but horn-beasts. But what though? Courage! As horns are odious, they are necessary. It is said,—many a man knows no end of his gods; right; many a man has good horns, and knows no end of them. Well, that is the dowry of his wife: 'tis none of his own getting. Are horns given to poor men alone?—No, no; the noblest deer hath them as huge as the rascal. Is the single man therefore blessed? No: as a wall'd town is more worthy than a village, so is the forehead of a married man more honourable than the bare brow of a bachelor; and by how much defence is better than no skill, by so much is a horn more precious than to want.

Enter Sir Oliver Mar-text.

Here comes Sir Oliver—Sir Oliver Mar-text, you are well met: will you dispatch us here under this tree, or shall we go with you to your chapel?

Sir Oli. Is there none here to give the woman?

Touch. I will not take her on gift of any man.

Sir Oli. Truly. She must be given, or the marriage is not lawful.

Jaq. [coming forward.] Proceed, proceed: I'll give her.

Touch. Good even, good Mr. What-ye-call 't: how do you, sir? You are very well met: God 'll give you for your last company. I am very glad to see you:—even a toy in hand here, sir.—Nay; pray, be cover'd.

Jaq. Will you be married, molley?

Touch. As the ox hath his bow, sir, the horse his curb, and the falcon her bells, so man hath his desires; and as pigeons bill, so wedlock would be nibbling.

Jaq. And will you, being a man of your breeding, be married under a bush, like a beggar? Get you to church, and have a good priest that can tell you what marriage is: this fellow will but join you together as they join wainscot; then, one of you will prove a shrunk pannell, and, like green timber, warp, warp.

Touch. I am not in the mind, but I were better to be married of him than of another: for he is not like to marry me well, and not being well married, it will be a good excuse for me hereafter to leave my wife.

Jaq. Go thou with me, and let me counsel thee.

Touch. Come, sweet Audrey:

We must be married, or we must live in bawdry.

Farewell, good master Oliver! Not

O sweet Oliver! O brave Oliver!

Leave me not behind thee:

But wend' away, begone, I say,

I will not to wedding bind thee.

[Exeunt Jaques, Touchstone, and Audrey.

Sir Oli. 'Tis no matter: me'er a fantastical knife of them all shall flout me out of my calling. [Exeit.

SCENE IV.—The Same. Before a Cottage.

Enter Rosalind and Celia.

Rosalind. Never talk to me: I will weep.

Celia. Do, I pray thee; but yet have the grace to consider, that tears do not become a man.

Rosalind. But have I not cause to weep?

Celia. As good cause as one would desire: therefore weep.

Rosalind. His very hair is of the dissembling colour.

Celia. Something browner than Judas's. Marry, his kisses are Judas's own children.

Rosalind. I faith, his hair is of a good colour.

Celia. An excellent colour: your chestnut was ever the only colour.

Rosalind. And his kissing is as full of sanctity as the touch of holy bread.

Celia. He hath bought a pair of cast lips of Diana: a nun of winter's sisterhood kisses not more religiously; the very ice of chastity is in them.

Rosalind. But why did he swear he would come this morning, and comes not?

Celia. Nay, certainly, there is no truth in him.

Rosalind. Do you think so?

Celia. Yes: I think he is not a pick-purse, nor a horse-stealer; but for his verity in love, I do think him as conceveal as a covered goblet, or a worm-eaten nut.

Rosalind. Not true in love?

Celia. Yes, when he is in; but, I think he is not in.

Rosalind. You have heard him swear downright, he was.

Celia. War is not is: besides, the oath of a lover is no stronger than the word of a tapster; they are both the confimmers of false reckonings. He attends here in the forest on the duke your father.

Rosalind. I met the duke yesterday, and had much question with him. He asked me, of what parentage I was? I told him, of as good as he; so he laughed, and let me go. But what talk we of fathers, when there is such a man as Orlando?

Celia. O, that's a brave man! he writes brave verses, speaks brave words, swears brave oaths, and breaks them bravely, quite traverse, athwart the heart of his lover: as a puny tilter, that spurs his horse but on one side, breaks his staff like a noble goose. But all's brave, that youth mounts, and folly guides.—Who comes here?

Enter Corin.

Corin. Mistress, and master, you have oft inquir'd

After the shepherd that complain'd of love,

Who you saw sitting by me on the turf,

Praising the proud disdainful shepherdess

That was his mistress.

Celia. Well; and what of him?

Corin. If you will see a pageant truly play'd,

Between the pale complexion of true love,

And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain,

Go hence a little, and I shall conduct you,

If you will mark it.
Ros. O! come, let us remove:
The sight of lovers feedeth those in love.—
Bring us to this sight, and you shall say
I'll prove a busy actor in their play.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Forest.

Enter Silvius and Phoebe.

Sil. Sweet Phoebe, do not scorn me; do not, Phoebe:
Say that you love me not; but say not so
In bitterness. The common executioner,
Whose heart th' accustom'd sight of death makes hard,
Falls not the ax upon the humbled neck,
But first begs pardon: will you sterner be?
Than he that kills1 and lives by bloody drops?

Phoe. I would not be thy executioner:
I fly thee, for I would not injure thee.
Thou tell'st me, there is murder in mine eye:
'Tis pretty, sure, and very probable,
That eyes, that are the frail'st and softest things,
Who shut their coward gates on atoms,
Should be call'd tyrants, butchers, murderers!
Now do I frown on thee with all my heart;
And, if mine eyes can wound, now let them kill thee;
Now counterfeit to swoon; why, now fall down;
Or, if thou canst not, O, for shame, for shame!
Lie not, to say mine eyes are murderers.
Now show the wound mine eye hath made in thee:
Scratch thee but with a pin, and there remains
Some sort of it; I shall know thy grief,
The eatables and palpable2 impressure
Thy palm some moment keeps; but now mine eyes,
Which I have darted at thee, hurt thee not,
Nor, I am sure, there is no force in eyes
That can do hurt.

Sil. O! dear Phoebe,
If ever, (as that ever may be near)
You meet in some fresh cheek the power of fancy,
Then shalI you know the wounds invisible
That love's keen arrows make.

Phoe. But till that time
Come not thou near me; and when that time comes Afflict me with thy mocks, pity me not,
As thou wilt not injure me.

Ros. [Advancing.] And why, I pray you, Who might be your mother,
That you insult, exult, and all at once,
Over the wretched? What though you have no beauty,
As, by my faith, I see no more in you
Than without candle may go dark to bed,
Must you be therefore proud and pitiless?
Why, what means this? Why do you look on me?
I see no more in you, than in the ordinary
Of nature's sale-work:—Oh! my little life!
I think she means to tangled my eyes too.
No, faith, proud mistress; hope not after it;
'T is not your inky brows, your black-silk hair,
Your bigle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream,
That can entangle my spirits to your worship.
You foolish shepherd, wherefore do you follow her,
Like foggy south, puffling with wind and rain?
You are a thousand times a proper man,
Than she a woman: 'tis such fools as you,
That make the world full of ill-favour'd children.
'T is not her glass, but you, that flatters her;
And out of you she sees herself more proper,
Than any of her lineaments can show her.
But, mistress, know yourself: down on your knees,
And thank heaven fasting for a good man's love;

For I must tell you friendly in your ear,
Sell when you can: you are not for all markets.
Cry the man merry; love him; take his offer:
Foul is most foul, being full to be a scadder.
So, take her to thee, shepherd.— Fare you well.

Phoe. Sweet youth, I pray you, chide a year together.
I had rather hear you chide, than this man woo.

Ros. He's fallen in love with your fulness, and She'll fall in love with my anger. If it be so, as fast
As she answers thee with frowning looks, I'll sauce her with bitter words.—Why look you so upon me?

Phoe. For no ill will I bear you.

Ros. I pray you, do not fall in love with me,
For I am fatter than vows made in wine:
Besides, I like you not.—If you will know my house,
'Tis at the tuft of olives, here hard by.—

Will you go, sister?—Shepherd, ply her hard.

Come, sister.—Shepherdess, look on him better,
And be not proud: though all the world could see,
None could be so abus'd in sight as he.

Come, to our flock.

[Exeunt Silvius, Celia, and Corin.]

Phoe. Dead shepherd! now I find thy saw of might;

"Who ever lov'd, that lov'd not at first sight?"

Sil. Sweet Phoebe!

Phoe. Ha! what say'st thou, Silvius?

Sil. Sweet Phoebe, pity me.

Phoe. Why, I am sorry for thee, gentle Silvius.
Sil. Wherever sorrow is, there would be:
If you do sorrow at my grief in love,
By giving love, your sorrow and my grief
Were both extrem'd.

Phoe. Thou hast my love: is not that neighbourly?

Sil. I would have you.

Phoe. Why, that were covetousness.

Silvius, the time was that I hated thee,
And yet it is not that I bear thee love;
But since that thou canst talk of love so well,
Thy company, which erst was irksome to me,
I will endure, and I'll employ thee too;
But do not look for farther recompense,
Than thine own gladness that thou art employ'd.

Sil. So holy, and so perfect is my love,
And I in such great grace,
That I shall think it a most plenteous crop
To glean the broken ears after the man
That the main harvest reap's. loose now and then
A scatter'd smile, and that I'll live upon.

Phoe. Know'st thou the youth that spoke to me ere-while?

Sil. Not very well, but I have met him oft;
And he hath bought the cottage, and the bounds,
That the old earlott once was master of.

Phoe. Think not I love him, though I ask for him.
'T is but a peevish boy;—yet he talks well:—
But what care I for words? yet words do well,
When he that speaks them besides those that hear.
It is a pretty youth:—not very pretty:—
But, sure, he's proud; and yet his pride becomes him.
He'll make a proper man: the best thing in him
Is his complexion; and faster than his tongue
Did make offence, his eye did heal it up.
He is not very tall; yet for his years he's tall.
His leg is but so; and yet 'tis well:
There was a pretty redness in his lip;
A little riper, and more lusty red
Than that mix'd in his cheek: 'twas just the difference
Betwixt the constant red, and mingled damask.
There be some women, Silvius, had they mark'd him

1 dies; in f. e.  2 capable; in f. e.  3 An allusion to Marlowe's and his Hero and Leander, where the quotation is to be found.
In part, as I did, would have gone near
To fall in love with him; but for my part
I love him not, nor hate him not, and yet
I have more cause to hate him than to love him;
For what had he to do chide at me?
He said mine eyes were black, and my hair black;
And, now I am remember'd, scorn'd at me:
I marvel why I answer'd not again:

But that's all one; omission is no guiltance.
I'll write to him a very taunting letter,
And thou shalt bear it: wilt thou, Silvius?
Sil. Phebe, with all my heart.
Phe. I'll write it straight;
The matter's in my head, and in my heart:
I will be bitter with him, and passing short.
Go with me, Silvius. [Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter Rosalind, Celia, and Jaques.

Jaq. I pr'ythee, pretty youth, let me be better acquainted with thee.

Rosal. They say, you are a melancholy fellow.

Jaq. I am so; I do love it better than laughing.

Rosal. These that are in extremity of either are abominable fellows, and betray themselves to every modern censure worse than drunkards.

Jaq. Why, 'tis good to be sad and say nothing.

Rosal. Why then, 'tis good to be a post.

Jaq. I have neither the scholar's melancholy, which is emulation; nor the musician's, which is fantastic; nor the courier's, which is proud; nor the soldier's, which is ambitious; nor the lawyer's, which is politic; nor the lady's, which is nice; nor the lover's, which is all these; but it is a melancholy of mine own, compounded of many simples, extracted from many objects, and, indeed, the sordid contemplation of my travels; which by often rumination wraps me in a most humorous sadness.

Rosal. A traveller! By my faith, you have great reason to be sad. I fear, you have sold your own lands, to see other men's; then, to have seen much, and to have nothing, is to have rich eyes and poor hands.

Jaq. Yes, I have gained my experience.

Enter Orlando.

Rosal. And your experience makes you sad. I had rather have a fool to make me merry, than experience to make me sad. And to travel for it too!

Orel. Good day, and happiness, dear Rosalind.

Rosal. Nay then, God be wi' you, an you talk in blank verse.

[Exit.

Rosal. Farewell, monsieur traveller: look you lisp, and wear strange suits; disable all the benefits of your own country; be out of love with your nativity, and almost chide God for making you that countenance you are, or I will scarce think you have swam in a gondola.—Why, how now, Orlando! where have you been all this while? You a lover? An you serve me such another trick, never come in my sight more.

Orel. My fair Rosalind, I come within an hour of my promise.

Rosal. Break an hour's promise in love! He that will divide a minute into a thousand parts, and break but a part of the thousandth part of a minute in the affairs of love, it may be said of him, that Cupid hath clapped him o' the shoulder, but I'll warrant him heart-while.

Orel. Pardon me, dear Rosalind.

Rosal. Nay, an you be so tardy, come no more in my sight: I had as lief be wo'd of a snail.

Orel. Of a snail?

[1] In which my is the reading of the 2d folio; adopted by Knight.

[3] I think my honesty ranker than my wit: in f. e. Hamner also suggested the change.

now I will be your Rosalind in a more coming-on-dis- position, and ask me what you will, I will grant it.

Otl. Then love me, Rosalind, [all.

Ros. Yes, faith will I; Fridays, and Saturdays, and Otl. And will thou have me?

Ros. Ay, and twenty such.

Otl. What say'st thou?

Ros. Are you not good?

Otl. I hope so.

Ros. Why, then, can one desire too much of a good thing?—Come, sister, you shall be the priest, and marry us.—Give me your hand, Orlando.—What do you say, sister?

Otl. Pray thee, marry us,

Cel. I cannot say the words.

Ros. You must begin,—[\textit{Will you, Orlando,}?—

Cel. Go to.—Will you, Orlando, have to wife this Rosalind?

Otl. I will.

Ros. Ay, but when?

Otl. Why now; as fast as she can marry us.

Ros. Then you must say,—[\textit{I take thee, Rosalind, for wife.}]

Otl. I take thee, Rosalind, for wife.

Ros. I might ask you for your commission; but,—I do take thee, Orlando, for my husband. There's a girl, goes before the priest; and, certainly, a woman's thought runs before her actions.

Otl. So do all thoughts: they are winged.

Ros. Now tell me, how long you would have her, after you have possessed her?

Otl. For ever, and a day.

Ros. Say a day, without the ever. No, no, Orlando: men are April when they woo, December when they wed: maidens are May when they are maidens, but the sky changes when they are wives. I will be more jealous of thee than a Barbary cock-pigeon over his hen; more clamorous than a parrot against rain; more new-fangled than an ape; more giddy in my desires than a monkey: I will weep for nothing, like Diana in the fountain, and I will do that when you are disposed to be merry; I will laugh like a hyen, and that when thou art inclined to sleep.

Otl. But will my Rosalind do so?

Ros. By my life, she will do as I do.

Otl. O! but she is wise.

Cel. Else she could not have the wit to do this: the wiser, the waywarder. Make\textsuperscript{1} the doors upon a woman's wit, and it will out at the casement; shut that, and 'twill out at the key-hole; stop that, 'twill fly with the smoke out at the chimney.

Otl. A man that had a wife with such a wit, he might say,—[\textit{Wit, whither wilt?}]

Ros. Nay, you might keep that check for it, till you meet your wife's wit going to your neighbour's bed.

Otl. And what wit could wit have to excuse that?

Ros. Marry, to say,—she came to seek you there. You shall never take her without her answer, unless you take her without her tongue. O! that woman that cannot make her fault her husband's accusing,\textsuperscript{2} let her never nurse her child herself, for she will breed it like a fool.

Otl. For these two hours, Rosalind, I will leave thee.

Ros. Alas! dear love, I cannot lack thee two hours. I must attend the duke at dinner: by two o'clock I will be with thee again.

Ros. Ay, go your ways, go your ways.—I knew what you would prove; my friends told me as much, and I thought no less:—that flattering tongue of yours won me:—'tis but one cast away, and so,—come, death!—Two o'clock is your hour?

Otl. Ay, sweet Rosalind.

Ros. By my troth, and in good earnest, and so God mend me, and by all pretty oaths that are not dangerous, if you break one jot of your promise, or come one minute behind your hour, I will think you the most palpitical break-promise, and the most hollow lover, and the most unworthy of her you call Rosalind, that may be chosen out of the gross band of the unfaithful. Therefore, beware my censure, and keep your promise.

Otl.—With no less religion, than if thou wert indeed my Rosalind: so, adieu!

Ros. Well, time is the old justice that examines all such offenders, and let time try thee. Adieu!

[\textit{Exit Orlando.}]

Cel. You have simply misused our sex in yourlove-prate. We must have your doublet and hose plucked over your head, and show the world what the bird hath done to her own nest.

Ros. O, coz, coz, my pretty little coz, that thou diest know how many fathom deep I am in love! But it cannot be sounded: my affection hath an unknown bottom, like the bay of Portugal.

Cel. Or rather, bottomless; that as fast as you pour affection in, it runs out.

Ros. No; that same wicked bastard of Venus, that was begot of thought, conceived of spleen, and born of madness; that blind rascally boy, that abuses every one's eyes, because his own are out, let him be judge how deep I am in love.—I'll tell thee, Aliena, I cannot be out of the sight of Orlando. I'll go find a shadow, and sigh till he come.

Cel. And I'll sleep.

[\textit{Exeunt.}]

SCENE II.—Another Part of the Forest.

Enter Jaques and Lords, like Foresters.

Jaq. Which is he that killed the deer?

1 Lord. Sir, it was I.

Jaq. Let's present him to the duke, like a Roman conqueror; and it would do well to set the deer's horns upon his head for a branch of victory.—Have you no song, forester, for this purpose?

2 Lord. Yes, sir.

Jaq. Sing it: 'tis no matter how it be in tune, so it make noise enough.

\begin{verbatim}
SONG.
What shall he have that kill'd the deer?
His leather skin, and horns to wear.
Take thou no scorn to wear the horn;
It was a crest ere thou wast born.
Thy father's father wore it,
And thy father bore it:
The horn, the horn, the lusty horn,
Is not a thing to laugh to scorn.
\end{verbatim}

[\textit{Then sing him home: the rest shall bear this burden.}]

[\textit{Exeunt.}]

SCENE III.—The Forest.

Enter Rosalind and Celia.

Ros. How say you now? Is it not past two o'clock? And here much Orlando!

Cel. I warrant you, with pure love, and troubled brain,
He hath ta'en his bow and arrows, and gone forth—
To sleep. Look, who comes here.

[\textit{Enter Silvius.}]

Sil. My errand is to you, fair youth.—My gentle Phebe did bid me give you this:

[\textit{Giving a letter.} Ros. reads it,

\footnotesize{\textsuperscript{1} Make fast. \textsuperscript{2} occasion: in f. e. \textsuperscript{3} Not in f. e. \textsuperscript{4} is gone: in f. e. \textsuperscript{5} The rest of this stage direction not in f. e.}
I know not the contents; but as I guess,
By the stern brow and vasprish action,
Which she did use as she was writing of it,
It bears an angry tenour. Pardon me,
I am but as a guiltless messenger.

Ros. Patience herself would startle at this letter,
And play the scragger: bear this, bear all.
She says, I am not fair; that I lack manners;
She calls me proud, and that she could not love me,
Were man as rare as Phoenix. Od's my will!
Her love is the hare that I do hunt:
Why writes she so to me?—Well, shepherd, wall;
This is a letter of your own device.

Sil. No, I protest; I know not the contents:
Phebe did write it.

Ros. Come, come, you are a fool,
And turn'd into the extremity of love.
I saw her hand: she has a leathern hand,
A freestone-colour'd hand: I verily did think
That her old gloves were on, but 't was her hands:
She has a housewife's hand: but that's no matter.
I say, she never did invent this letter;
This is a man's invention, and his hand.

Sil. Sure, it is hers.

Ros. Why, 'tis a boisterous and a cruel style,
A style for challengers: why, she defies me,
Like Turk to Christian. Woman's gentle brain
Could not drop forth such giant-rude invention,
Such Ethiop words, blacker in their effect
Than in their countenance.—Will you hear the letter?

Sil. So please you; for I never heard it yet,
Yet heard too much of Phebe's cruelty.

Ros. She Phebe me. Mark how the tyrant writes.

"Art thou god to shepherd turn'd,
That a maiden's heart hath burn'd?"—

Can a woman rail thus?

Sil. Call you this railing?

Ros. "Why, thy godhead laid apart,
Warr'st thou with a woman's heart?"

Did you ever hear such railing?—

"Whiles the eye of man did woo me,
That could do no vengeance to me."—

Meaning me, a beast.—

"If the scorn of your bright eyne
Have power to raise such love in mine,
Alack! in me what strange effect
Would they work in mild aspect?
Whiles you chid me, I did love;
How then might your prayers move?
He that brings this love to thee,
Little knows this love in me:
And by him seal up thy mind;
Whether that thy youth and kind
Will the faithful offer take
Of me, and all that I can make;
Or else by him my love deny,
And then I'll study how to die?"

Sil. Call you this chiding?

Cel. Alas, poor shepherd!

Ros. Do you pity him? no; he deserves no pity.—
Wilt thou love such a woman?—What, to make thee an instrument, and play false strains upon thee? not to be endured!—Well, go your way to her, (for I see, love hath made thee a tame snake) and say this to her—that if she love me, I charge her to love thee;
if she will not, I will never have her, unless thou entreat for her.—If you be a true lover, hence, and not a word, for here comes more company. [Exit Silvius.

Enter Oliver.

Oli. Good morrow, fair ones. Pray you, if you know,

Where in the purlieus of this forest stands
A sheep-cote, fence'd about with olive-trees?

Cel. West of this place, down in the neighbour bottom:
The rank of osiers, by the murmuring stream,
Left on your right hand, brings you to the place.
But at this hour the house doth keep itself;
There's none within.

Oli. If that an eye may profit by a tongue,
Then should I know you by description;
Such garments, and such years,—'tis the boy is fair,
Of female favour, and bestows himself
Like a ripe sister: the woman low,
And browner than her brother. Are not you
The owner of the house I did inquire for?
Cel. It is no boast, being ask'd, to say, we are.

Oli. Orlando doth commend him to you both;
And to that youth, he calls his Rosalind,
He sends this bloody napkin. Are you he?

Ros. I am. What must we understand by this?

Oli. Some of my shame; if you will know of me
What man I am, and how, and why, and where
This handkerchief was stain'd.

Cel. I pray you, tell it.

Oli. When last the young Orlando parted from you,
He left a promise to return again
Within an hour; and, pacing through the forest,
Chewing the food of sweet and bitter fancy,
Lo, what befell! he threw his eye aside,
And, mark, what object did present itself!
Under an old oak, whose boughs were moss'd with age,
And high top bali'd with dry antiquity,
A wretched ragged man, o'ergrown with hair,
Lay sleeping on his back: about his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlik'd itself,
And with indented glides did slip away
Into a bush; under which bush's shade
A lioness, with udders all drawn dry,
Lay couching, head on ground, with callish watch,
When that the sleeping man should stir; for 't is
The royal disposition of that beast,
To prey on nothing that doth seem as dead.
This seen, Orlando did approach the man,
And found it was his brother, his elder brother.

Cel. O! I have heard him speak of that same brother:
And he did render him the most unnatural
That liv'd 'mongst men.

Oli. And well he might so do,
For well I know he was unnatural.

Ros. But, to Orlando.—Did he leave him there,
Food to the suck'd and hungry lioness?

Oli. Twice did he turn his back, and purpose'd so;
But kindness, nobler ever than revenge,
And nature, stronger than his just occasion,
Made him give battle to the lioness,
Who quickly fell before him: in which hurrying
From miserable slumber I awak'd.

Cel. Are you his brother?

Ros. Was it you he rescu'd?

Cel. Was't you that did so oft contrive to kill him?

Oli. 'T was I; but 't is not I. I do not shame
To tell you what I was, since my conversion
So sweetly tastes, being the thing I am.

Ros. But, for the bloody napkin?

Oli. By. By, and by. When from the first to last, betwixt us two,
Tears our recountements had most kindly bath'd,
As, how I came into that desert place,
In brief, he led me to the gentle duke,
Who gave me fresh array, and entertainment,
Committing me unto my brother's love:
Who led me instantly unto his cave,
There stripp'd himself; and here, upon his arm,
The lioness had torn some flesh away,
Which all this while had bled; and now he fainted,
And cried in fainting upon Rosalind.
Brief, I recover'd him, bound up his wound;
And, after some small space, being strong at heart,
He sent me hither, stranger as I am,
To tell this story, that you might excuse
His broken promise; and to give this napkin,
Dyed in his blood, unto the shepherd youth
That he in sport doth call his Rosalind.

"Cel. Why, how now, Ganymede? sweet Ganymede?"

Oli. Many will swoon when they do look on blood.
Cel. There is more in it.—Cousin!—Ganymede!
Oli. Look; he recovers. [Raising her.]

Ros. I would I were at home.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Forest of Arden.
Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Touch. We shall find a time, Audrey: patience, gentle Audrey.

Aud. 'Faith, the priest was good enough, for all the old gentleman's saying.

Touch. A most wicked sir Oliver, Audrey; a most vile Mas-text. But, Audrey; there is a youth here in the forest lays claim to you.

Aud. Ay, I know who 'tis; he hath no interest in me in the world. Here comes the man you mean.

Enter William.

Touch. It is meat and drink to me to see a clown.
By my troth, we that have good wits have much to answer for: we shall be flattering; we cannot hold.

Will. Good even, Audrey.

Aud. God ye good even, William.

Will. And good even to you, sir.

Touch. Good even, gentle friend. Cover thy head, cover thy head: nay, pr'ythee, be covered. How old are you, friend?

Will. Five and twenty, sir.

Touch. A ripe age. Is thy name William?

Will. William, sir.

Touch. A fair name. Wast born i' the forest here?

Will. Ay, sir, I thank God.

Touch. Thank God;—a good answer. Art rich?

Will. 'Faith, sir, so, so.

Touch. So, so, is good, very good, very excellent good—and yet it is not; it is but so good. Art thou wise?

Will. Ay, sir, I have a pretty wit.

Touch. Why, thou say'st well. I do now remember a saying; "The fool doth think he is wise, but the wise man knows himself to be a fool." The bohemian philosopher, when he had a desire to eat a grape, would open his lips when he put it into his mouth, meaning thereby, that grapes were made to eat, and lips to open. You do love this maid?

Will. I do, sir.

Touch. Give me your hand. Art thou learned?

Will. No, sir.

Cel. We'll lead you thither.—
I pray you, will you take him by the arm?

Oli. Be of good cheer, youth.—You a man? You lack A man's heart.

Ros. I do so, I confess it. Ah, sirrah! a body would think this was well counterfeited. I pray you, tell your brother how well I counterfeited.—Heigh ho!—
Oli. This was not counterfeit; there is too great testimony in your complexion, that it was a passion of earnest.

Ros. Counterfeited, I assure you.
Oli. Well then, take a good heart, and counterfeit to be a man.

Ros. So I do; but, 'tis faith, I should have been a woman by right.

Cel. Come; you look paler and paler: pray you, draw homewards.—Good sir, go with us.

Oli. That will I, for I must bear answer back,
How you excuse my brother, Rosalind.

Ros. I shall devise something. But, I pray you, commend my counterfeiting to him.—Will you go?

[Exit.]

[Exeunt.]
Invite the duke, and all's contented followers.

Enter Rosalind.

Go you, and prepare Aliena; for, look you, here comes my Rosalind.

Ros. God save you, brother.

Oli. And you, fair sister. [Exit.

Ros. O! my dear Orlando, how it grieves me to see thee wear thy heart in a scarf.

Ori. It is my arm.

Ros. I thought thy heart had been wounded with the clawed and lipped Cicada, or with the eyes of a lady.

Ros. Wounded it is, but with the eyes of a lady.

Ros. Did your brother tell you how I counterfeited to swoon, when he showed me your handkerchief?

Ori. Ay, and greater wonders than that.

Ros. O! I know where you are.—Nay, 'tis true; there was never any thing so sudden, but the flight of two rams, and Caesar's thronalsh sang of:—"I came, saw, and "overcame;" for your brother and my sister no sooner met, but they looked; no sooner looked, but they loved; no sooner loved, but they sighed; no sooner sighed, but they asked one another the reason; no sooner knew the reason, but they sought the remedy: and in these degrees have they made a pair of stars, to manifest which they will climb inconvenient, or else be inconvenient before marriage. They are in the very wrath of love, and they will together; clubs cannot part them.

Ori. They shall be married to-morrow, and I will bid the duke to the nuptial. But, O! how bitter a thing it is to look into happiness through another man's eyes! By so much the more shall I to-morrow be at the height of heart-heaviness; by how much I shall think my brother happy in having what he wishes for.

Ros. Why then, to-morrow I cannot serve your turn for Rosalind?

Ori. I can live no longer by thinking.

Ros. I will weary you, then, no longer with idle talking. Know of me, then, (for now I speak to some purpose) that I know you are a gentleman of good conceit. I speak not this, that you should bear a good opinion of my knowledge, insomuch, I say, I know you are; neither do I labour for a greater esteem than may in some little measure draw a belief from you, to do yourself good, and not to grace me. Believe then, if you please, that I can do strange things. I have, since I was three years old, conversed with a magician, most profound in his art, and yet not damnable. If you do love Rosalind so near the heart as your gesture cries it out, when your brother marries Aliena, shall you marry her. I know into what straits of fortune she is driven; and it is impossible to me, if it appear not inconvenient to you, to set her before your eyes to-morrow, human as she is, and without any danger.

Ori. Speak'st thou in sober meanings?

Ros. By my life, I do; which I tender dearly, though I say I am a magician. Therefore, put you in your best array, bid your friends, for if you will be married to-morrow, you shall, and to Rosalind, if you will.

Enter Silvius and Phebe.

Look; here comes a lover of mine, and a lover of hers.

Phe. Youth, you have done me much ungentleness, to show the letter that I write to you.

Ros. Care not I, if I have: it is my study to seem despicable and ungentle to you. You are there follow'd by a faithful shepherd; look upon him, love him; he worships you.

Phe. Good shepherd; tell this youth what 'tis to love.

Sil. It is to be all made of sighs and tears;
    And so am I for Phebe.

Phe. And I for Ganymede.

Ori. And I for Rosalind.

Ros. And I for no woman.

Sil. It is to be all made of faith and service;
    And so am I for Phebe.

Phe. And I for Ganymede.

Ori. And I for Rosalind.

Ros. And I for no woman.

Sil. It is to be all made of fantasy;
    All made of passion, and all made of wishes;
    All adoration, duty, and obedience;
    All humbleness, all patience, and impatience;
    All purity, all trial, all observance;
    And so am I for Phebe.

Phe. And so am I for Ganymede.

Ori. And so am I for Rosalind.

Ros. And so am I for no woman.

Sil. If this be so, why blame you me to love you?

[To Rosalind.

Sil. If this be so, why blame you me to love you?

[To Phebe.

Ori. If this be so, why blame you me to love you?

Sil. Who do you speak to? "Why blame you me to love you?"

Ori. To her, that is not here, nor doth not hear.

Ros. Pray you, no more of this: it is like the howling of Irish wolves against the moon.—I will help you, [To Silvius] if I can:—I would love you, [To Phebe] if I could.—To-morrow meet me all together:—I will satisfy you, [To Orlando] if ever I satisfied man, and you shall be married to-morrow:—I will content you, [To Silvius] if what pleases you contents you, and you shall be married to-morrow.—As you [To Orlando] love Rosalind, meet;—as you [To Silvius] love Phebe, meet; and as I love no woman, I'll meet. —So, fare you well; I have left you commands.

Sil. I'll not fail, if I live.

Phe. No. I. [Exit.

Ori. No. I. [Execut.

SCENE III.—The Same.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Touch. To-morrow is the joyful day, Audrey: to-morrow will we be married.

Aud. I do desire it with all my heart, and I hope it is no dishonest desire, to desire to be a woman of the world.

Touch. Here come two of the banished duke's pages.

[Enter two Pages.

1 Page. Well met, honest gentleman.

Touch. By my troth, well met. Come, sit; sit, and a song.

2 Page. We are for you; sit if the middle.

1 Page. Shall we clap into't roundly, without hawking, or spitting, or saying we are hoarse, which are only the prologues to a bad voice?

2 Page. I'faith, I'faith; and both in a tune, like two gypsies on a horse.

SONG.

It was a lover, and his lass,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
That o'er the green corn-field did pass.

In the spring time, the only pretty ring time,
When birds do sing, hey ding a ding, ding;
Sweet lovers love the spring.
Between the acres of the rye,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
These pretty country folks would lie,
In spring time, &c.

This carol they began that hour,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
How that our life was but a flower,
In spring time, &c.

And therefore take the present time,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
For love is crowned with the prime
In spring time, &c.

Touch. Truly, young gentlemen, though there was no great matter in the ditty, yet the note was very untuneable.

1 Page. You are deceived, sir: we kept time; we lost not our time.

Touch. By my troth, yes; I count it but time lost to hear such a foolish song. God be wi' you; and God mend your voices.—Come, Audrey. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Forest.

Enter Duke Senior, Amiens, Jaques, Orlando, Oliver, and Celia.

Duke S. Dost thou believe, Orlando, that the boy can do all this that he hath promised?

Orl. I sometimes do believe, and sometimes do not, as those that fear to hope, and know they fear.

Enter Rosalind, Silvius, and Phebe.

Rosal. Patience, once more, whiles our compact is heard.—

[To the Duke.] You say, if I bring in your Rosalind, You will bestow her on Orlando here?

Duke S. That would I, had I kingdoms to give with her.

Rosal. [To Orlando.] And you say, you will have her, when I bring her?

Orl. That would I, were I of all kingdoms king.

Rosal. [To Phebe.] You say, you'll marry me, if I be willing?

Pheb. That will I, should I die the hour after.

Rosal. If I do refuse to marry me, You'll give yourself to this most faithful shepherd?

Pheb. So is the bargain.

Rosal. [To Silvius.] You say, that you'll have Phebe, if she will?

Sil. Though to have, her and death were both one thing.

Rosal. I have promised to make all this matter even.

Keep you your word, O duke! to give your daughter;—
You yours, Orlando, to receive his daughter:—
Keep you your word, Phebe, that you'll marry me; Or else, refusing me, to wed this shepherd:—
Keep your word, Silvius, that you'll marry her, If she refuse me:—and from hence I go, To make these doubts all even—even so.

[Exeunt Rosalind and Celia.

Duke S. I do remember in this shepherd-boy Some lively touches of my daughter's favour.

Orl. My lord, the first time that I ever saw him, Methought he was a brother to your daughter: But, my good lord, this boy is forest-born, And hath been tutor'd in the rudiments Of many desperate studies by his uncle, Whom he reports to be a great magician, Obscured in the circle of this forest.

Jaques. There is, sure, another flood toward, and these couples are coming to theark. Here comes a pair of very strange beasts, which in all tongues are called fools.

Touch. Salutation and greeting to you all.

Jaques. Good my lord, bid him welcome, This is the merry-minded gentleman, that I have so often met in the forest: he hath been a courtier, he swears.

Touch. If any man doubt that, let him put me to my purgation. I have trod a measure; I have flattered a lady; I have been politic with my friend, smooth with mine enemy; I have undone three tailors; I have had four quarrels, and like to have fought one.

Jaques. And how was that ta'en up?

Touch. What, faith, we met, and found the quarrel was upon the seventh cause.

Jaques. How the seventh cause?—Good my lord, like this fellow.

Duke S. I like him very well.

Touch. God 'ild you, sir; I desire you of the like. I press in here, sir, among the rest of the country copulative, to swear, and to forswear, according as marriage binds, and blood breaks.—A poor virgin, sir, an ill-favoured thing, sir, but mine own: a poor humour of mine, sir, to take that no man else will. Rich honesty dwells like a miser, sir, in a poor-house, as your pearl in your foul oyster.

Duke S. By my faith, he is very swift and sententious.

Touch. According to the fool's bolt, sir, and such ducat diseases.

Jaques. But, for the seventh cause; how did you find the quarrel on the seventh cause?

Touch. Upon a lie seven times removed.—Bears your body more seeming, Audrey.—As thus, sir. I did dislike the cut of a certain courtier's beard: he sent me word, if I said his beard was not cut well, he was in the mind it was: this is called the "retort courteous." If I sent him word again, it was not well cut, he would send me word, he cut it to please himself: this is called the "quip modest." If again, it was not well cut, he disabled my judgment: this is called the "reply churlish." If again, it was not well cut, he would answer, I spoke not true: this is called the "reproof valiant." If again, it was not well cut, he would say, I lied: this is called the "countercheck quarrelsome;" and so to the "lie circumstantial," and the "lie direct."

Jaques. And how oft did you say, his beard was not well cut?

Touch. I durst go no farther than the "lie circumstantial," nor he durst not give me the "lie direct;" and so we measured swords, and parted.

Jaques. Can you nominate in order now the degrees of the lie?

Touch. O sir, we quarrel in print, by the book, as you have books for good manners: I will name you the degrees. The first, the retort courteous; the second, the quip modest; the third, the reply churlish; the fourth, the reproof valiant; the fifth, the countercheck quarrelsome; the sixth, the lie with circumanstance; the seventh, the lie direct. All these you may avoid, but the lie direct; and you may avoid that too, with an if. I knew when seven justices could not take up a quarrel; but when the parties were met themselves, one of them thought but of an if; as If you said so, then I said so; and they shook hands and swore brothers. Your if is the only peace-maker; much virtue in it.

Jaques. Is not this a rare fellow, my lord? he's as good at any thing, and yet a fool.

1 untuneable: in f. e. 2 they: in f. e. 3 urg'd: in f. e. 4 These two words are not in f. e. 5 Yield.
Duke S. He uses his folly like a stalking-horse, and under the presentation of that he shoots his wit. Enter Hymen, leading Rosalind in woman’s clothes; and Cellia. Still Music.

Hymn. Then is there mirth in heaven, When earthly things made even Alone togeth’er,
   Good duke, receive this daughter, Hymen from heaven brought her;
   Yea, brought her hither
   That thou mightst join her hand with his,
   Whose heart within her bosom is.

Ros. [To Duke S.] To you I give myself, for I am yours.
[To Orlando.] To you I give myself, for I am yours.

Duke S. If there be truth in sight, you are my daughter.

Ori. If there be truth in sight, you are my Rosalind.

Phe. If sight and shape be true, Why then, my love adieu!

Ros. [To Duke S.] I’ll have no father, if you be not he.

[To Orlando.] I’ll have no husband, if you be not he.
[To Phebe.] Nor never wed woman, if you be not she.

Hymn. Peace, ho! I bar confusion.

’Tis I must make conclusion
Of these most strange events:
Here’s eight that must take hands,
To join in Hymen’s bands,
If truth holds true contents.

[To Orlando and Rosalind.] You and you no cross shall part:
[To Oliver and Cellia] You and you are heart in heart:
[To Phebe.] You to his love must accord,
Or have a woman to your lord:
[To Touchstone and Audrey.] You and you are sure together,
As the winter to foul weather.

Whilest a wedlock-hymn we sing,
Feed yourselves with questioning,
That reason wonder may diminish,
How thus we met, and thus we finish.

Song.
Wedding is great Juno’s crown;
O, blessed bond of board and bed!
’Tis Hymen peoples every town;
High wedlock, then, be honoured;
Honour, high honour, and renown,
To Hymen, god in ev’ry town!

Duke S. O, my dear niece! welcome thou art to me:
Even daughter, welcome in no less degree.

Phe. [To Silvius.] I will not cat my word, now thou art mine;

Thy faith my fancy to thee doth combine.

Enter Second Brother.

2 Bro. Let me have audience for a word or two.
I am the second son of old Sir Rowland;
That brings these tidings to this fair assembly.—
Duke Frederick, hearing how that every day
Men of great worth resorted to this forest,
Address’d a mighty power, which were on foot
In his own conduct, purposely to take
His brother here, and put him to the sword.
And to the skirts of this wild wood he came,
Where, meeting with an old religious man,
After some question with him, was converted
Both from his enterprise, and from the world;
His crown bequeathing to his banish’d brother,
And all their lands restor’d to them again,
That were with him exil’d. This to be true,
I do engage my life.

Duke S.

Welcome, young man.
Thou offer’st fairly to thy brothers’ wedding:
To one, his lands withheld; and to the other,
A land itself at large, a potent dukedom.
First, in this forest, let us do those ends:
That here were well begun, and well begot;
And after, every of this happy number,
That have endure’d shrewd days and nights with us,
Shall share the good of our returned fortune,
According to the measure of their states.
Meantime, forget this new-fall’n dignity,
And fall into our rustic revelry.—

Play, music! and you brides and bridgrooms all,
With measure heap’d in joy, to the measures fall.

Jaq. Sir, by your patience.—If I heard you rightly,
The duke hath put on a religious life,
And thrown into neglect the pompous court?

2 Bro. He hath.

Jaq. To him will I: out of these convivitas
There is much matter to be heard and learn’d.—
You [To Duke S.] to your former honour I bequeath;
Your patience, and your virtue, well deserves it:—
You [To Orlando.] to a love, that your true faith doth merit:—
You [To Oliver.] to your land, and love, and great allies:—
You [To Silvius.] to a long and well deserved bed:—
And you [To Touchstone.] to wrangling; for thy loving voyage
Is but for two months victual’d.—So, to your pleasures:
I am for other than for dancing measures.

Duke S. Stay, Jaques, stay.

Jaq. To see no pastime, I:—what you would have,
I’ll stay to know at your abandon’d cave.
[Exit.

Duke S. Proceed, proceed: we will begin these rites;
As we do trust they’ll end, in true delights.

EPILOGUE.

Ros. It is not the fashion to see the lady the Epilogues; but it is no more unhandsome, than to see the lord the Prologue. If it be true, that good wine needs no bush, ’tis true that a good play needs no epilogue; yet to good wine they do use good bushes, and good plays prove the better by the help of good epilogues. What a case am I in, then, that am neither a good epilogue, nor cannot insinuate with you in the behalf of a good play? I am not furnished like a beggar; therefore to beg will not become me: my way is, to conjure you; and I’ll begin with the women. I charge you, O women! for the love you bear to men, to like as much of this play as please you: and I charge you, O men! for the love you bear to women,
(as I perceive by your simmering none of you hates them) that between you and the women, the play may please. If I were a woman, I would kiss as many of you as had beards that pleased me, complexions that liked me, and breaths that I defied not; and, I am sure, as many as have good beards, or good faces, or sweet breaths, will, for my kind offer, when I make courtesy, bid me farewell.

1 Harmonize. 2 These things: in f. e. 3 Of: in f. e. 4 Tickell says, this is an allusion to the practice of women’s parts being played by men.

INDUCTION.

SCENE I.—Before an Alehouse on a Heath.
Enter Hostess and Christopher Sly.
Sly. I'll please you, faithful hostess.
Host. A pair of stocks, you rogue!
Sly. Y' are a baggage; I'll make you believe I'm a rogue; look in the chronicles, we came in with Richard Conqueror. Therefore, paucus pallabras; let the world slide.
Sly. No, not a denier. Go by, Jeronimy; go to thy cold bed, and warm thee.
Host. I know my remedy; I must go fetch the headborough.
Sly. Third, or fourth, or fifth borough, I'll answer him by law; I'll not budge an inch, boy: let him come, and kindly.
[Exit.
Wind horns. Enter a Lord from hunting, with Huntsmen and Servants.

Lord. Huntsman, I charge thee, tender well my hounds:
Brach! Merriman,—the poor cur is emboss'd, And couple Clowder with the deep-mouth'd brach. Saw'st thou not, boy, how Silver made it good At the hedge corner, in the coldest fault? I would not lose the dog for twenty pounds.
1 Hun. Why, Belman is as good as he, my lord; He cried upon it at the merest loss, And twice to-day pick'd out the dullest scent: Trust me, I take him for the better dog.
Lord. Thou art a fool: if Echo were as fleet, I would esteem him worth a dozen such. But sup them well, and look unto them all: To-morrow I intend to hunt again.
1 Hun. I will, my lord.
Lord. What's here? one dead, or drunk? See, doth he breathe?

1 A common word in the west of England, where it means to chastise, humble. —Gifford.
2 Chair, cozen.
3 F. e.; says Jeronimy. Go, by Jeronimy—from Thomas Kyd's Spanish Tragedy, often quoted in derision, and as a jest, phrase, by the writers of the day.
4 This is also a quotation from the same play.
5 Constable; it is usually altered to thirdborough.
6 A bound.
7 Foams at the mouth from fatigue.
8 And when he says he is: in f. e.
This do, and do it kindly, gentle sirs;
It will be pastime passing excellent,
If it be husbanded with modesty.

1.

In your Lord, I warrant you, we will play our part,
As he shall think, by our true diligence,
He is no less than what we say he is.

2.

Lord. Take him up gently, and to bed with him,
And each one to his office when he waketh.

[Exit Sirrah, go see what trumpet 'tis that sounds.]

[Exit Servant.]

Belike, some noble gentleman, that means
Travelling some journey, to repose him here.—

Re-enter Servant.

How now? who is 't?

Serv. An 't please your honour, players
That offer humble service to your lordship.

Lord. Bid them come near.

Enter five or six Players.4

Now, fellows, you are welcome.

Players. We thank your honour.

Lord. Do you intend to stay with me to-night?

2. Play. So please your lordship to accept our duty.

Lord. With all my heart.—This fellow I remember,
Since once he play'd a farmer's eldest son:—
't was where you wo'd the gentlewoman so well.
I have forgot your name; but, sure, that part
Was aptly fitted, and naturally perform'd.

1. Play. I think, 't was Solo that your honour means.

Lord. 'Tis very true: thou didst it excellent.
Well, you are come to me in happy time,
The rather for I have some sport in hand,
Wherein your cunning can assist me much.
There is a lord will hear you play to-night;
But I am doubtful of your modesties,
Lest, over-eyeing of his odd behaviour,
(For yet his honour never heard a play)
You break into some merry passion,
And so offend him; for I tell you, sirs,
If you should smile he grows impatient.

A Play. Fear not, my lord: we can contain ourselves,
Were he the veriest antie in the world.

Lord. Go, sirrah, take them to the buttery,
And give them friendly welcome every one:
Let them want nothing that my house affords.—

[Exeunt Servant and Players.]

Sirrah, go you to Bartholomew, my page, [To a Servant.

And see him dress'd in all suits like a lady:
That done, conduct him to the drunkard's chamber;
And call him madam, do him obeisance:
Tell him from me, as he will win my love,
He bear himself with honourable action,
Such as he hath observ'd in noble ladies
Unto their lords by them accomplished:
Such duty to the drunkard let him do,
With soft low tongue, and lowly courtesy;
And say,—what is 't your honour will command,
Wherein your lady, and your humble wife
May show her duty, and make known her love?
And then, with kind embracements, tempting kisses,
And with declining head into his bosom,
Bid him shed tears, as being overjoy'd.
To see her noble lord restor'd to health,
Who for this seven years hath esteemed him
No better than a poor and loathsome beggar.
And if the boy have not a woman's gift,
To rain a shower of commended tears,
An onion will do well for such a shift,

Which, in a napkin being close convey'd,
Shall in despite enforce a watery eye.
See this despatch'd with all the haste thou canst:
Anon I'll give thee more instructions. [Exit Servant.
I know, the boy will well usurp the grace,
Voice, gait, and action of a gentlewoman:
I long to hear him call the drunkard husband,
And how my men will stay themselves from laughter,
When they do homage to this simple peasant.
I'll in to counsel them: haply, my presence
May well abate their over-merry spleen,
Which otherwise would grow into extremes. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Bedchamber in the Lord's House.

Sly is discovered, with Attendants; some with apparel, others with bason, ever, and appar tenances. Enter Lord, dressed like a Servant.

Sly. For God's sake, a pot of small ale.

1 Serv. Will't please your lordship drink a cup of sack?

2 Serv. Will't please your honour taste of these conserves?

3 Serv. What raiment will your honour wear to-day?

Sly. I am Christopher Sly; call me not honour, nor lordship: I never drank sack in my life; and if you give me any conserve, give me conserve of beef.
Ne'er ask me what raiment I'll wear, for I have no more doublets than backs, no more stockings than legs, ne, some times, more feet than shoes, or such shoes as my feet look through the overleather. [honour!]

Lord. Heaven cease this evil humour in your
O! that a mighty man, of such descent,
Of such possessions, and so high esteem,
Should be infused with so foul a spirit!

Sly. What! would you make me mad? Am not I Christopher Sly, old Sly's son, of Burton-heath; by birth a pedlar, by education a card-maker, by transmigration a bear-herd, and now by present profession a trucker? Ask Marian Hacket, the fat alewife of Win-coat; if she know me not: if she say I am not fourteen pence on the score for Warwickshire ale, score me up for the lying'st knave in Christendom. What! I am not bestraught. Here's—

1 Serv. O! this it is that makes your lady mourn.

3 Serv. O! this it is that makes your servants droop.

Lord. Hence comes it that your kindred shun your house,
As beaten hence by your strange lunacy.
O, noble lord! bethink thee of thy birth;
Call home thy ancient thoughts from banishment,
And banish hence these abject lowly dreams.
Look how thy servants do attend on thee,
Each in his office ready at thy beck.
Will thou have music? here, Apollo plays, [Music.

And twenty caged nightingales do sing:
Or wilt thou sleep? we'll have thee to a couch,
Softer and sweeter than the lustful bed
On purpose trimm'd up for Semiramis.
Say thou wilt walk, we'll bestrew the ground:
Or wilt thou ride, thy horses shall be trapp'd,
Their harness studded all with gold and pearl.
Dost thou love hawking? thou hast hawks will soar
Above the morning lark: or wilt thou hunt?
Thy hounds shall make the welkin answer them,
And fetch shrill echoes from the hollow earth.

1 Serv. Say thou wilt course, thy greyhounds are as swift

wickshire, is supposed to be alluded to. 7 A place about four miles from Stratford. 8 she'er: in f. e. 9 Disraught, distracted.
As breathed stag, ay, fleeter than the roe.

2 Serv. Doth thou love pictures? we will fetch thee straight.

Adonis painted by a running brook,
And Cytherea all in hedges hid,
Which seem to move and wanton with her breath,
Even as the waving sedges play with wind.

Lord. We'll show thee Io as she was a maid,
And how she was beguiled and surpris'd,
As lively painted as the deed was done.

3 Serv. Or Daphne roaming through a thorny wood Scratching her legs, that one shall swear she bleeds;
And at that sight shall sad Apollo weep,
So workmanly the blood and tears are drawn.

Lord. Thou art a lord, and nothing but a lord:
Thou hast a lady, far more beautiful
Than any woman in this waning age.

1 Serv. And, till the tears that she hath shed for thee,
Like envious floods, o'er-ran her lovely face,
She was the fairest creature in the world;
And yet she is inferior to none.

Sly. Am I a lord? and have I such a lady?
Or do I dream? or have I dream'd till now?
I do not sleep; I see, I hear, I speak:
I smell sweet savours, and I feel soft things.
Upon my life, I am a lord, indeed,
And not a tinker, nor Christopher Sly.
Well, bring the lady hither to our sight;
And once again, a pot o' the smallest ale.

2 Serv. Will you please your mightiness to wash your hands?

[Servants present an ever, bason, and napkin.

O, how we joy to see your wits restor'd!
O, that once more, you knew but what you are!
These fifteen years you have been in a dream,
Or, when you wak'd, so wak'd as if you slept.

Sly. These fifteen years! by my fay, a goodly nap.
But did I never speak of all that time?

1 Serv. O! yes, my lord, but very idle words;
For though you lay here in this goodly chamber,
Yet would you say, ye were beaten out of door,
And rail upon the hostess of the house.
And say you would present her at the feast,
Because she brought stone jugs, and not seal'd quarts.
Sometimes you would call out for Cicely Hacket.

Sly. Ay, the woman's maid of the house. [maid

3 Serv. Why, sir, you know no house, nor no such Nor no such men, as you have reckond' up,
As Stephen Sly, and old John Naps of Greece,
And Peter Turf, and Henry Pimpernell,
And twenty more such names and men as these,
Which never were, nor no man ever saw.

Sly. Now, Lord be thanked for my good amends!
All. Amen.

Sly. I thank thee; thou shalt not lose by it.

Enter the Page, as a Lady, with Attendants.

Page. How fares my noble lord?

Sly. Marry, I fare well; for here is cheer enough.
Where is my wife?

Page. Here, noble lord: what is thy will with her?

Sly. Are you my wife, and will not call me husband?
My men should call me lord: I am your good-man.

Page. My husband and my lord, my lord and husband;
I am your wife in all obedience.

Sly. I know it well. What must I call her?

Lord. Madam.

Sly. Al'pee madam, or Joan madam?

Lord. Madam, and nothing else; so lords call ladies.
Sly. Madam wife, they say that I have dream'd,
And slept about some fifteen year and more.

Page. Ay, and the time seems thirty unto me,
Being all this time abandon'd from your bed.

Sly. 'Tis much.—Servants, leave me and her alone.
Madam, undress you, and come now to bed.

Page. Thrice noble lord, let me entreat of you
To pardon me yet for a night or two;
Or if not so, until the sun be set,
For your physicians have expressly charg'd,
In peril to incur your former malady,
That I should yet absent me from your bed.

I hope this reason stands for my excuse.

Sly. Ay, it stands so, that I may hardly tarry so long:
but I would be loath to fall into my dreams again:
I will therefore tarry, in despite of the flesh and the blood.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Your honour's players, hearing your amendment,
Are come to play a pleasant comedy;
For so your doctors hold it very meet,
Seeing too much sadness hath congeal'd your blood,
And melancholy is the nurse of frenzy:
Therefore, they thought it good you hear a play,
And frame your mind to mirth and merriment,
Which bars a thousand harms and lengthens life.
Sly. Marry, I will: let them play it. Is not a commodity a Christmas gambol, or a tumbling-trick?

Page. No, my good lord: it is more pleasing stuff.

Sly. What, household stuff?

Page. It is a kind of history.

Sly. Well, we'll see it. Come, madam wife, sit by my side,
We shall ne'er be younger, and let the world slide. 4

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Padua. A Public Place.

Enter Lucientio and Tranio.

Luc. Tranio, since, for the great desire I had
To see fair Padua, nursery of arts,
I am arriv'd for fruitful Lombardy,
The pleasant garden of great Italy;
And, by my father's love and leave, am arm'd
With his good will, and thy good company,
My trusty servant, well approv'd in all,
Here let us breath, and hapsy institute

---

1 Court leet. 2 Sealed or stamped as full quart measure. 3 above: in f. e. 4 And let the world slip: we shall ne'er be younger. in f. e

A course of learning, and ingenious studies.

Pisa, renowned for grave citizens,
Gave me my being; and my father, first
A merchant of great traffic through the world,
Vincentio, comes of the Benetvoli.
Vincentio's son, brought up in Florence.
It shall become, to serve all hopes conceiv'd,
To deck his fortune with his virtuous deeds:
And therefore, Tranio, for the time I study
Virtue, and that part of philosophy
Will I apply, that treats of happiness
By virtue specially to be achiev'd,
Tell me thy mind; for I have Pisa left
And am to Padua come, as he that leaves
A shallow splash, to plunge him in the deep,
And with satiety seeks to quench his thirst.

Tr. Mi perdonate, gentle master mine,
I am in all affected as yourself,
Glad that you thus continue your resolve,
To suck the sweets of sweet philosophy;
Only, good master, while we do admire
This virtue, and this moral discipline,
Let's be no stoics, nor no stocks, I pray;
Or so devote to Aristotle's Ethics, 1
As Orpheus an outcast quite abjur'd.
Talk logick with acquaintance that you have,
And practise rhetoric in your common talk:
Music and poesy used to quicken you:
The mathematicses, and the metaphysics,
Fall to them as you find your stomach serves you.
No profit grows, where is no pleasure ta'en:—
In brief, sir, study what you most affect.

Luc. Gramercies, Tranio, well dost thou advise.
If, Blondello now were 2 come ashore,
We could at once put us in readiness,
And take a lodging fit to entertain
Such friends as time in Padua shall beget.
But stay awhile; what company is this?

Tr. Master, some show to welcome us to town.

[They stand back.] 3

Enter Baptista, Katharina, Bianca, Gremio, and Hortensio.

Bap. Gentlemen, importune me no farther,
For how I firmly am resolv'd you know;
That is, not to bestow my youngest daughter,
Before I have a husband for the elder.
If either of you both love Katharina,
Because I know you well, and love you well,
Leaves shall you have to court her at your pleasure.

Gre. To cart her rather: she's too rough for me.—
There, there, Hortensio, will you any wife?
Kath. [To Bar.] I pray you, sir, is it your gracious 4
Will to make a stale of me amongst these mates?

Hor. Mates, maid! how mean you that? no mates for you, unless you were of gentler, milder mood. 5

Kath. I' faith, sir, you shall never need to fear:
I wis, it is not half way to her heart;
But, if it were, doubt not her care should be
To comb your noodle with a three-legg'd stool,
And paint your face, and use you like a fool.

Hor. From all such devils, good Lord, deliver us!
Gre. And me too, good Lord!

Tr. Hush, master! here is some good pastime.

That man is stark mad, or wonderful froward.

Luc. But in the other's silence do I see Maid's mild behaviour, and sobriety,
Peace, Tranio.

Tr. Well said, master: mum! and gaze your fill.

Bap. Gentlemen, that I may soon make good
What I have said.—Bianca, get you in:
And let it not displeas thee, good Bianca,
For I will love thee ne'er the less, my girl.

Kath. A pretty peat! 6 it is best
Put finger in the eye,—an she knew why.

Bien. Sister, content you in my discontent.
Sir, to your pleasure humbly I subscribe:

My books, and instruments, shall be my company,
On them to look, and practise by myself.

Luc. Hark, Tranio! thou may'st hear Minerva speak.

Hor. Signior Baptista, will you be so strange?
Sorry am I, that our good will effecta
Bianca's grief.

Gre. Why, will you mew her up,
Signior Baptista, for this fiend of hell,
And make her bear the penance of her tongue?

Bap. Gentlemen, content ye; I am resolv'd. 7

Go in, Bianca. [Exit Bianca.

And for I know, she taketh most delight
In music, instruments, and poetry.
Schoolmasters will I keep within my house,
Fit to instruct her youth.—If you, Hortensio,
Or signior Gremio, you know any such,
Prefer them hither; for to cunning men
I will be very kind, and liberal
To mine own children in good bringing-up;
And so farewell. Katharina, you may stay,
For I have more to commune with Bianca. [Exit.

Kath. Why, and I trust, I may go too; may I not?
What shall I be appointed hours, as though, belike,
I knew not what to take, and what to leave? 8 Ha! [Exit.

Gre. You may go to the devil's dam: your gifts are so good, here's none will hold you. This! love is not so great, Hortensio, but we may blow our nails too; and fast it fairly out: our cake's dough on both sides. Farewell;—yet, for the love I bear my sweet Bianca, if I can by any means light on a fit man to teach her that wherein she delights, I will wish him to her father.

Hor. So will I, signior Gremio: but a word, I pray.
Though the nature of our quarrel yet never brook'd parle, know now upon advice, it toucheth us both, that we may yet again have access to our fair mistress, and be happy rivals in Bianca's love, to labor and effect one thing specially.

Gre. What's that, I pray?

Hor. Marry, sir, to get a husband for her sister.

Gre. A husband! a devil.

Hor. I say, a husband.

Gre. I say, a devil. Think'st thou, Hortensio, though her father be very rich, any man is so very a fool to be married to hell?

Hor. Tush, Gremio! though it pass your patience, and mine, to endure her loud alarums, why, man, there be good fellows in the world, an a man could light on them, would take her with all faults, and money enough.

Gre. I cannot tell, but I had as lief take her dowry with this condition,—to be whipped at the high-cross every morning.

Hor. Faith, as you say, there's small choice in rotten apples. But, come; since this bar in law makes us friends, it shall be so far forth friendly maintained, till by helping Baptista's eldest daughter to a husband, we set his youngest free for a husband, and then have to 't afresh. Sweet Bianca!—Happy man be his dog! 9
He that runs fastest gets the ring. How say you, signior Gremio?

Gre. I am agreed: and I would I had given him the best horse in Padua to begin his wooing, that would thoroughly woo her, wed her, and bed her, and rid the house of her. Come on.

Exeunt Gremio and Hortensio.

Tr. [advancing.] I pray, sir, tell me, is it possible
That love should of a sudden take such hold?

Luc. O, Tranio! till I found it to be true,
TAMING OF THE SHREW.

ACT I.

I never thought it possible, or likely.
But see! while idly I stood looking on,
I found the effect of love in idleness;
And now in plainness do confess to thee,
That art to me as seeret, and as dear,
As Anna to the Queen of Carthage was,
Tranio, I burn, I pine; I perish, Tranio,
If I achieve not this young modest girl.
Counsel me, Tranio, for I know thou canst:
Assist me, Tranio, for I know thou wilt.

Tr. Master, it is no time to chide you now;
Affection is not rated from the heart:
If love have touch'd you, nought remains but so—
Redine te captum, quam sequas ministrum.1

Luc. Gramercies, lad; go forward: this contents;
The rest will comfort, for thy counsel's sound.

Tr. Master, you look'd so longly on the maid,
Perhaps you mark'd not what's the pith of all.
Luc. O! yes, I saw sweet beauty in her face,
Such as the daughter of Agenor's race,2
That made great Jove to humble him to her hand,
When with his knees he kiss'd the Cretan strand.

Tr. Saw you no more? mark'd you not, how her Began to scold, and raise up such a storm,
That mortal ears might scarce endure the din?
Luc. Tranio, I saw her coral lips to move,
And with her breath she did perfume the air:
Saucer, and sweet, was all I saw in her.

Tr. Nay, then, 'tis time to stir him from his trance.—
I pray, awake, sir: if you love the maid,
Bend thoughts and wits to achieve her. Thus it stands:
Her elder sister is so curst and shrewd,
That, till the father rid his hands of her,
Master, your love must live a maid at home;
And therefore has he closely me'd her up,
Because she will not be annoy'd with suitors.
Luc. Ah, Tranio, what a cruel father's he!
But art thou not advis'd, be took some care
To get her cunning masters to instruct her?

Tr. Ay, marry am I, sir; and now 'tis plotted.

Luc. I have it, Tranio.

Tr. Master, for my hand,
Both our inventions meet and jump in one.

Luc. Tell me thine first.

Tr. You will be schoolmaster.
And undertake the teaching of the maid:
That's your device.

Luc. It is: may it be done?

Tr. Not possible; for who shall bear your part,
And be in Padua, here, Vincentio's son;
Keep house, and ply his book; welcome his friends:
Visit his countrymen, and banquet them?

Luc. Basta; content thee; for I have it full.
We have not yet been seen in any house,
Nor can we be distinguish'd by our faces,
For man, or master: then, it follows thus;
Thou shalt be master, Tranio, in my stead,
Keep house, and port, and servants, as I should.
I will some other be; some Florentine,
Some Neapolitan, or meaner man of Pisa.
'Tis hatch'd, and shall be so:—Tranio, at once
Uncase thee; take my colour'd hat and cloak:
When Biondello comes, he waits on thee,
But I will charm him first to keep his tongue.

Tr. So had you need. [They exchange habits.

Be brief, then, sir, sith it your pleasure is;
And I am t'ied to be obedient;
(For so your father charg'd me at our parting;

"Be serviceable to my son," quoth he,
Although, I think, 't was in another sense,)
I am content to be Lucentio.
Because so well I love Lucentio.
Luc. Tranio, be so, because Lucentio loves,
And let me be a slave, 't achieve that maid
Whose sudden sight hath thrall'd my wondering eye.

Enter Biondello.

Here comes the rogue.—Sirrah, where have you been?
Bion. Where have I been? Nay, how now? where are you?
Master, has my fellow Tranio stol'n your clothes,
Or you stol'n his, or both? pray, what's the news?
Luc. Sirrah, come hither: 't is no time to jest,
And therefore frame your manners to the time.
Your fellow Tranio, here, to save my life,
Puts my apparel and my countenance on,
And I for my escape have put on his;
For in a quarrel, since I came ashore,
I kill'd a man, and fear I was deserted.
Wait you on him, I charge you, as becomes,
While I make way from hence to save my life.
You understand me?

Bion. I, sir? ne'er a whist.

Luc. And not a jot of Tranio in your mouth:
Tranio is chang'd into Lucentio.

Bion. The better for him; 'twould I were so too!

Tr. So would I, faith, boy, to have the next wish after,
That Lucentio, indeed, had Baptista's youngest daugh-

But, sirrah, not for my sake, but your master's, I advise
You use your manners discreetly in all kind of compa-

When I am alone, why, then I am Tranio;
But in all places else, your master, Lucentio.

Luc. Tranio, let's go.—

One thing more rests, that thyself execute;
To make one among these wooers: if thou ask me why,
Sufficeth, my reasons are both good and weighty.

[Exeunt.

1 Serv. My lord, you nod; you do not mind the play.
Sly. Yes, by saint Anne, do I. A good master, surely: comes there any more of it?

Page. My lord, 'tis but begun.

Sly. 'Tis a very excellent piece of work, madam lady; 'twould 't were done!

SCENE II.—The Same. Before Hortensio's House.

Enter Petruchio and Grumio.

Pet. Verona, for a while I take my leave,
To see my friends in Padua; but, of all,
My best beloved and approved friend,
Hortensio; and, I trow, this is his house.—

Here, sirrah Grumio! knock, I say.

Gru. Knock, sir! whom should I knock? is there any man has rebused your worship?

Pet. Villain, I say, knock me here soundly.

Gru. Knock you here, sir? why, sir, what am I, sir, that I should knock you here, sir?

Pet. Villain, I say, knock me at this gate;
And rap me well, or I'll knock your knave's pate.

Gru. My master is grown quarrelsome.—I should knock you first,
And then I know after who comes by the worst.

Pet. Will try not?

'Faith, sirrah, an you 'll not knock, I'll wring it:
I'll try how you can sol. fa, and sing it.

[He wrings Grumio by the ears.
TAMING OF THE SHREW.

Grumio, help, masters, help! my master is mad.

[Grumio falls down.

Enter Hortensio.

Hor. How now! what's the matter?—My old friend Grumio, and my good friend Petruchio!—How do you all at Verona?

Pet. Signior Hortensio, come you to part the fray?

Con tutto il core ben trovato, may I say.

Hor. Alla nostra casa ben venuto, molto honorato signor mio Petruchio.

Rise, Grumio, rise: we will compound this quarrel.

Grum. [Rising.] Nay, 'tis no matter, sir, what he says be not a lawful cause for me to leave his service.—Look you, sir—be you bid me knock him, and rap him soundly, sir;—Well, was it fit for a servant to use his master so;—Being, perhaps, (for aught I see) two and thirty, a pip' me?

Whom would to God, I had well knock'd at first, Then had not Grumio come by the worst.

Pet. A senseless villain!—Good Hortensio, I bade the rascel knock upon your gate, And could not get him for my heart to do it.

Grum. Knock at the gate?—O heavens! Spake you not these words plain,—"Sirrah, knock me here; rap me here, knock me well, and knock me soundly?"—And do you never with knock'ing at the gate?—Sirrah, be gone, or talk not, I advise you.

Hor. Petruchio, patience: I am Grumio's pledge. Why this? a heavy chance 'twixt him and you; Your ancient, trusty, pleasant servant Grumio. And tell me now, sweet friend, what happy gale Blows you to Padua, here, from old Verona?

Pet. Such wind as scatters young men through the world,
To seek their fortunes farther than at home, Where small experience grows. But in a few, Signior Hortensio, thus it stands with me: Antonio, my father, is deceas'd, And I have thrust myself into this maze, Haply to write, and thrive, as best I may. Crowned in my purse I have, and goods at home, And so am come abroad to see the world.

Hor. Petruchio, shall I then come roundly to thee, And wish thee to a shriveled ill-favoured wife? Thou'rt thank me but a little for my counsel; And yet I'll promise thee she shall be rich, And very rich—but thou'rt too much my friend, And I'll not wish thee to her.

Pet. Signior Hortensio, 'twixt such friends as we Few words suffice; and therefore, if thou know One rich enough to be Petruchio's wife, (As wealth is burthen of my wooing dance) 'Tis she as foul as was Florentius' love, As old as Sybil, and as curst and shrewd As Socrates' Xantippa, or even worse, She moves me not, or not removes, at least, Affection's edge in me. Were she as rough As are the swelling Adriatic seas, I come to wive it wealthily in Padua; If wealthily, then happily in Padua.

Grum. Nay, look you, sir, he tells you flatly what his mind is: why, give him gold enough and marry him to a puppet, or an aglet-baby;—or an old trot with nere a tooth in her head, though she have as many diseases as two and fifty horses. Why, nothing comes amiss, so money comes withall.

Hor. Petruchio, since we are stepp'd thus far in, I will continue that I broach'd in jest. I can, Petruchio, help thee to a wife With wealth enough, and young, and beauteous; Brought up, as best becomes a gentlewoman; Her only fault, and that is faults enough, Is, that she is intolerably curt, And shrewd, and froward; so beyond all measure, That, were my state far worse than it is, I would not wed her for a mine of gold.

Pet. Hortensio, peace! thou know'st not gold's effect. — Tell me her father's name, and 'tis enough, For I will board her, though she chide as loud As thunder, when the clouds in Autumn crack.

Hor. Her father is Baptista Minola, An affable and courteous gentleman; Her name is Katharina Minola, Renown'd in Padua for her scolding tongue.

Pet. I know her father, though I know not her, And he know my deceased father well. I will not sleep, Hortensio, till I see her; And therefore let me be thus bold with you, To give you over at this first encounter, Unless you will accompany me thither.

Grum. I pray you, sir, let him go while the humour lasts. O' my word, an she knew him as well as I do, she would think scolding would do little good upon her. She may, perhaps, call him half a score knaves or so;—why, that's nothing: an he begin once, he'll rain in his rope-tricks. I'll tell you what, sir,—an she stand him but a little, he will throw a figure in her face, and so disfigure her with it, that she shall have no more eyes to see within than a cat. You know him not, sir.

Hor. Tarry, Petruchio, I must go with thee, For in Baptista's keep my treasure is: He hath the jewel of my life in hold, His youngest daughter, beautiful Bianca, And her withholds from me, and other more Suitors to her, and rivals in my love; Supposing it a thing impossible, For those defects I have, would not be heards' that ever Katharina will be wood': Therefore this order hath Baptista ta'en, That none shall have access unto Bianca, Till Katharine the curst have got a husband.

Grum. Katharine the curst! A title for a maid of all titles the worst.

Hor. Now shall my friend Petruchio do me grace, And offer me, disguis'd in sober robes, To old Baptista, as a schoolmaster Well seen in music, to instruct Bianca; That so I may by this device, at least Have leave and leisure to make love to her, And unsuspected court her by herself.

Enter Gremio, and Lucentio disguised, with books under his arm.

Grem. Therefore here's no knavery. See, to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together! Master, master, look about you: who goes there? ha!

Hor. Peace, Grumio; 'tis the rival of my love. Petruchio, stand by a while.

Gru. A proper stripling, and an amorous! [They retire.

Gre. O! very well; I have perus'd the note. Hark you, sir; I'll have them very fairly bound: All books of love, see that at any hand, 1 Not in e. 2 out in e. 3 The story is in Gower's Confessio Amantis. 4 An aglet was a point or tag to the string of a dress, and was often shaped like a human form.
And see you read no other lectures to her.

You understand me.—Over and beside Signior Baptista's liberality,
I'll mend it with a largess.—Take your papers, too, And let me have them very well perfum'd,
For she is sweeter than perfume itself,
To whom they go? What will you read to her?

Luc. Whatever I read to her, I'll plead for you, As for my patron; stand you so assur'd, As firmly as yourself were still in place:

Yea, and perhaps with more successful words
Than you, unless you were a scholar, sir.

Gre. O, this learning, what a thing it is!

Gre. O, this woodcock, what an ass it is!

Pet. Peace, sirrah!

Hor. Grumio, mum! —[Coming forward.] — God save you, signior Grumio!

Gre. And you are well met, signior Hortensio.

Trow you, whither I am going?—To Baptista Minola.

I promise'd to inquire carefully
About master for this Bianca:
And, by good fortune, I have lighted well
On this young man; for learning and behaviour,
Fit for her turn; well read in poetry,
And other books,—good ones, I warrant ye.

Hor. 'Tis well; and I have met a gentleman
Hath promise'd me to help me to another,
A fine musician to instruct our mistress:—
So shall I no whit be behind in duty
To fair Bianca, so belov'd of me.

Gre. Belov'd of me, and that my deeds shall prove,

Gre. And that his bags shall prove.

Hor. Grumio, 'tis now no time to vent our love.

Listen and hear, if you speak me fair;
I'll tell you news indifferent good for either.
Here is a gentleman, whom by chance I met,
Upon agreement from us to his liking,
Will undertake to woo our fair Katharine;

Yea, and to marry her, if her dowry please.

Gre. So said, so done, is well.—

Hortensio, have you told him all her faults?

Pet. I know, she is an irksome, brawling scold:
If that be all, masters, I hear no harm.

Gre. No, say'st me so, friend? What countryman?

Pet. Born in Verona, old Antonio's son:
My father dead, my fortune lives for me;
And I hope good days, and long, to see.

Gre. O! sir, if such a life with fairer were strange;
But if you have a stomach, to 't o' God's name:
You shall have me assisting you in all.

But will you woo this wild cat?

Pet.

Will I live?

Gre. Will he woo her? ay, or I'll hang her.

Pet. Why came I hither, but to that intent?

Think you, a little din can daunt mine ears?
Have I not in my time heard lions roar?
Have I not heard the sea, puff'd up with winds,
Rage like an angry boar, chafed with sweat?
Have I not heard great ordnance in the field,
And heaven's artillery thunder in the skies?
Have I not in a pitched battle heard
Loud 'larmes, neighing steedes, and trumpets' clang?
And do you tell me of a woman's tongue,
That gives not half so great a blow to hear,
As will a chestnut in a farmer's fire?

Tush! tush! fear boys with bugs.

Gre. Hortensio, hark.

This gentleman is happily arriv'd,

My mind presumes, for his own good, and ours.

Hor. I promise'd we would be contributors,
And bear his charge of wooing, whatso'er.

Gre. And so we will, provided that he win her.

Gru. I would, I were as sure of a good dinner.

Enter Tranio; bravely apparelled; and Biondello.

Tra. Gentlemen, God save you! If I may be bold, Tell me, I beseech you, which is the readiest way
To the house of signior Baptista Minola?

Bion. He that has the two fair daughters:—is't he you mean?

Tra. Even he, Biondello.

Gre. Hark you, sir: you mean not her to—

Tra. Perhaps, him and her, sir: what have you to do?

Pet. Not her that chides, sir, at any hand, I pray.

Tra. I love no chiders, sir.—Biondelle, let's away.

Luc. Well begun, Tranio.

Aside. Hor. Sir, a word ere you go.

Are you a suitor to the maid you talk of, yea, or no?

Tra. An if I be, sir, is it any offence?

Gre. No, if without more words you will get you hence.

Tra. Why, sir, I pray, are not the streets as free
For me, as for you?

Gre. But so is not she.

Tra. For what reason, I beseech you?

Gre. For this reason, if you'll know,
That she's the choice love of signior Gremio.

Hor. That she's the chosen of signior Hortensio.

Tra. Softly, my masters! if you be gentlemen,
Do me this right; hear me with patience.

Baptista is a noble gentleman,
To whom my father is not all unknown;
And were his daughter fairer than she is,
She may more suitors have, and me for one.

Fair Leda's daughter had a thousand wooers;

Then, well one more may fair Bianca have,
And so she shall. Lucentio shall make one,

Though Paris came in hope to speed alone.

Gre. What! this gentleman will cut-talk us all.

Luc. Sir, give him head: I know, he'll prove a jade.

Pet. Hortensio, to what end are all these words?

Hor. Sir, let me be so bold as ask you,

Did you yet ever see Baptista's daughter?

Tra. No, sir; but hear I do, that he hath two,
The one as famous for a sordid tongue, As is the other for beautious modesty.

Pet. Sir, sir, the first's for me; let her go by.

Gre. Yea, leave that labour to great Hercules,
And let it be more than Alcides' twelve.

Pet. Sir, understand you this of me: insooth,
The youngest daughter, whom you hearken for,
Her father keeps from all access of suitors,
And will not promise her to any man,

Until the elder sister first be wed;

The younger then is free, and not before.

Tra. If it be so, sir, that you are the man
Must steal us all, and me among the rest;
And if you break the ice, and do this feat,
Achieve the elder, set the younger free.

For our access, whose hope shall be to have her
Will not so graceless be to be ingrate.

Hor. Sir, you say well, and well you do conceive;
And since you do profess to be a suitor,

You must, as we do, gratify this gentleman,
To whom we all rest generally beholding.
SCENE I.—The Same. A Room in Baptista’s House.

Enter Katharina and Bianca.

Bian. Good sister, wrong me not, or wrong yourself.

To make a bondmaid, and a slave of me:

That I disdain; but for these other garbs,
Unbind my hands, I’ll put them off myself,

Yea, all my raiment, to my pettoeat:

Or what you will command me will I do,

So well I know my duty to my elders.

Kath. Of all thy suitors, here I charge thee, tell Whom thou lov’st best: see thou dissemble not.

Bian. Believe me, sister, of all the men alive,

I never yet beheld that special face

Which I could fancy more than any other.

Kath. Minion, thou liest. Is not Hortensio?

Bian. If you affect him, sister, here I swear,

I’ll plead for you yourself, but you shall have him.

Kath. O! then, belike, you fancy riches more:

You will have Gremio to keep you fair.

Bian. Is it for him you do envy me so?

Nay then, you jest; and now I will perceive,

You have but jested with me all this while.

Fr’ythee, sister Kate, unite my hands.

Kath. If that be jest, then all the rest was so. [Strikes

Enter Baptista.

Bap. Why, how now, dame! whence grows this insolence?

Bianca, stand aside:—poor girl! she weeps.

Go ply thy needle; meddle not with her.

For shame, thou hiding of a devilish spirit,

Why dost thou wrong her that did ne’er wrong thee?

When did she cross thee with a bitter word?

Kath. Her silence flouts me, and I’ll be reveng’d.

[Flies after Bianca.

Bap. [Holding her.] What! in my sight?—Bianca,

Get thee in.

Kath. What! will you not suffer me? Nay, now I see,

She is your treasure, she must have a husband;

I must dance barefoot on her wedding-day,

And for your love to her lead apes in hell.

Talk not to me: I will go sit and weep,

Till I can find occasion of revenge. [Exit Katharina.

Bap. Was ever gentle man thus griev’d as I?

But who comes here?

Enter Gremio, with Luciento in a mean habit; Petruchio, with Hortensio as a Musician; and Tranio, with Biondello bearing a lute and books.

Gre. Good-morrow, neighbour Baptista.

Bap. Good-morrow, neighbour Gremio. God save you, gentleman!

Pet. And you, good sir. Pray, have you not a daughter,

Call’d Katharina, fair, and virtuous?

Bap. I have a daughter, sir, call’d Katharina.

Gre. You are too blunt: go to it orderly.

Pet. You wrong me, signior Gremio: give me leave—

I am a gentleman of Verona, sir,

That, hearing of her beauty, and her wit,

Her affability, and bashful modesty,

Her woman’s qualities, and mild behaviour,

Am bold to show myself a forward guest

Within your house, to make mine eye the witness

Of that report which I so oft have heard,

And, for an entrance to my entertainment,

I do present you with a man of mine,

[Presenting Hortensio, Cunning in music, and the mathematicks,

To instruct her fully in those sciences,

Whereof, I know, she is not ignorant.

Accept of him, or else you do me wrong:

His name is Licio, born in Mantua.

Bap. You’re welcome, sir, and he, for your good sake.

But for my daughter Katharine, this I know,

She is not for your turn; the more my grief.

Pet. I see, you do not mean to part with her,

Or else you like not of my company.

Bap. Mistake me not; I speak but as I find.

Whence are you, sir? what may I call your name?

Pet. Petruchio is my name, Antonio’s son;

A man well known throughout all Italy.

Bap. I know him well; you are welcome for his sake.

Gre. Saving your tale, Petruchio, I pray,

Let us, that are poor petitioners, speak too.

Backarse: you are marvellous forward.

Pet. O! pardon me, signior Gremio: I would fain be doing.

Gre. I doubt it not, sir; but you will curse your wooing—

Neighbour, this is a gift very grateful, I am sure of it.

To express the like kindness myself, that have been more kindly beholding to you than any, I freely give unto you this young scholar, [Presenting Luciento] that hath been long studying at Rheims; as cunning in Greek, Latin, and other languages, as the other in music and mathematicks. His name is Cambio; pray accept his service.

Bap. A thousand thanks, signior Gremio: welcome, good Cambio.—But, gentle sir, [To Tranio] methinks, you walk like a stranger: may I be so bold to know the cause of your coming?

Tra. Pardon me, sir, the boldness is mine own,

That, being a stranger in this city here,

Do make myself a suitor to your daughter,

Unto Bianca, fair, and virtuous.

Nor is your firm resolve unknown to me,

In the preferment of the eldest sister.

This liberty is all that I request—

That, upon knowledge of my parentage,

I may have welcome amongst the rest that woo,

And free access and favour as the rest:

And to advance the education of your daughters,

I here bestow a simple instrument,

And this small packet of Greek and Latin books:

If you accept them, then their worth is great.

Bap. Lucentio is your name? of whence, I pray?

Tra. Of Pisa, sir; son to Vincentio.

Bap. A mighty man of Pisa: by report

I know him well. You are very welcome, sir—
Take you [To Hor.] the lute, and you [To Luc.] the set of books. You shall go see your pupils presently, Holla, within!

Enter a Servant.

Sirrah, lead these gentlemen to my daughters; and tell them both, These are their tutors: bid them use them well.

[Exit Servant, with Hortensio, Luciento, and Biondello.

We will go walk a little in the orchard, And then to dinner. You are passing welcome. And so I pray you all to think yourselves.

Pet. Signior Baptista, my business asketh haste, And every day I cannot come to wo'.

You know my father well, and in him, me, Left solely heir to all his lands and goods, Which I have better'd rather than decrease'd:
Then, tell me,—if I get your daughter's love, What dowry shall I have with her to wife? Bap. After my death, the one half of my lands, And in possession twenty thousand crowns.

Pet. And, for that dowry, I'll assure her of Her widowhood, be it that she survive me, In all my lands and leases whatsoever. Let specialities be therefore drawn between us, That covenants may be kept on either hand.

Bap. Ay, when the special thing is well obtain'd, That is her love; for that is all in all.

Pet. Why, that is nothing; for I tell you, father, I am as modest a person as any gentle mind:
And where two raging fires meet together, They consume the thing that feeds their fury. Though little fire grows great with little wind, Yet extreme gusts will blow out fire and all; So I to her, and so she yields to me, For I am rough, and woe not like a babe.

Bap. Well may'st thou woo, and happy be thy speed! But be thou arm'd for some unhappy words.

Pet. Ay, to the proof; as mountains are for winds, That shake not, though they blow perpetually.

Re-enter Hortensio, with his head broken.

Bap. How now, my friend! why dost thou look so pale? Hor. For modesty, I promise you, if I look pale.

Bap. What, will my daughter prove a good musician? Hor. I think, she'll sooner prove a soldier: Iron may hold with her, but never lutes.

Bap. Why, then thou canst not break her to the lute? Hor. Why no, for she hath broke the lute to me. I did but tell her she mistook her frets, And bow'd her hand to teach her fingering,

When, with a most impatient, devilish spirit, [them:] Frets, call you these? quoth she: I'll fume with And with that word she struck me on the head, And through the instrument my pate made way; And there I stood amazed for a while, As on a pillory looking through the lute, While she did call me rascall fiddler, And twangling Jack, with twenty such vile terms, As she had studied to misuse me so.

Pet. Now, by the world, it is a lusty wench! I love her ten times more than e'er I did: O, how I long to have some chat with her!

Bap. Well, go with me, and be not so disconsol'd: Proceed in patience with my younger daughter; She's apt to learn, and thankful for good words.— Signior Petruchio, will you go with us, Or shall I send my daughter Kate to you?

Pet. I pray you do; I will attend her here,
Pet. A comely cock, so Kate will be my hen.
Kath. No cock of mine; you crow too like a craven.
Pet. Nay, come, Kate, come; you must not look so sour.
Kath. It is my fashion when I see a crab.
Pet. Why, here's no crab, and therefore look not sour.
Kath. There is, there is.
Pet. Then show it me.
Kath. Had I a glass I would.
Pet. What, you mean my face?
Kath. Well aim'd of such a young one.
Pet. Now, by Saint George, I am too young for you.
Kath. Yet you are witherd.'
Pet. 'Tis with cares.
Pet. Nay, hear you, Kate: in sooth, you 'scape not so.
[Holding her.]
Kath. I chafe you, if I tarry: let me go.
Pet. No, not a whit: I find you passing gentle.
'Twas told me, you were rough, and coy, and sullen.
And now I find report a very liar;
For thou art pleasant, garrulous, passing courteous,
But slow in speech, yet sweet as spring-time flowers.
Thou canst not frown, thou canst not look askance,
Nor bite the lip, as angry wenches will;
Nor hast thou pleasure to be cross in talk;
But thou with mildness entertain'st thy w cocciers,
With gentle conference, soft and affable.
Why does the world report that Kate doth limp?
O, slanderous world! Kate, like the hazel-twigs,
Is straight, and slender; and as brown in hue
As hazel nuts, and sweeter than the kernels.
O! let me see thee walk: thou dost not halt.
Kath. Go, fool, and whom thou keep'st command.
Pet. Did ever Dian so become a grove,
As Kate this chamber with her princely gait?
O! be thou Dian, and let her be Kate,
And then let Kate be chaste, and Dian sportful.
Kath. Where did you study all this goodly speech?
Pet. It is extempore, from my mother-wit.
Kath. A witty mother! witless else her son.
Pet. Am I not wise?
Kath. Yes; keep you warm.
Pet. Marry, so I mean, sweet Katharine, in thy bed.
And then thus setting thus apace.
Thus in plain terms—your father hath consented
That you shall be my wife: your dowry 'greed on,
And, will you, nill you, I will marry you.
Now, Kate, I am a husband for your turn;
For, by this light, whereby I see thy beauty,
Thy beauty that doth make me like thee well,
Thou must be married to no man but me:
For I am he, I am born to tame you, Kate,
And bring you from a wild Kate to a Kate
Conformable, as other household Kates.
Here comes your father: never make denial;
I must and will have Katharine to my wife.

Re-enter Baptista, Gremio, and Tranio.

Bap. Now, signior Petruchio, how speed you with my daughter?
Pet. How but well, sir? how but well?
It were impossible I should speed amiss.
Bap. Why, how now, daughter Katharine! in your dumps?
Kath. Call you me, daughter? now, I promise you,
You have show'd a tender fatherly regard,
To wish me wed to one half lunatic;
A mad-cap ruffian, and a swearing Jack,
That thinks with oaths to face the matter out.

Pet. Father, 'tis thus:—yourself and all the world,
That talk'd of her, have talk'd amiss of her.
If she be eurst, it is for policy,
For she's not froward, but modest as the dove;
She is not hot, but temperate as the moon: ²
For patience she will prove a second Grissel,
And Roman Lucree for her chastity;
And to conclude,—we have no greed so well together,
That upon Sunday is the wedding-day.

Kath. I'll see thee hang'd on Sunday first.
Gre. Hark, Petruchio: she says, she'll see thee hang'd first.

Tra. Is this your speeding? nay then, good night our pact.

Pet. Bastion, gentlemen; I choose her for myself
If she and I be pleas'd, what's that to you?
'Tis bargain'd: 'twixt us twain, being alone,
That she shall still be eurst in company.
I tell you, 'tis incredible to believe
How much she loves me. O, the kindest Kate!
She hung about my neck, and kiss on kiss
She vied so fast, protesting oath on oath,
That in a twink she won me to her love.
O! you are novices: 'tis a world to see:—
How tame, when men and women are alone,
A meacocks' wretch can make the eurstest shrew.—
Give me thy hand, Kate: I will unto Venice,
To buy apparel 'gainst the wedding-day:—
Provide the feast, father, and bid the guests;
I will be sure! my Katharine shall be fine.
Bap. I know not what to say; but give me your hands:
God send you joy! Petruchio, 'tis a match.

Gre. Tra. Amen, say we: we will be witnesses.
Pet. Father, and wife, and gentlemen, adieu.
I will to Venice; Sunday comes apiece.
We will have rings, and things, and fine array;
And, kiss me, Kate, we will be married o Sunday.

[Enter Petruchio and Katharine, severally.

Gre. Was ever match clapp'd up so suddenly?
Bap. Faith, gentlemen, now I play a merchant's part,
And venture madly on a desperate mart.

Tra. 'Twas a commodity lay fretting by you:
'T will bring you gain, or perish on the seas.
Bap. The gain I seek is quick in the match.
Gre. No doubt but he hath got a quiet catch.—
But now, Baptista, to your younger daughter.
Now is the day we long have look'd for:
I am your neighbour, and was suitor first.

Tra. And I am one, that love Bianca more
Than words can witness, or your thoughts can guess.
Gre. Youngling, thou canst not love so dear as I.
Tra. Grey-beard, thy love doth freeze.
Gre. But thine doth fry.

Skipper, stand back: 'tis age, that nourisheth.
Tra. But youth, in ladies' eyes, that flourisheth.
Bap. Content you, gentlemen; I'll compound this strife:
'T is deeds must win the prize; and he, of both,
That can assure my daughter greatest dowry,
Shall have my Bianca's love.—

Say, signior Gremio, what can you assure her?
Gre. First, as you know, my house within the city
Is richly furnished with plate and gold:
Basoms, and evers, to save her dainty hands;
My hangings all of Tyrian tapestry:
In ivory coffers I have stuff'd my crowns;
In cypress chests my arras, counterpoints,
Costly apparel, tents, and canopies,
If you like me, she shall have me and mine.

Tra. Why, then, the maid is mine from all the world,
By your firm promise: Gremio is out-vied.

Bap. I thank you, sir, your offer is the best;
And, let your father make her the assurance,
She is your own; else, you must pardon me:
If you should die before him, where's her dowry?

Tra. That's but a cavil: he is old, I, young.

Gremio. And may not young men die, as well as old?

Bap. Well, gentlemen, I am thus resolv'd.—On Sunday next, you know,
My daughter Katherine is to be married:
Now, on the Sunday following shall Bianca
Be bride to you, if you make this assurance;
If not, to signior Gremio:
And so I take my leave, and thank you both. [Exit.

Gremio. Alas, good neighbour. Now I fear thee not;
Sirrah, young gasmeres, your father were a fool
To give thee all, and, in his waning age,
Set foot under thy table. Tut, a toy!
An old Italian fox is not so kind, my boy.

[Exit.

Tra. A vengeance on your crafty wither'd hide!
Yet I have faced it with a card of ten.
'Tis in my head to do my master good:
I see no reason, but suppos'd Lucentio
Must get a father, call'd—suppos'd Vincenzo;
And that's a wonder: fathers, commonly,
Do get their children; but in this case of winning,
A child shall get a sire, if I fail not of my cunning.

[Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Room in Baptista's House.

Enter Lucentio, Hortensio, and Bianca.

Luc. Fiddler, forbear: you grow too forward, sir.
Have you so soon forgot the entertainment
Her sister Katharine welcom'd you withal?

Hor. Tut, wrangling pedant! I avouch, this is
The patroness of heavenly harmony:
Then, give me leave to have prerogative;
And when in music we have spent an hour,
Your lecture shall have leisure for as much.

Luc. Preposterous ass, that never read so far
To know the cause why music was ordain'd!
Was it not to refresh the mind of man,
After his studies, or his usual pain?
Then, give me leave to read Philosophy,
And whilst I pause serve in your harmony.

Hor. Sirrah, I will not bear these brave of thine.

Bian. Why, gentlemen, you do me double wrong,
To strive for that which resteth in my choice.
I am no breaching scholar in the schools;
I'll not be tied to hours, nor pointed times.
But learn my lessons as I please myself.
And, to cut off all strife, here sit we down:
Take you my instrument, play you the whiles;
His lecture will be done, ere you have tund.

Hor. You'll leave his lecture when I am in tune?

[Hor. retires.

Luc. That shall be never:—tune your instrument.

Bian. Where left we last?

Luc. Here, madam:—

Hie ibat Simois; hic est Sigeia tellus;
Hic steterat Priami regia celsa senis.

1 An old proverbial expression. 2 wooing: in f. e. 3 But, wrangling pedant this is: in f. e. 4 Not in f. e.
And watch withal; for, but I be deceiv'd,
Our fine musician groweth amorous.

Hor. Madam, before you touch the instrument,
To learn the order of my fingering,
I must begin with rudiments of art;
To teach you gamut in a briefer sort,
More pleasant, pithy, and effectual,
Than hath been taught by any of my trade:
And there it is in writing fairly drawn.

Bian. Why, I am past my gamut long ago.
Hor. Yet read the gamut of Hortensio.

Bian. [Reads.] Gamut I am, the ground of all accord,
A re, to plead Hortensio's passion;
B mi, Bianca, take him for thy lord.

C fau, that loves with all affection:
D sol re, one cliff, two notes have I:
E la mi, show pity, or I die.

Call you this gamut? tut! I like it not:
Old fashions please me best; I am not so nice.
To change true rules for new inventions.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Mistress, your father prays you leave your books,
And help to dress your sister's chamber up.
You know, to-morrow is the wedding-day.

Bian. Farewell, sweet masters, both: I must be gone.

[Exeunt Bianca and Servant.

Luc. Faith, mistress, then I have no cause to stay.

[Exit.

Hor. But I have cause to pry into this pedant:
Methinks, he looks as though he were in love.—
Yet if thy thoughts, Bianca, be so humble,
To cast thy wandering eyes on every state,
Seize thee that list: if once I find thee ranging,
Hortensio will quit thee with changing.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—The Same. Before Baptist's House.

Enter Baptista, Grumio, Tranio, Katharine, Bianca, Lucentio, and Attendants.

Bap. Signior Lucentio, this is the pointed day
That Katharine and Petruchio should be married,
And yet we bear not of our son-in-law.

What will be said? what mockery will it be,
To want the bridegroom, when the priest attends
To speak the ceremonial rites of marriage?

What says Lucentio to this shame of ours?

Kath. No shame but mine: I must, forsooth, be for'd
To give my hand, oppos'd against my heart,
Unto a mad-brain rudesby, full of spleen;
Who wo'd in haste, and means to wed at leisure.
I told you, I, he was a frantic fool,
Hiding his bitter jests in blunt behaviour;
And to be noted for a merry man,
He'll woo a thousand, point the day of marriage,
Make friends, inveigh, ye, and molest him hams;
Yet never means to wed where he hath wo'd;
Now must the world point at poor Katharine.
And say,—"Lo, there is mad Petruchio's wife,
If it would please him come and marry her."

Tra. Patience, good Katharine, and Baptist too.
Upon my life, Petruchio means but well,
Whatever fortune stays him from his word:
Though he be blunt, I know him passing wise;
Though he be merry, yet withal he's honest.

Kath. Would Katharine had never seen him though!

[Exit, weeping, followed by Bianca, and others.

Bap. Go, girl; I cannot blame thee now to weep,
For such an injury would vex a very saint,
Much more a shrew of thy impudent humour.

Enter BONELLO.

Bion. Master, master! news, and such old news! as you never heard of!
Bap. Is it new and old too? how may that be?
Bion. Why, is it not news to hear of Petruchio's coming?
Bap. Is he come?
Bion. Why, no, sir.
Bap. What then?
Bion. He is coming.
Bap. When will he be here?
Bion. When he stands where I am, and sees you there.

Tra. But, say, what is thine old news?
Bion. Why, Petruchio is coming in a new hat, and an old jerkin; a pair of old breeches, thrice turned;
A pair of boots that have been candle-cases, one buckled, another laced; an old rusty sword ta'en out of the town armoury, with a broken hilt, and chapeless; with two broken points; his horse heaped with an old mothy saddle, and stirrups of no kindred: besides, possessed with the glanders, and to like mose in the chine;
troubled with the lampass, infected with the fashions, full of wind-galls, sped with spavins, rayed with the yellow's, past cure of the fives, stark spoiled with the staggers, begawn with the bot's; swayed in the back and shoulder-shotten; ne'er-legged before, and with a half-checked bit, and a head stall of sheep's-leather;
which, being restrained to keep him from stumbling,
hath been often bust, and now repaired with knots;
one girth six times piec'd, and a woman's crupper of velure, which hath two letters for her name fairly set down in studs, and here and there piec'd with patch

Bap. Who comes with him?
Bion. O, sir! his lackey, for all the world caponised like the horse; with a linen stock on one leg, and a kersey boot-hose on the other, garmented with a red and blue list; an old hat, and "the amours or forty fancies" priek'd in't for a feather: a monster, a very monster in apparel, and not like a Christian foxtob, or a gentleman's lackey.

Tra. 'Tis some old humour pricks him to this fashion;
Yet oftentimes he goes but mean apparel'd.

Bap. I am glad he is come, howso'ever he comes.
Bion. Why, sir, he comes not.
Bap. Didst thou not say, he comes?
Bion. Who? that Petruchio came?
Bap. Ay, that Petruchio came.
Bion. No, sir; I say, his horse comes, with him on his back.

Bap. Why, that's all one.
Bion. Nay, by St. Jamy,
I hold you a penny,
A horse and a man
Is more than one,
And yet not many.

Enter PETRUCHIO and GRUMIO, strangely apparelled.*

Pet. Come, where be those gallants? who is at home?
Bap. You are welcome, sir.

Pet. And yet I come not well.

Tra. Not so well apparel'd,
As I wish you were.

Pet. Were it much* better, I should rush in thus.
But where is Kate? where is my lovely bride?—
How does my father?—Gentles, methinks you frown:
And wherefore gaze this goodly company,
As if they saw some wondrous monument,
Some comet, or unusual prodigy?

Bet. Why, sir, you know, this is your wedding-day:
First were we sad, fearing you would not come;
Now sadder, that you come so unprovided.

Fri. Doth this habit, shame to your estate,
An eyrie fierce to your solemn festival.

Tra. And tell us what occasion of import
Hath all so long detain'd you from your wife,
And sent you hither so unlike yourself?

Pet. Tidious it were to tell, and hard to hear:
Sufficeth, I am come to keep my word,
Though in some part enforced to digress;
Which, at more leisure, I will so excuse
As you shall well be satisfied withal.

But, where is Kate? I stay too long from her:
The morning wears, 'tis time we were at church.

Tra. See not your bride in these unceremonious robes.
Go to my chamber: put on clothes of mine.

Pet. Not I, believe me: thus I'll visit her.

Bet. But thus, I trust, you will not marry her.

Pet. Good sooth, even thus: therefore, have done with words:

To me she's married, not unto my clothes.
Could I repair what she will wear in me,
As I can change these poor accoutrements,
'T were well for Kate, and better for myself.

But what a fool am I to chat with you,
When I should bid good-morrow to my bride,
And seal the title with a loving kiss?

[Exeunt Petruchio, Grumio, and Biondello.

Tra. He hath some meaning in his mad attire.
We will persuade him, be it possible,
To put on better, ere he lie to church.

Pet. I'll perform his bidding, and seek the event of this.

Tra. But, to our love, concern us to add
Her father's liking: which to bring to pass,
As I before imparted to your worship,
I am to get a man,—what'er he be,
It skills not much, we'll fit him to our turn,—
And he shall be Vincentio of Pisa,
And make assurance, here in Padua,
Of greater sums than I have promised.
So shall you quietly enjoy your hope,
And marry sweet Bianca with consent.

Luc. Were it not that my fellow schoolmaster
Doth watch Bianca's steps so narrowly,
'T were good, methinks, to steal our marriage;
Which once perform'd, let all the world say no,
I'll keep mine own, despite of all the world.

Tra. That by degrees we mean to look into,
And watch our vantage in this business.
We'll over-reach the grey-beard, Gremio,
The narrow-prying father, Minola,
The quaint musician, amorous Liecio;
All for my master's sake, Lucentio.

Re-enter Gremio.

Signior Gremio, came you from the church?

Gre. As willingly as e'er I came from school.

Tra. And is the bride, and bridgroom, coming home?

Gre. A bridgroom say you? 'T is a grooms indeed;
A grumbling grooms, and that it shall find.

Gre. Why, he's a devil, a devil, a very fiend.

Tra. Why, she's a devil, a devil, the devil's dam.

Gre. Tut! she's a lamb, a dove, a fool to him.

'I'll tell you, sir, Lucentio: when the priest
Should ask,—if Katherine should be his wife,

"Ay, by gogs-wouns," quoth he; and swore so loud,
That, all-amazed, the priest let fall the book,
And, as he stoop'd again to take it up,
This mad-brain'd bridgroom took him such a cuff,
That down fell priest and book, and book and priest:
"Now take them up," quoth he, "if any list."

Tra. What said the wench when he arose again?

Gre. Took hold and shook; for why, he stamp'd, and swore,

As if the vicar meant to cozen him.

But after many ceremonies done,
He calls for wine:—"A health!" quoth he; as if
He had been aboard, carousing to his mates,
After a storm:—quaff'd off the musedale,
And threw the sops all in the sexton's face;
Having no other reason,
But that his beard grew thin and hungry.

And seemed to ask him sops as he was drinking.
This done, he took the bride about the neck,
And kiss'd her lips with such a clamorous smack,
That, at the parting, all the church did echo;
And I, and I, and I, come crying for shame,
And after me, I know, the rout is coming:
Such a mad marriage never was before.

Hark! hark! I hear the minstrels play.

[Music.

Enter Petruchio, Katharina, Bianca, Baptista,
Hortensio, Grumio, and Train.

Pet. Gentlemen and friends, I thank you for your pains.

I know, you think to dine with me to-day,
And have prepar'd great store of wedding cheer;
But, so it is, my haste doth call me hence,
And therefore here I mean to take my leave.

Bet. Is't possible you will away to-night?

Pet. I mean away to-day, before night come.

Make it no wonder: if you knew my business,
You would entreat me rather go than stay.—
And, honest company, I thank you all,
That have beheld me give away myself.
To this most patient, sweet, and virtuous wife,
Dine with my father, drink a health to me,
For I must hence; and farewell to you all.

Tra. Let us entreat you stay till after dinner.

Pet. It may not be.

Gre. Let me entreat you.

Pet. It cannot be.

Kath. Let me entreat you.

Pet. I am content.

Kath. Are you content to stay?

Pet. I am content you shall entreat me stay,
But yet not stay, entreat me how you can.

Kath. Now, if you love me, stay.

Pet. Grumio, my horse!

Gru. Ay, sir, they be ready: the oats have eaten
The horses.

Kath. Nay, sir, then,

Do what thou canst, I will not go to-day;
No, nor to-morrow, not till I please myself.
The door is open, sir, there lies your way;
You may be jogging whiles your boots are green;
For me, I'll not be gone, till I please myself.—
'T is like you'll prove a jolly surly groom,
That take it on you at the first so roundly.

Pet. O, Kate! content thee: pr'ythee, be not angry.

Kath. I will be angry. What hast thou to do?

Father, be quiet; he shall stay my leisure.

Gre. Ay, marry, sir, now it begins to work.

Kath. Gentlemen, forward to the bridal dinner,

1 lovely in F. o.
2 But, sir, to love: in F. o.
3 It was the custom at the time of the play, for a bride or knitting-cup to be quaffed in church.—Knight.
I see, a woman may be made a fool, if she had not a spirit to resist.

Pet. They shall go forward, Kate, at thy command.

Obey the bride, you that attend on her:

Go to the feast, revel and dine homewards,

Carouse full measure to her maidenhead,

Be mad and merry, or go hang yourselves.

But for my bonny Kate, she must with me.

Nay, look not big, nor stamp, nor stare, nor fret;

I will be master of what is mine own.

She is my goods, my chattels; she is my house,

My household-stuff, my field, my barn,

My horse, my ox, my ass, my any thing:

And here she stands; touch her whoever dare:

I'll bring mine action on the proudest he.

That stops my way in Padua.—Grumio,

Draw forth thy weapon; we're beset with thieves:

Rescue thy mistresse, if thou be a man.—

Fear not, sweet wenche; they shall not touch thee, Kate:

I'll buckler thee against a million.

[Exeunt Petruchio, Katharina, and Grumio.

Bap. Nay, let them go, a couple of quiet ones.

Gru. Wench, they not quickly, I should die with laughing.

Tra. Of all mad matches never was the like.

Luc. Mistress, what's your opinion of your sister?

Bian. That, being mad herself, she's madly mated.

Gru. I warrant him, Petruchio is Kated.

Bap. Neighbours and friends, though bride and bridegroom wants

For to supply the places at the table,

You know, there wants no junkeats at the feast —

Lucentio, you shall supply the bridegroom's place,

And let Bianca take her sister's room.

Tra. Shall sweet Bianca practise how to bride it?

Bap. She shall, Lucentio.—Come, gentlemen; let's go.

[Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Hall in Petruchio's Country House.

Enter Grumio.

Gru. Fine, fine, on all tired jades, on all mad masters,

And all fool ways! Was ever man so beaten?

Was ever man so raved? Was ever man so weary?

I am sent before to make a fire, and they are coming after

To warm them. Now, were not I a little pot, and soon

Hot, my very lips might freeze to my teeth, my tongue

To the roof of my mouth, my heart in my belly, ere

I should come by a fire to thaw me; but, I, with blowing

The fire, shall warm myself, for, considering the weather,

A taller man than I will take cold. Holla,

Hans! Curtis!

Enter Curtis.

Curt. Who is that, calls so coldly?

Gru. A piece of ice: if you doubt it, thou may'st

Slide from my shoulder to my heel, with no greater

Run but my head and my neck. A fire, good Curtis.

Curt. Is the so hot a shrew as she's reported?

Gru. She was, good Curtis, before this frost; but Thou know'st, winter tames man, woman, and beast,

For it hath tamed my old master, and my new mistress,

And thyself, fellow Curtis.

Curt. Away, you three-inch fool! I am no beast.

Gru. Am I but three inches? (why, thy horn is a foot;

And so long am I at the least.) But wilt thou make

A fire, or shall I complain on thee to our mistress,

Whose hand (she being now at hand) thou shalt soon feel, to

Thy cold comfort, for being slow in thy hot office?

Curt. I pr'ythee, good Grumio, tell me, how goes the world?

Gru. A cold world, Curtis, in every office but thine;

And, therefore, fire. Do thy duty, and have thy duty:

For my master and mistresse are almost frozen to death.

Curt. There's fire ready; and therefore, good Grumio,

The news?

Gru. Why, "Jack, boy! lo boy!" and as much

News as thou wilt.

Curt. Come, you are so full of coneycatching?—

Gru. Why, therefore; fire: for I have caught extreme drinking cups. 8 on. 4 Matched.

cold. Where's the cook? is supper ready, the house

Trimmed, rushes strewn, cobwebs swept; the serving-men in their new fustian, their white stockings, and every officer his wedding-garment on? Be the Jacks

Fair within, the Jills' fair without, the carpets laid, and every thing in order?

Curt. All ready; and therefore, I pray thee, news?

Gru. First, know, my horse is tared; my master and Mistress fallen out.

Curt. How?

Gru. Out of their saddles into the dirt; and thereby Hangs a tale.

Curt. Let's ha't, good Grumio.

Gru. Lend thine ear.

Curt. Here.

Gru. There.

[Curt. This is to feel a tale, not to hear a tale.

Gru. And therefore's called, a sensible tale; and this

Cuff was but to knock at your ear, and beseech

Listening. Now I begin: Imprimis, we came down a Foul hill, my master riding behind my mistress.

Curt. Both of my horse?

Gru. What's that to thee?

Gru. Tell thou the tale;—but hast thou not

Crossed me, thou should'st have heard: how her horse

Fall, and she under her horse; thou should'st have Heard, in how miry a place; how she was bemoiled;

How he left her with the horse upon her; how he beat

Me because her horse stumbled; how she waded

Through the dirt to pluck him off me; how he swore;

How she prayed, that never prayed before; how I

Cried; how the horses ran away; how her bridle was Burst; how I lost my crupper;—with many things of Worthy memory, which now shall die in oblivion,

And thou return unexperienced to thy grave.

Curt. By this reckoning he is more shrew than she.

Gru. Ay; and that thou and the proudest of you Shall find, when he comes home. But what talk I of

This?—Call forth Nathaniel, Joseph, Nicholas, Philip,

Walter, Sugarsop, and the rest: let their heads be Sleekly combed, their blue coats brushed, and their

Garters of an indifferent knit: let them curtsey with

Their left legs, and not presume to touch a hair of my master's horse-tail, till they kiss their hands. Are they all ready?
  Curt. They are.
  Gru. Call them forth.
  Curt. Do you hear? ho! you must meet my master, to countenance my mistress.
  Gru. Why, she hath a face of her own.
Curt. Who knows not that?
  Gru. Thou, it seems, that callest for company to countenance her.
  Curt. I call them forth to credit her.
  Gru. Why, she comes to borrow nothing of them.
[Enter several Servants.]
Nath. Welcome home, Grumio.
Phil. How now, Grumio?
Jos. What, Grumio!
Nich. Fellow Grumio!
Nath. How now, old lad?
  Gru. Welcome, you;—how now, you;—what, you;—fellow, you;—and thus much for greeting. Now, my space compassions, is all ready, and all things neat?
Nath. All things is ready. How near is our master?
  Gru. E'en at hand, alighted by this; and therefore be not,—Cook's passion, silence,—I hear my master.
[All servants frightened.]

[Exeunt Petruchio and Katharina.]
Pet. Where be these knaves? What! no man at the door,
To hold my stirrup, nor to take my horse.
Where is Nathaniel, Gregory, Philip?—
[All Serv. Here, here, sir; here, sir.
Pet. Here, sir! here! sir! here, sir! here, sir?
You logger-headed and unpolish'd grooms!
What, no attendance? no regard? no duty?—
Where is the foolish knave I sent before?
  Gru. Here, sir; as foolish as I was before.
Pet. You peasan swain! you whoreson malm-horse drudge!
Did I not bid thee meet me in the park,
And bring along those rascal knaves with thee?
  Gru. Nathaniel's coat, sir, was not fully made,
And Gabriel's pumps were all unpink'd if he;
There was no link to colour Petruchio's hat,
And Walter's dagger was not come from sheathing:
There were none fine, but Adam, Ralph, and Gregory:
The rest were ragged, old, and beggarly;
Yet, as they are, here are they come to meet you.
  Pet. Go, racnels, go, and fetch my supper in.
[Exeunt some of the Servants.]

"Where is the life that late I led?"—[Sings.]
Where are those—? Sit down, Kate, and welcome.
Soud, soud, soud, soud!

[Re-enter Servants, with supper.]
Why, when, I say?—Nay, good sweet Kate, be merry.
Off with my boots, you rogues! you villains, when?
"It was the friar of orders grey, [Sings.]
As he forth walked on his way:"—
Out, you rogues! you pluck my foot away:
Take that, and mend the pluckings of the other.
[Kick's him.]
Be merry, Kate:—some water, here; what, ho!—
[Enter Servant, with water.]
Where's my spaniel Troilus?—Sirrah, get you hence,
And bid by cousin Ferdinand come hither:—
[Exit Servant.]
One, Kate, that you must kiss, and be acquainted with.
Where are my slippers?—Shall I have some water?—
[A bosom is presented to him.]
Come, Kate, and wash, and welcome heartily.

You whoreson villain! will you let it fall? [Strikes him.]
Kath. Patience, I pray you; 't was a fault unwilling.
Pet. A whoreson, beetleheaded, flap-ear'd knave!
[Meat served in.]
Come, Kate, sit down; I know you have a stomach.
Will you give thanks, sweet Kate, or else shall I?—
What's this? mutton?
1 Serv.
Pet.
1 Serv.
Pet. 'Tis burnt; and so is all the meat.
What dogs are these!—Where is the rascal cook?
How durst you, villains, bring it from the dresser,
And serve it thus to me that love it not?
There, take it to you, tippers, cups, and all.
[Throws the meat, &c. all about]
You needless jolthead, and unmanner'd slaves!
What! do you grumble? I 'll be with you straight.
Kath. I pray you, husband, be not so disquiet:
The meat was well. if you were so contented.
Pet. I tell thee, Kate, 't was burnt and dried away
And I expressly am for you to touch it.
For it engenders choler, panteth anger:
And better 't were, that both of us did fast,
Since, of ourselves, ourselves are choleric,
Than feed it with such over-roasted flesh.
Be patient; to-morrow 't shall be mended,
And for this night we 'll fast for company.
Come, I will bring thee to thy bridial chamber.
[Exeunt Petruchio, Katharina, and Curtis.]
Nath. Peter, didst ever see the like?
Peter. He kills her in her own humour.

[Re-enter Curtis.]

Gru. Where be he?
Curt. In her chamber.
Making a sermon of continuity to her;
And rails, and swears, and rates, that she, poor soul,
Knows not which way to stand, to look, to speak,
And sits as one new-risen from a dream.
Away, away! for he is coming hither. [Exeunt, running]

[Re-enter Petruchio.]

Pet. Thus have I politicly begun my reign,
And 't is my hope to end successfully.
My falcon now is sharp, and passing empty,
And, till she stoop, she must not be full-gorg'd;
For then she never looks upon her lure.
Another way I have to man my haggard,
To make her come, and know her keeper's call;
That is, to watch her, as we watch those kites,
That bat, and beat, and will not be obedient.
She ate no meat to-day, nor none shall eat;
Last night she slept not, nor to-night she shall not:
As with the meat, some undeserved fault
I'll find about the making of the bed,
And here I'll fling the pillow, there the bolster,
This way the coverlet, another way the sheets:—
Ay; and amid this hurly, I intend,
That all is done in reverend care of her;
And, in conclusion, she shall watch all night:
And, if she chance to nod, I'll rail, and bawl,
And with the clamour keep her still awake.
This is the way to kill her with kindness;
And thus I'll curb her mad and headstrong humour.
He that knows better how to tame a shrew,
Now let him speak: 't is charity to shew.
[Exit.]

[Enter Tranio and Hortensio.]

Tra. Is't possible, friend Licio, that mistress Bianca
To tame a shrew, and charm her chattering tongue.

Enter Biondello, running.

Bion. O master, master! I have watch'd so long
That I'm dog-weary: but at last I spied
An ancient ambler coming down the hill,
Will serve the turn.

Tra. What is he, Biondello?

Bion. Master, a mercantant, or a pedant,
I know not what; but formal in apparel,
In gait and countenance surely like a father.

Luc. And what of him, Tranio?

Tra. If he be credulous, and trust my tale,
I'll make him glad to seem Vincenzo,
And give assurance to Baptista Minola,
As if he were the right Vincenzo.

Take in your love, and then let me alone.

[Exeunt Luciento and Bianca.]

Enter a Pedant.

Ped. God save you, sir!

Tra. And you, sir: you are welcome.

Travel you far on, or are you at the farthest?

Ped. Sir, at the farthest for a week or two;
But then up farther, and as far as Rome,
And so to Tripoly, if God lend me life.

Tra. What countryman, I pray?

Ped. Of Mantua.

Tra. Of Mantua, sir?—marry, God forbid!

And come to Padua, careless of your life?

Ped. My life, sir! how I pray! for that goes hard.

Tra. 'Tis death for any one in Mantua.

To come to Padua. Know you not the cause?

Your ships are stay'd at Venice; and the duke,
For private quarrel 'twixt your duke and him,
Hath publish'd and proclaim'd it openly.

'Tis marvellous; but that you are but newly come,
You might have heard it else proclaim'd about.

Ped. Alas, sir! it is worse for me than so;
For I have bills for money by exchange
From Florence, and must here deliver them.

Tra. Well, sir, to do you courtesy
This will I do, and this I will advise you.—
First, tell me, have you ever been at Pisa?

Ped. Ay, sir, in Pisa have I often been;

Pisa, renowned for grave citizens.

Tra. Among them, know you Vincenzo?

Ped. I know him not, but I have heard of him:

A merchant of incomparable wealth.

Tra. He is my father, sir; and, sooth to say,
In countenance somewhat doth resemble you.

Bion. [Aside.] As much as an apple doth an oyster, and all one.

Tra. To save your life in this extremity,
This favour will I do you for his sake,
And think it not the worst of all your fortunes,
That you are so like to Vincenzo.

His name and credit shall you undertake,
And in my house you shall be friendly lodg'd.

Look, that you take upon you as you should:

You understand me, sir;—so shall you stay
Till you have done your business in the city.

If this be courteous, sir, accept of it.

Ped. O! sir, I do; and will repute you ever
The patron of my life and liberty.

Tra. Then go with me, to make the matter good.

This, by the way, I let you understand:

My father is here look'd for every day,

To pass assurance of a dower in marriage
'Twixt me and one Baptista's daughter here:

In all these circumstancés I'll instruct you.

Go with me, to clothe you as becomes you.

[Exeunt.}
SCENE III.—A Room in Petruchio's House.
Enter Katharine and Grumio.

Gru. No, no, forsooth; I dare not, for my life.

Kath. The more my wrong, the more his spite appears.

What, did he marry me to famish me?
Boggards, that come unto my father's door,
Upontreaty, have a present alms;
If not, elsewhere they meet with charity;
But, I, who never knew how to entreat,
Nor never needed, that I should entreat,

Am starv'd for meat, giddy for lack of sleep;
With oaths kept waking, and with brawling fed;
And that which spites me more than all these wants,
He does it under name of perfect love;
As who should say, if I should sleep, or eat,
'Twere deadly sickness, or else present death.

I pr'ythee go, and get me some repast;
I care not what, so it be wholesome food.

Gru. What say you to a neet's foot?
Kath. 'Tis passing good: I pr'ythee let me have it.

Gru. I fear, it is too cholerick a meat.

How say you to a fat tripe, finely broil'd?
Kath. I like it well: good Grumio fetch it me.

Gru. I cannot tell; I fear, 'tis cholerick.

What say you to a piece of beef, and mustard?
Kath. A dish that I do love to feed upon.

Gru. Ay, but the mustard is too hot a little.

Kath. Why, then the beef; and let the mustard rest.

Gru. Nay, that I will not: you shall have the mustard,
Or else you get no beef of Grumio.

Kath. Then both, or one, or any thing thou wilt.

Gru. Why then, the mustard without the beef.

Kath. Go, get thee gone, thou false deluding slave.

[Beats him.]

That feed'st me with the very name of meat.
Sorrow on thee, and all the pack of you,
That triumph thus upon my misery!

Go: get thee gone, I say.

Enter Petruchio with a dish of meat, and Hortensio.

Pet. How fares my Kate? What, sweeting, all amoret?
Hor. Mistress, what cheer?
Kath. 'Faith, as cold as can be.

Pet. Pluck up thy spirits; look cheerfully upon me.
Here, love; thou seest how diligent I am,
To dress thy meat myself, and bring it thee:

[Sets the dish on a table.]

I am sure, sweet Kate, this kindness merits thanks.
What! not a word? Nay then, thou lov'st it not,
And all my pains is sorted to no proof. —

Here, take away this dish.

Kath. I pray you, let it stand.

Pet. The poorest service is repay'd with thanks,
And so shall mine, before you touch the meat.

Kath. I thank you, sir.

Hor. Signior Petruchio, fie! you are to blame.

Come, mistress Kate, I'll bear you company. [me.

Pet. [Aside.] Eat it up all, Hortensio, if thou lov'st.
[To her.] Much good do it unto thy gentle heart!
Kate, eat aspace. — And now, my honey love:
Will we return unto thy father's house,
And revel it as bravely as the best,
With silken coats, and caps, and golden rings,
With ruffs, and cuffs, and farthingales, and things;
With scarfs, and fans, and double change of bravery,
With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knavery.
What! hast thou din'd? The tailor stays thy leisure.
To deck thy body with his rumbling treasure.

1 Dispirited.  2 Approval, approbation.  3 The Ernst of a pie was so called.
TAMING OF THE SHREW.

Scene IV.

Pet. It shall be seven, ere I go to horse. Look, what I speak, or do, or think to do, You are still crossing it. — Sirs, let 't alone: I will not go to-day; and, ere I do, It shall be what o'clock I say it is. Hor. Why, so this gallant will command the sun. [Exeunt.

Tra. Sir, this is the house: please it you, that I call? Ped. Ay, what else? and, but I be deceived, Signior Baptista may remember me, Near twenty years ago, in Genoa, Where we were lodgers at the Fagusus. Tra. 'Tis well; and hold your own, in any case, With such austerity as 'longeth to a father. Enter Biondello.

Ped. I warrant you. But, sir, here comes your boy; 'T were good, he were school'd. Tra. Fear you not him. Sirrah, Biondello, Now do your duty throughly, I advise you: Imagine 't were the right Vincentio. Bion. Tut! fear not me. Tra. But hast thou done thy errand to Baptista? Bion. I told him, that your father was at Venice, And that you look'd for him this day in Padua. Tra. Thou 'rt a tall fellow: hold thee that to drink. Here comes Baptista. — Set your countenance, sir.— Enter Baptista and Luciento. Signior Baptista, you are happily met. — Sir, this is the gentleman I told you of. — I pray you, stand good father to me now, Give me Bianca for my patrimony. Ped. Soft, son! — Sir, by your leave: having come to Padua, To gather in some debts, my son, Lucentio, Made me acquainted with a weighty cause Of love between your daughter and himself: And, for the good report I hear of you, And for the love he beareth to your daughter, And she to him, to stay him not too long, I am content, in a good father's care, To have him match'd; and, if you please to like No worse than I, upon some agreement, Me shall you find ready and willing With one consent to have her so bestow'd; For curious* I cannot be with you, Signior Baptista, of whom I hear so well. Bap. Sir, pardon me in what I have to say: Your plainness, and your shortness please me well. Right true it is, your son Lucentio, here, Both love my daughter, and she loveth him, Or both dissemble deeply their affections; And, therefore, if you say no more than this, That like a father you will deal with him, And pass my daughter a sufficient dower, The match is made, and all is happily done: Your son shall have my daughter with consent. Tra. I thank you, sir. Where, then, do you hold* best? We are affied, and such assurance ta'en, As shall with either part's agreement stand? Bap. Not in my house, Lucentio; for, you know, Pitchers have ears, and I have many servants: Besides, old Gremio is heartening still, And, happily, we might be interrupted.

1 Breevry was the old word for finery. 2 An old weapon like a pike. 3 This word not in f. e. 4 Particular. 5 This word not in f. e.
TAMING OF THE SHREW.

ACT IV.

Tra. Then, at my lodging, an it like you:
There doth my father lie, and there this night
We'll pass the business privately and well,
Send for your daughter by your servant here;
My boy shall fetch the scrivener presently.
The worst is this,—that, at so slender warning,
You're like to have a thin and slender petition.

Bap. It, like me well.—Cambio, hie you home,
And bid Bianca make her ready straight;
And, if you will, tell what hath happened:
Lucentio's father is arrived in Padua,
And how she's like to be Lucentio's wife.
Luc. I pray the gods she may with all my heart.

Bap. Follow you.

Luc. What say'st thou, Biondello?
Bion. You saw my master wink and laugh upon you.
Luc. Biondello, what of that?
Bion. ' Faith nothing; but he has left me here behind, to expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens.
Luc. I pray thee, moralize them.
Bion. Then thus. Baptista is safe, talking with the deceiving father of a deceitful son.
Luc. And what of him?
Bion. His daughter is to be brought by you to the supper.
Luc. And then?—
Bion. The old priest at St. Luke's church is at your command and at all hours.
Luc. And what of all this?
Bion. I cannot tell; except, while* they are busied about a counterfeit assurance, take you assurance of her, cum privilegio ad imprimentum solam. To the church!—take the priest, clerk, and some sufficient honest witnesses.
If this be not that you look for, I have no more to say,
But bid Bianca farewell for ever and a day.
Luc. Hear'st thou, Biondello?
Bion. I cannot tarry: I knew a wenche married in an afternoon as she went to the garden for parsley to stuff a rabbit; and so may you, sir; and so adieu, sir. My master hath appointed me to go to St. Luke's, to bid the priest be ready to come against you come with your appendix.

Luc. I may, and will, if she be so contented:
She will be pleas'd, then wherefore should I doubt?
Hap what hap may, I'll roundly go about her:
It shall go hard, if Cambio go without her.

Enter Petrucho, Katharine, and Hortensio.

Pet. Come on, o'God's name: once more toward our father's.
Good lord! how bright and kindly shines the moon.

Kath. The moon! the sun: it is not moonlight now.
Pet. I say, it is the moon that shines so bright.
Kath. I know, it is the sun that shines so bright.
Pet. Now, by my mother's son, and that's myself,
It shall be moon, or star; or what I list,
Or ere I journey to your father's house.—
Go one,* and fetch our horses back again.—
Evermore cross'd, and cross'd; nothing but cross'd.

Hor. Say as he says, or we shall never go.

1 expect: in f. e. * Not in f. e. * as: in f. e. * so: in f. e.

Enter on one side Biondello, Lucentio, and Bianca; Gremio walking on the other side.

Bion. Softly and swiftly, sir, for the priest is ready. Lucent. I fly, Biondello; but they may chance to need thee at home; therefore, leave us. Bion. Nay, faith, I’ll see the church o’ your back; and then come back to my master as soon as I can.

[Exit Lucentio, Bianca, and Biondello.]

Gre. I marvel Cambio comes not all this while.

Enter Petruchio, Katharina, Vincentio, and Attendants.

Pet. Sir, here’s the door; this is Lucentio’s house: My father’s bears more toward the market place; Thither must I, and here I leave you, sir.

Vin. You shall not choose but drink before you go. I think I shall command your welcome here, And, by all likelihood, some cheer is toward. [Knocks.

Gre. They’re busy within; you were best knock louder.

Enter Pedant above, at a window.

Ped. What’s he, that knocks as he would beat down the gate?

Vin. Is signior Lucentio within, sir?

Ped. He’s within, sir, but not to be spoken withal.

Vin. What, if a man bring him a hundred pound or two to make merry withal?

Ped. Keep your hundred pounds to yourself: he shall need none, so long as I live.

Pet. Nay, I told you, your son was beloved in Padua. —Do you hear, sir? to leave frivolous circumstances, I pray you, tell signior Lucentio, that his father is come from Pisa, and is here at the door to speak with him.

Ped. Thou liest: his father is come from Pisa, and here looking out at the window.

Vin. Art thou his father?

Ped. Ay, sir; so his mother says, if I may believe her.

Pet. Why, how now, gentleman? [To Vincentio.] why, this is flat knavery, to take upon you another man’s name.

Ped. Lay hands on the villain. I believe, ‘a means to cozen somebody in this city under my countenance.

[Re-enter Biondello.]

Bion. I have seen them in the church together; God send ‘em good shipping! —But who is here? mine old master, Vincentio! now we are undone, and brought to nothing.

Bion. I hope I may choose, sir.

Vin. Come hither, you rogue. What have you got me?

Bion. Forgot you? no, sir: I could not forget you, for I never saw you before in all my life.

Vin. What, you notorious villain, didst thou never see thy master’s father, Vincentio?

Bion. What, my old, worshipful old master? yes, marry, sir; see where he looks out of the window.

Hor. Well, Petruchio, this has put me in heart. Have to my widow: and if she be froward, Then hast thou taught Hortensio to be untoward. [Exit.

ACT V.

Vin. Is’t so, indeed? [Beats Biondello.

Bion. Help, help, help! here’s a madman will murder me.

[Exit.

Ped. Help, son! help, signior Baptista!

[Exit, from the window.

Pet. Prythee, Kate, let’s stand aside, and see the end of this controversy. [They retire.

Re-enter Pedant, below: Baptista, Tranio, and Servants.

Tra. Sir, what are you, that offer to beat my servant?

Vin. What am I, sir? pay, what are you, sir? —O, immortal Gods! O, fine villain! A silken doublet! a velvet hose! a scarlet cloak! and a capotain! hat! —O, I am undone! I am undone! while I play the good husband at home, my son and my servant spend all at the university.

Tra. How now! what’s the matter?

Bap. What, is the man lunatic?

Tra. Sir, you seem a sober ancient gentleman by your habit, but your words show you a madman. Why, sir, what ’cerns it you if I wear pearl and gold? I thank my good father, I am able to maintain it.

Vin. Thy father! O, villain! he is a sail-maker in Bergamo.

Bap. You mistake, sir: you mistake, sir. Pray, what do you think is his name?

Vin. His name? as if I knew not his name: I have brought him up ever since he was three years old, and his name is Tranio.

Ped. Away, away, mad ass! his name is Lucentio; and he is mine only son, and heir to the lands of me, signior Vincentio.

Vin. Lucentio! O! he hath murdered his master. —Lay hold on him, I charge you, in the duke’s name. —O, my son, my son!—tell me, thou villain, where is my son Lucentio?

Tra. Call forth an officer.

Enter one, with an Officer.

Carry this mad knave to the jail.—Father Baptista, I charge you see that he be forthcoming.

Vin. Carry me to the jail!

Gre. Stay, officer: he shall not go to prison.

Bap. Talk not, signior Gremio. I say, he shall go to prison.

Gre. Take heed, signior Baptista, lest you be consecatched in this business. I dare swear this is the right Vincentio.

Ped. Swear, if thou darest.

Gre. Nay, I dare not swear it.

Tra. Then thou wert best say, that I am not Lucentio.

Gre. Yes, I know thee to be signior Lucentio.

Bap. Away with the dotard! to the jail with him!

Vin. Thus strangers may be handled and abused. —O, monstrous villain!

Re-enter Biondello with Lucentio, and Bianca.

Bion. O, yes! they are spoiled! and yonder he is; dousy him, forswear him, or else we are all undone.

Luc. Pardon, sweet father. [Kneeling.

Vin. Lives my sweet son?

[Birthellos, Tranio, and Pedan run out.
Bian. Pardon, dear father, [Kneeling.]
Bap. How hast thou offended?—
Where is Lucentio?
Luc. Here's Lucentio, Right son to the right Vincentio; That have by marriage made thy daughter mine, While counterfeit supposes blear'd thine eye.
Gre. Here's packing, with a witness, to deceive us all!
Vin. Where is that damned villain, Tranio, That fea'd and brav'd me in this matter so?
Bap. Why, tell me, is not this my Cambio?
Bian. Cambio is chang'd into Lucentio.
Luc. Love wrought these miracles; Bianca's love Made me exchange my state with Tranio, While he did bear my countenance in the town; And happily I have arrived at the last Unto the wished haven of my bliss.
What Tranio did, myself enforce'd him to;
Then pardon him, sweet father, for my sake.
Vin. I'll slit the villain's nose, that would have sent me to the jail.
Bap. [To Lucentio.] But do you hear, sir? Have you married my daughter without asking my good will? Vin. Fear not, Baptista; we will content you: go to; but I will in, to be revenged for this villany. [Exit. Bap. And I, to sound the depth of this knavery. [Exit. Luc. Look not pale, Bianca; thy father will not frown. [Exeunt Luc. and Bian. Gre. My cake is dough; but I'll in among the rest, Out of hope of all, but my share of the feast. [Exit.

PETRUCHIO and KATHARINA advance.

Kath. Husband, let's follow, to see the end of this ado.
Pet. First kiss me, Kate, and we will.
Kath. What, in the midst of the street?
Pet. What! art thou ashamed of me?
Kath. No, sir, God forbid; but ashamed to kiss.
Pet. Why, then, let's home again.—Come, sirrah, let's away.
Kath. Nay, I will give thee a kiss: now pray thee, love, stay.
Pet. Is not this well?—Come, my sweet Kate: Better once than never, for never too late. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in Lucentio's House.

A Banquet set out; Enter Baptista, Vincentio, Gremio, the Pedant, Lucentio, Bianca, Petruchio, Katharina, Hortensio, and Widow. Tranio, Biondello, Gremio, and others, attending.

Luc. At last, though long, our jarring notes agree: And time it is, when raging war is gone! To smile at weeps and perils overthrown.— My fair Bianca, bid my father welcome, While I with self-same kindness welcome thine.— Brother Petruchio—sister Katharina,— And thou, Hortensio, with thy loving widow, Feast with the best, and welcome to my house: My banquet is to close our stomachs up, After our great good cheer. Pray you, sit down; For now we sit to chat, as well as eat. [They sit at table.
Hor. For both our sakes I would that word were true.
Pet. Now, for my life, Hortensio fears his widow.
Wid. Then, never trust me, if I be afraid.
Pet. You are very sensible, and yet you miss my sense:
I mean, Hortensio is afraid of you.

Wid. He that is giddy thinks the world turns round.
Kath. Mistress, how mean you that?
Wid. Thus I conceive by him.
Pet. Conceives by me!—How likes Hortensio that?
Hor. My widow says, thus she conceives her tale.
Pet. Very well mended. Kiss him for that, good widow.
Kath. He that is giddy thinks the world turns round:— I pray you, tell me what you meant by that.
Wid. Your husband, being troubled with a shrew, Measures my husband's sorrow by his woe.
And now you know my meaning.

Kath. A very mean saying.
Wid. Right, I mean you.
Kath. And I am mean, indeed, respecting you.
Pet. To her, Kate!
Hor. To her, widow!
Pet. A hundred marks, my Kate does put her down.
Hor. That's my office.
Pet. Spoke like an officer:—Here's to thee, lad. [Drinks to Hortensio.
Bap. How likes Gremio these quick-witted folks?
Gre. Believe me, sir, they butt together well.
Wid. Head and butt? an hasty-witted body Would say, your head and butt were head and horn.
Vin. Ay, mistress bride, hath that awaken'd you?
Bian. Ay, but not frightened me; therefore, I'll sleep again.
Pet. Nay, that you shall not; since you have begun, Have at you for a better jest or two.
Bian. Am I your bird? I mean to shift my bush. And then pursue me as you draw your bow.—
You are welcome all.

[Exeunt BiancA, Katharina, and Widow.]

Pet. She hath prevented me.—Here, signior Tranio; This bird you aim'd at, though you hit her not; Therefore, a health to all that shot and miss'd.

Tra. O sir! Lucentio slipp'd me, like his greyhound, Which runs himself, and catches for his master.
Pet. A good swift simile; but something cursive.
Tra. 'Tis well, sir, that you hunted for yourself: 'Tis thought, your deer does hold you at a bay.
Bap. O ho, Petruchio! Tranio hits you now.
Luc. I thank thee for that, good Tranio.
Hor. Confess, confess, hate he not hit you here?
Pet. 'A has a little gall'd me, I confess; And, as the jest did glance away from me, 'Tis ten to one it maim'd you two outright.

Hor. Now, in good sadness, son Petruchio,
I think thou hast the veriest shrew of all.
Pet. Well, I say no: and therefore, for assurance, Let's each one send unto his several' wife, And he, whose wife is most obedient To come at first when he doth send for her, Shall win the wager which we will propose.

Hor. Content. What is the wager?
Luc. Twenty crowns.
Pet. Twenty crowns! I'll venture so much of my hawk, or hound, But twenty times so much upon my wife.

Luc. A hundred then.
Hor. Content.
Hor. Who shall begin?
Luc. That will I.
Go, Biondello, bid your mistress come to me.

Bian. I go. [Exit.
SCENE II.

TAMING OF THE SHREW.

Bap. Son, I will be your half, Bianca comes.

Luc. I'll have no halves; I'll bear it all myself.

Re-enter BIONDELLO.

How now! what news?

Bion. Sir, my mistress sends you word, That she is busy, and she cannot come.

Pet. How! she is busy, and she cannot come! Is that an answer?

Gre. Ay, and a kind one too: Pray God, sir, your wife send you not a worse.

Pet. I hope better.

Hor. Sirrah, Biondello, go and entreat my wife To come to me forthwith. [Exit Biondello.]

Pet. O ho! entreat her!

Nay, then she must needs come.

Hor. I am afraid, sir, Do what you can, yours will not be entreated.

Re-enter BIONDELLO.

Now, where's my wife?

Bion. She says, you have some goodly jest in hand; She will not come: she bids you come to her.

Pet. Worse and worse: she will not come? O vile! Intolerable, not to be endured! I Sirrah, Grumio, go to your mistress; say, I command her come to me. [Exit Grumio.

Hor. I know her answer.

Pet. What?

Hor. She will not.

Pet. The fouler fortune mine, and there an end. [Enter KATHARINA.

Bap. Now, by my hollidame, here comes Katharina!

Kath. What is your will, sir, that you send for me?

Pet. Where is your sister, and Hortensio's wife?

Kath. They sit conferring by the parlour fire.

Pet. Go, fetch them hither: if they deny to come, Swing me them soundly forth unto their husbands.

Away, I say, and bring them hither straight. [Exit Katharina.

Luc. Here is a wonder, if you talk of a wonder.

Hor. And so it is. I wonder what it bodes.

Pet. Marry, peace it bodes, and love, and quiet life, An awful rule, and right supremacy; And, to be short, what not that's sweet and happy.

Bap. Now fair beful thee; good Petruchio! The wager thou hast won; and I will add Unto their losses twenty thousand crowns; Another dowry to another daughter, For she is as wise as she had never been.

Pet. Nay, I will win my wager better yet, And show more sign of her obedience, Her new-built virtue and obedience.

Re-enter KATHARINA, with BIANCA and WIDOW.

Sec., where she comes, and brings your froward wives As prisoners to her womanly persuasion.

Katharine, that cap of yours becomes you not; Off with that bauble, throw it under foot. Katharina pulls off her cap, and throws it down.

Wid. Lord! let me never have a cause to sigh, Till I be brought to such a silly pass.

Bian. Ple! what a foolish duty call you this? Luc. I would, your duty were as foolish too: The wisdom of your duty, fair Bianca, Cost me one hundred crowns since supper-time.

Bian. The more fool you for laying on my duty.

Pet. Katharine, I charge thee, tell these headstrong women

What duty they do owe their lords and husbands.

Wid. Come, come, you're mocking: we will have no telling.

Pet. Come on, I say; and first begin with her.

Wid. She shall not.

Pet. I say, she shall—and first begin with her.

Kath. Pet. I say fie! unknown that threatening undank brow, And dart not with a scornful glance, those eyes, To wound thy lord, thy king, thy governor: It blots thy beauty, as frosts do bite the meads, Confounds thy fame, as whirlwinds shake fair buds, And in no sense is meet, or amiable.

A woman mov'd is like a fountain troubled, Muddy, ill-seeming, thick, bereft of beauty; And, while it is so, none so dry or thirsty Will deign to sip, or touch one drop of it. Thy husband is thy lord, thy life, thy keeper, Thy head, thy sovereign; one that cares for thee, And for thy maintenance; commits his body To painful labour, both by sea and land, To watch the night in storms, the day in cold, Whilst thou liest warm at home, secure and safe; And craves no other tribute at thy hands, But love, fair looks, and true obedience, Too little payment for so great a debt.

Such duty as the subject owes the prince, Even such a woman owes to her husband; And when she's froward, peevish, sullen, sour, And not obedient to his honest will, What is she but a foul contending rebel, And graceless traitor to her loving lord?—

I am ashamed that women are so simple To offer war where they should kneel for peace, Or seek for rule, supremacy, and sway, When they should bow to serve, love, and obey. Why are our bodies soft, and weak, and smooth, Unapt to toil and trouble in the world, But that our soft conditions, and our hearts, Should well agree with our external parts? Come, come, you froward and unable worms, My mind hath been as big as one of yours, My heart as great, my reason, haply, more To bandy word for word, and frown for frown; But now I see our lances are but straws, Our strength as weak, our weakness past compare, That seeming most, which we indeed least are. Then, vail your stomachs, for it is no boot, And place your husbands' feet in your husband's foot: In token of which duty, if he bien the best My hand is ready, may it do him ease.

Pet. Why, there's a wench!—Come on, and kiss me, Kate.

Luc. Well, go thy ways, old lad, for thou shalt ha' t. Vin. 'Tis a good hearing, when children are toward.

Luc. But a harsh hearing, when women are froward.

Pet. Come, Kate, we'll to bed. [Exit. We three are married, but you two are sped. 'T was I won the wager, though you hit the white; [To Lucentio.

And, being a winner, God give you good night.

[Exeunt Petruchio and Kath.]

Hor. Now go thy ways, thou hast tamed a cursed shrew.

Luc. 'T is a wonder, by your leave, she will be tamed so. [Exeunt.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rousillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.
Enter BERTRAM, the Countess of Rousillon, HELENA, and LAFEU, all in black.

Count. In delivering my son from me, I bury a second husband.

Ber. And I, in going, madam, weep—o'er my father's death anew; but I must attend his majesty's command, to whom I am now in ward,1 evermore in subjection.

Count. What hope is there of his majesty's amendment?

Laf. He hath abandoned his physicians, madam; under whose practices he hath persevered time with hope, and finds no other advantage in the process, but only the losing of hope by time.

Count. This young gentlewoman had a father.—O, that had! how sad a passage 'tis—that, whose skill,2 almost as great as his honesty, had it stretched so far would have made nature immortal, and death should have play for lack of work. Would for the King's sake, he were living! I think it would be the death of the king's disease.

Laf. How called you the man you speak of, madam?

Count. He was famous, sir, in his profession, and it was his great right to be so.—Gerard de Narbon.

Laf. He was excellent, indeed, madam: the king very lately spoke of him, admiringly and mourningly. He was skilful enough to have lived still, if knowledge could be set up against mortality.

Ber. What is it, my good lord, the king languishes of?

Laf. A fistula, my lord.

Ber. I heard not of it before.

Laf. I would it were not notorious.—Was this gentlewoman the daughter of Gerard de Narbon?

1 Heirs of large estates were, during their minority, wards of the king.
2 f. a. insert was.

SCENE I.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Ber. [To Helena.] The best wishes that can be forged in your thoughts be servants to you! Be comfortable to my mother, your mistress, and make much of her.

Laf. Farewell, pretty lady: you must hold the credit of your father.

[Exeunt Bertram and Lafew.

Hel. O, were that all!—I think not on my father;
And these great tears grace his remembrance more Than those I shed for him. What was he like?
I have forgot him: my imagination
Carries no favour in 't, but only1 Bertram's.
I am undone: there is no living, none,
If Bertram be away: it were all one,
That I should love a bright particular star,
And think to wed it, he is so above me:
In his bright radiance and collateral light
Must I be comforted, not in his sphere.
'Th' ambition in my love thus plagues itself:
The hind that would be nated by the lion,
Must die for love. 'T was pretty, though a plague,
To see him every hour; to sit and draw
His arched brows, his hawking eye, his curls,
In my heart's table; heart, too capable
Of every line and trick of his sweet favour:
But now he's gone, and my idolatrous fancy
Must sanctify his relics. Who comes here?

Enter Parolles.

One that goes with him: I love him for his sake,
And yet I know him a notorious liar,
Think him a great way fool, solely a coward;
Yet these fix'd evils sit so fit in him,
That they take place, when virtue's steely bones
Look bleak in the cold wind: withal, full oft we see Cold wisdom waiting on superfluous folly.

Par. Save you, fair queen.2

Hel. And you, monarch.3

Par. No.

Hel. And no.

Par. Are you meditating on virginity?

Hel. Ay. You have some stain of soldier in you;
let me ask you a question: man is enemy to virginity;
how may we barraco it against him.

Par. Keep him out.

Hel. But he assails; and our virginity, though valiant in the battle, yet weak. Unfold to us some war-like resistance.

Par. There is none: man, sitting down before you, will undermine you, and blow you up.

Hel. Bless our poor virginity from underminers, and blowers up!—Is there no military policy, how virgins might blow up men?

Par. Virginity being blown down, man will quicklier be blown up: marry, in blowing him down again, with the breach yourselves made you lose your city. It is not politic in the commonwealth of nature to preserve virginity. Loss of virginity is rational increase; and there was never virgin got, till virginity was first lost.
That you were made of is metal to make virgins. Viriginity, by being once lost, may be ten times found: by being ever kept, it is ever lost. 'T is too cold a companion: away with 't.

Hel. I will stand for 't a little, though therefore I die a virgin.

Par. There's little can be said in 't; 't is against the rule of nature. To speak on the part of virginity is to accuse your mothers, which is most infallible disobedience. He that hangs himself is a virgin: virginity murders itself, and should be buried in highways; out of all sanctified limit, as a desperate offensand against nature. Virginity breeds mites, much like a cheeese; consumes itself to the very paring, and so dies with feeding his own stomach. Besides, virginity is peevish, pride, idle, made of self-love, which is the most in-hhibited sin in the canon. Keep it not: you cannot choose but lose by 't. Out with 't: within two years it will make itself two,4 which is a goodly increase, and the principal itself not much the worse. Away with 't.

Hel. How might one do, sir, to lose it to her own liking?

Par. Let me see: marry, ill; to like him that ne'er it likes. 'T is a commodity will lose the gloss with lyes, the longer kept, the less worth: off with 't, while
't is vendible: answer the time of request. Virginity, like an old courtier, wears her cap out of fashion richly suited, but unsuitable: just like the brooch and the tooth-pick, which wear not now. Your date is better in your pie and your porridge, than in your cheek: and your virginity, your old virginity, is like one of our French wilted pears: it looks ill, it eats dryly; marry, 't is a withered pear: it was formerly better; marry, yet, 't is a withered pear. Will you do any thing with it?

Hel. Not with* my virginity yet. There shall your master have a thousand loves,
A mother, and a mistress, and a friend,
A phoenix, captain, and an enemy,
A guide, a goddess, and a sovereign,
A councillor, a traitress, and a dear;
His humble ambition, proud humility,
His jarring concord, and his discord dulceit,
His faith, his sweet disaster; with a world
Ofpretty, fond, adoptious christendoms,
That blinking Cupid gossips. Now shall he—
I know not what he shall:—God send him well!—
The court's a learning-place; — and he is one—

Par. What one, 5 faith?

Hel. That I wish well.—'T is pity—

Par. What's pity?

Hel. That wishing well had not a body in 't.
Which might be felt; that we, the poorer born,
Whose base stars do shut us up in wisles,
Might with effects of them follow our friends,
And show what we alone must think; which never Returns us thanks. — Enter a Page.

Page. Monsieur Parolles, my lord calls for you.

[Exit Page.

Par. Little Helen, farewell: if I can remember thee,
I will think of thee at court.

Hel. Monsieur Parolles, you were born under a charitable star.

Par. Under Mars, I.

Hel. I especially think, under Mars.

Par. Why under Mars?

Hel. The wars have so kept you under that you must needs be born under Mars.

Par. When he was predominant.

Hel. When he was retrograde, I think, rather.

Par. Why think you so?

Hel. You go from backward when you fight.

Par. That's for advantage.

Hel. So is running away, when fear proposes the safety; but the composition that your valour and fear make in you is a virtue of a good wing, and I like the wear well.

Par. I am so full of businesses, I cannot answer thee acutely. I will return perfect courtier; in the which my instruction shall serve to naturalize thee, so thou wilt be capable of a courtier’s counsel, and understand what advice shall thrust upon thee; else thou diest in thine unthankfulness, and thine ignorance makes thee away: farewell. When thou hast leisure, say thy prayers; when thou hast none, remember thy friends. Get thee a good husband, and use him as he uses thee: so farewell. [Exit.

Hina. Our remedies oft in ourselves do lie, Which we ascribe to heaven: the fated sky Gives us free scope; only, doth backward pull Our slow designs, when we ourselves are dull. What power is’t which mounts my love so high; That makes me see, and cannot feed mine eye? The mightiest space in nature fortune brings! To join like likes, and kiss like native things. Impossible be strange attempts to those That weigh their pains in sense; and do suppose, What hath been cannot be. Who ever strove To show her merit, that did miss her love? The king’s disease—my project may deceive me; But my intents are fix’d, and will not leave me. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Paris. A Room in the King’s Palace.

Flourish of cornets. Enter the King of France, with letters; Lords and others attending.

King. The Florentines and Senoys are by th’ ears; Have fought with equal fortune, and continue A brav’ning war.

1 Lord. So ’tis reported, sir.

King. Nay, ’tis most credible: we here receive it A certainty, vouch’d from our cousin Austria, With caution, that the Florentine will move us For speedy aid; wherein our dearest friend Prejudicates the business, and would seem To have us make denial.

1 Lord. His love and wisdom, approv’d so to your majesty, may plead For amplest credence.

King. He hath arm’d our answer, And Florence is denied before he comes: Yet, for our gentlemen, that mean to see The Tuscan service, freely have they leave To stand on either part.

2 Lord. It may well serve A nursery to our gentry, who are sick For breathing and exploit.

King. What’s he comes here?

Enter BERTRAM, LAFEU, and PAROLLES.

1 Lord. It is the count Rouillon, my good lord, Young Bertram.

King. Youth, thou bear’st thy father’s face; Frank nature, rather curious than in haste, Hath well compos’d thee. Thy father’s moral parts May’tst thou inherit too! Welcome to Paris.

Ber. My thanks and duty are your majesty’s.

King. I would I had that corporal soundness now, As when thy father, and myself, in friendship First tried our soldiership. He did look far Into the service of the time, and was Discipled of the bravest: he last’d long; But on us both did haggis age steal on, And wore us out of act. It much repairs me To talk of your good father. In his youth He had the wit, which I can well observe To-day in our young lords; but they may jest, Till their own scorn return to them unnoted, Ere they can hide their levity in honour: So like a courtier, contempt nor bitterness Were in his pride, or sharpness; if they were, His equal had awak’d them: and his honour, Clock to itself, knew the true minute when Exception bid him speak; and at this time His tongue obvi’d his hand: who were below him He made as creatures of another place, And bow’d his eminent top to their low ranks, Making them proud of his humility, In their poor praise he humbled. Such a man Might be a joy to these younger times, Which, follow’d well, would demonstrate them now But goers backward.

Ber. His good remembrance, sir, Lies richer in your thoughts, than on his tomb: So in approve lives not his epitaph, As in your royal speech.

King. ’Would I were with him! He would always say, (Methinks, I hear him now; his plausible words He scatter’d not in ears, but graffed them, To grow there, and to bear,)—”Let me not live,”— Thus his good melancholy oft began, On the catastrophe and heel of pastime, When it was out, “let me not live,” quoth he, “After my flame lacks oil, to be the snuff Of younger spirits, whose apprehensive senses All but new things disdain: whose judgments are Mere fathers of their garments; whose constancies Expire before their fashions.”—This he wish’d: I, after him, do after him wish too, Since I nor wax nor honey can bring home, I quickly were dissolved from my hive, To give some laborers room.

2 Lord. You are lov’d, sir; They, that least lend it you, shall lack you first.

King. ’Till a place, I know it.—How long is ’t, count, Since the physician at your father’s died? He was much fam’d.

Ber. Some six months since, my lord.

King. If he were living, I would try him yet:— Lend me an arm,—the rest have worn me out With several applications: nature and sickness Debate it at their leisure. Welcome, count; My son’s no dearer.

Ber. Thank your majesty. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Rouillon. A Room in the Countess’s Palace.

Enter COUNTESS, Steward, and Clown.

Count. I will now hear; what say you of this gentlewoman ?

Stew. Madam, the care I have had to even your content, I wish might be found in the calendar of my past endeavours; for then we woud our modesty, and make foul the clearness of our devisings, when of ourselves we publish them.

Count. What does this knave here? Get you gone, sirrah: the complaints I have heard of you, I do not all believe: ’tis my slowness, that I do not; for I know you lack not folly to commit them, and have ability enough to make such knavery yours.

Clo. ’Tis not unknown to you, madam, I am a poor fellow.

Count. Well, sir.

Clo. No, madam; ’tis not so well, that I am poor, though many of the rich are damned. But, if I may have your ladyship’s good-will to go to the world, a Isabel, the woman, and I will do as we may.

Count. Wilt thou needs be a beggar ?

Clo. I do beg your good-will in this case.

1 fortune nature brings: i. e. 2 The people of Sienna. 3 To be married.
Scene III.

All's well that ends well.

Count. In what case?

Clo. In label's case, and mine own. Service is no heritage; and, I think, I shall never have the blessing of God, till I have issue of my body, for they say, bairns are blessings.

Count. Tell me thy reason why thou wilt marry?

Clo. My poor body, madam, requires it: I am driven on by the flesh, and he must needs go that the devil drives.

Count. Is this all your worship's reason?

Clo. Faith, madam, I have other holy reasons, such as they are.

Count. May the world know them?

Clo. I have been, madam; a wicked creature, as you and all flesh and blood are; and, indeed, I do marry that I may repent.

Count. Thy marriage, sooner than thy wickedness.

Clo. I am out o' friends, madam; and I hope to have friends for my wife's sake.

Count. Such friends are thine enemies, knave.

Clo. You are shallow, madam; 'e'en great friends; for the knaves come to do that for me, which I am a-ways of. He, that ears my land, spares my team, and gives me leave to inn the crop; if be his bucke, he's my drudge. He that comforts my wife is the cherisher of my flesh and blood; he that cherishes my flesh and blood, loves my flesh and blood; he that loves my flesh and blood is my friend; ergo, he that kisses my wife is my friend. If men could be contented to be what they are, there were no fear in marriage; for young Charbon the puritan, and old Poyssam the papist, howsome'er their hearts are severed in religion, their heads are both one; they may joll horns together, like any deer if the herd.

Count. Will thou ever be a foul-mouthed and calumnious knave?

Clo. A prophet I, madam; and I speak the truth the next way:

For the ballad will repeat,
Which men full true shall find;
Your marriage comes by destiny,
Your cuckoo sings by kind.

Count. Get you gone, sir: I'll talk with you more anon.

Stew. May it please you, madam, that he bid Helen come to you? of her I am to speak.

Count. Sirrah, tell my gentlewoman, I would speak with her; Helen, I mean.

Clo. Was this fair face, quoth she, the cause?

Why the Grecians saddled Troy?

Fond² done, done fond,² good sooth it was;

Was this King Priam's joy?

With that she sigh'd as she stood;

And gave this sentence then;

Among nine bad if one be good,

There's yet one good in ten.

Count. What! one good in ten? you corrupt the song, sirrah.

Clo. One good woman in ten, madam, which is a purifying o' the song² and mending o' the sex. Would God would serve the world so all the year! we'd find no fault with the tithe-woman if I were the parson.

In one ten, quoth a² an we might have a good woman born—but one²—every blazing star, or at an earthquake, 't would mend the lottery well: a man may draw his heart out, ere he pluck one.

¹ The old copies: in. ² Nearest. ³ The cause, quoth she: in f. e. ⁴ Foolishly. ⁵ The rest of this line is not in f. e. ⁶ These lines are repeated in f. e. ⁷ The rest of this sentence not in f. e. ⁸ are: in f. e. ⁹ This stage direction is given six lines above: in f. e. ¹⁰ Such were our faults; or, &c.: in f. e.

Count. You'll be gone, sir knave, and do as I command you?

Clo. That man should be at woman's command, and yet no hurt done!—Though honesty be no puritan, yet it will do no hurt; it will wear the surplus of humility over the black gown of a big heart. I am going, forsooth: the business is for Helen to come hither. [Exit. Count. Well, now.

Stew. I know, madam, you love your gentlewoman entirely.

Count. Faith, I do: her father bequeathed her to me; and she herself, without other advantage, may lawfully make title to as much love as she finds: there is more owing her than is paid, and more shall be paid her than she'll demand.

Stew. My... or... I was very late more near her than, I think, she wished me: alone she was, and did communicate to herself, her own words to her own ears; she thought, I dare vow for her, they touched not any stranger sense. Her matter was, she loved your son: fortune, she said, was no goddess, that had put such difference betwixt their two estates; love, no god, that would not extend his might, only where qualities were level: Diana, no queen of virgins, that would suffer her poor knight to be surprised, without rescue, in the first assault, or ransom afterward. This she delivered in the most bitter touch of sorrow, that e'er I heard a virgin exclaim in; which I held my duty speedily to acquaint you with, on purpose in the loss that may happen it concerns you something to know it.

Count. You have discharged this honestly: keep it to yourself. Many likelihods informed me of this before, which hung so tottering in the balance, that I could neither believe, nor misdoubt. Pray you, leave me: stalt this in your bosom, and I thank you for your honest care. I will speak with you farther, anon.

[Exit Steward.

Count. Even so it was with me, when I was young: If ever we are nature's, these are ours; this thorn Doth to our rose of youth rightly belong;

Our blood to us, this to our blood is born:

It is the show and seal of nature's truth.

Where love's strong passion is impress'd in youth.

Enter Helen. By our remembrances of days foregone

Search we out faults, for then we thought them none.

Her eye is sick on 't: I observe her now.

Hel. What is your pleasure, madam?

Count. You know, Helen, I am a mother to you.

Hel. Mine honourable mistress.

Count. Nay, a mother.

Why not a mother? When I said, a mother,

Methought you saw a serpent: what's in mother,

That you start at it? I say, I am your mother,

And put you in the catalogue of those

That were envombed mine. 'T is often seen,

Adoption strives with nature; and choice breeds

A native slip to us from foreign seeds:

You ne'er oppress'd me with a mother's groan,

Yet I express to you a mother's care.—

God's mercy, maiden! does it curb thy blood,

To say, I am thy mother? What's the matter,

That this distemper'd messenger of wet,

The many-colour'd Iris, rounds thine eye?

Why, that you are my daughter?

Hel. That I am not.
Count. I say, I am your mother.

Hel. Pardon, madam; The count Roussillon cannot be my brother; I am from humble, he from honour'd name; No note upon my parents, his all noble: My master, my dear lord he is; and I His servant live, and will his vassal die. He must not be my brother.

Count. Nor I your mother?

Hel. You are my mother, madam: would you were (So that my lord, your son, were not my brother) Indeed, my mother!—or were you both our mothers, I care no more for, than I do for heaven, So I were not his sister. Can't no other, But, I your daughter, he must be my brother?

Count. Yes, Helen, you might be my daughter-in-law.

God shield, you mean it not! daughter, and mother, So strive upon your pulse. What, pale again? My fear hath catch'd your fondness: Now I see The mystery of your loneliness, and find Your salt tears' head. Now to all sense 't is gross, You love my son: invention is asham'd Against the proclamation of thy passion, To say, thou dost not: therefore, tell me true; But tell me then, 't is so —for, look, thy cheeks Confess it, th' one to the other; and thine eyes See it so grossly shown in thy behaviours, That in their kind they speak it: only sin, And hellish obstinacy tie thy tongue, That truth should be suspected. Speak, is't so? If it be so, you have wound a goodly clue; If it be not, forswear 't: how'er, I charge thee, As heaven shall work in me for thine avail, To tell me truly.

Hel. Good madam, pardon me.

Count. Do you love my son?

Hel. Your pardon, noble mistress.

Count. Love you my son?

Hel. Do not you love him, madam?

Count. Go not about: my love hath in't a bond, Whereof the world take note. Come, come, disclose The state of your affection, for your passions Have to the full approach'd.

Hel. Then, I confess, [Kneeling.] Here on my knee, before high heaven and you, That before you, and next unto high heaven, I love your son.— [Rising.] My friends were poor, but honest; so's my love: Be not offended, for it hurts not him, That he is lov'd of me. I follow him not By any token of presumptuous suit; Nor would I have him, till I do deserve him, Yet never know how that desert should be. I know I love in vain, strive against hope; Yet, in this cautious and inclembe sage, I still pour in the waters of my love, And lack not to lose still: Thus, Indian-like, Religious in mine error, I adore The sun, that looks upon his worshipper,

But knows of him no more. My dearest madam, Let not your hate encounter with my love, For loving where you do: but, if yourself, Whose aged honour cites a virtuous youth, Did ever, in so true a flame of liking, Wish chastely, and love dearly, that your Dian Was both herself and love, O! then, give pity To her, whose state is such, that cannot choose But lend and give where she is sure to lose; That seeks not to find that her search implies, But, riddle-like, lives sweetly where she dies.

Count. Had you not lately an intent, speak truly, To go to Paris?

Hel. Madam, I had.

Count. Wherefore? tell true.

Hel. I will tell truth, by grace itself I swear. You know, my father left me some prescriptions Of rare and prov'd effects, such as his reading And manifold experience had collected For general sovereignty; and that he will'd me In heedfull' st reservation to bestow them, As notes, whose faculties inclusive were More than they were in note. Amongst the rest, There is a remedy approv'd, set down To cure the desperate languishings whereof The king is render'd lost.

Count. This was your motive

For Paris, was it? speak.

Hel. My lord, your son, made me to think of this; Else Paris, and the medicine, and the king, Had, from the conversation of my thoughts, Ha'pily been absent then.

Count. But think you, Helen, If you should tender your supposed aid, He would receive it? he and his physicians Are of a mind; he, that they cannot help him, They, that they cannot help. How shall they credit A poor unlearned virgin, when the schools, Embowell'd of their doctrine, have left off The danger to itself? Hel. There's something in't, More than my father's skill, which was the greatest Of his profession, that his good receipt Shall, for my legacy, be sanctified By the luckiest stars in heaven: and, would your honour But give me leave to try success, I'd venture The well-lost life of mine on his grace's cure, By such a day, and hour.

Count. Dost thou believe it?

Hel. Ay, madam, knowingly.

Count. Why, Helen, thou shalt have my leave, and love. Means, and attendants, and my loving greetings To those of mine in court. I 'll stay at home, And pray God's blessing unto thy attempt. Be gone to-morrow; and be sure of this, What I can help thee to thou shalt not miss. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Paris. A Room in the King's Palace.

Flourish. Enter King, with young Lords taking leave for the Florentine war; Bertram, Parolles, and Attendants.

King. Farewell, young lords. These warlike principles

1 Not in f. e. 2 manifest: in f. e.

Do not throw from you:—and you, my lords, farewell.—Share the advice betwixt you; if both gain all, The gift doth, stretch itself as 't is receiv'd, And is enough for both.

1 Lord. 'T is our hope, sir,
After well-ender'\n'd soldiers, to return
And find your grace in health.

King. No, no, it cannot be; and yet my heart
Will not confess he owes the malady
That doth my life besinge. Farewell, young lords;
Whether I live or die, be you the sons
Of worthy Frenchmen: let higher Italy
(Those bated, that inherit but the fall
Of the last monarchy) see, that you come
Not to wo honour, but to wed it: when
The bravest quentant shrinks, find what you seek,
That fame may cry you loud. I say, farewell.

2 Lord. Health, at your bidding, serve your majesty!

King. Those girls of Italy, take heed of them.
They say, our French lack language to deny,
If they demand: beware of being captives,
Before you serve.

Both. Our hearts receive your warnings.

King. Farewell.—Come hither to me.

---

1 Lord. O, my sweet lord, that you will stay behind us!

Par. "Tis not his fault, the spark.

2 Lord. O, 'tis brave wars!

Par. Most admirable: I have seen those wars.

Ber. I am commanded here, and kept a coil with;

"Too young," and "the next year," and "too early."

Par. An thy mind stand to't, boy, steal away bravely.

Ber. I shall stay here the forchore to a smock,
Creaking my shoes on the plain masory,
Till honour be bought up, and no sword worn,
But one to dance with. By heaven! I'll steal away.

1 Lord. There's honour in the theft.

Par. Commit it, count.

2 Lord. I am your accessory; and so farewell.

Ber. I grow to you, and our parting is a tortured body.

1 Lord. Farewell, captain.

2 Lord. Sweet monsieur Parolles!

Par. Noble heroes, my sword and yours are kin.

Good sparks, and lustrous, a word, a good metals—
you shall find in the regiment of the Spini, one captain Spurio, with his cicatrice, an emblem of war, here on his sinister cheek: it was this very sword entrenched it:
say to him, I live, and observe his reports of me.

---

2 Lord. We shall, noble captain. [Exit Lords.

Par. Mars dot e on you for his novices!—What will you do?

Ber. Stay; the king—[Seeing him rise.

Par. Use a more spacious ceremony to the noble lords;
you have restrained yourself within the lists of too cold an adieu: be more expressive to them; for they wear themselves in the cap of the time: there do must true gait; eat, speak, and move under the influence of the most received star; and though the devil lead the measure, such are to be followed. After them, and take a more dilated farewell.

Ber. And I will do so.

Par. Worthy fellows, and like to prove most sinewy sword-men. [Exeunt Bertram and Parolles.

---

Enter Lafu.

Laf. Pardon, my lord, for me and for my tidings.

[Kneeling.

King. I'll see thee to stand up.

Laf. Then here! a man stands, that has brought his vardon.

---

Rising. I would, you had kneeld, my lord, to ask the mercy;
And that, at my bidding, you could so stand up.

King. I would I had; so I had broke thy pate,

---

1 here's: in f. e. 2 Not in f. e. 3 arise: in f e.
A modest one, to bear me back again.

King. I cannot give thee less, to be call'd grateful. Thou though'tst to help me, and such thanks I give As one near death to those that wish him live; But what at full I know thou know'st no part, I knowing all my peril, thou no art.

Hel. What I merit can do death halt to try, Since thou set up your rest 'gainst remedy, He that of greatest works is finisher, Oft does them by the weakest minister: So holy writ in babes hath judgment shown, When judges have been babes. Great floods have flown From simple sources; and great seas have dried, When miracles have by the greatest been denied. Of expectation fails, and most oft there Where most it promises; and oft it hits, Where hope is coldest, and despair most fits.¹

King. I must not hear thee: fare thee well, kind maid. Thy pains, not us'd, must by thyself be paid. Puffers, not took, reap thanks for their reward. Hel. When I merit can do death halt to try, It is not so with him that all things knows. As 'tis with us that square our guess by shows; But most it is presumption in us, when The help of heaven we count the act of men. Dear sir, to my endeavours give consent; Of heaven, not me, make an experiment. I am not an impostor, that proclaim Myself against the level of mine aim; But know I think, and think I know most sure, My art is not past power, nor you past cure.

King. Art thou so confident? Within what space Hast thou my cure?

Hel. The greatest grace lending grace, Ere twice the horses of the sun shall bring Their fiery torcher his diurnal ring; Ere twice in mark and occidental damp Moist Hesperus hath quench'd his sleepy lamp; Or four and twenty times the pilot's glass Hath told the thievish minutes how they pass, What is infirm from your sound parts shall fly, Health shall live free, and sickness freely die.

King. Upon thy certainty and confidence, What dar'st thou venture?

Hel. Tax of impudence, A strumpet's boldness, a divulged shame, Traduced by odious ballads; my maiden's name Scar'd otherwise; no worse of worst extended, With vilest torture let my life be ended. [Speak.]

King. Methinks, in thee some blessed spirit doth His powerful sound within an organ weak; And what impossibility would slay In common sense, sense saves another way. Thy life is dear; for all, that live can rate Worth name of life, in thee hath estimate; Youth, beauty, wisdom, courage, honour,² all That happiness in' prime can happy call: Thou this to hazard, needs must intimate Skill infinite, or monstrous desperate. Sweet practiser, thy physic I will try, That minister's thine own death, if I die.

Hel. If I break time, or flinch in property Of what I spoke, unpitied let me die; And well describ'd. Not helping, death's my fee; But, if I help, what do you promise me?

King. Make thy demand.

Hel. But will you make it even?

King. Ay, by my sceptre, and my hopes of heaven. Then shalt thou give me with thy kingly hand What husband in thy power I will command: Exempted be from me the arrogance To choose from forth the royal blood of France, My low and humble name to propagate With any branch or image of thy state; But such a one, thy vassal, whom I know Is free for me to ask, thee to bestow. King, nay, it is as my hand; the premises observ'd, Thy will by my performance shall be serv'd: So make the choice of thy own time; for I, Thy resolv'd patient, on thee still rely. More should I question thee, and more I must, Though more to know could not be more to trust, From whence thou cam'st, how tended on; but rest Unquestion'd welcome, and undoubted bliss.— Give me some help here, ho!—If thou proceed As high as word, my deed shall match thy deed.

[Furnish. Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Rousillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Countess and Clown.

Count. Come on, sir: I shall now put you to the height of your breeding.

Clo. I will show myself highly fed, and lowly taught. I know my business is but to the court.

Count. To the court! why, what place make you special, when you put off that with such contempt? But to the court!

Clo. Truly, madam, if God have lent a man any manners, he may easily put it off at court; he that cannot make a leg, put off your cap, kiss his hand, and say nothing, has neither leg, hands, lip, nor cap; and, indeed, such a fellow, to say precisely, were not for the court. But, for me, I have an answer will serve all men.

Count. Marry, that's a bountiful answer, that fits all questions.

Clo. It is like a barber's chair, that fits all buttocks; the pin-butock, the quach-butock, the brawn-butock, or any buttock.

Count. Will your answer serve fit to all questions?

Clo. As fit as ten groats is for the hand of an attorney, as your French crown for your taffata punk, as Tib's rush² for Tom's forefinger, as a pancake for Shrove-Tuesday, a morris for May-day, as the nail to his hole, the eucokid to his horn, as a preceding quan to a wrangling knife, as the nun's lip to the friar's mouth; nay, as the pudding to his skin.

Count. Have you, I say, an answer of such fitness for all questions?

Clo. From below your duke, to beneath your constable, it will fit any question.

Count. It must be an answer of most monstrous size, that must fit all demands.

Clo. But a trifle neither, in good faith, if the learned should speak truth of it. Here it is, and all that belongs to 't: ask me, if I am a courtier; it shall do you no harm to learn.

Count. To be young again, if we could. I will be a fool in question, hoping to be the wiser by your answer. I suppose you, sir, are a courtier?

Clo. O Lord, sir!—there's a simple putting off.— More, more, a hundred of them.

Count. Sir, I am a poor friend of yours, that loves you.

Clo. O Lord, sir!—Thick, thick, spare not me.

Count. I think, sir, you can eat none of this homely meat.

¹ Pope reads: sits. ² Not in f. o. ³ and: in f. o. ⁴ Rush rings are often spoken of as interchanged between rustic lovers.
SCENE III. ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Clo. O Lord, sir!—Nay, put me to 't, I warrant you.
Count. You were lately whipped, sir, as I think.
Clo. O Lord, sir!—Spare not me.
Count. Do you cry? "O Lord, sir," at your whipping, and "spare not me"? Indeed, your "O Lord, sir," is very sequent to your whipping; you would answer very well to a whipping, if you were but bound to 't.
Clo. I ne'er had worse luck in my life, in my—O Lord, sir? I see, things may serve long, but not serve ever.
Count. I play the noble housewife with the time, to entertain it so merrily with a fool.
Clo. O Lord, sir!—why, there's serves well again.
Count. An end, sir: to your business. Give Helen this: And urge her to a present answer back:
Command me to my kinsmen, and my son.
This is not much.
Clo. Not much commendation to them.
Count. Not much employment for you: you understand me?
† Clo. Most fruitfully: I am there before my legs.
Count. Haste you again. [Exeunt severally.

SCENE III.—Paris. A Room in the King's Palace.

Enter BERTRAND, LAFAYET, and PAROLLES.

Laf. They say, miracles are past; and we have our philosophical persons, to make modern and familiar things supernatural and causeless. Hence is it, that we make trifles of terrors, ensnaming ourselves into seeming knowledge, when we should submit ourselves to an unknown fear.
Par. Why, 'tis the rarest argument of wonder, that hath shot out in our latter times.
Ber. And so 'tis.
Laf. To be relinquished of the artists,—
Par. So I say; both of Galen and Paracelsus.
Laf. Of all the learned and authentic fellows,—
Par. Right; so I say.
Laf. That gave him out incurable,—
Par. Why, there 'tis; so say I too.
Laf. Not to be helped,—
Par. Right; an't were a man assured of an—
Laf. Uncertain life, and sure death.
Par. Just, you say well; so would I have said.
Laf. I may truly say, it is a novelty to the world.
Par. It is, indeed: if you will have it in showing, you shall read it in,—what do you call there?—
Laf. In showing of a heavenly effect in an earthly actor.
Par. That's it I would have said; the very same.
Laf. Why, your dolphin is not Lustick: 'tis me, I speak in respect—
Par. Nay, 'tis strange; 'tis very strange, that is the brief and the tedious of it; and he is of most facetious spirit, that will not acknowledge it to be the—
Laf. Very hand of heaven.
Par. Ay, so I say.
Laf. In a most weak—
Par. And debile minister, great power, great transcendent; which should, indeed, give us a further use to be made, than alone the recovery of the king, as to be—
Laf. Generally thankful.

Enter KING, HELENA, and ATTENDANTS.

Par. I would have said it; you say well. Here comes the king.
Laf. Lustick, as the Dutchman says: I'll like a maid the better, whilst I have a tooth in my head.
Why, he's able to lead her a coranto.
Par. Morte du vinage! Is not this Helen?
Laf. Fore God, I think so.
King. Go, call before me all the lords in court.—

[Exit an Attendant.

Sit, my preserver, by thy patient's side;
And with this healthful hand, whose banish'd sense
Thou hast repealcd, a second time receive
The confirmation of my promised gift,
Which but attends thy naming.

Enter several Lords.
Fair maid, send forth thine eye: this youthful parcel
Of noble bachelors stand at my bestowing,
O'er whom both sovereign's power and father's voice
I have to use: thy frank election make.
Thou hast power to choose, and they none to forsake.
Hel. To each of you one fair and virtuous mistress
Fall, when love please!—marry, to each, but one.
Laf. I'd give bay curtail, and his furniture,
My mouth no more were broken 'twixt these boys,
And with as little beard.
King. Persue them well:
Not one of those but had a noble father.
Hel. Gentlemen,
Heaven hath through me restor'd the king to health.
All. We understand it, and thank heaven for you.
Hel. I am a simple maid; and therein wealthiest,
That, I protest, I simply am a maid.—
Please it your majesty, I have done already:
The blushes in my cheeks thus whisper me,
"We blush, that thou shouldst choose; but, be refrus'd,
Let the white death sit on thy cheek for ever:
We'll ne'er come there again."

King. Make choice, and see;
Who shuns thy love, shuns all his love in me.
Hel. Now, Dian, from thy altar do I fly,
And to imperial Love, that god most high,
Do my sighs steam.—Sir, will you hear my suit?
1 Lord. And grant it.
Hel. Thanks, sir: all the rest is mute.
Laf. I had rather be in this choice, and throw amase'se for my life.
Hel. The honour, sir, that flames in your fair eyes,
Before I speak, too threateningly replies:
Love make your fortunes twenty times above
Her that so wishes, and her humble love!
2 Lord. No better, if you please.
Hel. My wish receive,
Which great Love grant! and so I take my leave.
Laf. Do all they deny her? An they were sons of mine, I'd have them whipped, or I would send them to the Turk to make emuchas of.
Hel. [To 3 Lord.] Be not afraid that your hand should take;
I'll never do you wrong for your own sake:
Blessing upon your vows! and in your bed
Find fairer fortune, if you ever wed!
Laf. These boys are boys of ice, they'll none have her: sure, they are bastards to the English; the French ne'er got them.
Hel. You are too young, too happy, and too good,
To make yourself a son out of my blood.
4 Lord. Fair one, I think not so.
Laf. There's one grape yet:—I am sure, thy father drank wine.—But if thou be'st not an ass, I am a youth of fourteen; I have known thee already.
[I give Laf. that which he has asked for.
Hel. [To BERTRAND.] I dare not say I take you; but
Me, and my service, ever whilst I live,
Into your guiding power.—This is the man.

King. Why then, young Bertram, take her; she's thy wife.
[BERTRAM DRAWS BACK.]
Ber. My wife, my liege? I shall beseech your highness,
In such a business give me leave to use
The help of mine own eyes.

King. Know'st thou not, Bertram,
What she has done for me?

Ber. Yes, my good lord;
But never hope to know why I should marry her.
King. Thou know'st, she has rais'd me from my sickly bed.
Ber. But follows it, my lord, to bring me down
Must answer for your raising? I know her well:
She had her breeding at my father's charge.
A poor physician's daughter my wife?—Disdain
Rather corrupt me ever!

King. 'Tis only title thou disdains't in her, the which
I can build up. Strange is it, that our bloods,
Of colour, weight, and heat, pour'd all together,
Would quite confound distinction, yet stand off
In differences so mighty. If she be
All that is virtuous, (save what thou dislik'st),
A poor physician's daughter thou dislik'st
Of virtue for the name; but do not so:
From lowest place when virtuous things proceed,
The place is dignify'd by the doer's deed:
Where great additions swell is, and virtue none;
It is a dropped honour: good alone
Is good, without a name; vileness is so:
The property by what it is should go,
Not by the title. She is young, wise, fair;
In these to nature she's immediate heir,
And these breed honour: that is honour's scorn,
Which challenges itself as honour's born,
And is not like the sire: honours thrive,
When rather from our acts we them derive,
Than our foregoers. The mere word's a slave,
Debauch'd on every tomb; on every grave,
A lying trophy, and as oft is dumb,
Where dust, and damn'd oblivion, is the tomb
Of honour'd bones indeed. What should be said?
If thou canst like this creature as a maid,
I can create the rest. Virtue, and she
Is her own dower; honour, and wealth from me.
Ber. I cannot love her, nor will strive to do't.
King. Thou wrong'st thyself, if thou shouldst strive to choose.

Hol. That you are well restored, my lord, I am glad.
Let the rest go.

King. My honour's at the stake, which to defend,
I must produce my power. Here, take her hand,
Proud scornful boy, unworthy this good gift,
That dost in vile misprision shake up
My love, and her desert; that canst not dream,
We, poising us in her defective scale,
Shall weigh thee to the beam; that wilt not know,
It is in us to plant thine honour, where
We please to have it grow. Check thy contempt:
Obey me well, which travails in thy good:
Believe not thy disdains, but presently
Do thine own fortunes that obedient right,
Which both thy duty owes, and our power claims,
Or I will throw thee from my care for ever
Into the staggers, and the careless lapse
Of youth and ignorance; both my revenge and hate,
Loosing upon thee in the name of justice,
Without all terms of pity. Speak: thine answer.

Ber. Pardon, my gracious lord, for I submit
My fancy to your eyes. When I consider
What great creation, and what dole of honour,
Flies where you bid it, I find that she, which late
Was in my nobler thoughts most base, is now
The praised of the king; who, so ennobled,
Is, as 't were, born so.

King. Take her by the hand,
And tell her, she is thine; to whom I promise
A counterpose, if not to thy estate,
A balance more replete.

Ber. I take her hand.

King. Good fortune, and the favour of the king,
Smile upon this contract; whose ceremony
Shall seem expedient on the now born brief,
And be perform'd to-night: the solemn feast
Shall more attend upon the coming space,
Expecting absent friends. As thou lov'st her,
Thy love's to me religious, else, does err.

[Exeunt King, BERTRAM, HELENA, LORDS, and ATTENDANTS.]

Laf. Do you hear, monsieur? a word with you.
Par. Your pleasure, sir?
Laf. Your lord and master did well to make his re-cantation.
Par. Recantation!—My lord? my master?
Laf. Ay; is it not a language I speak?
Par. A most harsh one, and not to be understood without bloody succeeding. My master?
Laf. Are you companion to the Count Rousillon?
Par. To any count; to all counts; to what is man.
Laf. To what is count's man: count's master is of another style.
Par. You are too old, sir: let it satisfy you, you are too old.
Laf. I must tell thee, sirrah, I write man; to which title age cannot bring thee.
Par. What I dare too well do, I dare not do.
Laf. I did think thee, for two ordinaries, to be a pretty wise fellow: thou didst make tolerable vent of thy travel: it might pass; yet the scars, and the ban-erets about thee, did manifoldly dissuade me from believing thee a vessel of too great a burden. I have now found thee: when I lose thee again, I care not;
yet art thou good for nothing but taking-up, and that thou 'rt scarce worth.
Par. Hadst thou not the privilege of antiquity upon thee?
Laf. Do not plunge thyself too far in anger, lest thou halten thy trial; which if—Lord have mercy on thee for a ben! So, my good window of lattice, fare thee well: thy casement I need not open, for I look through thee. Give me thy hand.
Par. My lord, you give me most egregious indignity.
Laf. Ay; with all my heart; and thou art worthy of it.
Par. I have not, my lord, deserved it.
Laf. Yes, good faith, every drachm of it; and I will not bate thee a scruple.
Par. Well, I shall be wiser.
Laf. Exempt as thou canst, for thou hast to pull at a smack of the contrary. If ever thou bestound in thy scaref, and beaten, thou shalt find what it is to be proud of thy bondage. I have a desire to hold my acquaintance with thee, or rather my knowledge, that I may say, in the default, he is a man I know.
Par. My lord, you do me most insupportable vexation.
Laf. I would it were hell-pains for thy sake, and my 1 Not in e.  2 swell us.  3 defeat: in e.  4 The old copies: borne.  5 Dining in your company twice.

poor doing eternal: for doing I am past, as I will by thee, in what motion age will give me leave. [Exit."

Par. Well, thou hast a son shall take this disgrace off me, securv, old, filthy, securvy lord!—Well I must be patient; there is no letering of authority. I'll beat him, by my life, if I can meet him with any convenience an he were double and double a lord. I'll have no more pity of his age, than I would have of—I'll beat him: an if I could but meet him again.

Re-enter LAFEUV.

Laf. Sirrah, your lord and master's married: there's news for you; you have a new mistress.

Par. I most unfeignedly beseech your lordship to make some reservation of your wrongs; he is my good lord: whom I serve above is my master.

Laf. Who? God?

Par. Ay, sir.

Laf. The devil it is, that's thy master. Why dost thou garner up thy arms o' this fashion? dost make hose of thy sleeves? do other servants so? Thou wast best set thy lower part where thy nose stands. By mine honour, if I were but two hours younger I'd beat thee: methinks, thou art a general offence, and every man should beat thee. I think, thou wast created for men to breathe themselves upon thee.

Par. This is hard and undeserved measure, my lord.

Laf. Go to, sir; you were beaten in Italy for picking a kernel out of a pomegranate: you are a vagabond, and no true traveller. You are more saucy with lords and honourable personages, than the condition of your birth—and virtue gives you heraldry. You are not worth another word, else I'd call you knave. I leave you.

Enter BERTRAM.

Par. Good, very good; it is so then:—good, very good. Let it be concealed a while.

Ber. Undone, and forfeited to cares for ever!

Par. What is the matter, sweetheart?

Ber. Although before the solemn priest I have sworn, I will not bed her.

Par. What? what, sweet heart?

Ber. O, my Parolles, they have married me!

I'll to the Tuscan wars, and never bed her.

Par. France is a dog-hole, and it no more merits
The tread of a man's foot. To the wars!

Ber. There's letters from my mother: what the import is, I know not yet.

Par. Ay, that would be known. To the wars, my boy! to the wars!

He wears his honour in a box, unseen,
That hugs his kiccky-wicky here at home,
Spending his manly marrow in her arms,
Which should sustain the bound and high curvet
Of Mars's fiery steed. To other regions!
France is a stable; we, that dwell in 't, jades;
Therefore, to the wars!

Ber. It shall be so: I'll send her to my house,
Acquaint my mother with my hate to her,
And wherefore I am dead; write to the king
That which I durst not speak. His present gift
Shall furnish me to those Italian fields,
Where noble followers strike. War is no strife
To the dark house, and the detested wife.

Par. Will this capriccio hold in thee, art sure?

Ber. Go with me to my chamber, and advise me.
I'll send her straight away: to-morrow
I'll to the wars, to her single sorrow.
SCENE V.—Another Room in the Same.

Enter LAFEU and BERTRAM.

Laf. But, I hope, your lordship thinks not him a soldier.

Ber. Yes, my lord, and of very valiant approbation.

Laf. You have it from his own deliverance.

Ber. And by other warranted testimony.

Laf. Then my dial goes not true. I took this lark for a bunting.

Ber. I do assure you, my lord, he is very great in knowledge, and accordingly valiant.

Laf. I have then sinned against his experience, and transgressed against his valour; and my state that way is dangerous, since I cannot yet find in my heart to repent. Here he comes. I pray you, make us friends; I will pursue theenity.

Enter PAROLLES.

Par. [To BERTRAM.] These things shall be done, sir.

Laf. Pray you, sir, who's his tailor?

Par. Sir?

Laf. O! I know him well. Ay, sir; he, sir, is a good workman, a very good tailor.

Ber. [Aside to Parolles.] Is she gone to the king?

Par. She is.

Ber. Will she away to-night?

Par. As you 'll have her.

Ber. I have writ my letters, casked my treasure, Given order for our horses; and to-night,
When I should take possession of the bride,
End, ere I do begin.

Laf. A good traveller is something at the latter end of a dinner; but one that laces three-thrirds and uses a known truth to pass a thousand nothings with, should be once heard, and thrice beaten.—God save you, captain.

Ber. Is there any unkindness between my lord and you, monsieur?

Par. I know not how I have deserved to run into my lord's displeasure.

Laf. You have made shift to run into't, boots and spurs all, like him that leaped into the cauldron, and out of it you'll run again, rather than suffer question for your residence.

Ber. It may be, you have mistaken him, my lord.

Laf. And shall do so ever, though I took him at his prayers. Fare you well, my lord; and believe this of me, there can be no kernel in this light nut; the soul of this man is his clothes; trust him not in matter of heavy consequence; I have kept of them tame, and know their nature.—Farewell, monsieur: I have spoken better of you, than you have or will deserve at my hand: but we must do good against evil. [Exit. Par. An idle lord, I swear.

ACT III.

Flourish. Enter the Duke of Florence, attended; two Frenchmen and Soldiers.

Duke. So that, from point to point, now have you heard
The fundamental reasons of this war,

Ber. I think so.

Par. Why, do you not know him?

Ber. Yes, I do know him; but, and common speech
Gives him a worthy pass. Here comes my clog. [Exit.

Enter HELENA.

Hel. I have, sir, as I was commanded from you,
Spoke with the king, and have proceur'd his leave
For present parting; only he desires
Some private speech with you.

Ber. I shall obey his will.

You must not marvel, Helen, at my course,
Which holds not colour with the time, nor does
The ministration and required office
On my particular: prepar'd I was not
For such a business; therefore am I found
So much unsettled. This drives me to entreat you,
That presently you take your way for home;
And rather muse than ask why I entreat you.

For my respects are better than they seem;
And my appointments have in them a need,
Greater than shows itself, at the first view,
To you that know them not. This to my mother.

[Giving a letter.]

'T will be two days ere I shall see you: so,
I leave you to your wisdom.

Sir, I can nothing say,

But that I am your most obedient servant.

Ber. Come, come, no more of that.

Hel. And ever shall With true observance seek to eke out that,
Wherein toward me my honestly stars have fail'd
To equal my great fortune.

Ber. Let that go:

My haste is very great. Farewell: hee home.

Hel. Pray, sir, your pardon.

Ber. Well, what would you say?

Hel. I am not worthy of the wealth I owe;^ Nor dare I say, 'tis mine, and yet it is,

But, like a timorous thief, most fain would steal
What law does vouch mine own.

Ber. What would you have?

Hel. Something, and scarce so much:—nothing, indeed, —

I would not tell you what I would, my lord—'faith, yes:

Strangers and foes do sunder, and not kiss.

Ber. I pray you stay not, but in haste to horse.

Hel. I shall not break your bidding, good my lord.

Where are my other men? monsieur, farewell. [Exit. Ber. Go thou toward home; where I will never come,

Whilst I can shake my sword, or hear the drum,— Away! and for our flight.

Par. Bravely, coraggio! [Exeunt.
SCENE II.—Rousillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Countess and Clown.

Count. It hath happened all as I would have had it, save that he comes not along with her.

Clo. By my troth, I take my young lord to be a very melancholy man.

Count. By what observance, I pray you?

Clo. Why, he will look upon his boot, and sing; mend his ruff, and sing; ask questions, and sing; pick his teeth, and sing. I know a man that had this trick of melancholy, sold a goodly manor for a song.

Count. Let me see what he writes, and when he means to come. [Opening a letter.

Clo. I have no mind toLABEL, since I was at court. Our madam and our labels of the country are nothing like your old label and your labels of the court; the brains of my Cupid's knocked out, and I begin to love, as an old man loves money, with no stomach.

Count. What have we here?

Clo. E'en that you have there. [Exit.

Count. [Reads.] I have sent you a daughter-in-law: she hath recovered the king, and undone me. I have wedded her, not bedded her; and sworn to make the not eternal. You shall hear, I am run away: know it before the report come. If there be breadth enough in the world, I will hold a long distance. My duty to you.

"Your unfortunate son,

"BERTRAM."

This is not well: rash and unbridled joy,
To fly the favours of so good a king!
To pluck his indignation on thy head,
By the misprizing of a maid, too virtuous
For the contempt of empire!

Re-enter Clown.

Clo. O madam! yonder is heavy news within, between two soldiers and my young lady.

Count. What is the matter?

Clo. Nay, there is some comfort in the news, some comfort: your son will not be killed so soon as I thought he would.

Count. Why should he be killed?

Clo. So say I, madam, if he run away, as I hear he does: the danger is in standing to't; that's the loss of men, though it be the getting of children. Here they come will tell you more; for my part, I only hear your son was run away. [Exit Clown.

Enter HELENA and two French Gentlemen.

Fr. Env. Save you, good madam.

Hel. Madam, my lord is gone; for ever gone.

Fr. Gen. Do not say so.

Count. Think upon patience.—Pray you, gentle men,—

I have felt so many quirks of joy and grief,
That the first face of neither, on the start,
Can woman meet unto:—where is my son, I pray you?

Fr. Gen. Madam, he's gone to serve the duke of Florence:

We met him thitherward; for thence we came,
And, after some despatch in hand at court,
Thither we bend again.

Hel. Look on his letter, madam: here's my passport.

[Reads.] "When thou canst get the ring upon my finger, which never shall come off; and show me a child begotten of thy body, that I am father to, then call me husband: but in such a then I write a never."

This is a dreadful sentence.

Count. Brought you this letter, gentlemen?

Fr. Env. Ay, madam; and for the contents' sake, are sorry for our pains.

Count. I pray thee, lady, have a better cheer;
If thou engrossst all the griefs as as thine,
Thou robb'st me of a moiety. He was my son,
But I do wash his name out of my blood,
And thou art all my child.—Towards Florence is he?

Fr. Gen. Ay, madam.

Count. And to be a soldier?

Fr. Gen. Such is his noble purpose; and, believe't,
The duke will lay upon him all the honour
That good convenience claims.

Count. Return you thither?

Fr. Env. Ay, madam, with the swiftlest wing of

Hel. [Reads.] "Till I have no wife, I have nothing in France."

"? is bitter.

Count. Find you that there?

Hel. Ay, madam.

Fr. Env. ? is but the boldness of his hand; haply,
Which his heart was not consenting to.

Count. Nothing in France, until he have no wife!
There's nothing here that is too good for him,
But only she; and she deserves a lord,
That twenty such rude boys might tend upon,
And call her hourly mistress. Who was with him?

Fr. Env. A servant only; and a gentleman
Which I have some time known.

Count. Paroles, was it not?

Fr. Env. Ay, my good lady, she.

Count. A very tainted fellow, and full of wickedness.

My son corrupts a well-derived nature
With his indiscipline.

Fr. Env. Indeed, good lady,

The fellow has a deal of that too much,
Which 'hoves' him much to leave.†

Count. ? are welcome, gentlemen.

I will entreat you, when you see my son,
To tell him, that his sword can never win
The honour that he loses: more I'll entreat you
Written to hear alarums.

Fr. Gen. We serve you, madam,
In that and all your worthiest affairs.

Count. Not so, but as we change our courtesies.

Will you draw near?

[Exeunt COUNTESS and French Gentlemen.

1 The top of the loose boot which turned over was called the ruff, or ruff.
2 Old copies: half; which Knight retains, understanding song as the tenure by which it was held.
3 are; in f. e. 4 holds; in f. e. 4 have; in f. e.
Hel. “Till I have no wife, I have nothing in France.”

Nothing in France; until he has no wife!

Thou shalt have none, Rousillon, none in France;
Then hast thou all again. Poor lord! is’t I
That chase thee from thy country, and expose
Those tender limbs of thine to the event
Of the non-sparing war? and is it I
That drive thee from the sportive court, where thou
Was shot at with fair eyes, to be the mark
Of smoky muskets? O! I leaden messengers,
That ride upon the volant speed of fire,
Fly with false aim; wound the still-piercing air
That sings with piercing, do not touch my lord!
Whenever shoots at him, I set him there;
Whenever charges on his forward breast,
I am the caftiff that do hold him to it;
And, though I kill him not, I am the cause
His death was so effected. Better I were,
I met the ravening lion when he roared
With sharp constraint of hunger; better I were
That all the miseries which nature owes
Were mine at once. No, come thou home, Rousillon, Whoever be the honour but of danger wise a bear;
As oft it loses all: I will be gone.

My being here it is that holds thee hence:
Shall I stay here to do’t? no, no, although
The air of paradise did fan the house,
And angels o’er all: I will be gone,
That pitiful rumour may report my flight,
To console thine ear. Come, night: end, day;
For with the dark, poor thief, I’ll steal away.” [Exit.

Flourish. Enter the Duke of Florence, Bertram, Parolles, Lords, Officers, Soldiers, and others.

Duke. The general of our horse thou art; and we,
Great in our hope, lay our best love and credence
Upon thy promising fortune.

Ber. Sir, it is
A charge too heavy for my strength; but yet
We’ll strive to bear it for thy worthy sake,
To th’ extreme edge of hazard.

Duke. Then go thou forth,
And fortune play upon thy prosperous helm,
As thy auspicious mistress!

Ber. This very day,
Great Mars, I put myself into thy file:
Make me but like my thoughts, and I shall prove
A lover of thy drum, hater of love. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. Rousillon. A Room in the Countess’s Palace.

Enter Countess and her Steward.

Count. Alas! and would you take the letter of her?
Might you not know, she would do as she has done,
By sending me a letter? Read it again.

Stew. [Reads.] “I am Saint Jaques’ pilgrim, thither gone.
Ambitious love hath so in me offended,
That bare-foot plod I the cold ground upon;
With sainted vow my faults to have amended.
Write, write, that from the bloody course of war,
My dearest master, your dear son, may lie:
Bless him at home in peace, whilst I from far
His name with zealous fervour sanctify.
His taken labours bid him me forgive:
I, his despitful June, sent him forth
From courtly friends, with camping foes to live,
Where death and danger dog the heels of worth:

He is too good and fair for death and me,
Whom I myself embrace, to set him free?”

Count. Ah, what sharp stings are in her mildest words!

Rinaldo, you did never lack advice so much,
As letting her pass so: had I spoke with her,
I could have well diverted her intents,
Which thus she hath prevented.

Stew. Pardon me, madam.*

If I had given you this at over-night,
She might have been o’erta’en; and yet she writes,
Pursuit would be but vain.

Count. What angel shall Bless this unworthy husband? he cannot thrive,
Unless her prayers, whom heaven delights to hear,
And loves to grant, reprieve him from the wrath
Of greatest justice.—Write, write, Rinaldo,
To this unworthy husband of his wife:
Let every word weigh heavy of her worth,
That he does weigh too light: my greatest grief,
Though little he do feel it, set down sharply,
Despatest the most convenient messenger.—
When he shall hear that she is gone,
He will return: and hope I may, that she,
Hearing so much, will speed her foot again,
Led hither by pure love. Which of them both
Is dearest to me, I have no skill or sense
To make distinction.—Provide this messenger.—
My heart is heavy, and mine age is weak;
Grief would have tears, and sorrow bids me speak.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Without the Walls of Florence.

A tucket after off. Enter an old Widow of Florence,
Diana, Violenta, Mariana, and other Citizens.

Wid. Nay, come; for if they do approach the city, we shall lose all the sight.

Dia. They say, the French count has done most honourable service.

Wid. It is reported that he has taken their greatest commander; and that with his own hand he slew the Duke’s brother. We have lost our labour; they are gone a contrary way: hark! you may know by their trumpets.

Mar. Come; let’s return again, and suffice ourselves with the report of it. Well, Diana, take heed of this French earl: the honour of a maid is her name, and no legacy is so rich as honesty.

Wid. I have told my neighbour, how you have been solicited by a gentleman his companion.

Mar. I know that knave; hang him! one Parolles: a filthy officer he is in those suggestions! for the young earl.—Beware of them, Diana; their promises, enticements, oaths, tokens; and all these engines of lust, are not the things they go under: many a maid hath been seduced by them; and the misery is, example, that so terrible shows in the wreck of maidenhood, cannot for all that dissuade succession, but that they are lined with the twigs that threaten them. I hope, I need not to advise you further; but I hope, your own grace will keep you where you are, though there were no further danger known, but the modesty which is so lost.

Dia. You shall not need to fear me.

Enter Helena in the dress of a Pilgrim.

Wid. I hope so.—Look, here comes a pilgrim: I know she will lie at my house; thither they send one another.

I'll question her.—God save you, pilgrim!

Whither are you bound?”

1 violent: in f. e. 2 move: in f. e. 3 still-peering: in f. e. 4 ravin: in f. e. 5 in: in f. e. 6 Flourish of a trumpet. 7 Temptations.
SCENE VI. ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Hel. To Saint Jaques le Grand. Where do the palmers lodge, I do beseech you?

Wid. At the Saint Francis here, beside the port.

Hel. Is this the way?

Wid. Ay, marry, is 't. — Hark you! [A march after off. They come this way.

If you will tarry, holy pilgrim, But till the troops come by, I will conduct you where you shall be lodg'd; The rather, for I think I know your hostess As ample as myself.

Hel. Is it yourself?

Wid. If you shall please so, pilgrim.

Hel. I thank you, and will stay upon your leisure. Wid. You came, I think, from France?

Hel. I did so.

Wid. Here you shall see a countryman of yours, That has done worthy service.

Hel. His name, I pray you.

Dia. The count Roussillon: know you such a one?

Hel. But by the ear, that hears most nobly of him: His face I know not.

Dia. 'Tis whatso'er he is, He's bravely taken here. He stole from France, As 't is reported, for the king had married him Against his liking. Think you it is so?

Hel. Ay, surely, mere the truth: I know his lady, Dia. There is a gentleman, that serves the count, Reports but causely of her.

Hel. What's his name?

Dia. Monsieur Parolles.

Hel. O! I believe with him, In argument of praise, or to the worth. Of the great count himself, she is too mean To have her name repeated: all her deserving Is a reserved honesty, and that I have not heard examin'd.

Dia. Alas, poor lady! 'T is a hard bondage, to become the wife Of a detesting lord.

Wid. I write* good creature: where's so'er she is, Her heart weighs sadly. This young maid might do her A shrewd turn, if she please'd.

Hel. How do you mean?

May be, the amorous count sollicits her In the unlawful purpose.

Wid. He does, indeed; And breaks with all that can in such a suit Corrupt the tender honour of a maid: But she is arm'd for him, and keeps her guard, In honestest defence.

Enter with drum and colours, a party of the Florentine army, Bertram, and Parolles.

Mar. The gods forbid else!

Wid. So, now they come.— That is Antonio, the Duke's eldest son; That, Escalus.

Hel. Which is the Frenchman?

Dia. He; That with the plume: 't is a most gallant fellow; I would he lov'd his wife. If he were honest, He were much goodlier; is 't not a handsome gentleman?

Hel. I like him well.

Dia. 'T is pity, he is not honest. Yond 3 that same knave, That leads him to these places: were I his lady, I would poison that vile rascal.

Hel. Which is he!

Dia. That jackanapes with scarfs. Why is he melancholy?

Hel. Perchance he's hurt in the battle.

Par. Lose our drum! well.

Mar. He's shrewdly vexed at something. Look, he has spied us.

Wid. Marry, hang you!

Mar. And your courtesy, for a ring-carrier! [Exeunt Bertram, Parolles, Officers, and Soldiers. Wid. The troop is past. Come, pilgrim, I will bring you

Where you shall host: of enjoin'd pusersents

There's four or five, to great Saint Jaques bound, Already at my house.

Hel. I humbly thank you.

Please it this matron, and this gentle maid, To eat with us to-night, the charge and thanking Shall be for me; and, to requite you farther, I will bestow some preeepis of this virgin, Worthy the note.

Both. We'll take your offer kindly. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Camp before Florence.

Enter Bertram, and the two Frenchmen.

Fr. Enr. Nay, good my lord, put him to 't: let him have his way.

Fr. Gent. If your lordship find him not a hindering, hold me no more in your respect.

Fr. Enr. On my life, my lord, a bubble.

Ber. Do you think I am so far deceived in him?

Fr. Enr. Believe it, my lord: in mine own direct knowledge, without any malice, but to speak of him as my kinsman, he's a most notable coward, an infinite and endless liar, an hourly promise-breaker, the owner of no one good quality, worthy your lordship's entertainment.

Fr. Gent. It were fit you knew him, lest reposin' too far in his virtue, which he hath not, he might, at some great and trusty business in a main danger, fail you.

Ber. I would I knew in what particular action to try him.

Fr. Gent. None better than to let him fetch off his drum, which you hear him so confidently undertake to do.

Fr. Enr. I, with a troop of Florentines, will suddenly surprise him: such I will have, whom, I am sure, he knows not from the enemy. We will bind andhoodwink him so, that he shall suppose no other but that he is carried into the leaguer of the adversaries, when we bring him to our own tents. Be but your lordship present at his examination, if he do not, for the promise of his life, and in the highest compulsion of base fear, offer to betray you, and deliver all the intelligence in his power against you, and that with the divine forfeit of his soul upon oath, never trust my judgment in any thing.

Fr. Gent. O! for the love of laughter, let him fetch off his drum: he says he has a stratagem for 't. When your lordship sees the bottom of his success in, and to what metal this counterfeit lump of ore will be melted, if you give him not John Drum's entertainment, your inclining cannot be removed. Here he comes.

Enter Parolles.

Fr. Enr. O! for the love of laughter, hinder not the honour of his design: let him fetch off his drum in any hand.

1 Av. rich: in M folio. 2 on: in M folio. 3 Low, cowardly fellow. 4 Camp. 5 This word is not in f. a. 6 ore: in t. e. 7 A common phrase, meaning to turn one out of doors.
Ber. How now, monsieur? this drum sticks sorely in your disposition.
Fr. Gent. A pox on 't! let it go: 't is but a drum.
Par. But a drum! Is 't but a drum? A drum so lost!—There was an excellent command, to charge in with our horse upon our own wings, and to rend our own soldiers!
Fr. Gent. That was not to be blamed in the command of the service: it was a disaster of war that Caesar himself could not have prevented, if he had then been there to command.
Ber. Well, we cannot greatly condemn our success:
some dishonour we had in the loss of that drum; but it is not to be recovered.
Par. It might have been recovered.
Ber. It might; but it is not now.
Par. It is to be recovered. But that the merit of service is seldom attributed to the true and exact performer, I would have that drum or another, or hic jacet.
Fr. Why, if you have a stomach to 't, monsieur, if you think your mystery in stratagem can bring this imputation of honour against into his native quarter, be magnanimous in the enterprise, and go on; I will grace the attempt for a worthy exploit: if you speed well in it, the Duke shall both speak of it, and extend to you what farther becomes his greatness, even to the utmost syllable of your worthiness.
Par. By the hand of a soldier, I will undertake it.
Ber. But you must not now slumber in it.
Par. I'll about this evening; and I will presently pen down my dilemmas, encourage myself in my certainty, put myself into my mortal preparation, and by midnight look to hear farther from me.
Ber. May I be bold to acquaint his grace you are good about it?
Par. I know not what the success will be, my lord,
but the attempt I vow.
Ber. I know thou art valiant, and to the possibility of thy soldiership will subscribe for thee. Farewell.
Par. I love not many words.
Fr. Env. No more than a fish loves water.—Is not this a strange fellow, my lord, that so confidently seems to undertake this business, which he knows is not to be done, dauns himself to do, and dares better be damned than to do 't?
Fr. Gent. You do not know him, my lord, as we do:
certain it is, that he will steal himself into a man's favour, and for a week escape a great deal of discoveries; but when you find him out, you have him ever after.
Ber. Why, do you think, he will make no deed at all of this, that so seriously he does address himself unto?
Fr. Env. None in the world, but return with an invention, and clap upon you two or three probable lies.
But we have almost embossed1 him, you shall see his fall to-night; for, indeed, he is not for your lordship's respect.
Fr. Gent. We'll make you some sport with the fox, ere we case2 him. He was first smoked by the old lord Lafeu: when his disgrace and he is parted, tell me what a sprat you shall find him, which you shall see this very night.
Fr. Env. I must go look my twigs: he shall be caught.
Ber. Your brother, he shall go along with me.
Fr. Gent. As't please your lordship.
Fr. Env. I'll leave you.
[Exit.
Ber. Now will I lead you to the house, and show you
The last I spoke of.

1 Run him down till he foams at the mouth.
2 Fly.
3 Importunate.
SCENE I.—Without the Florentine Camp.
Enter French Envoy, with five or six soldiers in ambush.
Fr. Env. He can come no other way but by this hedge corner. When you sally upon him, speak what terrible language you will: though you understand it not yourselves, no matter; for we must not seem to understand him, unless some one among us, whom we must produce for an interpreter.
1 Sold. Good captain, let me be the interpreter.
Fr. Env. Art not acquainted with him? knows he not thy voice?
1 Sold. No, sir, I warrant you.
Fr. Env. But what limsey-woolly hast thou to speak to us again?
1 Sold. Even such as you speak to me.
Fr. Env. He must think us some band of strangers to the adversary's entertainment. Now, he hath a smack of all neighbouring languages; therefore, we must every one be a man of his own fancy, not to know what we speak one to another; so we seem to know is to go straight to our purpose: chough's language, gable enough, and good enough. As for you, interpreter, you must seem very politic. But couch, ho! here he comes, to beguile two hours in a sleep, and then to return and swear the lies he forges. [They stand back.] Enter Parolles.
Par. Ten o'clock: within these three hours 'twill be time enough to go home. What shall I say I have done? It must be a very plausible invention that carries it. They begin to serve me, and disgraces have of late knocked too often at my door. I find, my tongue is too fiddlehead; but my heart hath the fear of Mars before it, and of his creatures, not daring the reports of my tongue.
Fr. Env. [Aside.] This is the first truth that 'e'er thine own tongue was guilty of.
Par. What the devil should move me to undertake the recovery of this drum, being not ignorant of the impossibility, and knowing I had no such purpose? I must give myself some hurts, and say, I got them in explicit. Yet slight ones will not carry it: they will say, 'Come you off with so little!' and great ones I dare not give. Wherefore? what's the instance? Tongue, I must put you into a butter-woman's mouth, and buy myself another of Bajazet's mules, if you prattle me into these perils.
Fr. Env. [Aside.] Is it possible, he should know what ho is, and be that he is?
Par. I would the cutting of my garments would serve the turn; or the breaking of my Spanish sword.
Fr. Env. [Aside.] We cannot afford you so.
Par. Or the baring of my beard; and to say, it was in tragessem.
Fr. Env. [Aside.] 'T would not do.
Par. Or to drown my clothes, and say I was stripped.
Fr. Env. [Aside.] Hardly serve.
Par. Though I swore I leaped from the window of the citadel—
Fr. Env. [Aside.] How deep?
Par. Thirty fathom.
Fr. Env. [Aside.] Three great oaths would scarce make that be believed.
Par. I would I had any drum of the enemy's: I would swear I recovered it.

ACT IV.

Fr. Env. [Aside.] You shall hear one anon.
Par. A drum, now, of the enemy's! Alarum within.
Fr. Env. Throes movens, cargo, cargo, cargo.
All. Cargo, cargo, villanum par corbo, cargo.
Par. O! ransom, ransom!—Do not hide mine eyes.
[They seize and blindfold him.
1 Sold. Boskos thronumulo boskos.
Par. I know you are the Muskos' regiment; and I shall lose my life for want of language. If there be here German, or Dane, low Dutch, Italian, or French, let him speak to me: I will discover that which shall undo the Florentine.
1 Sold. Boskos vanvedo:—
I understand thee, and can speak thy tongue.—Krelybondo.—Sir,
Beteake thee to thy faith, for seventeen poniards Are at thy bosom.
Par. O!
1 Sold. O! pray, pray, pray.—
Monka revania dulce.
Fr. Env. Oscarbidulchos volitorcho.
1 Sold. The general is content to spare thee yet, and, ho! thou may'st inform something to save thy life.
Par.
Par. O! let me live, and all the secrets of our camp I'll show, Their force, their purposes; nay, I'll speak that Which you will wonder at.
1 Sold. But wilt thou faithfully? Par. If I do not, damn me.
1 Sold. Acoro liuta.—
Come on; thou art granted space.
[Exit with Parolles guarded.
Fr. Env. Go, tell the count Rousillon, and my brother, We have caught the woodcock, and will keep him muffled,
Till we do hear from them.
2 Sold. Captain, I will.
Fr. Env. A' will betray us all unto ourselves: Inform on that.
2 Sold. So I will, sir.
Fr. Env. Till then, I'll keep him dark, and safely lock'd. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Florence. A Room in the Widow's House.
Enter Bertram and Diana.

Ber. They told me that your name was Fortellib.
Dia. No, my good lord, Diana.
Ber. Titled goddess, And worth it, with addition! But, fair soul, In your fine frame hath love no quality? Is the quick fire of youth light not your mind, You are not Criteria, but a monument: When you are dead, you should be such a one As you are now, for you are cold and stone; And now you should be as your mother was, When your sweet self was got.
Dia. She then was honest.
Ber. So should you be.
Dia. No:
My mother did but duly; such, my lord,
As you owe to your wife.

Ber. No more o' that:
I pray thee, do not strive against my vows.
I was compell'd to her; but I love thee
By love's own sweet constraint, and will for ever
Do thee all rights of service.

Dia. Ay, so you serve us,
Till we serve you; but when you have our roses,
You barely leave our thorns to prick ourselves,
And mock us with our bareness.

Ber. How have I sworn?

Dia. 'Tis not the many oaths that make the truth,
But the plain single vow, that is vow'd true.
What is not holy, that we swear not by,
But take the highest to witness: then, pray you, tell me,
If I should swear by Jove's great attributes,
I lov'd you dearly, would you believe my oaths,
When I did love you? this has no holding,
To swear by him, whom I protest to love,
That I will work against him. Therefore, your oaths
Are words, and poor conditions, but unseal'd,
At least, in my opinion.

Ber. Change it, change it.

Be not so holy-cruel: love is holy,
And my integrity ne'er knew the crafts,
That you do charge men with. Stand no more off,
But give thyself unto my sick desires,
Who then recover: say, thou art mine, and ever
My love, as it begins, shall so persever.

Dia. I see, that men make hopes in such a suit:
That we'll forsake ourselves. Give me that ring.
Ber. I'll lend it thee, my dear; but have no power
To give it from me.

Dia. Will you not, my lord?

Ber. It is an honour longing to our house,
Bequeathed down from many ancestors,
Which were the greatest obloquy i' the world
In me to lose.

Dia. Mine honour's such a ring:
My chastity's the jewel of our house,
Bequeathed down from many ancestors,
Which 't were the greatest obloquy i' the world
In me to lose. Thus, your own proper wisdom Brings in the champion, honour, on my part
Against your vain assault.

Ber. Here, take my ring:
My house, mine honour, yea, my life be thine,
And I'll be bid by thee.

Dia. When midnight comes, knock at my chamber window:
I'll order take my mother shall not hear.
Now will I charge you in the band of truth,
When you have conquer'd my yet maiden bed,
Remain there but an hour, nor speak to me.
My reasons are most strong; and you shall know them,
When back again this ring shall be deliver'd:
And on your finger, in the night, I'll put Another ring; that what in time proceeds
May taken to the future our past deeds:
Adieu, till then; then, fail not. You have won
A wife of me, though there my hope be none.

Ber. A heaven on earth I have won by wooing thee.

Dia. For which live long to thank both heaven
And me.
You may so in the end,
My mother told me just how he would woo,
As if she sat in's heart: she says, all men
Have the like oaths. He had sworn to marry me,
When his wife's dead; therefore I'll lie with him,
When I am buried. Since Frenchmen are so brazen,
Marry that will, I live and die a maid:
May, in this disguizé, I think I'll not sin,
To cozen him, that would unjustly win.

[Exit.

SCENE III.—The Florentine Camp.

Enter the two Frenchmen, and two or three Soldiers.

Fr. Gent. You have not given him his mother's letter.

Fr. Env. I have delivered it an hour since: there is something in 't that stings his nature, for on the reading it he changed almost into another man.

Fr. Gent. He has much worthy blame laid upon him,
For shaking off so good a wife, and so sweet a lady.

Fr. Env. Especially he hath incurred the everlasting displeasure of the king, who had even tuned his bounty to sing happiness to him. I will tell you a thing, but you shall let it dwell darkly within you.

Fr. Gent. When you have spoken it, 't is dead, and I am the grave of it.

Fr. Env. He hath perverted a young gentlewoman, here in Florence, of a most chaste renown, and this night he flees his will in the spoil of her honour: he hath given her his monumental ring, and thinks himself made in the unchaste composition.

Fr. Gent. Now, God delay our rebellion: as we are ourselves; what things are we!

Fr. Env. Merely our own traitors: and as in the common course of all treasons, we still see them reveal themselves, till they attain to their abhorred ends, so he that in the motion contrives against his own nobility, in his proper stream o'erflows himself.

Fr. Gent. Is it not most damned in us, to be trumpeters of our unlawful intents? We shall not then have his company to-night.

Fr. Env. Not till after midnight, for he is dicted to his hour.

Fr. Gent. That approaches apace: I would gladly have him see his companions'2 analyzed, that he might take a measure of his own judgment, wherein so curiously he had set this counterfeit.

Fr. Env. We will not meddle with him till he come,
For his presence must be the whip of the other.

Fr. Gent. In the mean time, what hear you of these wars?

Fr. Env. I hear there is an overture of peace.

Fr. Gent. Nay, I assure you, a peace concluded.

Fr. Env. What will count Rousillon do then? will he travel higher, or return again into France?

Fr. Gent. I perceive by this demand you are not altogether of his council.

Fr. Env. Let it be forbid, sir; so should I be a great deal of his act.

Fr. Gent. Sir, his wife some two months since fled from his house; her pretence is a pilgrimage to saint Jaques le Grand, which holy undertaking with most austere sanctimony she accomplished; and there residing, the tenderness of her nature became as a prey to her grief: in fine, made a groan of her last breath, and now she sings in heaven.

Fr. Env. How is this justified?

Fr. Gent. The stranger,2 part of it by her own letters, which make her story true, even to the point of her death: her death itself, which could not be her office to say, is come, and faithfully confirmed by the rector of the place.

1 f.e.: make ropes, &c., such a scarce.
2 done: in f.e.
3 Deceitful.
4 meant: in f.e.
5 company: in f.e.
6 stronger: in f.e.
Fr. Env. Hath the count all this intelligence?
Fr. Gent. Ay, and the particular confirmations, point from point, to the fall arming of the verity.
Fr. Env. I am heartily sorry that he'll be glad of this.
Fr. Gent. How mightily, sometimes, we make us comforts of our losses.
Fr. Env. And how mightily, some other times, we drown our gain in tears. The great dignity, that his valour hath here acquired for him, shall at home be encountered with a shame as ample.
Fr. Gent. The web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together: our virtues would be proud, if our faults whipped them not; and our crimes would despair, if they were not cherished by our virtues.

Enter a Servant.

How now? where's your master?
Serv. He met the duke in the street, sir, of whom he hath taken a solemn leave: his lordship will next morning for France. The duke hath offered him letters of commendations to the king.
Fr. Env. They shall be no more than needful there, if they were more than they can commend.

Enter Bertram.
Fr. Gent. They cannot be too sweet for the king's tartness. Here's his lordship now.—How now, my lord! is 't not after midnight?
Ber. I have to-night despatched sixteen businesses, a month's length a-piece, by an abstract of success: I have cong'd with the duke, done my adieu with his nearest, buried a wife, mourned for her, writ to my lady mother I am returning, entertained my convoy: and between these main parcels of despatch effected many nicer needs: the last was the greatest, but that I have not ended yet.
Fr. Env. If the business be of any difficulty, and this morning your departure hence, it requires haste of your lordship.
Ber. I mean the business is not ended, as fearing to hear of it hereafter. But shall we have this dialogue between the fool and the soldier? Come, bring forth this counterfeit medal: he has deceived me, like a double-meaning prophetess.
Fr. Env. Bring him forth. [Enter Soldiers.] He has sat i' the stocks all night, poor gallant knave.
Ber. No matter: his heels have deserved it, in usurping his spurs so long. How does he carry himself?
Fr. Env. I have told your lordship already; the stocks carry him. But, to answer you as you would be understood, he weeps, like a witch that had shed her milk. He hath confessed himself to Morgan, whom he supposes to be a friar, from the time of his remembrance, to this very instant disaster of his sitting i' the stocks, and what think you he hath confessed?
Ber. Nothing of me, has he?
Fr. Env. His confession is taken, and it shall be read to his face: if your lordship be in't, as I believe you are, you must have the patience to hear it.

Re-enter Soldiers, with Parolles.
Ber. A plague upon him! muffled? he can say nothing of me: hush! hush!
Fr. Gent. Hoardman comes.—Portortarrosa.

1 Sold. He calls for the tortures: what will you say without 'em?
Par. I will confess what I know without constraint: if ye pinch me like a pesty, I can say no more.
1 Sold. Basko chiuemuyo.
Fr. Gent. Boblibiado chiecurmuro.
1 Sold. You are a merciful general.—Our general bids you answer to what I shall ask you out of a note.

Par. And truly, as I hope to live.
1 Sold. "First, demand of him how many horse the duke is strong." What say you to that?
Par. Five, or six thousand; but very weak and unserviceable: the troops are all scattered, and the commanders very poor rogues, upon my reputation and credit, and I hope to live.
1 Sold. Shall I set down your answer so?
Par. Do: I'll take my sacrament on't, how and which way you will.
1 Sold. All's one to him.2
Ber. What a past-saving slave is this!
Fr. Gent. Y' are deceived, my lord: this is monsieur Parolles, the gallant militiaman, (that was his own phrase) that had the whole theoric of war in the knot of his scarf, and the practice in the chape3 of his dagger.
Fr. Env. I will never trust a man again for keeping his sword clean; nor believe he can have every thing in him by wearing his apparel neatly.
1 Sold. Well, that's set down.
Par. Five, or six thousand horse, I said.—I will say true—or there's no use, set down.—For I shall speak truth.
Fr. Gent. He's very near the truth in this.
Ber. But I confound him no thanks for't, in the nature he delivers it.
Par. Poor rogues, I pray you, say.
1 Sold. Well, that's set down.
Par. I humbly thank you, sir. A truth's a truth: the rogues are marvellous poor.
1 Sold. "Demand of him, of what strength they are a-foot." What say you to that?
Par. By my troth, sir, if I were to live this present hour, I will tell true. Let me see: Spurio a hundred and fifty, Sebastian so many, Corambus so many, Jaques so many; Guilian, Cosmo, Lodowick, and Gratii, two hundred fifty each; mine own company, Chifloper, Vamond, Bentii, two hundred fifty each: so that the muster-file, rotten and sound, upon my life, amounts not to fifteen thousand poll; half of which dare not shake the snow from off their cassocks, lest they shake themselves to pieces.
Ber. What shall be done to him?
Fr. Gent. Nothing, but let him have thanks.—Demand of him my condition, and what credit I have with the duke.
1 Sold. Well, that's set down. "You shall demand of him, whether one captain Dumatine be the camp, a Frenchman: what his reputation is with the duke, what his valour, honesty, and expertness in war; or whether he thinks, it were not possible with well-weighing sums of gold to corrupt him to a revolt?" What say you to this? what do you know of it?
Par. I beseech you, let me answer to the particular of the interrogatories: demand them singly.
1 Sold. Do you know this captain Dumatine?
Par. I know him: he was a butcher's prentice in Paris, from whence he was whipped for getting the sheriff's fool with child; a dumb innocent, that could not say him, nay. [Dumatine lifts up his hand in anger.]
Ber. Nay, by your leave, hold your hands; though, I know, his brains are forfeit to the next tith that falls.
1 Sold. Well, is this captain in the duke of Florence's camp?
Par. Upon my knowledge he is, and lousy.
Fr. Gent. Nay, look not so upon me; we shall hear of your lordship anon.
1 Sold. What is his reputation with the duke?
Par. The duke knows him for no other but a poor officer of mine, and writ to me this other day to turn an allusion to blind man's buff.—Knight. 2 I.e. give these words to Bertram. 3 Hook, by which it was attached. 4 One.
him out o' the band; I think, I have his letter in my pocket.

1 Sold. Marry, we'll search.

Par. In good sadness, I do not know; either it is there, or it is upon a file, with the duke's other letters, in my tent.

1 Sold. Here 'tis; here's a paper: shall I read it to you?

Par. I do not know if it be it, or no.

Ber. Our interpreter does it well.

Fr. Gent. Excellent.

1 Sold. [Reads.] "Dian, the count's a fool, and full of gold;—"

Par. That is not the duke's letter, sir: that is an advertisement to a proper maid in Florence, one Diana, to take heed of the allurement of one count Rousillon, a foolish idle boy, but, for all that, very rustich. I pray you, sir, put it up again.

1 Sold. Nay, I'll read it first, by your favour.

Par. My meaning in 't, I protest, was very honest in the behalf of the maid; for I knew the young count to be a dangerous and lascivious boy, who is a wholesale to virginity, and devours up all the fry it finds.

Ber. Who would have thought it?—

1 Sold. [Reads.] "When he swears oaths, bid him drop gold, and take it;"

After he scores, he never pays the score:

Half won is match well made; match, and well make it:

He no' pays after debts; take it before, And say, a soldier, Diana, told thee this. Men are to mells with boys, not to kiss For count of this, the count's a fool, I know it, Who pays before, but not where he does owe it."

"Thine, as he vow'd to thee in thine ear,

"Paroles.""

Ber. He shall be whipped through the army, with this rhyme in 's forehead.

Fr. Env. This is your devoted friend, sir; the manifold linguist, and the armipotent soldier.

Ber. I could endure any thing before a cat, and now he's a cat to me.

1 Sold. I perceive, sir, by our general's looks, we shall be fain to hang you.

Par. My life, sir, in any case! not that I am afraid to die; but that, my offences being many, I would repent out the remainder of nature. Let me live, sir, in a dungeon, 't the stocks, or any where, so I may live.

1 Sold. We'll see what may be done; so you confess freely; therefore, once more to this captain Dumphane. You have answered to his reputation with the duke, and to his valour: what is his honesty?

Par. He will steal, sir, an egg out of a cloister: for rapes and ravishments he parallels Nessus. He professes not keeping of oaths; in breaking them he is stronger than Hercules. He will lie, sir, with such volubility, that you would think truth were a fool. Drunkenness is his best virtue; for he will be swine-drunk, and in his sleep he does little harm, save to his bed-clothes about him; but they know his conditions, and lay him in straw. I have but little more to say, sir, of his honesty: he has every thing that an honest man should not have; what an honest man should have, he has nothing.

Fr. Gent. I hope you love this for.

Par. For this description of thine honesty? A pox upon him! for me he is more and more a cat.

1 Sold. What say you to his expertise in war?

Par. Faith, sir, he has led the drum before the English tragedians,—to be lie him, I will not,—and more of his soldieryship I know not; except, in that country, he had the honour to be the officer at a place there called Mile-end, to instruct for the doubling of files: I would do the man who honour I can, but of this I am not certain.

Fr. Gent. He hath out-villained villainy so far, that the rarity redeems him.

Ber. A pox on him! he's a cat still.

1 Sold. His qualities being at this poor price, I need not ask you, if gold will corrupt him to revolt.

Par. Sir, for a point d' escu he will sell the sejins simple of his salvation, the inheritance of it; and cut the entail from all remainders, and a perpetual succession for it perpetually.

1 Sold. What's his brother, the other captain Du-

Fr. Env. Why does he ask him of me?

1 Sold. What's he?

Par. E'en a crow o' the same nest; not altogether so great as the first in goodness, but greater a great deal in evil. He excels his brother for a coward, yet his brother is reputed one of the best that is. In a retreat he out-runs any lackey; marry, in coming on he has the edge of his tongue!

1 Sold. If your life be saved, will you undertake to betray the Florentine?

Par. Ay, and the captain of his horse, count Rous-

1 Sold. I'll whisper with the general, and know his pleasure.

Par. [Aside.] I'll no more drumming! a plague of all drums! Only to seem to deserve well, and to beguile the supposition of that lascivious young boy the count, have I run into this danger. Yet who would have suspected an ambush, where I was taken?

1 Sold. There is no remedy, sir; but you must die. The general says, you, that have so traitorously discovered the secrets of your army, and made such pestiferous reports of men very nobly held, can serve the world for no honest use; therefore you must die. Come, headman; off with his head.

Par. O Lord, sir; let me live, or let me see my death!

1 Sold. That shall you; and take your leave of all your friends. [Unmuffling him. So, look about you: know you any here?

Ber. Good-morrow; noble captain.

Fr. Env. God bless you, captain Parolles.

Fr. Gent. God save you, noble captain.

Fr. Env. Captain, what greeting will you to my lord Lafon? I am for France.

Fr. Gent. Good captain, will you give me a copy of the sonnet you writ to Diana in behalf of the count Rousillon? an I were not a very coward, I'd compel it of you; but fare you well.

[Exeunt BERTRAM, Frenchmen, &c.

1 Sold. You are undone, captain; all but your sward, that has a knot on 't yet.

Par. Who cannot be crushed with a plot?

1 Sold. If you could find out a country where but women were, that had received so much shame, you might begin an impudent nation. Fare you well; sir, I am for France too: we shall speak of you there. [Exit.

Par. Yet am I thankful: if my heart were great, 'T would burst the closers. Captain I'll be no more; But I will eat, and drink, and sleep as soft As captain shall: simply the thing I am Shall make me live. Who knows himself a braggart, Let him fear this; for it will come to pass,
SCENE V.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

That every bragart shall be found an ass.
Rust, 'sword! cool, blushes! and Parolles, live
Safest in shame! being fool'd, by foolery thrive!
There's place and means for every man alive.
I'll after them. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—Florence. A Room in the Widow's House.

Enter Helena, Widow, and Diana.

Hel. That you may well perceive I have not wrong'd you,
One of the greatest in the Christian world
Shall be my surety; 'tis whose throne, 'tis needful,
Ere I can perfect mine intents, to know;
Time was I did him a desired office,
Dear almost as his life; which gratitude
Through flinty Tartar's bosom would peep forth
And answer, thanks. I duly am inform'd,
His grace is at Marseilles, to which place
We have convenient convoy. You must know,
I am supposed dead: the army breaking,
My husband dies him home; where, heaven aiding,
And by the leave of my good lord the king,
We'll be before your welcome.

Wid. Gentle madam,
You never had a servant, to whose trust
Your business was more welcome.

Hel. Not you, mistress,
Ever a friend, whose thoughts more truly labour
To recompense your love: doubt not, but heaven
Hath brought me up to be your daughter's dower,
As it hath fated her to be my mortal,
And helper to a husband. But O, strange men!
That can such sweet use make of what they hate,
When saucy trusting of the cozen'd thoughts
Defiles the pithy night! so lust doth play
With what it losteth, for that which is away.
But more of this hereafter.—You, Diana,
Under my poor instructions, yet must suffer
Something in my behalf.

Dis. Let death and honesty
Go with your impositions, I am yours
Upon your will to suffer.

Hel. Yet, I pray you:
But with the world, the time will bring on summer,
When briars shall have leaves as well as thorns,
And be as sweet as sharp. We must away;
Our waggon is prepar'd, and time revives us;
"All's well that ends well." 'tis still the fine's the crown;
Whate'er the course, the end is the renown.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Rousillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Countess, Lafu, and Clown.

Laf. No, no, no; your son was mislaid with a snaftai.
fellow there, whose villainous saffron would have made all the unbank and doughty youth of a nation in his colour; your daughter-in-law had been alive at this hour, and your son here at home, more advanced by the king, than by that red-tailed humble-bee I speak of.

Count. I would I had not known him. It was the death of the most virtuous gentlewoman, that ever tuple had praise for creating; if she had partaken of my flesh, and cost me the dearest groans of a mother,
I could not have owed her a more rooted love.

Laf. 'Twas a good lady, 't was a good lady: we may pick a thousand salads, ere we light on such another herb.

Clo. Indeed, sir, she was the sweet marjoram of the salad; or, rather the herb of grace.

Laf. They are not pot-herbs; you knave; they are not-herbs.

Clo. I had no great Nebuchadnezzar, sir; I have not much skill in grass.

Laf. Whether dost thou profess thyself, a knave, or a fool?

Clo. A fool, sir, at a woman's service, and a knave at a man's.

Laf. Your distinction?

Clo. I would cozen the man of his wife, and do his service.

Laf. So you were a knave at his service, indeed

Clo. And I would give his wife my bauble, sir, to do her service.

Laf. I will subscribe for thee, thou art both knave and fool.

Clo. At your service.

Laf. No, no, no.

Clo. Why, sir, if I cannot serve you, I can serve at great a prince as you are.

Laf. Who's that? a Frenchman?

Clo. Faith, sir, a has an English name; but his phismony is more hotter in France, than there.

Laf. What prince is that?

Clo. The black prince, sir; alias, the prince of darkness; alias, the devil.

Laf. Hold thee, there's my purse. I give thee not this to suggest thee from thy master thou talkest of serve him still.

Clo. I am a woodland fellow, sir, that always loved a great fire: and the master I speak of, ever keeps a good fire. But, sure, he is the prince of the world;
let the nobility remain in's court. I am for the house with the narrow gate, which I take to be too little for pomp to enter: some, that humble themselves, may;
but the many will be too chill and tender, and they
'll be for the flowery way, that leads to the broad gate, and the great fire.

Laf. Go thy ways, I begin to be a-weary of thee;
and I tell thee so before, because I would not fall out with thee. Go thy ways: let my horses be well looked to, without any tricks.

Clo. If I put any tricks upon 'em, sir, they shall be judges' tricks, which are their own right by the law of nature.

[Exit.

Laf. A shrewd knave, and an unhappy!

Count. So a is. My lord, that's gone, made himself much sport out of him: by his authority he remains here, which he thinks is a patent for his sauciness and, indeed, he has no place, but runs where he will.

Laf. I like him well; 'tis not amiss. And I was about to tell you, since I heard of the good lady's death, and that my lord, your son, was upon his return home, I moved, the king, my master, to speak in the behalf of my daughter; which, in the minority of them both, his majesty, out of a self-gracious remembrance, did first propose. His highness hath promised me to do it; and to stop up the displeasure he hath conceived against your son, there is no fitter matter. How does your ladyship like it?

Count. With very much content, my lord; and I wish it happily effected.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Marseilles. A Street.

Enter Helena, Widow, and Diana, with two Attendants.

Hel. But this exceeding posting; day and night,
Must wear your spirits low: we cannot help it;
But, since you have made the days and nights as one,
To wear your gentle limbs in my affairs,
Be bold, you do so grow in my requital,
As nothing can unroot you. In happy time,
Enter a Gentleman, a Stranger. ¹

This man may help me to his majesty’s ear,
If he would spend his power.—God save you, sir.

Gent. And you.

Hel. Sir, I have seen you in the court of France.

Gent. I have been sometimes there.

Hel. I do presume, sir, that you are not fallen
From the report that goes upon your goodness;
And therefore, goaded with most sharp occasions
Which lay nice manners by, I put you to
The use of your own virtues, for the which
I shall continue thankful.

Gent. What’s your will?

Hel. That it will please you,
To give this poor petition to the king,
And aid me with that store of power you have,
To come into his presence. [Giving it to him.]

Gent. The king’s not here.

Hel. Not here, sir?

Gent. Not indeed:
He hence renom’d last night, and with more haste
Than is his use.

Wid. Lord, how we lose our pains!

Hel. All’s well that ends well yet,
Though time seem so adverse, and means unfit,—
I do beseech you, whither is he gone?

Gent. Marry, as I take it, to Rousillon;
Whither I am going.

Hel. I do beseech you, sir,
Since you are like to see the king before me,
Commend the paper to his gracious hand;
Which, I presume, shall render you no blame,
But rather make you thank your pains for it.
I will come after you, with what good speed
Our means will make us means.

Gent. This I’ll do for you.

Hel. And you shall find yourself to be well thank’d,
What’er falls more.—We must to horse again:—
Go, go, provide. [Exit.]

Re-enter Clown.

Clo. O, madam! yonder’s my lord your son with a patch of velvet on’s face: whether there be a scar under it, or no, the velvet knows; but ’tis a goodly patch of velvet. His left cheek is a check of two piae and a half, but his right cheek is worn bare.

A scar nobly got, or a noble scar, is a good livery of honour; so, belike, is that.

Clo. But it is your carbonadoed face.

Hel. Let us go see your son, I pray you: I long to speak with the young noble soldier.

Clo. ’Faith, there’s a dozen of ’em, with delicate fine hats, and most courteous feathers, which bow the head, and nod at every man. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Rousillon. The inner Court of the Countess’s Palace.

Enter Clown, and Parolles, ill-favoured.³

Par. Good monsieur Livatch, give my lord Lafel this letter. I have ere now, sir, been better known to you, when I have held familiarit with freshre clothes;
but I am now, Sir, belike, in a countess’s mind, and smell somewhat strong of her strong displeasure.

Clo. Truly, fortune’s displeasure is but sluttish, if it smell so strongly as thou speakest of: I will henceforth eat no fish of fortune’s buttering. Pr’ythee, allow the wind.

Par. Nay, you need not to stop your nose, sir: I spake but by a metaphor.

Clo. Indeed, sir, if your metaphor stink, I will stop your nose: or against any man’s metaphor. Pr’ythee, get thee farther.

Par. Pray you, sir, deliver me this paper.

Clo. Foh! pr’ythee, stand away: a paper from fortune’s close-stool to give to a nobleman! ’Look, here
he comes himself.”

Enter Lafel.

Here is a pur of fortune’s, sir, or of fortune’s cat,
(but not a musk-cat) that has fallen into the unclean fishtpond of her displeasure, and, as he says, is muddied withal. Pray you, sir, use the carp as you may, for he looks like a poor, decayed, ingenuous, foolish, rascally knave. I do pity his distress in my smiles of comfort, and leave him to your lordship. [Exit Clown.

Par. My lord, I am a man whom fortune hath cruelly scratched.

Laf. And what would you have me to do? ’tis too late to pare her nails now. Wherein have you played the knave with fortune, that she should scratch you, who of herself is a good lady, and would not have knives thrive long under her? There’s a quart d’ecu for you. Let the justices make you and fortune friends;
I am for other business.

Par. I beseech your honour to hear me one single word.

Laf. You beg a single penny more: come, you shall ha’t; save your word.

Par. My name, my good lord, is Parolles.

Laf. You beg more than one word, then.—Cox’s my passion! give me your hand.—How does your drum?

Par. O, my good lord! you were the first that found me.

Laf. Was I, in sooth? and I was the first that lost

Par. It lies in you, my lord, to bring me in some grace, for you did bring me out.

Laf. Oat upon thee, knave! dost thou put upon me at once both the office of God and the devil? one brings thee in grace, and the other brings thee out.

[Trumpets sound.] The king's coming; I know by his trumpets.—Sirrah, inquire farther after me: I had talk of you last night. Though you are a fool and a knave, you will out: go to, follow.

Par. I praise God for you. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Flourish. Enter King, Countess, Laffy, Lords,
Gentlemen, Guards, &c.

King. We lost a jewel of her, and our esteem
Was made much poorer by it; but your son,
As mad in folly, lack'd the sense to know
Her estimation home.

Count. 'Tis past, my liege; And I beseech your majesty to make it
Natural rebellion, done in the blaze of youth;
When oil and fire, too strong for reason's force,
O'erbear it, and burns on.

King. My honour'd lady,
I have forgiven and forgotten all,
Though my revenges were high bent upon him,
And watch'd the time to shoot.

Laf. This I must say.—
But first I beg my pardon,—the young lord
Did to his majesty, his mother, and his lady,
Offence of mighty note, but to himself
The greatest wrong of all: he lost a wife,
Whose beauty did astonish the survey
Of richest eyes; whose words all ears took captive;
Whose dear perfection hearts that soon'd to serve
Humbly call'd mistress.

King. Praising what is lost
Makes the remembrance dear. —Well, call him hither.

We are reconcil'd, and the first view shall kill
All repetition.—Let him not ask our pardon:
The nature of his great offence is dead,
And deeper than oblivion do we bury
The incensing relics of it: let him approach,
A stranger, no offender; and inform him,
So 'tis our will he should.

Gent. I shall, my liege. [Exit Gentleman.

King. What says he to your daughter? have you spoken?

Laf. All that he is hath reference to your highness.

King. Then shall we have a match. I have letters sent me,
That set him high in fame.

Enter Bertram.

Laf. He looks well on't.

King. I am not a day of season,
For thou may'st see a sunshine and a hail
In me at once; but to the brightest beams
Distracted clouds give way: so stand thou forth;
The time is fair again.

Ber. Ha! ha! ha! My high repented blame,
Dear sovereign, pardon to me.

King. All is who;
Not one word more of the consumed time.
Let's take the instant by the forward top,
For we are old, and on our quick'st decrees

[trans: blade: in f. e. 1 sour: in f. e. 2 This and the next line are erased by the MS. emendator of the folio, 1632. 3 f. e. assign this and the next line to the Countess. 4 Old copies: cease. 5 are I: in f. e.

Th'e inaudible and noiseless foot of time
Seals, ere we can effect them. You remember
The daughter of this lord.

Ber. Admiringly.

My liege, at first
I stuck my choice upon her, ere my heart
Durst make too bold a herald of my tongue:
Where the impression of mine eyes infusing,
Contempt his scornful perspective did lend me,
Which warp'd the line of every other favoured
Scorn'd a fair colour, or express'd it stolen,
Extended or contracted all proportions,
To a most hideous object. Thence it came,
That she, whom all men prais'd, and whom myself,
Since I have lost, have lov'd, was in mine eye
The dust that did offend it.

King. Well excuse'd:
That thou didst love her strikes some scores away
From the great compt. But love, that comes too late,
Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried,
To the great sender turns a sore offence,
Crying, that's good that's gone. Our rash faults
Make trivial price of serious things we have,
Not knowing them, until we know their grave:
Of our displeasures, to ourselves unjust,
Destroy our friends, and after weep their dust;
Our own love, waking, cries to see what's done, 3
While shameful hate sleeps out the afternoon.
Be this sweet Helen's knell, and now forget her.
Send forth your amorous token for fair Maudlin:
The main consents are had; and here we'll stay
To see our widower's second marriage-day.

Laf. Which better than the first, O dear heaven, bless 4 or,

Or, ere they meet, in me, O nature, cease.

Come on, my son, in whom my house's name
Must be digested, give a favour from you,
To sparkle in the spirits of my daughter,
That she may quickly come.—By my old beard,
And every hair that's on't, Helen, that's dead,
Was a sweet creature: such a ring as this,
The last time ere she 8 took her leave at court,
I saw upon her finger.

Ber. Here it was not.

King. Now, pray you, let me see it; for mine eye,
While I was speaking, oft was fasten'd to 't.—
This ring was mine; and, when I gave it Helen,
I bade her, if her fortunes ever stood
Necessitied to help, that by this token
I would relieve her. Had you that craft to reave her
Of what should steal her most?

Ber. My gracious sovereign,
Hove'er it pleases you to take it so,
The ring was never hers.

Count. Son, on my life,
I have seen her wear it; and she reckon'd it
At her life's rate.

Laf. I am sure I saw her wear it.

Ber. You are deceiv'd: my lord, she never saw it.

In Florence was it from a casement thrown me,
Wrapp'd in a paper, which contain'd the name
Of her that threw it. Noble she was, and thought
I stood engag'd; but when I had subscrib'd
To mine own fortune, and inform'd her fully
I could not answer in that course of honour
As she had made the overtake, she ceased,
In heavy satisfaction, and would never Receive the ring again.
King.
Plutus himself.
That knows the tinct and multiplying medicine,
Hath not in nature’s mystery more science,
Than I have in this ring: ’t was mine, ’t was Helen’s,
Whoever gave it you. Then, if you know
That you are well acquainted with ’t yourself,
Confess ’t was hers, and by what rough enforcement
You got it from her. She call’d the saints to scrutiny,
That she would never put it from her finger,
Unless she gave it to yourself in bed,
Where you have never come, or sent it us
Upon her great disaster.

Ber. She never saw it.

King. Thou speak’st it falsely, as I love mine honour,
And mak’st conjectural fears to come into me,
Which I would fain shut out. If it should prove That thou art so inhuman,—’t will not prove so,—
And yet I know not,—thou dost hate her deadly,
And she is dead,—which nothing, but to close
Her eyes myself, could win me to believe,
More than to see this ring.—Take him away.

[Guard seizes BERTRAM.

My fore-past proofs, hove’er the matter fall,
Shall tax my fears of little vanity,
Having vainly fear’d too little.—Away with him!
We’ll sift this matter farther.

Ber. If you shall prove
This ring was ever hers, you shall as easy
Prove that I husbanded her bed in Florence,
Where yet she never was. [Exit BERTRAM, guarded.

Enter the Gentleman, a Stranger.

King. I am wrap’d in dismal thinking.

Gent. Gracious sovereign,
Whether I have been to blame, or no, I know not:
Here ’s a petition from a Florence it,
Who hath, for four or five removes, come short
To tender it herself. I undertook it,
Vanquish’d thereto by the fair grace and speech
Of the poor suppliant, who by this, I know,
Is here attending: her business looks in her
With an importing visage; and she told me,
In a sweet verbal brief, it did concern
Your highness with herself.

King. [Reads.] ’Tis upon his many protestations to marry me, when his wife was dead, I blush to say it, he won me. Now is the count Roussillon a widower: his vows are forfeited to me, and my honour’s paid to him. He stole from Florence, taking no leave, and I follow him to his country for justice. Grant me, O king! in you it best lies; otherwise a seducer flourish’d, and a poor maid is undone. “Diana Capilet?”

Laf. I will buy me a son-in-law in a fair, and toll him: for this, I’ll none of him.

King. The heavens have thought well on thee, Lafet, To bring forth this discovery.—Seek these suitors.

Go speedily, and bring again the count.

[Exeunt Gentleman, and some Attendants.

I am afraid, the life of Helen, lady,
Was foully snatch’d.

Count. Now, justice on the doors!

[Enter BERTRAM, guarded.

King. I wonder, sir, for, wives are monsters to you,
And that you fly them as you swear them lordship,
Yet you desire to marry.—What woman’s that?

Re-enter Gentleman, with Widow, and DIANA.

Dia. I am, my lord, a wretched Florentine,
Derived from the ancient Capilet. [Kneeling.

My suit, as I do understand, you know, And therefore know how far I may be pitied.

Wid. I am her mother, sir, whose age and honour
Both suffer under this complaint we bring,
And both shall cease, without your remedy.

King. Come hither, Count.* Do you know these women?

Ber. My lord, I neither can, nor will deny
But that I know them. Do they charge me farther?

Dia. Why do you look so strange upon your wife
[?Rising?]

Ber. She’s none of mine, my lord.

Dia. If you shall marry
You give away this hand, and that is mine;
You give away heaven’s vows, and those are mine;
You give away myself, which is known mine;
For I by vow am so embodied yours,
That she which marries you must marry me;
Either both, or none.

Laf. [To BERTRAM.] Your reputation comes too short for my daughter: you are no husband for her.

Ber. My lord, this is a fond and desperate creature,
Whom sometime I have laugh’d with. Let your highness
Lay a more noble thought upon mine honour,
Than so to think that I would sink it here. [friend,

King. Sir, for my thoughts, you have them ill to Till your deeds gain them: fairer prove your honour,
Than in my thought it lies.

Dia. Good my lord,
Ask him upon his oath, if he does think
He had not my virginity.

King. What sayst thou to her?

Ber. She’s impudent, my lord;
And was a common gamester to the camp.

Dia. He does me wrong, my lord: if I were so,
He might have bought me at a common price:
Do not believe him.—O! behold this ring,
Whose high respect, and rich validity,
Did lack a parallel; yet, for all that,
He gave it to a commoner o’ the camp,
If I be one.

Count. He blushes, and ’tis his.*
Of six preceding ancestors, that gem
Conferr’d by testament to the sequent issue,
Hath it been ow’d and worn. This is his wife:
That ring’s a thousand proofs.

King. Methought, you said,
You saw one here in court could witness it.

Dia. I did, my lord, but loth am to produce
So bad an instrument: his name’s Parolles.

Laf. I saw the man to-day, if man he be.

King. Find him, and bring him hither.

Ber. What of him?

Dia. He’s quoted for a most perfidious slave,
With all the spots o’ the world tax’d and debase’d,
Whose nature sickens but to speak a truth.
Am I or that, or this, for what he’ll utter,
That will speak any thing?

Dia. She hath that ring of yours.

Ber. I think; she has: certain it is, I lik’d her,
And boarded her if the wanton way of youth.
She knew her distance, and did angle for me,
Mudding my eagerness with her restraint,
As all impediments in fancy’s course
Are motives of more fancy; and, in fine,
Her infinite cunning, with her modern grace,
Subdued me to her rate: she got the ring,
And I had that, which any inferior might
At market-price have bought.

Dia. I must be patient: you, that turn'd off a first so noble wife,
May justly diet me. I pray you yet,
(Since you lack virtue, I will lose a husband)
Send for your ring; I will return it home,
And give me mine again.

Ber. I have it not.

King. What ring was yours, I pray you?
Dia. Sir, much like the same upon your finger.

King. Know you this ring? this ring was his of late.
Dia. And this was it I gave him, being a-bed.
King. The story then goes false,—you threw it him
Out of a casement.

Dia. I have spoke the truth.

Enter Parolles.

Ber. My lord, I do confess, the ring was hers.
King. You boggle shrewdly, every feather starts you.
Is this the man you speak of?
Dia. Ay, my lord.

King. Tell me, sirrah, but tell me true, I charge you,
Not fearing the displeasure of your master,
(Which, on your just proceeding, I'll keep off)
By him, and by this woman here, what know you?
Par. So please your majesty, my master hath been an honourable gentleman: tricks he had hath in him, which gentlemen have.

King. Come, come; to the purpose. Did he love this woman?

Par. 'Faith, sir, he did love her; but how?

King. How, I pray you?

Par. He did love her, sir, as a gentleman loves a woman.

King. How is that?

Par. He loved her, sir, and loved her not.

King. As thou art a knife, and no knave.—
What an equivocal companion is this!
Par. I am a poor man, and at your majesty's command,

Laf. He's a good drum, my lord, but a naughty orator.
Dia. Do you know, he promised me marriage?

Par. 'Faith, I know more than I'll speak.

King. But wilt thou not speak all thou know'st?
Par. Yes, so please your majesty. I did go between them, as I said; but more than that, he loved her,—for, indeed, he was mad for her, and talked of Satan, and of limbo, and of furies, and I know not what: yet I was in that credit with them at that time, that I know of their going to bed, and of other motions, as promising her marriage, and things that would derive me ill will to speak of: therefore, I will not speak what I know.

King. Thou hast spoken all already, unless thou canst Say they are married. But thou art too fine
In thy evidence; therefore, stand aside.—
This ring, you say, was yours?

Dia. Ay, my good lord.

King. Where did you buy it? or who gave it you?
Dia. It was not given me, nor I did not buy it.

Dia. Who lent it you?

Dia. It was not lent me neither.

King. Where did you find it then?

Dia. I found it not.

King. If it were yours by none of all these ways,
How could you give it him?

Dia. I never gave it him.

Laf. This woman's an easy glove, my lord: she goes off and on at pleasure.

King. This ring was mine: I gave it his first wife.

Dia. It might be yours, or hers, for aught I know.

King. Take her away: I do not like her now.

To prison with her; and away with him.—
Unless thou tell'st me where thou hast this ring,
Thou diest within this hour.

Dia. I'll never tell you.

King. Take her away.

Dia. I will put in bail, my liege.

King. I think thee now some common customer.

Dia. By Jove, if ever I knew man, 't was you.

King. Wherefore hast thou accus'd him all this while?

Dia. Because he's guilty, and he is not guilty.
He knows I am no maid, and he'll swear to 't:
I'll swear I am a maid, and he knows not.
Great king, I am no strumpet, by my life!
I am either maid, or else this old man's wife.

[Pointing to Laf.]

King. She does abuse our ears. To prison with her!

Dia. Good mother, fetch my bail.—[Exit Widow.]

Stay, royal sire:
The jeweller that owes the ring, is sent for,
And he shall surety me. But for this lord,
Who hath abus'd me, as he knows himself,
Though yet he never harm'd me, here I quit him.
He knows myself my bed he hath defil'd,
And at that time he got his wife with child:
Dead though she be, she feels her young one kick:
So there's my riddle, one that's dead is quick;
And now behold the meaning.

Re-enter Widow, with Helena.

King. Is there no exorcist
Beguiles the truer office of mine eyes?
Is it real, that I see?

Hel. No, my good lord:
'Tis but the shadow of a wife you see;
The name, and not the thing.

Ber. Both, both! O, pardon! [Kneeling]

Hel. O! my good lord, when I was like this maid,
I found you wondrous kind. There is your ring;
And look you, here's your letter: this it says:
"When from my finger you can get this ring,
And are by me with child," &c.—This is done:
Will you be mine, now you are doubly won?

Ber. If she, my liege, can make me know this clearly,

[ Rising
I'll love her dearly, ever, ever dearly.

Hel. If it appear not plain, and prove untrue,
Deadly divorce step between me and you!—
O! my dear mother, do I see you living?

Laf. Mine eyes smell onions, I shall weep anon.

Good Tom Drum, [To Parolles.] lend me a handkerchief: so, I thank thee. Wait on me home, I'll make sport with thee: let thy courtesies alone, they are scurvy ones.

King. Let us from point to point this story know,
To make the even truth in pleasure flow.
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

ACT V.

[To Diana.] If thou be'st yet a fresh uncropped flower,
Choose thou thy husband, and I'll pay thy dower;
For I can guess, that by thy honest aid
Thou kepi'st a wife herself, thyself a maid.—

Of that, and all the progress, more and less,
Resolvedly more leisure shall express:
All yet seems well; and if it end so meet,
The bitter past, more welcome is the sweet.

[Flourish.

EPILOGUE BY THE KING.

The king's a beggar, now the play is done.
All is well ended, if this suit be won,
That you express content; which we will pay,

1 This line is not in f. e.

With strife to please you, day exceeding day:
Ours be your patience then, and yours our parts;
Your gentle hands lend us, and take our hearts.
[Exeunt omnes.

ACT I.

Duke. If music be the food of love, play on:
Give me excess of it; that, surfeiting,
The appetite may sicken, and so die.
That strain again;—it had a dying fall:
O! it came o’er my ear like the sweet south;
That breathes upon a bank of violets,
Stealing, and giving odours.—Enough! no more:

[Music ceases.

’T is not so sweet now, as it was before.
O, spirit of love! how quick and fresh art thou,
That, notwithstanding thy capacity
Received, as the sea, a nought enters there,
Of what validity* and pitch soe’er,
But falls into abatement and low price,
Even in a minute! so full of shape is fancy,
That it alone is high-fantastical.

Cur. Will you go hunt, my lord?

Duke. What, Curio?

Cur. The hart.

Duke. Why, so I do, the noblest that I have.
O! when mine eyes did see Olivia first.
Methought she purg’d the air of pestilence:
That instant was I turn’d into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E’er since pursu’d me.—How now! what news from her?

Enter Valentine.

Val. So please my lord, I might not be admitted,
But from her handmaid do return this answer:—
The element itself, till seven years’ heat,
Shall not bestow her face at ample view;
But, like a cloistress, she will veiled walk,
And water once a day her chamber round
With eye-offending brine: this all, to season
A brother’s dead love, which she would keep fresh
And lasting in her sad remembrance.

Duke. O! she that hath a heart of that fine frame,

1 Musicians attending: in f. e. 2 The old copies read: sound; Pope made the change. 3 Not in f. e. 4 Value. 5 My thoughts, like hounds, pursue me to my death. — Daniel's Delta, 1692.
Vio. What is his name?
Cap. Orsino.
Vio. Orsino! I have heard my father name him: He was a bachelor then.
Cap. And so is now, or was so very late; For but a month ago I went from hence, And then 'twas fresh in murrain, (as you know, What great ones do the less will prattle of) That he did seek the love of fair Olivia.
Vio. What's she?
Cap. A virtuous maid, the daughter of a count That died some twelvemonth since; then leaving her In the protection of his son, her brother, Who shortly also died: for whose dear love, They say, she hath abjured the company, And sight of men.
Vio. O! that I serv'd that lady, And might not be delivered to the world, Till I had made mine own occasion mellow, What my estate is.
Cap. That were hard to compass, Because she will admit no kind of suit, No, not the duke's.
Vio. There is a fair behaviour in thee, captain, And though that nature with a beauteous wall Both oft close in pollution, yet of thee I will believe, thou hast a mind that suits With this thy fair and outward character. I pr'ythee, and I'll pay thee bounteously Conceal me what I am, and be my aid For such disguise as haply shall become The form of my intent. I'll serve this duke: Thou shalt present me as an eunuch to him. It may be worth thy pains; for I can sing, And speak to him in many sorts of music, That will allow me very worth his service. What else may hap to time I will commit; Only, shape thou thy silence to my wit.
Cap. Be you his eunuch, and your mute I'll be: When my tongue blushes, then let mine eyes not see.
Vio. I thank thee. Lead me on. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Room in OLIVIA'S House.

Enter Sir Toby Belch, and Maria.

Sir To. What a plague means my niece, to take the death of her brother thus? I am sure care's an enemy to life.

Mar. By my troth, sir Toby, you must come in earlier o' nights: your cousin, my lady, takes great exceptions to your ill hours.

Sir To. Why, let her except before excepted.

Mar. Ay, but you must confine yourself within the modest limits of order.

Sir To. Confine? I'll confine myself no finer than I am. These clothes are good enough to drink in, and so be these boots too: an they be not, let them hang themselves in their own straps.

Mar. That qualifying and drinking will undo you: I heard my lady talk of it yesterday, and of a foolish knight, that you brought in one night here to be her wooer.

Sir To. Who? Sir Andrew Ague-cheek?

Mar. Ay, he.

Sir To. He's as tall a man as any's in Illyria.

Mar. What's that to the purpose?

Sir To. Why, he has three thousand ducats a year.

Mar. Ay, but he'll have but a year in all these ducats: he's a very fool, and a prodigal.

Sir To. Fie, that you'll say so! he plays o' the viol-de-gamboys, and speaks three or four languages word for word without book, and hath all the good gifts of nature.

Mar. He hath, indeed.—all most natural: for, besides that he's a fool, he's a great quarreller; and, but that he hath the gift of a coward to allay the gust he hath in quarrelling, 'tis thought among the prudent he would quickly have the gift of a grave.

Sir To. By this hand, they are scoundrels, and substractors that say so of him. Who are they?

Mar. They that add, moreover, he's drunk nightly in your company.

Sir To. With drinking beaths to my niece. I'll drink to her, as long as there is a passage in my throat, and drink in Illyria. He's a coward, and a coistriit, that will not drink to my niece, till his brains turn o' the toe like a parish-top. 4 What, wench! Castilian vulgo, 5 for here comes Sir Andrew Ague-face.

Enter Sir Andrew Ague-cheek.

Sir And. Sir Toby Belch! how now, sir Toby Belch?

Sir To. Sweet sir Andrew.

Sir And. Bless you, fair shrew.

Mar. And you too, sir.

Sir To. Accost, sir Andrew, accost.

Sir And. What's that?

Sir To. My niece's chamber-maid.

Sir And. Good mistress Accost, I desire better acquaintance.

Mar. My name is Mary, sir.

Sir And. Good mistress Mary Accost,—

Sir To. You mistake, knight: accost is front her, board her, woo her, assail her.

Sir And. By my troth, I would not undertake her in this company. Is that the meaning of accost?

Mar. Fare you well, gentlemen.

Sir To. An thou let her part so, sir Andrew, would thou mightst never draw sword again!

Sir And. An you part so, mistress, I would I might never draw sword again. Fair lady, do you think you have fools in hand?

Mar. Sir, I have not you by the hand.

Sir And. Marry, but you shall have; and here's my hand.

Mar. Now, sir, thought is free: I pray you, bring your hand to the buttery-bar, and let it drink.

Sir And. Wherefore, sweet heart? what's your metaphor?

Mar. It's dry, 6 sir.

Sir And. Why, I think so: I am not such an ass, but I can keep my hand dry. But what's your jest?

Mar. A dry jest, sir.

Sir And. Are you full of them?

Mar. Ay, sir; I have them at my fingers' ends: marry, now I let go your hand, I am barren. [Exit Maria.

Sir To. O knight! thou lack'st a cup of canary. When did I see thee so put down?

Sir And. Never in your life, I think; unless you see canary put me down. Methinks, sometimes I have no more wit than a Christian, or an ordinary man has; but I am a great eater of beef, and, I believe, that does harm to my wit.

Sir To. No question.

Sir And. As I thought that, I'd forewarn it. I'll ride home to-morrow, sir Toby.
Sir To. "Pourquoi, my dear knight?"
Sir And. "What is pourquoi? do or not do? I would I had bestowed that time which I have in fencing, dancing, and bear-baiting. O, had I but followed the arts!"
Sir To. Then hast thou an excellent head of hair?
Sir And. Why, that would have mended my hair? Sir To. Past question; for, thou seest, it will not curl by nature.
Sir And. But it becomes me well enough, does't not? Sir To. Excellent! it hangs like flux on a distaff, and I hope to see a housewife take thee between her legs, and spin it off.
Sir And. "Faith, I'll home to-morrow, Sir Toby: you shall not be seen; or, if she be, it's four to one she'll none of me. The count himself, here hard by, wooes her.
Sir To. She'll none o' the count: she'll not match above her degree, neither in estate, years, nor wit; I have heard her swear it. Tut, there's life in 't, man.
Sir And. I'll stay a month longer. I am a fellow o' the strongest mind i' the world: I delight in masques and revels sometimes altogether.
Sir To. Art thou good at these kick-shaws, knight?
Sir And. As any man in Illyria, whatsoever he be, under the degree of my better's; and yet I will not compare with an old man.
Sir To. What is this excellence in a galliard, knight?
Sir And. "Faith, I can cut a caper.
Sir To. And I can cut the mantou't to.'
Sir And. And, I think, I have the back-trick, simply as strong as any man in Illyria. [Dances fantastically.]
Sir To. Wherefore are these things hid? wherefore have these gifts a curtain before them? are they like to take dust, like Mistress Malvoli's picture? may dost thou not go to church in a galliard, and come home in a coranto? My very walk should be a jig: I would not so much as make water, but in a sink-a-piece. What dost thou mean? is it a world to hide virtues in? I did think, by the excellent constitution of thy leg; it was formed under the star of a galliard.
Sir And. Ay, 'tis strong, and it does indifferent well in a dun-coloured stock. Shall we set about some revels?
Sir To. What shall we do else? were we not born under Taurus?
Sir And. Taurus? that's sides and heart.
Sir To. No, sir; it is legs and thighs. Let me see thee caper. [Sir And. dances again.] Ha! higher: ha, ha! - excellent! [Exit.]

SCENE IV. —A Room in the Duke's Palace.

Enter Valentine, and Viola in man's attire.

Val. If the duke continue these favours towards you, Cesario, you are like to be much advanced: he hath known you but three days, and already you are no strangers.

Vio. You either fear his humour or my negligence, that you call in question the continuance of his love.

Is he inconsistent, sir, in his favours?

Val. No, believe me.

Enter Duke, Cerio, and Attendants.

Duke. Who saw Cesario, ho?

Vio. On your attendance, my lord; here.

Duke. Stand you awhile aloof. [Cerio, &c. retire.]

Thou know'st no less but all: I have unclasp'd To thee the book even of my secret soul; Therefore, good youth, address thy gait unto her: Be not denied access, stand at her doors, And tell them, there thy fixed foot shall grow, Till thou have audience.

Vio. Sure, my noble lord, If she be so abandon'd to her sorrow, As it is spoke, she never will admit me.

Duke. Be clamorous, and leap all civil bounds, Rather than make unprofited return.

Vio. Say I do speak with her, my lord, what then?

Duke. O! thou unfold the passion of my love: Surprise her with discourse of my dear faith: It shall become thee well to act my words; She will attend it better in thy youth, Than in a municio of more grave aspect.

Vio. I think not so, my lord.

Duke. Dear lad, believe it, For they shall yet believe thy happy years, That say thou art a man: Diana's lip Is not more smooth, and rubious; thy small pipe Is as the maiden's organ, shrill, and sound, And all is semblative a woman's part. I know, thy constellation is right apt For this affair. — Some four, or five, attend him; All, if you will, for I myself am best, When least best should be, or, Trooper well in this, And thou shalt live as freely as thy lord To call his fortunes thine.

Vio. I'll do my best.

To woo your lady: [Aside.] yet, O, barful! strike! Whoe'er I woo, myself would be his wife. [Exit.

SCENE V. —A Room in Olivia's House.

Enter Maria, and Clown.

Maria. Nay; either tell me where thou hast been, or I will not open my lips so wide as a bristle may enter in way of thy excuse. My lady will hang thee for thy absence.

Clown. Let her hang me: he that is well hanged in this world needs fear no colours.

Maria. Make that good.

Clown. He shall see none to fear.

Maria. A good lenten answer. I can tell thee where that saying was born, of fear no colours.

Clown. Where, good mistress Mary?

Maria. In the wars; and that may you be bold to say in your folly.

Clown. Well, God give them wisdom, that have it; and those that are fools, let them use their talents.

Maria. Yet you will be hanged for being so long absent: or, to be turned away, is not that as good as a hanging to you?

Clown. Many a good hanging prevents a bad marriage; and for turning away, let summer bear it out.

Maria. You are, then, resolved?

Clown. No not so neither; but I am resolved on two points. If, that, if one break, the other will hold; or, if both break, your gaskins fall.

Clown. Apt, in good faith; very apt. Well, go thy way: if sir Toby would leave drinking, thou wert as witty a piece of Eve's flesh as any in Illyria.

Maria. Peace, you rogue, no more of that. Here comes my lady: make your excuse wisely; you were best.

[Exit.

1 A quick, lively dance. 2 Not in f. e. 3 Mary Frith, a great notoriety of the time, who went about in male attire; a wood cut of her may be found prefixed to "The Roaring Girl," in Dobson's Old Plays, Vol. VI., and in the folio Shakespeare. 4 Quick dance for two persons. 5 Name of the measures whereon are regulated by the number five. —Sir John Hawkins. 6 Same-coloured: in f. e. 7 An allusion to the representation of man, and the signs of the zodiac, in old almanacs. 8 Not in f. e. 9 a: i f. e. 10 Full of bars or impediments. 11 Points were strings to hold up the gaskins or hose.
Enter Olivia, and Malvolio.

Clo. Wit, an't be thy will, put me into good footing! Those wits, that think they have thee, do very oft prove fools; and I, that am sure I lack thee, may pass for a wise man: for what says Quinapalus? 'Better a witty fool, than a foolish wit.'—God bless thee, lady!

Oli. Take the fool away.

Clo. Do you not hear, fellows? Take away the lady.

Oli. Go to, you're a dry fool; I'll no more of you: besides, you grow dishonest.

Clo. Two faults, madonna, that drink and good counsel will amend: for give the dry fool drink, then is the fool not dry; bid the dishonest man mend himself, if he mend, he is no longer dishonest; if he cannot, let the better mend him. Any thing that's mended is but patched: virtue that transgresses is but patched with sin; and sin that amends is but patched with virtue. If that this simple syllogism will serve, so; if it will not, what remedy? As there is no true eucloid but calamy, so beauty's a flower.—The lady bade take away the fool; therefore, I say again, take her away.

Oli. Sir, I bade them take away you.

Clo. Misprosion in the highest degree!—Lady, culcullus non facit monachum: that's as much as to say, I wear not motley in my brain. Good madonna, give me leave to prove you a fool.

Oli. Can you do it?

Clo. Dexteriously, good madonna.

Oli. Make your proof.

Clo. I must catechize you for it, madonna. Good my mouse of virtue, answer me.

Oli. Well, sir, for want of other idleness I'll 'bide your proof.

Clo. Good madonna, why mourn'st thou?

Oli. Good fool, for my brother's death.

Clo. I think, his soul is in hell, madonna.

Oli. I know his soul is in heaven, fool.

Clo. The more fool, madonna, to mourn for your brother's soul being in heaven.—Take away the fool, gentlemen.

Oli. What think you of this fool, Malvolio? doth he not mend?

Mal. Yes; and shall do, till the pangs of death shake him: infirmity, that decays the wise, doth ever make the better fool.

Oli. God send you, sir, a speedy infirmity, for the better increasing your folly! Sir Toby will be sworn that I am no fox, but he will not pass his word for two-pence that you are no fool.

Oli. How say you to that, Malvolio?

Mal. I marvel your ladyship takes delight in such a barren rascal: I saw him put down the other day with an ordinary fool, that has no more brain than a stone. Look you now, he's out of his guard already: unless you laugh and minister occasion to him, he is gagged. I protest, I take these wise men, that crowd so at these set kind of fools, to be no better than the fools' zanies.

Oli. O, you are sick of self-love, Malvolio, and taste with a distempered appetite. To be generous, guiltless, and of free disposition, is to take those things for bird-bolts, that you deem cannon-bullets. There is no slander in an allowed fool, though he do nothing but rail; nor no railing in a known discreet man, though he do nothing but reprove.

Clo. Now, Mercury endue thee with leasing, for thou speakest well of fools.

1 A post at the door of a sheriff, to which proclamations and placards were affixed. 2 and : in f. e. 3 An unripe pod.
Re-enter MARIA.

Oli. Give me my veil: come, throw it o'er my face. We'll once more hear Orsino's embassy.

Enter VIOLA.

Vio. The honourable lady of the house, which is she?

Oli. Speak you? I shall answer for her. Your will?

Vio. Most radiant, exquisite, and unmatchable beauty,—I pray you, tell me, if this be the lady of the house, for I never saw her: I would be loath to cast away my speech; for, besides that it is excellently well penned, I have taken great pains to con it. Good beauties, let me sustain no scorn; I am very compeñite even to the least sinister usage.

Oli. Whence came you, sir?

Vio. I can say little more than I have studied, and that question's out of my part. Good gentle one, give me modest assurance if you be the lady of the house, that I may proceed in my speech.

Oli. Are you a comedian?

Vio. No, my profound heart; and yet, by the very fangs of malice I swear, I am not that I play. Are you the lady of the house?

Oli. If I do not usurp myself, I am.

Vio. Most certain, if you are she, you do usurp yourself; for what is yours to bestow, is not yours to reserve. But this is from my commission. I will own with my speech in your praise, and then show you the heart of my message.

Oli. Come to what is important in't: I forgive you the praise.

Vio. Alas! I took great pains to study it, and 'tis poetical.

Oli. It is the more like to be feigned: I pray you, keep it in. I heard, you were saucy at my gates, and allowed your approach, rather to wonder at you than to hear you. If you be not mad, be gone; if you have reason, be brief: 'tis not that time of moon with me to make one in so skipping a dialogue.

Mar. Will you hoist sail, sir? here lies your way.

Vio. No, good swabber; I am to hull! here a little longer.—Some mollification for your giant, sweet lady. Tell me your mind: I am a messenger.

Oli. Sure, you have some hideous matter to deliver, when the courtesy of it is so fearful. Speak your office.

Vio. It alone concerns your ear. I bring no overture of war, no taxation of homage. I hold the olive in my hand: my words are as full of peace as matter.

Oli. Yet you began rudely. What are you? what would you?

Vio. The ruddiness that hath appeared in me, have I learnt from my entertainment. What I am, and what I would, are as secret as maidenhead: to your ears, divinity; to any other's, profanation.

Oli. Give us the place alone. We will hear this divinity. [Exit MARIA.] Now, sir; what is your text?

Vio. Most sweet lady,—

Oli. A comfortable doctrine, and much may be said of it. Where lies your text?

Vio. In Orsino's bosom.

Oli. In his bosom! In what chapter of his bosom?

Vio. To answer by the method, in the first of his heart.

Oli. O! I have read it: it is heresy. Have you no more to say?

Vio. Good madam, let me see your face.

Oli. Have you any commission from your lord to negotiate with my face? you are now out of my text: but we will draw the curtain, and show you the picture. Look you, sir; such a one I am at this present;'s it not well done? [Unveiling.]

Vio. Excellently done, if God did all.

Oli. 'T is in grain, sir: 'twill endure wind and weather.

Vio. 'T is beauty truly blent, whose red and white Nature's own sweet and cunning hand laid on.

Lady, you are the cruellest she alive, If you will lead these graces to the grave, And leave the world no copy.

Oli. O! sir, I will not be so hard-hearted. I will give you divers schedules of my beauty: it shall be inventoried, and every particle, and utensil, labelled to my will; as, item, two lips indifferent red; item, two grey eyes with lids to them; item, one neck, one chin, and so forth. Were you sent hither to praise me?

Vio. I see what you are: you are too proud; But, if you were the devil, you are fair. My lord and master loves you: O! such love Should be but recompen'd, though you were crown'd The nonpareil of beauty!

Oli. How does he love me?

Vio. With adorations, fertile tears, With groans that thunder love, with sighs of fire.

Oli. Your lord does know my mind: I cannot love him:

Yet I suppose him virtuous, know him noble, Of great estate, of fresh and stainless youth; In voices well divulg'd, free, learned, and valiant, And in dimension, and the shape of nature, A gracious person; but yet I cannot love him. He might have took his answer long ago.

Vio. If I did love you in my master's flame, With such a suffering, such a deadly life, In your denial I found no sense: I would not understand it.

Oli. Why, what would you?

Vio. Make me a willow cabin at your gate, And call upon my soul within the house; Write loyal cantons of contented love, And sing them loud in the dead of night; Halloo your name to the reverberate hills, And make the babbling gossip of the air Cry out, Olivia! O! you should not rest Between the elements of air and earth, But you should pity me.

Oli. You might do much. What is your parentage?

Vio. Above my fortunes, yet my state is well: I am a gentleman.

Oli. Get you to your lord: I cannot love him. Let him send no more, Unless, perchance, you come to me again, To tell me how he takes it. Fare you well: I thank you for your pains. Spend this for me.

[Offering her purse.]

Vio. I am no foe'd post, lady; keep your purse: My master, not myself, lacks recompense. Love make his heart of flint that shall you love, And let your fervour, like my master's, be Plac'd in contempt! Farewell, fair maiden, [Exit.]

Oli. What is your parentage?

"Above my fortunes, yet my state is well: I am a gentleman."—I'll be sworn thou art: Thy tongue, thy face, thy limbs, actions, and spirit, Do give thee five-fold blazon.—Not too fast:—soft! soft!
Unless the master were the man.—How now? Everyone so quickly may one catch the plague. Methinks, I feel this youth's perfections, With an invisible and subtle stealth, To creep in at mine eyes. Well, let it be.— What, ho! Malvolio.—

Re-enter Malvolio.

Mal. Here, madam, at your service.

Oli. Run after that same peevish messenger, the county's man: he left this ring behind him,

Would I, or not; tell him, I'll none of it. Desire him not to flatter with his lord, Nor hold him up with hopes; I am not for him. If that the youth will come this way to-morrow, I'll give him reasons for 't. He thee, Malvolio.

Mal. Madam, I will.

[Exit.]

Oli. I do I know not what, and fear to find Mine eye too great a flatterer for my mind. Fate, show thy force: ourselves we do not owe: What is decreed must be, and be this so! [Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Sea-coast.

Enter Antonio and Sebastian.

Ant. Will you stay no longer? nor will you not, that I go with you?

Seb. By your patience, no. My stars shine darkly over me: the malignancy of my fate might, perhaps, distemper yours; therefore, I shall crave of you your leave, that I may bear my evils alone. It were a bad recompense for your love, to lay any of them on you.

Ant. Let me yet know of you, whither you are bound.

Seb. No, 'tis true, sir. My determinate voyage is mere extravagancy; but I perceive in you so excellent a touch of modesty, that you will not extort from me what I am willing to keep in: therefore, it charges me in manners the rather to express myself. You must know of me then, Antonio, my name is Sebastian, which I called Roderigo. My father was that Sebastian of Messaline, whom, I know; you have heard of: he left behind him, myself, and a sister, both born in an hour. If the heavens had been pleased, would we had so ended! but, you, sir, altered that; for some hour before you took me from the breach of the sea was my sister drowned.

Ant. Alas, the day!

Seb. A lady, sir, though it was said she much resembled me, was yet of many accounted beautiful: but, though I could not with self-estimation wander so far to believe that; yet this far I will boldly publish her—she bore a mind that envy could not but call fair. She is drowned already, sir, with salt water, though I seem to drown her remembrance again with more.

Ant. Pardon me, sir, your bad entertainment.

Seb. O, good Antonio! forgive me your trouble.

Ant. If you will not murder me for my love, let me be your servant.

Seb. If you will not undo what you have done, that is, kill him whom you have recovered, desire it not. Fare ye well at once: my bosom is full of kindness; and I am yet so near the manners of my mother, that upon the least occasion more, mine eyes will tell tales of me. I am bound to the count Orsino's court; farewell.

Ant. The gentleness of all the gods go with thee! I have many enemies in Orsino's court, Else would I very shortly see thee there; But, come what may, I do adore thee so, That danger shall seem sport, and I will go. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—A Street.

Enter Viola; Malvolio following.

Mal. Were not you even now with the countess Olivia?

1 Foolish. 2 Own. 3 with such estimable wonder overfar believe that: in f. e. 4 the: in f. e. 5 Suit. 6 Dilucuola sanguis saluberrimum est. An adage quoted in Lily's Latin Grammar.
Sir And. "Faith, so they say; but, I think, it rather consists of eating and drinking.

Sir To. Thou art a scholar; let us therefore eat and drink.—Marian, I say!—a stoop of wine!

Enter Clown.

Sir And. Here comes the fool, I faith.

Clo. How now, my hearts! Did you never see the picture of we three?

Sir To. Welcome, ass. Now let's have a catch.

Sir And. By my troth, the fool has an excellent breast. I had rather than forty shillings I had such a leg, and so sweet a breath to sing, as the fool has. In sooth, thou wast the very grace in fooling last night: when thou spok'st of Pignoromitus, of the Yapians passing the equinoctial of Quebuna: 'twas very good, i' faith. I sent thee sixpence for thy lemon: hadst it?

Clo. I did impetisete thy graviety: for Malvolio's nose is no whipstock: my lady has a white hand, and the Myrmidons are no bottle-ale houses.

Sir And. Excellent! Why this is the best fooling, when all is done. Now, a song.

Sir To. Come on: there is sixpence for you; let's have a song.

Sir And. There's a testril of me, too: if one knight give away sixpence so will I give another: go to, a song.

Clo. Would you have a love-song, or a song of good life?

Sir To. A love-song, a love-song.

Sir And. Ay, ay; I care not for good life.

Clo. O, mistress mine! where are you roamin'?

Sir To. O! stay, for here your true love's coming,

That can sing both high and low,

Trip no farther, pretty sweeting;

Journeys end in lovers' meeting,

Every wise man's son doth know.

Sir And. Excellent good, I' faith.

Sir To. Good, good.

Clo. What is love? it is not hereafter;

Present mirth hath present laughter;

What's to come is still unsure:

In delay there lies no plenty;

Then come kiss me, sweet and twenty,

Youth's a stuff, still not endure.

Sir And. A mellifluous voice, as I am true knight.

Sir To. A contagious breath.

Sir And. Very sweet and contagious, I' faith.

Sir To. To hear by the nose, it is dulcet in conta-

But shall we make the welkin dance indeed? Shall we rouse the night-owl in a catch, that will draw three souls out of one weaver? shall we do that?

Sir And. An you love me, let's do't: I am a dog at a catch.

Clo. By'r lady, sir, and some dogs will catch well.

Sir And. Most certain. Let our catch be, "Thou Knowe?"

Clo. "Hold thy peace, thou knave," knight? I shall be constrain'd in't to call the knave, knight.

Sir And. 'Tis not the first time I have constrain'd one to call me knave. Begin, fool: it begins, "Hold thy peace."

Clo. I shall never begin, if I hold my peace.

1 A common tavern sign and print of two fools, with the inscription, "we be three"—the spectator forming the third. 2 Used synonymously with voice.

Sir. * f. e. end this speech thus: "if one knight give a -" 3 and hear: in f. e. * Contained in Raven- croft's "Deuteronimia," 1600, where the six is given to these words:

"Thou knowe, thou knave! hold thy peace, thou knave!"

man’s a-hungry, to challenge him to the field, and then, to break promise with him, and make a fool of him.

Sir To. Do’t, knight: I’ll write thee a challenge, or I’ll deliver thy indignation to him by word of mouth.

Mar. Sweet sir Toby, be patient for to-night. Since that youth of the count’s was to-day with my lady, she is much out of quiet. For monsieur Malvolio, let me alone with him: if I do not gull him into a newfangled, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed. I know, I can do it. [him.

Sir To. Possess us, possess us: tell us something of

Mar. Marry, sir, sometimes he is a kind of Puritan.

Sir And. O! if I thought that, I’d beat him like a dog.

Sir To. What? for being a Puritan? thy exquisite reason, dear knight?

Sir And. I have no exquisite reason for’t, but I have reason good enough.

Mar. The devil a Puritan that he is, or any thing constantly, but a time pleaser; an affected ass, that cons state without book, and utters it by great swaths: the blessed madman of himself; so crammed, as he thinks, with excellences, that it is his ground of faith, that all that look on him love him; and on that vice in him will my revenge find notable cause to work.

Sir To. What wilt thou do?

Mar. I will drop in his way some obscure epistles of love; wherein, by the colour of his beard, the shape of his leg, the manner of his gait, the expressure of his eye, forehead, and complexion, he shall find himself most feelingly personated. I can write very like my lady, your niece; on a forgotten matter we can hardly make distinction of our hands.

Sir To. Excellent! I smell a device. Sir And. I have none, too.

Sir To. He shall think, by the letter that thou wilt send, that it comes from my niece, and that she is in love with him.

Mar. My purpose is, indeed, a horse of that colour.

Sir And. And your horse, now, would made him an ass.

Sir. Ass I doubt not.

Sir And. O! it will be admirable.

Mar. Sport royal, I warrant you: I know, my physie will work with him. I will plant you two, and let the fool make a third, where he shall find the letter: observe his construction of it. For this night, to bed, and dream on the event. Farewell. [Exit. Sir And. Good night, Penitello.

Sir And. Before me, she’s a good wench.

Sir To. She’s a beagle, true-bred, and one that adores me: what o’ that?

Sir And. I was adored once too.

Sir To. Let’s to bed, knight; Thou hast need send for more money.

Sir And. If I cannot recover your niece, I am a foul way out.

Sir To. Send for money, knight: if thou hast her not o’ the end, call me cut.

Sir And. If I do not, never trust me; take it how you will.

Sir To. Come, come: I’ll go burn some sack, ‘tis too late to go to bed now. Come, knight; come, knight. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room in the Duke’s Palace.

Enter Duke, Viola, Curio, and others.

Duke. Give me some music. [Music.]—Now, good morrow, friends.—

Now, good Cesario, but that piece of song,
That old and antique song, we heard last night;
Methought, it did relieve my passion much,
More than light airs, and recollected terms:
Of these most brisk and giddy-paced tunes:
Come; but one verse.

Cur. He is not here, so please your lordship, that should sing it.

Duke. Who was it?

Cur. Feste, the jester, my lord: a fool, that the lady Olivia’s father took much delight in. He is about the house.

Duke. Seek him out, and play the tune the while.

[Exit Curio.—Music again.

Come hither, boy: if ever thou shalt love, [To Viola.
In the sweet pangs of it remember me;
For such as I am all true lovers are:
Unskilful and skittish in all motions, else,
Save in the constant image of the creature
That is belov’d.—How dost thou like this tune?

Vio. It gives a very echo to the seat.

Duke. Where Love is thron’d.

Vio. Thou dost speak masterly.

My life upon’t, young though thou art, thine eye
Hath stay’d upon some favour that it loves;
Hath it not, boy?

Vio. A little, by thy favour.

Duke. What kind of woman is’t?

Vio. Of your complexion.

Duke. She is not worth thee, then. What years is’t faith?

Vio. About your years, my lord.

Duke. Too old, by heaven. Let still the woman take
An elder than herself; so wears she to him,
So sways she in her husband’s heart;
For, boy, however we do praise ourselves,
Our fancies are more giddy and uniform,
More longing, wavering, sooner lost and won,
Than women’s are.

Vio. I think it well, my lord.

Duke. Then, let thy love be younger than thyself,
Or thy affection cannot hold the bent;
For women are as roses, whose fair flower,
Being once display’d, doth fall that very hour.

Vio. And so they are: alas! that they are so;
To die, even when they to perfection grow!

—Re-enter Curio, and Clown.

Duke. O, fellow! come, let the song we had last night—
Mark it, Cesario; it is old, and plain:
The spinners and the knitters in the sun,
And the free maidens, that weave their thread with bones,
Do use to chant it: it is sily sooth,
And dailies with the innocence of love,
Like the old age.

Clo. Are you ready, sir?

THE SONG.

Clo. Come away, come away, death,
And in sad cypris let me be laid;
Fly away, fly away, breath;
I am slain by a fair cruel maid.
My shroud of white, stuck all with you,
O! prepare it:
My part of death no one so true
Did share it.

Not a flower, not a flower sweet,
On my black coffin let there be strown;
To her in haste: give her this jewel; say,
My love can give no place, bide no denay.  [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—OLIVIA'S GARDEN.

Enter Sir Tobi Belch, Sir Andrew Ague-cheek, and Fabian.

Sir To. Come thy ways, signior Fabian.

Fab. Nay, I'll come: if I lose a scruple of this sport,
Let me be boiled to death with melancholy.

Sir To. Wouldst thou not be glad to have the niggardly, raceyly sheep-biter come by some notable shame?

Fab. I would exult, man: you know, he brought me out o' favour with my lady about a bear-baiting here.

Sir To. To anger him, we'll have the bear again,
And we will fool him black and blue;—shall we not,
sir Andrew?

Sir And. An we do not, it is pity of our lives.

Enter Maria.

Sir To. Here comes the little villain.—How now, my metal of India?

Mar. Get ye all three into the box-tree. Malvolio's coming down this walk: he has been yonder i' the sun, practising behaviour to his own shadow, this half hour.
Observe him, for the love of mockery; for, I know, this letter will make a contemptible idiot of him. Close, in the name of jesting! [The men hide themselves.]
Lie thou there; [drops a letter] for here comes the trout that must be caught with tickling. [Exit Maria.

Enter Malvolio.

Mal. 'Tis but fortune; all is fortune. Maria once told me, she did affect me; and I have heard herself come thus near, that, should she fancy, it should be one of my complexion. Besides, she uses me with a more exalted respect than any one else that follows her. What should I think on't?

Sir To. Here's an over-weening rogue!

Fab. O, peace! Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cook of him: how he jets under his advanced plumes!

Sir And. 'Slight, I could so beat the rogue.—

Sir To. Peace! I say.

Mal. To be count Malvolio.—

Sir To. Ah, rogue!

Sir And. Pistol him, pistol him.

Sir To. Peace! peace!

Mal. There is example for 't: the lady of the Strachy married the yeoman of the wardrobe.

Sir And. Fie on him, Jezebel.

Fab. O, peace! now he's deeply in: look, how immaagination blows him.

Mal. Having been three months married to her, siting in my state.—

Sir To. O, for a stone bow to hit him in the eye!

Mal. Calling my officers about me, in my branched velvet gown, having come from a day-bed, where I have left Olivia sleeping:—

Sir To. Fire and brimstone!

Fab. O, peace! peace! peace!

Mal. And then to have the honour of state; and after a demure travel of regard,—telling them, I know my place, as I would they should do theirs,—to ask for my kinsman Toby—

Sir To. Bolts and shackles!

Fab. O, peace, peace, peace! now, now, now.

Mal. Seven of my people, with an obedient start, make out for him. I frown the while; and, perchance, wind up my watch, or play with my—some rich jewel.
Toby approaches; courtiers there to me.

---

1 Not in f. e.  * Give me now leave to leave thee: in f. e.   Heart of gold.  * A bow for throwing stones.  * humour; in f. e.
Sir To. Shall this fellow live?

Fab. Though our silence be drawn from us by th' ears; yet peace!

Mal. I extend my hand to him thus, quenching my familiar smile with an austere regard of control.

Sir To. And does not Toby take you a blow o' the lips then?

Mal. Saying, "Cousin Toby, my fortunes, having cast me on your niece, give me this prerogative of speech."—

Sir To. What, what?

Mal. "You must amend your drunkenness."

Sir To. Out, scab!

Fab. Nay, patience, or we break the sinews of our plot.

Mal. "Besides, you waste the treasure of your time with a foolish knight."

Sir And. That's me, I warrant you.

Mal. "One sir Andrew."

Sir And. I knew't was I; for many do call me fool.

Mal. [Seeing the letter.] What employment have we here?

Fab. Now is the woodcock near the gin.

Sir To. O, peace! and the spirit of humours intimate reading aloud to him!

Mal. [Taking up the letter.] By my life, this is my lady's hand! these be her very U's, her U's, and her T's; and thus makes she her great P's. It is, in contempt of question, her hand.

Fab. "Her O's, her U's, and her T's: Why that?"

Mal. [Reads.] "To the unknown beloved, this, and my good wishes:" her very phrases!—By your leave, wax.—Soft!—and the impresure her Lucrece, with which she uses to seal: 'tis my lady. To whom should this be?

Fab. This wins him, liver and all.

Mal. [Reads.] "Love knows, I love; But who? Lips do not move: No man must know."

"No man must know."—What follows? the number's altered.—"No man must know?"—if this should be thee, Malvolio?—

Sir To. Marry, hang thee, brock!—

Mal. [Reads.] "I may command, where I adore; But silence, like a Lucrece knife, With bloodless stroke my heart doth gore: M, O, A, I, doth sway my life."

Fab. A fustian riddle.

Sir To. Excellent wench, say I.

Mal. "M, O, A, I, doth sway my life."—Nay, but first, let me see,—let me see,—let me see.

Fab. What a dish of poison has she dressed him!—

Sir To. And with what wing the stannyle checks at it!

Mal. "I may command where I adore."—Why, she may command me: I serve her; she is my lady. Why, this is evident to any formal capacity. There is no obstruction in this.—And the end —what should that alphabetical position portend? if I could make that resemble something in me.—Softly!—M, O, A, I,—

Sir To. O! say, make up that. He is now at a cold scent.

Fab. Sowter* will cry upon't, for all this, though it be not as rank as a fox.

Mal. ——Malvolio:—M,—why that begins my name.

Fab. Did not I say, he would work it out? the curse is excellent at faults.

Mal. M.—But then there is no consonancy in the sequel; that suffers under probation: A should follow, but O does.

Fab. And O! shall end, I hope.

Sir To. Ay, or I'll cudgel him, and make him cry, O! Mal. And then I comes behind.

Fab. Ay, an you had any eye behind you, you might see more detraction at your heels, than fortunes before you.

Mal. M, O, A, I:—this simulation is not as the former;—and yet, to crush this a little, it would bow to me, for every one of these letters are in my name. Soft! here follows prose.—[Reads] "If this fall into thy hand, revolve: In my stars I am above thee; but be not afraid of greatness: some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon them. Thy fates open their hands; let thy blood and spirit embrace them. And, to inure thyself to what thou art like to be, cast thy humble slough, and appear fresh. Be opposite with a kinsman, surly with servants: let thy tongue tag arguments of state: put thyself into the trick of singularity. She thus advises thee, that sighs for thee. Remember who commended thy yellow stockings, and wished to see thee ever cross-gartered: I say, remember. Go to, thou art made, if thou desirest to be so; if not, let me see thee a steward still, the fellow of servants, and not worthy to touch fortune's fingers. Farewell. She that would alter services with thee,"

The fortunate-unhappy."

Day-light and champagne discovers not more: this is open. I will be proud, I will read politic authors, I will battle Sir Toby, I will wash off gross acquaintance, I will be point-device* the very man. I do not now fool myself, to let imagination jade me, for every reason excites to this, that my lady loves me. She did commend my yellow stockings of late; she did praise my leg being cross-gartered; and in this she manifests herself to my love, and with a kind of injunction drives me to these habits of her liking. I thank my stars I am happy. I will be strange, stent, in yellow stockings, and cross-gartered, even with the swiftness of putting on. Farewell, and may my stars be praised!—

—Here is yet a postscript. [Reads] "Thou canst not choose but know who I am. If thou entertainest my love, let it appear in thy smiling: thy smiles become thee well; therefore in my presence still smile, dear my sweet, I pray thee."—Jove, I thank thee,—I will smile: I will do every thing that thou wilt have me, [Exit.]

Fab. I will not give my part of this sport for a pension of thousands to be paid from the Sophia.

Sir To. I could marry this wench for this device.

Sir And. So could I too.

Sir To. And ask no other dowry with her, but such another jest.

Sir And. Nor I neither.

Enter MARIA.

Fab. Here comes my noble gull-catcher.

Sir To. Witt thou set thy foot o' my neck?

Sir And. Or o' mine either?

Sir To. Shall I play my freedom at tray-trap,* and become thy bond-slave?

Sir And. I' faith, or I either?

Sir To. Why, thou hast put him in such a dream, that when the image of it leaves him he must run mad. Mar. Nay, but say true: does it work upon him?

Sir To. Like aqua-vite with a midwife.

Mar. If you will then see the fruits of the sport,

* Some game of dice.

1 with ears: in f. e. 2 Badger. 3 A species of hawk. 4 One in his senses. 5 The name of a dog. 6 An open country. 7 Exactly that it cannot but turn him into a notable contempt.
If you will see it, follow me.
Sir To. To the gates of Tartarus, thou most excellent devil of wit!
Sir And. I'll make one too.

[Exeunt.]

III.

Clo. The matter, I hope, is not great, sir, begging but a beggar: Cressida was a beggar. My lady is within, sir. I will construe to them whence you come; who you are, and what you would, are out of my welkin: I might say element, but the word is worn.

[Exit.

Vio. This fellow's wise enough to play the fool, and to do that well creaves a kind of wit: He must observe their mood on whom he jests, The quality of persons, and the time, Not like the haggard, check at every feather That comes before his eye. This is a practice As full of labour as a wise man's art; For folly, that he wisely shows, is fit, But wise men's folly fall'n quite wanting their wit.

...Enter Sir Toby Belch and Sir Andrew Ague-cheek.

Sir To. Save you, gentle.
Vio. And you, sir.
Sir And. Dieu vous garde, monsieur.
Vio. Et vous aussi; votre serviteur.
Sir And. I hope, sir, you are; and I am yours.
Sir To. Will you encounter the house? my niece is desirous you should enter, if your trade be to her.

Vio. I am bound to your niece, sir: I mean, she is the list of my voyage.
Sir To. Taste your legs, sir: put them to motion.
Vio. My legs do better understand me, sir, than I understand what you mean by bidding me taste my legs.
Sir To. I mean, to go, sir, to enter.
Vio. I will answer you with gait and entrance. But we are prevented.

Enter Olivia and Maria.

Most excellent and accomplished lady, the heavens rain odours on you!
Sir And. That youth's a rare courtier. "Rain odours" well.

Vio. My matter hath no voice, lady, but to your own most pregnant and vouchsafed ear.
Sir And. "Odours," "pregnant," and "vouchsafed." — I'll get 'em all three all ready.

[Writing in his table-book.]

Oli. Let the garden door be shut, and leave me to my hearing. [Exeunt Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Maria. Give me your hand, sir.

Vio. My duty, madam, and most humble service. Oli. What is your name?
Vio. Cesario is your servant's name, fair princess. Oli. My servant, sir? 'Twas never merry world, Since lowly feigning was called compliment. You're servant to the count Orsino, youth.

Vio. And he is yours, and his must needs be yours: Your servant's servant is your servant, madam.

Oli. For him, I think not on him: for his thoughts, 'Would they were bleakus, rather than fill'd with me! Vio. Madam, I come to what your gentle thoughts On his behalf. —
Oli. O! by your leave, I pray you:
I bade you never speak again of him;
But, would you undertake another suit,
I had rather hear you to solicit that,
Than music from the spheres.
Vio. Dear lady—
Oli. Give me leave, 'beshoo e. I did send,
After the last enchantment you did here,
A ring in chase of you: so did I abuse
Myself, my servant, and, I fear me, you.
Under your hard construction must I sit,
To force that on you, in a shameface'd euning,
Which you knew none of yours: what might you think?
Have you not set mine honour at the stake,
And baited it with all th' unmuzzled thoughts [ing
That tyrannous heart can think? To one of your receiv-
Enough is shown; a cypruss, not a bosom,
Hides my heart. So, let me hear you speak.
Vio. I pity you.
Oli. That's a degree to love...
Vio. No, not a grise?; for 't is a vulgar proof,
That very oft we pity enemies.
Oli. Why, then, methinks, 't is time to smile again.
O world, how apt the poor are to be proud!
If, one should be a prey, how much the better
To fall before the lion, than the wolf? [Clock strikes.
The clock upbraids me with the waste of time.—
Be not afraid, good youth, I will not have you;
And yet, when wit and youth is come to harvest,
Your wife is like to reap a proper man.
There lies your way, due west.
Then westward ho!
Grace, and good disposition? tend your ladyship.
You'll nothing, madam, to my lord by me?
Oli. Stay:
I pr'ythee, tell me, what thou think'st of me.
Vio. That you do think you are not what you are.
Oli. If I think so, I think the same of you.
Vio. Then think you right: I am not what I am.
Oli. I would, you were as I would have you be!
Vio. Would it be better, madam, than I am?
I wish it might; for now I am your fool.
Oli. O! what a deal of scorn looks beautiful
In the contempt and anger of his lip!
A murderous quill should not itself more soon
Than love that would seem hid: love's night is noon.
Cesario, by the roses of the spring,
By maidenhood, honour, truth, and every thing,
I love thee so, that, maugre all my pride,
Nor wit, nor reason, can my passion hide.
Do not extort thy reasons from this clause,
For, that I wo, thou therefore hast no cause;
But rather, reason thus with reasonBetter!
Love sought is good, but given unsought is better.
Vio. By innocence I swear, and by my youth,
I have one heart, one bosom, and one truth.
And that no woman has; nor never none
Shall mistress be of it, save I alone.
And so adieu, good madam: never more
Will I my master's tears to thy deplore.
Oli. Yet come again; for thou, perhaps, may'st move
That heart, which now abhors, to like his love. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in OLIVIA'S HOUSE.

Enter Sir Toby Belch, Sir Andrew Ague-Cheek, and FABIAN.

Sir AND. No, faith, I'll not stay a jot longer.
Sir TOBY. Thy reason, dear venom: give thy reason.

Fab. You must needs yield your reason, sir Andrew.
Sir AND. Marry, I saw your niece do more favours to the count's serving man, than ever she bestowed upon me: I saw 't on the orchard.
Sir TOBY. Did she see thee the while, old boy? tell me that.
Sir AND. As plain as I see you now.

Fab. This was a great argument of love in her toward you.
Sir AND. 'Slight! will you make an ass o' me?

Fab. I will prove it legitimate, sir, upon the oaths of judgment and reason.

Sir TOBY. And they have been grand jury-men since before Neal was a sailor.

Fab. She did show favour to the youth in your sight only to exasperate you, to awake your dormouse valour, to put fire in your heart, and brimstone in your liver.
You should then have accosted her, and with some excellent jests; fire-new from the mint, you should have banged the youth into dummness. This was looked for at your hand, and this was baulked: the double gilt of this opportunity you let time wash off, and you are now sailed into the north of my lady's opinion; where you will hang like an icicle on a Dutchman's beard, unless you do redeem it by some laudable attempt,
either of valour, or policy.

Sir AND. An't be any way, it must be with valour, for policy I hate: I had as lief be a Brownist1 as a politician.

Sir TOBY. Why then, build me thy fortunes upon the basis of valour: challenge me the count's youth to fight With Wain: hurl him in eleven places: my niece shall take note of it; and assure thyself, there is no love-broker in the world can more prevail in man's commendation with woman, than report of valour.

Fab. There is no way but this, sir Andrew.

Sir AND. Will either of you bear me a challenge to him?

Sir TOBY. Go, write it in a martial hand; be curst and brief; it is no matter how witty, so it be eloquent, and full of invention: taunt him with the license of ink: if thou thou'st him some threc, it shall not be amiss: and as many lies as will lie in thy sheet of paper, although the sheet were big enough for the bed of a Dutchman, let 'em down. Go, about it.

Let there be gall enough in thy ink, though thou write with a goose-pen, no matter. About it.

Sir AND. Where shall I find you?

Sir TOBY. We'll call thee at the cubiculo. Go.

[Exit Sir ANDREW.

Fab. This is a dear manakin to you, sir Toby.

Sir TOBY. I have been dear to him, lad; some two thousand strong, or so.

Fab. We shall have a rare letter from him; but you'll not deliver it.

Sir TOBY. Never trust me then; and by all means stir on the youth to an answer. I think, oxen and waintopes cannot hate them together. For sir Andrew, if he were opened, and you find so much blood in his liver as will clog the foot of a flea, I'll eat the rest of the anatomy.

Fab. And his opposite, the youth, bears in his visage no great presage of cruelty.

Enter MARIA.

Sir TOBY. Look, where the youngest wren of nine comes.

MAR. If you desire the spleen, and will laugh yourselves into stitches, follow me. Yond' gull Malvolio is 1 shamefull: in f. e. 2 A veil of cypruss or grape. 3 Steph. 4 A common phrase, used by the Thames watermen. 5 A sort (afterwards the Independents) much ridiculed by the writers of the time.

SCENE IV.
TWELFTH-NIGHT: OR WHAT YOU WILL.

turned heathen; a very renegade; for there is no
Christian, that means to be saved by believing rightly, can ever believe such impossible passages of grossness.
He's in yellow stockings.

Sir To. And cross-gartered?

Mar. Most villainously; like a pedant that keeps a school in the church. I have dogged him like his murderer. He does obey every point of the letter that I dropped to betray him: he does smile his face into more stores than are in the new map, with the aug-montation of the Indies. You have not seen such a thing as 'tis; I can hardly forbear hurling things at him. I know, my lady will strike him: if she do, he'll smile; and take 't for a great favour.

Sir To. Come, bring us, bring us where he is. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Street.

Enter SEBASTIAN and ANTONIO.

Seb. I would not, by my will, have troubled you;
But, since you make your pleasure of your pains;
I will no further chide you.

Ant. I could not stay behind you: my desire,
More sharp than filed steel, did spur me forth;
And all love to see you, (though so much
As might have drawn one to a longer voyage)
But jealousy what might befal your travel,
Being skillless in these parts: which to a stranger,
Unguided, and unfriend, often prove
Rough and unhospitable: my willing love,
The rather by these arguments of fear,
Set forth in your pursuit.

Seb. My kind Antonio,
I can no other answer make, but, thanks,
And thanks, still thanks,\(^2\) and very\(^6\) oft good turns
Are shuffled off with such uncurrent pay;
But, were my wealth,\(^7\) as is my conscience, firm,
You should find better dealing. What's to do?
Shall we go see the relics of this town?

Ant. To-morrow, sir; best first go see your lodging.
Seb. I am not weary, and it is long to night.
I pray you, let us satisfy our eyes
With the memorials, and the things of fame,
That do renovate this city.

Ant. 'Would you'd pardon me:
I do not without danger walk these streets.
Once, in a sea-fight 'gainst the county's galleys
I did some service; of such note, indeed,
That were I ta'en here, it would scarce be answer'd.

Seb. Belike, you slew great number of his people.

Ant. The offence is not of such a bloody nature,
Albeit the quality of the time, and quarrel,
Might well have given us bloody argument.
It might have since been answer'd in replying
What we took from them; which, for traffick's sake,
Most of our city did: only myself stood out;
For which, if I be lapsed in this place,
I shall pay dear.

Seb. Do not, then, walk too open.

Ant. It doth not fit me. Hold, sir; here's my purse.
In the south suburbs, at the Elephant,
Is best to lodge: I will bespeak our diet,
Whiles you beguile the time, and feed your knowledge,
With viewing of the town: there shall you have me.

Seb. Why your purse?

Ant. Haply your eye shall light upon some toy
You have desire to purchase; and your store,
I think, is not for idle markets; sir.

Seb. I'll be your purse-bearer, and leave you for an hour.

Ant. To the Elephant.—

ScENE IV.—OLIVIA'S Garden.

Enter OLIVIA and MARIA.

Oli. I have sent after him: he says, he'll come.
How shall I feast him? what bestowe on him?
For youth is bought more oft, than begg'd, or borrow'd;
I speak too loud.—
Where is Malvolio?—he is sad, and civil.\(^5\)
And suits well for a servant with my fortuness.—
Where is Malvolio?

Mar. He's coming, madam; but in very strange manner. He is sure possess'v, madam.

Oli. Why, what's the matter? does he rave?

Mar. No, madam; he does nothing but smile: your ladyship were best to have some guard about you, if he come; for sure the man is tainted in 's wits.

Oli. Go call him hither. [Exit MARIA.]—I am as mad as he,
If sad and merry madness equal be.—

Enter MALVOLIO and MARIA.\(^6\)

How now, Malvolio?

Mal. Sweet lady, ha, ha! [Smiles ridiculously.

Oli. Smiles't thou now?

I sen: for thee upon a sad occasion.

Mal. Sad, lady? I could be sad. This does make some obstruction in the blood, this cross-gartering; but what of that! if it please the eye of one, it is with me as the very true sonnet hath it, "Please one, and please all."

Oli. Why, how dost thou, man? what is the matter with thee?

Mal. Not black in my mind, though yellow\(^6\) in my legs. It did come to his hands, and commands shall be executed: I think we do know the sweet Roman hand.

Oli. Wilt thou go to bed, Malvolio?

Mal. To bed? ay, sweet-heart, and I'll come to thee.

Oli. God comfort thee! Why dost thou smile so,
and kiss thy hand so oft?

Mar. How do you, Malvolio?

Mal. At your request! Yes, nightingales answer daws.

Mar. Why appear you with this ridiculous boldness before my lady?

Mal. "Be not afraid of greatness":—'T was well writ.

Oli. What meanest thou by that, Malvolio?

Mal. "Some are born great,":—

Oli. Ha?

Mal. "Some achieve greatness,":—

Oli. What say'st thou?

Mal. "And some have greatness thrust upon them.",

Oli. Heaven restore thee!

Mal. "Remember, who commend thy yellow stockings?":—

Oli. Thy yellow stockings?

Mal. "And wished to see thee cross-gartered."

Oli. Cross-gartered?

Mal. "Go to; thou art made, if thou desirest to be so":—

Oli. Am I made?

Mal. "If not, let me see thee a servant still."

Oli. Why, this is very midsummer madness.

\(^{5}\) Grave and formal. \(^{6}\) Not in f. o. \(^{6}\) Enter MALVOLIO: in f. o. \(^{8}\) There was an old ballad-tune, called "Black and Yellow."
Enter Servant.

Ser. Madam, the young gentleman of the count Orsino’s is returned. I could hardly entreat him back: he attends your ladyship’s pleasure.

Oli. I’ll come to him. [Exit Servant.] Good Maria, let this fellow be looked to. Where’s my cousin Toby? Let some of my people have a special care of him. I would not have him miscarry for the half of my dowry.

[Exit OLIVIA and MARIA.

Mal. Oh, ho! do you come near me now? no worse man than Sir Toby to look to me! This concurs directly with the letter: she sends him on purpose, that I may not offend her; and for she inclines me to that in the letter: “Cart thy humble slough,” says she: “be opposite with a kinsman, surly with servante,—let thy tongue tang with arguments of state—put thyself into the trick of singularity”—and consequently sets down the manner how; as, a sad face; a reverend carriage, a slow tongue, in the habit of some sir of note, and so forth. I have lined her; but it is Jove’s doing, and Jove make me thankful. And when she went away now, “Let this fellow be looked to;” fellow; not Malvolio, nor after my degree, but fellow. Why, every thing adheres together, that no dram of a scruple, no scruple of a scruple; no obstacle, no incredible or unsafe circumstances. What can be said? Nothing that can be can come between me, and the full prospect of my hopes. Well, Jove, not I, is the doer of this, and he is to be thanked.

Re-enter MARIA, with SIR TOBY BELCH, and FABIAN.

Sir To. Which way is he, in the name of sanctity? If all the devils in hell be drawn in little, and Legion himself possess him, yet I’ll speak to him. Fab. Here he is, here he is. —How is’t with you, sir? how is’t with you, man?

Mal. Go off; I discard you: let me enjoy my privacy: go off.

Sir To. Lo, how hollow the fiend speaks within him! did not I tell you?—Sir Toby, my lady prays you to have a care of him.

Mal. Ah, ha! does she so?

Sir To. Go to, go to; peace! peace! we must deal gently with him; let me alone. —How do you, Malvolio? how is’t with you? What, man! defy the devil: consider, he’s an enemy to mankind.

Mal. Do you know what you say?

Sir To. You speak ill of the devil, how he takes it at heart. Pray God, he be not bewitched!

Fab. Carry his water to the wise woman.

Mar. Marry, and it shall be done to-morrow morning, if I live. My lady would not lose him for more than I’ll say.

Mal. How now, mistress?

Mar. O lord!

Sir To. Pr’ythee, hold thy peace: this is not the way. Do you not see you move him? let me alone with him.

Fab. No way but gentle; gently, gently: the fiend is rough, and will not be roughly used.

Sir To. Why, how now, my bawcock? how dost thou, chuck?

Mal. Sir!

Sir To. Ay, Biddy, come with me. What, man! ’tis not for gravity to play at cherry-stones with Satan. Hang him, foul coiler!

Mar. Get him to say his prayers; good sir Toby, get him to say his prayers.

Mal. My prayers, minx! Mal. Go, hang yourselves all! you are idle shallow things: I am not of your element. You shall know more hereafter. [Exit.

Sir To. Is’t possible?

Fab. If this were played upon a stage now, I could condemn it as an improbable fiction.

Sir To. His very genius hath taken the infection of the device, man.

Mar. Nay, pursue him now, lest the device take air, and taint.

Fab. Why, we shall make him mad, indeed.

Mar. The house will be the quieter.

Sir To. Come, we’ll have him in a dark room, and bound. My niece is already in the belief that he’s mad: we may carry it thus, for our pleasure, and his penance, till our very pastime, tired out of breath, prompts us to have mercy on him; at which time, we will bring the device to the bar, and crown thee for a finder of madmen. But see, but see.

Enter Sir Andrew Ague-cheek.

Fab. More matter for a May morning.

Sir And. Here’s the challenge; read it: I warrant, there’s vinegar and pepper in’t.

Fab. Is’t so saucy?

Sir And. Ay, is’t, I warrant him: do but read.

Sir To. Give me. [Reads.] “Youth; whatsoever thou art, thou art but a saucy fellow.”

Fab. Good, and valiant.

Sir To. “Wonder not, nor admire not in thy mind, why I do call thee so, for I will show thee no reason for it.”

Fab. A good note, that keeps you from the blow of the law.

Sir To. “Thou comest to the lady Olivia, and in my sight she uses thee kindly: but thou liest in thy throat; that is not the matter I challenge thee for.”

Fab. Very brief, and to exceeding good sense-less.

Sir To. “I will way-lay thee going home; where, if it be thy chance to kill me,”—

Fab. Good.

Sir To. “Thou killest me like a rogue and a villain,”—

Fab. Still you keep’st the windy side of the law: good.

Sir To. “Fare thee well; and God have mercy upon one of our souls! He may have mercy upon mine; but my hope is better, and so look to thyself. Thy friend, as thou usest him, and thy sworn enemy: ANDREW AGUE-CHEEK.” If this letter move him not, his legs cannot. I’ll give ’t him.

Mar. You may have very fit occasion for’t: he is now in some commerce with my lady, and will by and by depart.

Sir To. Go to, sir Andrew; scout me for him at the corner of the orchard, like a bum-baile. So soon as ever thou seest him, draw and, as thou drawest, swear horrible; for it comes to pass oft, that a terrible oath, with a swaggering accent, sharply twanged off, gives manhood more approbation than ever proof itself would have earned him. Away!

Sir And. Nay, let me alone for swearing. [Exit.

Sir To. Now, will not I deliver his letter; for the behaviour of the young gentleman gives him out to be of good capacity and breeding: his employment between his lord and my niece confirms no less; therefore this letter, being so excellently ignorant, will breed no terror in the youth: he will find it comes from a cedpole. But, sir, I will deliver his challenge by word of mouth; set upon Ague-cheek’s notable report of valour, and drive the gentleman, (as I know, his youth will aptly receive it) into a most hideous opinion of his rage.
skill, fury, and impetuosity. This will so fright them both, that they will kill one another by the look, like cockatrices.

Fab. Here he comes with your niece. Give them way, till he take leave, and presently after him.

Sir To. I will meditate the while upon some horrid message for a challenge.

[Exit Sir Toby, Fabian, and Maria.]

Re-enter Olivia, with Viola.

Oli. I, Sir, have said too much unto a heart of stone, and laid mine honour too, and on me.

Sir To. This is something in me that reproves my fault, but such a headstrong potent fault it is, That it but mocks reproof.

Vio. With the same 'haviour that your passion bears, Go on my master's griefs.

Oli. Here; wear this jewel for me: 'tis my picture. Refuse it not, it hath no tongue to vex you; And, I beseech you, come again to-morrow.

What shall you ask of me, that I'll deny, That, honour saved, may upon asking give? Vio. Nothing but this; your true love for my master. Oli. How with mine honour may I give him that, Which I have given to you? Vio. Oli. I will acquit you. Vio. Well, come again to-morrow. Fare thee well; A fiend like thee might bear my soul to hell. [Exit.

Re-enter Sir Toby Belch, and Fabian.

Sir To. Gentleman, God save thee.

Vio. And you, sir.

Sir To. That defence thou hast, betake thee to 't: of what nature the wrongs are thou hast done him, I know not; but thy interpreter, full of深度, bloody as the hunter, attends thee at the orchard end. Dismount thy tuck; be yare in thy preparation, for thy assailant is quick, skilful, and deadly.

Vio. You mistake, sir; I am sure no man hath any quarrel to me. My remembrance is very free, and clear from any image of offence done to any man.

Sir To. You'll find it otherwise, I assure you: therefore, if you hold your life at any price, betake you to your guard; for your opposite hath in him what youth, strength, skill, and wrath, can furnish man withal.

Vio. I pray you, sir, what is he?

Sir To. He is a knight, dubbed with unhatched rapier, and on carpet consideration, but he is a devil in a private brawl: souls and bodies hath he divorced three, and his incensement at this moment is so implaceable, that satisfaction can be none but by pangs of death and sepulchre. Hob, nob, he's your word; give 't or take 't.

Vio. I will return again into the house, and desire some conduct of the lady: I am no fighter. I have heard of some kind of men, that put quarrels purposely on others to taste their valour; belike, this is a man of that quirk.

Sir To. Sir, no; his indignation derives itself out of a very competent injury: therefore, get you on, and give him his desire. Back you shall not to the house, unless you undertake that with me, which with as much safety you might answer him: therefore, on, strip your sword stark naked; for moddle you must, that's certain, or forswear to wear iron about you. This is as uncivil, as strange. I beseech you, do me this courteous office, as to know of the knight what my offence to him is: it is something of my negligence, nothing of my purpose.

Sir To. I will do so. Signior Fabian, stay you by this gentleman till my return. [Exit Sir Toby.

Vio. Pray you, sir, do you know of this matter?

Fab. I know, the knight is incensed against you, even to a mortal arbitration, but nothing of the circumstance more.

Vio. I beseech you, what manner of man is he?

Fab. Nothing of that wonderful promise, to read him by his form, as you are like to find him in the proof of his valour. He is, indeed, sir, the most skilful, bloody and fatal opposite that you could possibly have found in any part of Illyria. Will you walk towards him? I will make your peace with him, if I can.

Vio. I shall be much bound to you for 't: I am one, that would rather go with sir priest, than sir knight: I care not who knows so much of my mettle. [Exit.

Re-enter Sir Toby, with Sir Andrew hanging back.

Sir To. Why, man, he's a very devil, I have not seen such a firago. I had a pass with him, rapier, scabbard, and all, and he gives me the stick in, with such a mortal motion, that it is inevitable; and on the answer, he pays you as surely as your feet hit the ground they step on. They say, he has been fencer to the Sophy.

Sir And. Pox on't, I'll not meddle with him.

Sir To. Ay, but he will not now be pacified: Fabian can scarce hold him yonder.

Sir And. Pague on 't; an I thought he had been valiant, and so cunning in face, I'd have seen him damned ere I'd have challenged him. Let him let the matter slip, and I'll give him my horse, grey Capulet.

Sir To. I'll make the motion. Stand here; make a good show on 't. This shall end without the perdition of souls. [Aside.] Marry, I'll ride your horse as well as I ride you. Re-enter Fabian and Viola, unwillingly.

I have his horse [To Fab.] to take up the quarrel. I have persuaded him, the youth's a devil.

Fab. He is as horribly conceited of him; [To Sir Toby] and pants, and looks pale, as if a bear were at his heels.

Sir To. There's no remedy, sir; [To Viola] he will fight with you for 's oath sake. Marry, he hath better bethought him of his quarrel, and he finds that now scarce to be worth talking of: therefore, draw for the suppression of his vow: he protests, he will not hurt you.

Vio. [Aside.] Pray God defend me! A little thing would make me tell them how much I lack of a man.

Fab. Give ground, if you see him furious.

Sir To. Come, sir Andrew, there's no remedy: the gentleman will, for his honour's sake, have one bout with you: he cannot by the duello avoid it; but he has promised me, as he is a gentleman, and a soldier, he will not hurt you. Come on: to 't.

Sir And. Pray God, he, keep his oath!

Vio. I do assure you, 't is against my will.

[They draw, and go back from each other.]

Enter Antonio.

Ant. Put up your sword. — If this young gentleman Have done offence, I take the fault on me: If he offends, I'll for him defy you.

[Drawing.

Sir To. You, sir? why, what are you?

Ant. One, sir, that for his love dares yet do more, Than you have heard him brag to you he will.

1. Rapier. 2. Nimble. 3. Unhatched. 4. Referring to carpet knights, or those who were not dubbed on the field of battle, or for service. 5. A corruption of kap, or no kap. 6. The words, "hanging back," are not in f. e. 7. This word is not added in f. e. 8. Drawers in f. e.
Sir To. Nay, if you be an undertaker, I am for you. [Drawing.

Enter Officers.

Oub. O, good sir Toby, hold! here come the officers.

Sir To. I'll be with you anon.

Vio. Pray, sir; put your sword up, if you please.

Sir And. Marrv, will I, sir,—and, for that I promised you, I'll be as good as my word. He will bear you easy, and reis well.

1 Off. This is the man: do thy office.

2 Off. Antonio, I arrest thee at the suit of count Orsino.

Ant. You do mistake me, sir.

1 Off. No, sir, no jot: I know your favour well, though now you have no sun-cap on your head.

Take him away: he knows, I know him well.

Ant. I must obey.—[To Viola.] This comes with seeking you;

But there's no remedy: I shall answer it.
What will you do? Now my necessity
Makes me to ask you for my purse. It grieves me
Much more for what I cannot do for you,
Than what befalls myself. You stand amaz'd,
But be of comfort.

2 Off. Come, sir, away.

Ant. I must entreat of you some of that money.

For the fair kindness you have show'd me here,
And part, being prompted by your present trouble,
Out of my lean and low ability,
I'll lend you something. My having is not much:
I'll make division of my present with you.
Hold, there's half my coffer.

Ant. Will you deny me now?

Is't possible, that my deserts to you
Can lack persuasion? Do not tempt my misery,
Lest that it make nie so unsound a man,
As to upbraid you with those kindnesses
That I have done for you.

Vio. I know of none;

Nor know I you by voice, or any feature.
I hate ingratitude more in a man,
Than lying vairness, babbling drunkenness.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Street before Olivia's House.

Enter Sebastian and Clown.

Clo. Will you make me believe that I am not sent for you?

Seb. Go to, go to; thou art a foolish fellow:

Let me be clear of thee.

Clo. Well held out, i' faith! No, I do not know you; nor I am not sent to you by my lady to bid you come speak with me; nor your name is not master Cesario: nor this is not my nose neither.—Nothing, that is so, is so.

Seb. I pr'ythee, vent thy folly somewhere else: Thou know'st not me.

Clo. Vent my folly! He has heard that word of some great man, and now applies it to a fool. Vent my folly! I am afraid this great lubberly world will prove a cockney. I pr'ythee now, unbird thy strangeness, and tell me what I shall vest to your lady. Shall

Or any taint of vice whose strong corruption
Inhabits our frail blood.

Ant. O, heavens themselves!

2 Off. Come, sir: I pray you, go. [see here,

Ant. Let me speak a little. This youth, that you

I snatch'd one half out of the jaws of death;

Reliev'd him with such sanctity of love,

And to his image, which, methought, did promise

Most veritable worth, did I devotion.

1 Off. What's that to us? The time goes by: a away!

Ant. But, O, how vile an idol proves this god!—

Thou hast, Sebastian, done good feature shame.

In nature there's no blemish, but the mind;

None can be call'd deformed, but the unkind:

Virtue is beauty; but the beauteous evil

Are empty trunks, o'erfervish'd by the devil.

1 Off. The man grows mad: away with him!

Come, come, sir.

Ant. Lead me on. [Exeunt Officers, with Antonio.

Vio. Methinks, his words do from such passion fly,

That he believes himself; so do not I.

Prove true, imagination! O! prove true,

That I, dear brother, be now ta'en for you!

Sir To. Come hither, knight; come hither, Fabian:

we'll whisper o'er a couple or two of most sage saws,

Vio. He named Sebastian: I my brother know

Yet living in my glass: even such, and so,

In favour was my brother; and he went.

Still in this fashion, colour, ornament,

For him I imitate. O! if it prove,

Tempests are kind, and salt waves fresh in love! [Exit.

Sir To. A very dishonest paltry boy, and more a coward than a hare. His dishonesty appears, in leaving his friend here in necessity, and denying him; and for his cowardship, ask Fabian.

[It.

Fub. A coward, a most devout coward: religious in

Sir And. 'Sild, I'll after him again, and beat him.

Sir To. Do; cuff him soundly, but never draw thy sword.

Sir And. An I do not.—

Exit.

Fub. Come, let's see the event.

Sir To. I dare lay any money't will be nothing yet.

[Exeunt.

against him, if there be any law in Illyria. Though I struck him first; yet it's no matter for that.
Seb. Let go thy hand.
Sir Tof. Come, sir, I will not let you go. Come, my young soldier, put up your iron: you are well fleshed.
Come on.
Seb. I will be free from thee. What wouldest thou
now?
[Breaking away.
If thou dar'st tempt me farther, draw thy sword.
Sir Tof. What, what! Nay then, I must have an ounce or two of this malapert blood from you.
[They draw and fence.

Enter Olivia.
Oli. Hold, Toby! on thy life, I charge thee, hold!
Sir Tof. Madam—
Oli. Will it be ever thus? Ungrateous do
I and be not offended, dear Cesario.—
Rudesby, be gone!—I pr'ythee, gentle friend, [Exeunt Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Fabian.
Let thy fair wisdom, not thy passion, sway
In this uncivil, and unjust extant
Against thy peace. Go with me to my house;
And hear thou there how many fruitless pranks
This ruffian hath botch'd up, that thou thereby May'st smile at this. Thou shalt not choose but go:
Do not deay. Beshrew his soul for me,
He started one poor heart of mine in thee.
Seb. What relish is in this? how runs the stream?
Or I am mad, or else this is a dream.
Let fancy still my sense in Lethes sleep;
If it be thus to dream, still let me sleep.
Oli. Nay, come, I pr'ythee. Would thou'dst be ruled by me?
Seb. Madam, I will.
Oli. O! say so, and so be. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in Olivia's House.

Enter Maria and Clown.
Mar. Nay, I pr'ythee, put on this gown, and this beard: make him believe thou art sir Topas, the cura-rate: do it quickly; I'll call sir Toby the whilst.

[Exit Maria.

Clo. Well, I'll put it on, and I will dissemble myself in't: and I would I were the first that ever dissembled in such a gown. [Putting it on.]
I am not tall' enough to become the function well, nor lean enough to be thought a good student; but to be said an honest man, and a good housekeeper, goes as fairly as to say a careful man, and a great scholar. The competitors enter.

Enter Sir Toby Belch and Maria.

Sir Tof. Jove bless thee, master parson.
Clo. Bonos dies, sir Toby: for as the old hermit of Prague, that never saw pen and ink, very wittily said to a niece of king Gorboduc, 'That, that is, is;' so I, being master parson, am master parson,—for what is that, but that? and is, but is?
Sir Tof. To him, sir Topas.
Clo. What, ho! I say.—Peace in this prison.
[Opening a door.
Sir Tof. The knave counterfeits well; a good knave.
Mal. [Within.] Who calls there?
Clo. Sir Topas, the curate, who comes to visit Mal-volio the lunatic.

Mal. Sir Topas, sir Topas, good sir Topas, go to my lady.
Clo. Out, hyperbolical fiend! how vexest thou this man. Talkest thou nothing but of ladies?
Sir Tof. Well said, master parson.
Mal. Sir Topas, never was man thus wronged.—
Good sir Topas, do not think I am mad: they have laid me here in hideous darkness.
Clo. Fie, thou dishonest Satan! I call thee by the most modest terms: for I am one of those gentle ones, that will use the devil himself with courtesy. Say'st thou that house is dark?
Mal. As hell, sir Topas.
Clo. Why, it hath bay-windows transparent as banriceadoes, and the clear stories' towards the south-north are lustrous as ebony; and yet complainest thou of obstruction?
Mal. I am not mad, sir Topas. I say to you, this house is dark.

Clo. Madman, thou errest: I say there is no darkness but ignorance, in which thou art more puzzled than the Egyptians in their fog.
Mal. I say, this house is as dark as ignorance, though ignorance were as dark as hell; and I say, there was never man thus abused. I am no more mad than you are; make the trial of it in any constant question.

Clo. What is the opinion of Pythagoras concerning wild-fowl?
Mal. That the soul of our grandam might happily inhabit a bird.
Clo. What thinkest thou of his opinion?
Mal. I think nobly of the soul, and no way appro his opinion.

Clo. Fare thee well: remain thou still in darkness.
Thou shalt hold the opinion of Pythagoras, ere I will allow of thy wits, and fear to kill a woodcock, lest thou dispossess the soul of thy grandam. Fare thee well.
[Closing the door.

Mal. Sir Topas! sir Topas!—
Sir Tof. My most exquisite sir Topas.
Clo. Nay, I am for all waters.

Mar. Thou mightest have done this without thy beard, and gown: he sees thee not.

Sir Tof. To him in thine own voice, and bring me word how thou findest him; I would, we were all well rid of this knavery. If he may be conveniently delivered, I would he were; for I am now so far in offence with my niece, that I cannot pursue with any safety this sport to the upshot. Come by and by to my chambers. [Exeunt Sir Toby and Maria.

Clo. 'Hey Robin, jolly Robin,
Tell me how thy lady does.' [Singing.
Mal. Fool!
Clo. 'My lady is unkind, perdy.'
Mal. Fool!
Clo. 'Alas, why is she so?'
Mal. Fool, I say.
Clo. 'She loves another?'—Who calls, ha?
[Opening the door.
Mal. Good fool, as ever thou wilt deserve well at my hand, help me to a candle, and pen, ink, and paper.
As I am a gentleman, I will live to be thankful to thee for't.

Clo. Master Malvolio!
Mal. Ay, good fool.

Clo. Alas, sir, how fell you besides your five wits?

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Street before OLIVIA's House.

Enter Cloten and Fabian.

Fab. Now, as thou lov'st me, let me see his letter.

Clo. Good master Fabian, grant me another request.

Fab. Any thing.

Clo. Do not desire to see this letter.

Fab. This is, to give a dog, and in recompense desire my dog again.

Enter Duke, Viola, and Attendants.

Duke. Belong you to the lady Olivia, friends?

Clo. Ay, sir; we are some of her trappings.

Duke. I know thee well: how dost thou, my good fellow?

Clo. Truly, sir, the better for my foes, and the worse for my friends.

Duke. Just the contrary: the better for thy friends.

Clo. No, sir, the worse.

Duke. How can that be?

SCENE III.—OLIVIA's Garden.

Enter SEBASTIAN.

Sef. This is the air; that is the glorious sun; this pearl she gave me, I do feel 't, and see 't.; and though 't is wonder that enwraps me thus, Yet 't is not madness. Where's Antonio then? I could not find him at the Elephant; Yet there he was, and there I found this credit, That he did range the town to seek me out. His counsel now might do me golden service: For though my soul disputes well with my sense, That this may be some error, but no madness, Yet doth this accident and flood of fortune So far exceed all instance, all discourse, That I am ready to distrust mine eyes, And wrangle with my reason, that persuades me To any other trust but that I am mad: Or else the lady's mad: yet, if 't were so, She could not sway her house, command her followers, Take, and give back, and thus despatch affairs, With such a smooth, discreet, and stable bearing, As, I perceive, she does. There's something in 't, That is deceivable. But here the lady comes.

Enter OLIVIA and a Priest.

Oli. Blame not this haste of mine. If you mean well, Now go with me, and with this holy man, Into the chimney by; there, before him, And underneath that consecrated roof, Plight me the full assurance of your faith; That my most jealous and too doubtful soul May live at peace: he shall conceal it, Whiles you are willing it shall come to note, What time we will our celebration keep According to my birth.—What do you say?

Sef. I'll follow this good man, and go with you, And, having sworn truth, ever will be true.

Oli. Then lead the way, good father; and heavens so shine, That they may fairly note this act of mine! [Exeunt.
Clo. Primo, secundo, tertio, is a good play; and the old saying is, the third pays for all: the triplet, sir, is a good measure; or the bells of St. Benet, sir, may put you in mind—one, two, three.

Duke. You can fool no more money out of me at this throw: if you will let your lady know I am here to speak with her, and bring her along with you, it may awake my bounty further.

Clo. Marry, sir, fulllaly to your bounty, till I come again. I go, sir; but I would not have you to think, that my desire of having is the sin of covetousness; but, as you say, sir, let your bounty take a nap, I will awake it anon.

[Exit Clown.

Enter ANTONIO and Officers.

Vio. Here comes the man, sir, that did rescue me.

Duke. That face of his I do remember well; yet, when I saw it last, it was besmeard,
As black as Vulcan, in the smoke of war.
A bawling vessel was he captain of,
For shallow draught and bulk unprizable,
With which such scathful grapple did he make
With the most noble bottom of our fleet,
That very envy, and the tongue of loss,
Cried fame and honour on him.—What’s the matter?

1 Off. Orsino, this is that Antonio,
That took the Phenix, and her fraught, from Candy;
And this is he, that did the Tiger board,
When your young nephew Titus lost his leg.
Here in the streets, desperate of shame and state,
In private brabble did we apprehend him.

Vio. He did me kindness, sir, drew on my side,
But, in conclusion, put strange speech upon me;
I know not what ’t was, but distraction.

Duke. Notable pirate, thou salt-water thief,
What foolish boldness brought thee to their mercies,
Whom thou, in terms so bloody, and so dear,
Hast made thine enemies?

Ant. Orsino, noble sir,
Be pleas’d that I shake off these names you give me:
Antonio never yet was thief, or pirate,
Though, I confess, on base and ground enough,
Orsino’s enemy. A witchcraft drew me hither:
That most ingrateful boar there, by your side,
From the rude sea’s enraged, and foamy mouth
Did I redeem: a wreck past hope he was.
His life I gave him, and did thereto add
My love, without retention, or restraint,
All his in dedication: for his sake,
Did I expose myself, pure for his love,
Into the danger of this adverse town;
Drew to defend him, when he was beset:
Where being apprehended, his false cunning
(Not meaning to partake with me in danger)
Taught him to face me out of his acquaintance,
And grew a twenty-years-removed thing,
While I would pluck, and deny me mine own purse,
Which I had recommended to his use.
Not half an hour before.

Vio. How can this be?

Duke. When came he to this town?

Ant. To-day, my lord; and for three months before,
No interm, not a minute’s vacancy,
Both day and night did we keep company.

Enter OLIVIA and Attendants.

Duke. Hero comes the countess: now heaven walks on earth!—But more of that anon.—Take him aside.

Oli. What would my lord, but that he may not have,
Wherein Olivia may seem serviceable?—

Cesario, you do not keep promise with me.

Vio. Madam?

Duke. Gracious Olivia.—

Oli. What do you say, Cesario?—Good my lord,—

Vio. My lord would speak, my duty hushes me.

Oli. If it be aught to the old tune, my lord,—

It is as fat and fulsome to mine ear,
As howling after music.

Duke. Still so cruel?

Oli. Still so constant, lord.

Duke. What, to perverseness? you uncevil lady,
To whose ingrate and unsauspicous altars
My soul the faithfull’st offerings hath breath’d out,
That e’er devotion tender’d. What shall I do? [him.

Oli. Even what it please my lord, that shall become

Duke. Why should I not, had I the heart to do it,
Like to the Egyptian thief at point of death,
Kill what I love? a savage jealousy,
That sometimes savours nobly.—But hear me this:
Since you to non-regardance cast my faith,
And that I partly know the instrument,
That screens me from my true place in your favour,
Live you the marble-breasted tyrant still;
But this your minion, whom, I know, you love,
And whom, by heaven I swear, I tender dearly;
Him will I tear out of that cruel eye,
Where he sits crowned in his master’s spite.—

Come boy, with me: my thoughts are ripe in mischief: I’ll sacrifice the lamb that I do love,
To spite a raven’s heart within a dove.

[Going.

Vio. And I, most jocund, apt, and willing,
To do you rest a thousand deaths would die.

[Following.

Oli. Where goes Cesario?

Vio. After him I love,
More than I love these eyes, more than my life,
More, by all more, than e’er I shall love wife.
If I do feign, you witnesses above
Punish my life for tainting of my love!

Oli. Ah me! detested! how am I beguil’d! Vio. Who does beguil you? who does do you wrong?

Oli. Hast thou forgot thyself? Is it so long?—

Call forth the holy father.

[Exit an Attendant.

Duke. Come away. [To VIOLA.

Oli. Whither, my lord?—Cesario, husband, stay.

Duke. Husband?

Oli. Ay, husband: can he that deny?

Duke. Her husband, sirrah?

Vio. No, my lord, not I.

Oli. Alas! it is the baseness of thy fear,
That makes thee strangle thy propriety.
Fear not, Cesario: take thy fortunes up;
Be that thou know’st thou art, and then thou art
As great as that thou fear’st.—O, welcome, father! Re-enter Attendant with the Priest.

Father, I charge thee, by thy reverence,
Here to unfold (though lately we intended
To keep in darkness, what occasion now
Reveals before ’t is ripe) what thou dost know,
Hath newly past between this youth and me.

Priest. A contract and eternal bond of love,
Confirm’d by mutual joinder of your hands,
Attested by the holy close of lips;
Strengthen’d by interchange of your rings;
And all the ceremony of this compact
Seal’d in my function, by my testimony:

\[\text{triplets: in f. e. 2 From the Saxon derr, hurt. 3 Thymis; in the Greek romance, the "Ethiopians" of Heliodorus, translated into English near the end of the sixteenth century. 4 of: in f. e.}\]
Since when, my watch hath told me, toward my grave
I have travelled but two hours.

_Duke._ O, thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sower'd a grizzle on thy ease?
Or will not else thy craft so quickly grow,
That thine own trip shall be thine overthrow?
Farewell, and take her; but direct thy feet,
Where thou and I henceforth may never meet.

_Vio._ My lord, I do protest,—

_Oli._ O! do not swear:
Hold little faith, though thou hast too much fear.

_Elter Sir ANDREW AGUE-CHEEK, with his head broken._

_Sir ANDREW._ For the love of God, a surgeon! send one presently to Sir Toby.

_Oli._ What's the matter?

_Sir And._ He has broken my head across, and has given Sir Toby a bloody coxcomb too. For the love of God, your help! I had rather than forty pound I were at home.

_Oli._ Who has done this, sir Andrew?

_Sir ANDREW._ The count's gentleman, one Cesario. We took him for a coward, but he's the very devil incardinate.

_Duke._ My gentleman, Cesario?

_Sir ANDREW._ Od's life! here he is.—You broke my head for nothing; and that that I did, I was set on to do't by Sir Toby.

_Vio._ Why do you speak to me? I never hurt you: You drew your sword upon me, without cause; But I bespeak you fair, and hurt you not.

_Sir ANDREW._ If a bloody coxcomb be a hurt, you have hurt me: I think you set nothing by a bloody coxcomb.

_Elter Sir TOBY BELCH, DRUNK, led by the Clown._

_Here comes sir Toby halting: you shall hear more: but if he had not been in drink, he would have tickled you othergates than he did._

_Duke._ How now, gentleman; how's it with you?

_Sir To._ That's all one: he has hurt me, and there's the end on't.—Sol, didst see Dick surgeon, sol?

_Clo._ O! he's drunk, sir Toby, an hour ago: his eyes were set at eight the morning.

_Sir To._ Then he's a rogue, and a passy-measures pavin.
I hate a drunken rogue.

_Oli._ Away with him! Who hath made this havoc with them?

_Sir ANDREW._ I'll help you, sir Toby, because we'll be dressed together.

_Sir To._ Will you help? An ass-head, and a coxcomb, and a knave! a thin-faced knave, a gull!

_Oli._ Get him to bed, and let his hurt be look'd to.

[Exit Clown, Sir Toby, and Sir Andrew.]

_Elter SEBASTIAN (all start)._

_Seb._ I am sorry, madam, I have hurt your kinman; But had it been the brother of my blood,
I must have done no less with wit and safety.
You throw a strange regard upon me, and by that I do perceive it hath offended you:
Pardon me, sweet one, even for the vows
We made each other but so late ago.

_Duke._ One face, one voice, one habit, and two persons;
A natural perspective, that is, and is not!

_Seb._ Antonio! O, my dear Antonio!
How have the hours rack'd and tortur'd me,
Since I have lost thee?

_Ant._ Sebastian are you?

_Seb._ Fear'st thou that, Antonio?

_Ant._ How have you made division of yourself?—

An apple cleft in two is not more twin Than these two creatures. Which is Sebastian?

_Oli._ Most wonderful!

_Seb._ Do I stand there? I never had a brother;
Nor can there be that deity in my nature,
Of here and every where. I had a sister,
Whom the blind waves and surges have devour'd.—

[To VIOLA.] Of charity, what kin are you to me?

_What countryman? what name? what parentage?

_Vio._ Of Messalline: Sebastian was my father;
Such a Sebastian was my brother too,
So went he suited to his watery tomb.
If spirits can assume both form and suit,
You come to fright us.

_Seb._ A spirit I am indeed;

But am in that dimension grossly clad,
Which from the womb I did partake.
Were you a woman, as the rest goes even,
I should my tears let fall upon your cheek,
And say—thrice welcome, drowned Viola!

_Vio._ My father had a mole upon his brow.

_Seb._ And so had mine.

_Vio._ And died that day, when Viola from her birth
Had number'd thirteen years.

_Seb._ O! that record is lively in my soul.
He finished his mortal act
That day that made my sister thirteen years.

_Vio._ If nothing lets to make us happy both,
But this my masqueing usurp'd attire,
Do not embrace me, till each circumstance
Of place, time, fortune, do cohere, and jump,
That I am Viola which to confirm,
I'll bring you to a captain in this town,
Where lie my maiden weeds; by whose gentle help
I was preserv'd to serve this noble count.
All the occurrence of my fortune since
Hath been between this lady, and this lord.

_Seb._ So comes it, lady, [To OLIVIA.] you have been mistook;

But nature to her bias true in that,
You would have been contracted to a maid,
Nor are you therein, by my life, deceiv'd:

_You are betroth'd both to a maid and man._

_Duke._ Be not amaz'd; right noble is his blood.—
If this be so, as yet the glass seems true,
I shall have share in this most happy wreck.

_Boy, [To VIOLA.] thou hast said to me a thousand times,
Thou never shouldst love woman like to me._

_Vio._ And all those sayings will I over-swear,
And all those swearings keep as true as soul,
As doth that orbent continent, the fire
That severs day from night.

_Duke._ Give me thy hand;

And let me see thee in thy woman's weeds.

_Vio._ The captain, that did bring me first on shore,
Hath my maid's garments: he, upon some action,
Is now in durance at Malvolio's suit,
A gentleman, and follower of my lady's.

_Oli._ He shall enlarge him.—Fell Malvolio hither:—

And yet, alas! now I remember me,
They say, poor gentleman, he's much distract.
A most distracting frenzy of mine own
From my remembrance clearly banish'd his—

[Re-enter Clown, with a letter.]

_How does he, sirrah?_

_Clo._ Truant I hold, he holds Bezzlebub at the stave's end, as well as a man in his case may do. He has here write a letter to you: I should have given it you to-day morning; but as a madman's epistles are no gospels, so it skills1 not much when they are delivered.

Oli. Open it, and read it.

Clo. Look then to be well edited, when the fool delivers the madman:—[Reads.] "By the Lord, madam."—

Oli. How now? art thou mad?

Clo. No, madam, I do but read madness: an your ladyship will have it as it ought to be, you must allow vox.

Oli. Pr'ythee, read t' thy right wits.

Clo. So do I, madonna; but to read his right wits, is to read thus: therefore perpend, my princess, and give ear.

Oli. Read it you, sirrah.

Fab. [Reads.] "By the Lord, madam, you wrong me, and the world shall know it: though you have put me into darkness, and given your drunken cousin rule over me, yet have I the benefit of my senses as well as your ladyship. I have your own letter that induced me to the semblance I put on; with which I doubt not but to do myself much right, or you much shame. Think of me as you please. I leave my duty a little unthought of, and speake out of my injury.

"The madly-used Malvolio!"

Oli. Did he write this?

Clo. Ay, madam.

Duke. This savours not much of distraction.

Oli. See him deliver'd, Fabian: bring him hither.

[Exit Fabian.

My lord, so please you, these things further thought on, To think me as well a sister as a wife, One day shall crown the alliance, and so please you, Here at my house, and at my proper cost.

Duke. Madam, I am most apt t' embrace your offer.—

[To Viola.] Your master quits you; and for your service done him, So much against the mettle of your sex, So far beneath your soft and tender breeding, And since you call'd me master for so long, Here is my hand; you shall from this time be Your master's mistress.

Oli. A sister: you are she.

Re-enter Fabian, with Malvolio; with straw about him, as from prison.

Duke. Is this the madman?

Oli. Ay, my lord, this same.

How now, Malvolio?

Mal. Madam, you have done me wrong,

Notorious wrong.

Mal. Lady, you have. Pray you, peruse that letter: You must not now deny it is your hand, Write from it, if you can, in hand, or phrase; Or say, 't is not your seal, nor your invention: You can say none of this. Well, grant it then, And tell me, in the modesty of honour, Why you have given me such clear lights of favour, Bade me come smiling, and cross-garter'd to you, To put on yellow stockings, and to frown Upon sir Toby, and the lighter people? And, acting this in an obedient hope, Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd, Kept in a dark hold by the priest, And made the most notorious geck4 and gull, That e'er invention play'd on? tell me why.

Oli. Alas! Malvolio, this is not my writing,

Though, I confess, much like the character; But, out of question, 't is Maria's hand:
And now I do bethink me, it was she First told me thou wast mad; thou8 eam'st in smiling, And in such forms which here were preimpos'd6 Upon thee in the letter. Pr'ythee, be content:
This practice hath most shrewdly pass'd upon thee; But when we know the grounds and authors of it, Thou shalt be both the plaintiff and the judge Of thine own case.

Fab. Good madam, hear me speak;
And let no quarrel, nor no brawl to come, Taint the condition of this present hour,
Which I have wonder'd at. In hope it shall not, Most freely I confess, myself, and Toby, Set this device against Malvolio here,
Upon some stubborn and uncouert parts We had conceived against him. Maria writ The letter at sir Toby's great importance; In recompense whereof he hath married her. How with a sportful malice it was follow'd, May rather pluck on laughter than Revenge, If that the injuries be justly weight'd, That have on both sides past.

Oli. Alas, poor soul, how have they baffled thee!

Clo. Why "some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon them," I was one, sir, in this interlude; one sir Topas, sir; but that 's all one.—"By the Lord, fool, I am not mad;"—

But do you remember? "Madam, why laugh you at such a barren rascal? an you smile not, he 'gagg'd!"

And thus the whirligig of time brings in his revenges.

Mal. I' ll be reveng'd on the whole pack of you. [Exit.

Oli. He hath been most notoriously abuse'd.

Duke. Pursue him, and entreat him to a peace.

He hath not told us of the captain yet;
When that is known and golden time convers, A solemn combination shall be made;
Of our dear souls:—mean time, sweet sister, We will not part from hence.—Cesario, come; For so you shall be, while you are a man, But when in other habits you are seen, Orsino's mistress, and his fancy's queen.

[Exeunt.

Clown sings, a pipe and labor.

When that I was and a little busy boy, With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
A foolish thing was but a toy.
For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came to man's estate, With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
Gainst knives and thieves men shut their gate, For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came, alas! to wine, With hey, ho, the wind and the rain, By swaggering could I never thrive, For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came unto my bed, With hey, ho, the wind and the rain, With toss-pots still 11 had drunken head, For the rain it raineth every day.

A great while ago the world begun, With hey, ho, the wind and the rain, But that's all one, our play is done, And we'll strive to please you every day.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Sicilia. An Antechamber in Leontes' Palace.

Enter Camillo and Archidamus.

Arch. If you should chance, Camillo, to visit Bohemia, on the like occasion whereon our services are now on foot, you shall see, as I have said, great difference betwixt our Bohemia and your Sicilia.

Cam. I think, this coming summer, the king of Sicilia means to pay Bohemia the visitation which he justly owes him.

Arch. Wherein our entertainment shall shame us, we will be justified in our loves; for, indeed,—

Cam. Beseech you,—

Arch. Verily, I speak it in the freedom of my knowledge: we cannot with such magnificence—in so rare— I know not what to say.—We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses, unintelligent of our insufficiency, may, though they cannot praise us, as little accuse us.

Cam. You pay a great deal too dear for what's given freely.

Arch. Believe me, I speak as my understanding instructs me, and as mine honesty puts it to utterance.

Cam. Sicilia cannot show himself over-kind to Bohemia. They were trained together in their childhoods; and there rooted betwixt them then such an affection, which cannot choose but branch now. Since their more mature dignities, and royal necessities, made separation of their society, their encounters, though not personal, have been so royally attorney'd, with interchange of gifts, letters, loving embassies, that they have seemed to be together, though absent, shook hands, as over a vast, and embraced, as it were, from the ends of opposed winds. The heavens continue their loves!

To tire your royalty.

Leon. We are tougher, brother, Than you can put us to.'

Pol. No longer stay.

Leon. One seven-night longer.

Pol. Very sooth, to-morrow.

Leon. We'll part the time between's then; and in that I'll no gain-saying.

Pol. Press me not, beseech you.

There is no tongue that moves, none, none i' the world, So soon as yours, could win me: so it should now, Were there necessity in your request, although 'T were needful I denied it. My affairs Do o'erhang me homeward, which to hinder, Were in your love a whip to my stay, To you a charge, and trouble: to save both, Farewell, our brother.

Leon. Tongue-tied, our queen? speak you. Her. I had thought, sir, to have held my peace, until You had drawn oaths from him, not to stay. You, sir, Charge him too coldly: tell him, you are sure All in Bohemia's well: this satisfaction The bygone day proclaimed. Say this to him, He's beat from his best ward.

Leon. Well said, Hermione. [he walks apart. Her. To tell him longs to see his son were strong: But let him say so then, and let him go; But let him swear so, and he shall not stay, We'll thwack him hence with distaste. — venture Yet of your royal presence [to Polynesia.] I'll ad

The borrow of a week. When at Bohemia You take my lord, I'll give him my commission, To let him there a month behind the gest Prefix'd for's parting; yet, good dead. Leontes, I love thee not a jar o' the clock behind What lady should her lord. You'll stay?

Pol. No, madam.

Her. Nay, but you will?

Pol. I may not, verily.

Her. Verily!

You put me off with limber vows; but I, Though you would seek t'unsphere the stars with oaths, Should yet say, "Sir, no going." Verily, You shall not go: a lady's verily is As potent as a lord's. Will you go yet?

Force me to keep you as your prisoner, Not like a guest, so you shall pay your fees, When you depart, and save your thanks. How say you? My prisoner, or my guest? by your dread verily, One of them you shall be.

Pol. To be your prisoner should import offending; Which is for me less easy to commit, Than you to punish.

Her. Not your jailor, then, But your kind hostess. Come, I'll question you Of my lord's tricks, and yours, when you were boys; You were pretty lordlings then.

Pol. We were, fair queen, Two lads, that thought there was no more behind, But such a day to-morrow as to-day, And to be boy eternal.

Her. Was not my lord the verier wag o' the two?

Pol. We were as twin'd lambs, that did drisk i' the sun, And bleat the one at th' other: what we chang'd, Was innocence for innocence; we knew not

The doctrine of ill-doing, nor dream'd That any did. Had we pursued that life, And our weak spirits ne'er been higher rea'd With stronger blood, we should have answer'd heaven Boldly " not guilty;" the imposition clear'd, Hereditary ours.

Her. By this we gather, You have tripp'd since.

Pol. O! my most sacred lady,

Temptations have since then been born to's; for In those unfledg'd days was my wife a girl: Your precious self had then not cross'd the eyes Of my young play-fellow.

Her. Grace to boot! Of this make no conclusion, lest you say, Your queen and I are devils: yet, go on; Th' offences we have made you do, we'll answer; If you first sin'd with us, and that with us You did continue fault, and that you slipp'd not With any, but with us.

Leon. Is he won yet? [Coming forward.]

Her. He'll stay, my lord.

Leon. At my request he would not.

Hermione, my dearest, thou never spok'st To better purpose.

Her. Never?

Leon. Never, but ones.

Her. What? have I twice said well when wasn't before?

I pr'ythee, tell me. Cram's with praise, and make's As fat as tame things: one good deed, dying tongueless, Slaughters a thousand waiting upon that. Our praises are our wages: you may ride's With one soft kiss a thousand furlongs, ere With spur we clear an acre. But to the good— My last good deed was to entreat his stay: What was my first? it has an elder sister, Or I mistake you: O, would her name be Grace! But once before I spoke to the purpose: When? Nay, let me have it; I long.

Leon. Why, that was when

The wander'd months had sound'd themselves to death, Ere I could make thee open thy white hand, And clap' thyself my love: then didst thou utter "I am yours for ever."

Her. It is Grace, indeed.— Why, lo you now, I have spoke to the purpose twice: The one for ever carn'd a royal husband, Th' other for some while a friend.

[Giving her hand to Polynesia.]

Leon. Too hot, too hot! [Aside.]

To mingle friendship far is mingling bloods.

I have tremor cordis on me:—my heart dances, But not for joy,—not joy. —This entertainment May a free face put on;—derive a liberty From heartiness, from bounty's fertile bosom, And well become the agent: 'tis may, I grant; But to be paddling palms, and pinching fingers, As now they are; and making practis'd smiles, As in a looking-glass;—and then to sigh, as 't were The mort's o' the deer; O! that is entertainment My bosom likes not, nor my brows.—Mamillius, Art thou my boy?

Mam. Ay, my good lord.

Leon. Why, why?—

Why, that's my bawcock." What hast smutched thy nose?—
They say, it is a copy out of mine.

Come, captain,

We must be neat; not neat, but cleanly, captain:

And yet the steer, the leifer, and the calf,

Are all call'd neat. — Still virginalling.

[Observing Polixenes and Hermione.

Upon his palm? — How now, you wanton calf?

Art thou my calf?

Mam.

Is, if you will, my lord.

Leon. Thou want'st a rough pass, 1 and the shots that I have,

To be done like me: — yet, they say, we are Almost as like as eggs: women say so,

That will say any thing: but were they false

As our dead 2 blackes, as wind, as waters; false

As dice are to be wish'd, by one that fixes

No bourn 'twixt his and mine; yet were it true

To say this boy were like me. — Come, sir page,

Look on me with your welkin' 3 eye: sweet villain!

Most dearest! my collop! — Can thy dam? — may't be Affection 4? thy intention stab's the centre?

Thou dost make possible things not so held,

Communicat's with dreams; — (how can this be?)

— With what 's unequal thou coactive art,

And fellow'st nothing. Then, 't is very credent,

Thou may'st co-join with something; and thou dost,

And that beyond commission; and I find it,

And that to the infection of my brains,

And hardening of my brows.

Pol.

What means Sicilia?

Her. He something seems unsettled.

Pol.

How, my lord!

Leon. What cheer? how 's it with you, best brother?

[ Holding his forehead.

Her.

You look,

As if you held a brow of much distraction:

Are you mov'd, my lord?

Leon.

No, in good earnest.

How sometimes nature will betray its folly; [Aside.

Its tenderness, and make itself a pastime

To harder bosoms! Looking on the lines [To them.

Of my boy's face, my 5 thoughts I did recoil

Twenty-three years, and saw myself unbreech'd,

In my green velvet coat; my dagger muzzled,

Lest it should bite its master, and so prove,

As ornaments oft do, too dangerous.

How like, methought, I then was to this kernel,

This squash, 12 this gentleman. — Mine honest friend,

Will you take eggs for money? 13

Mam.

No, my lord, I'll fight.

Leon. You will? why, happy man be his dole! 14

My brother,

Are you so fond of your young prince, as we

Do seem to be of ours?

Pol.

If at home, sir,

He's all my exercise, my mirth, my matter:

Now my sworn friend, and then mine enemy;

My parasite, my soldier, statesman, all.

He makes a July's day short as December;

And with his varying childless cures in me

Thoughts that would th'ick my blood.

Leon.

So stands this squire

Offer'd with me. We two will walk, my lord,

And leave to your graver steps. — Hermione,

How thou lovest us, show in our brother's welcome:

Let what is dear in Sicily, be cheap.

Next to thyself, and my young rover, he's Apparent to my heart.

Her.

If you would seek us,

We are yours i' the garden: shall's attend you there?

Leon. To your own bent dispose you: you'll be found,

Be you beneath the sky. — [Aside.] I am angling now,

Though you perceive me not how I give line,

Go to, go to!

How she holds up the nebb, the bill to him;

And arms her with the boldness of a wife

To her allowing husband. Gone already!

[Exit Polixenes, Hermione, and Attendants.

Inch-thick, knee-deep, o'er head and ears a fork'd one! —

Go play, boy, play; — thy mother plays, and I

Play too, but so disagreed a part, whose issue

Will hiss me to my grave: contempt and clamour

Will be my knell. — Go play, boy, play. — There have been,

Or I am much deceiv'd, euckolds ere now;

And many a man there is, (even at this present,

Now, while I speak this) holds his wife by th' arm,

That little thinks she has been stabb'd in 's absence,

And his pond fish'd by his next neighbour, by

Sir Smile, his neighbour. Nay, there's comfort in't,

While others men have gates, and those gates open'd,

As mine, against their will. Should all despair

That have revolted wives, the tenth of mankind

Would hang themselves. Physic for't there is none:

It is a bawdy planet, that will strike

Where 't is predominant: and 't is powerful, think it,

From east, west, north, and south: be it concluded,

No barricado for a belly: know it;

It will let in and out the enemy,

With bag and baggage. Many a thousand on's

Have the disease, and feel it not. — Now, how, boy?

Mam. I am like you, they say.

Leon.

Why, that's some comfort.

What! Camillo there?

Cam. Ay, my good lord.

Leon. Go play, Mamillius. Thou'rt an honest man.

[Exit Mamillius.

Camillo, this great sir will yet stay longer.

But of the finer natures? by some several,

2 Fully.

4 o'er-dyed: in f. e.

5 Blue, like the sky.
